It's time for the drawing. Effie Trinket without the help of a hand- says as she always does, 'Females first!' and crosses to the goblet note with the girls' names. She goes on a bit about what an honor it is to be here, while all and sundry knows she's just aching to get bumped up to a better community where they have proper victors, not drunks who molest you in front of the entire nation. ' Likewise, - then again there are still thousands of slips in here we see the name binging up on the wraparound walls, ' I wish I could whisper to her not to think- yet that not easy to do.

Through the crowd, I spot her looking back at me with a ghost of a smile. She reaches in, digs her hand deep into the note, and pulls out a slip of paper. The crowd draws in a collective breath and then you can hear a pin drop, and I'm feeling nauseous and so desperately hoping that it's not me, that it's not me, that it's not me. As earning go, this one at least has a slight entertainment factor. Likewise, suddenly I am thinking of her all the names 100 in that big glass droplet and how the balances are in your surroundings. Not compared to a lot of the boys.

And maybe he's thinking the same thing about me for the reason that her face darkens, and she turns away.

Like it was already said-

15

Someone is gripping my arm, a boy from Sam, and I think maybe I started to fall and he caught me. I feel now her berth in me like, like when I feel hard going down the steps trying to remember how to breathe, when I hit a window on wet concrete into and on a home and concerned back, unable to speak, totally stunned as the name bounces around the inside of my cranium.

And then I see her, the blood drained from her face, hands clenched in fists at her sides, walking with stiff, small steps up toward the stage, passing me, and I see the back of her blouse has become untucked and hangs out over her skirt. Somewhere far away, I can hear the crowd murmuring unhappily as they always do when a twelve-year-old gets chosen because no one thinks this is fair. It's this detail, the untucked blouse forming a ducktail, which brings me back to myself.

I scream out Elody was one slip of paper in thousands! There must have been some mistake here there must be. I wanted to replace her, yet I could not I would kill for doing that, that would have been rebelling and act that would see death to you for doing. I said in the same moments, know I should not- this can't be happening... Her chances of being chosen so remote to all of us yet the love the underdog and the weak meek girl to do this, the taste of blood dripping down her vagina is what they really want. And they're going to see that too, that I would not even bother to worry about her I know she going to pull through this not as innocent little girl Likewise, come back as a crampon lady. She will be deflowered just trying to stay alive with all the boys that she needs to give her what she needs and that is food and warmth and housing with them.

A girl is just not as strong as a boy that all say... Hadn't I done everything? On stage no - Elody was singled out for her age, and virginity- STRIP! NAKED! OR DIE! We all gasped, yet some said it's happened before to country Likewise, I see her pink and white kiddie undies moving to down she is reluctant, yet has to do this... I nor she doesn't have to worry about a boy popping vagina open, a toper already it with his finger ripping hard and fast she cry and it bloods out saying we cannot have you be a little girl.

He licks the blood off his finger with his lips snickering, she will always be remembered for this... and I was the one to take her.

16

Anywhere far away would be nice sing this all happening, I can hear the crowd murmuring building up into an oh, happily as they always do when a ten-year-old girl gets deflowered in front of a crowded, gets preferred because no one thinks this is reasonable. As well as then I see her, the blood drained from her hands, face tightened in fists at her sides, walking with stiff, small steps up toward the stage, passing me, and I see the back of her blouse has become untucked and hangs out over her skirt yet again I did not say anything about it in my mind for her to hear.

'Elody!' I don't need to shove through the crowd. The other kids make way proximately allowing me a straight path to the platform of the stage. I reach her just as she is about to mount the steps. With one sweep of my arm, I push her behind me. 'Elody!' The strangled cry comes out of her throat, and I saw that her muscles begin to move again as I was giving her the stench, yet I knew soon that would change with the shout me out and off for her mind and thoughts with a microchip in my arm the run to my mind using sound waves.

'Lovely!' says Effie Trinket. ' Likewise, then again I have faith in there's a small matter of familiarizing the acquiring winner... There's some confusion on the stage, as all of her mind chatting devices are ripped out of her body. The rule is that once a try Likewise, the name has been pulled from the ball, another eligible boy if a boy's name has been read, or girl if a girl's name has been read, no one can move forward to take his or her place. In some districts, I feel this would want not to be so, yet that life here- in which winning the reaping is such a great honor, people are eager to risk their lives, the volunteering is complicated. Nonetheless, in Community 14, where the word byline is pretty much equal to the word corpse, volunteers are all Likewise, extinct.

Elody is earsplitting shrieking boisterously in front of me. She runs off the stage, naked as the day she was born as her dress slips as she trips some. Not caring about anything other than me. She's wrapped her skinny arms around me like a vice. 'No! No! You can't go home with me; you have to go and maybe have a chance at winning- you could do this you know- I believe in you- remember that!'

I swallow this hard... 'Elody, let go or they well... No-' I say harshly not wanting to be that way, for the reason that this is disconcerting me, and I don't want to cry. When they televise the replay of the earning tonight, every person will make note of my tears or, they marked as an easy target for the gun team. Acknowledging applause, I stand there unmoving while they take part in the boldest form of dissent they can manage. Silence. Which says we do not agree. We do not condone. All of this is wrong.

A weakling. I will give no one that satisfaction. 'Let go!' I can feel someone pulling her from my back. I turn and see Gale has lifted My sister off the ground and she's thrashing in his arms. 'Up you go, girl,' I say, I hear the voice fighting off the crying to keep stable, and then she is carried off toward the back was a door open without a sound. I steel myself and climb the steps down to the hose with my mom's head in my chest panicking.

(Back)

Just like my father, Elody, who no one can help loving. Was the one that I say living out her life as a helper of others, not killing them, that is why she was chosen for this?

Then to some degree, unexpected happens. At least, I don't suppose it for the reason that I don't think of area 14 as a place that cares about her. I have become someone precious to her and that was looking out for her yet I can't ever do that, in my heart I knew she was a goner. Yet I would not let her feel that I have the options. It is an old and rarely used gesture of our area, sporadically seen at funerals. It means thanks, it means admiration, it means goodbye to someone you love. Now I am truly in danger of crying, I know this... she is yet they what to see her fight to the death, for she was picked. Not allowed yet there giggling at her for this... I knew she would be strong - surprisingly strong for such a wreck. 'Look at her.... Look at this one! They were saying she's just a baby! Easy meat!'

They bring them all back out after they all cool down... like an encore... All the names have been called out I could not even hear them like... it was not important.

All the boys and all the girls... they're all standing there all have their own ways, and their own personalities, yet none stand out as much as she.

He can't think of the word for a while - a man said - he releases me and starts for the front of the stage. He shouts, pointing directly into a camera. 'I like her!' His breath reeks of homemade whiskey, I have done run for him, and it's been a long time since he's bathed. I know how to be a boot lacer. Running at night only for it is illegal. Then he adds in the camera - 'Boldness I would bang her Likewise!' he says triumphantly. 'More than you any other girls up there or in this assembly, this is why the picked here - she's pretty! - and that makes us want to fight for her battle.'

'Lots in her dreaminess... he was...' He's disgusting, Likewise, I'm grateful she was grossed out Likewise, was think that was sweet even so... she too nice... some said. They then did an up-close shot of her with her hands laced her eyes dropped chin tucked left, and wiggle - dancing with her arms V-ed inform of her hips to her shy ways. Camera gleefully trained and drop to her eyes and they get the upshot blue eyes glittering- lips wet to her peal face- cheeks shift pink, and she looked up with her eyes rolled to the top head down still.

She was biting her lip on the left side, looking like she was doing the pee-pee dance like is she looks downward it would all go away. I put my hands behind my back and stare into the distance, and make a hand sing, that only she would get so she would feel okay and safe. Eloy the smallest of us all really- we asked where she came from never growing in height since that age- she is 3 foot 8 inches- she is so small look five next to all these others that tower over her.

Even I tower over her at 5 feet.

17

Their numbers were clearer to me than their names...

All boys started with BS- something...

All the girls were G- S- something...

Long runs of numbers like a barcode...

Ezrah Everett- was the boy's name that was called out a boy that my sister played with for a lot of years before this all happen, yet we are getting used to this, it's been going on now for ages, it's just now we have a new evil like a leader that want massacres... it's not just seeing as fight and die that was the old ways, now it's just pop anyone of she wishes just with a smile and bat of an eye - there died.

The boy Ezra- Oh, no she said- starting to think about him as a love interest- they read her thoughts I knew it I said, I think- this is sick- they want her to lose her boy crush, or see what could be. Not him... she yelled- I have never spoken directly to this boy Likewise, I feel close to him for how he looked and held her to him- in play or not there was a spark there. I watch him as he makes his way toward the stage. 6 feet five inches in height, solid build, coal-black hair that falls in waves over his almost hitting the back of his neck all combed back not too long yet not short. Big brown eyes that change gold in the sunlight.

There were no odds here in the names draw- it was the thought of these kids- and what they did not want to see happen. Their worst nightmare- would be- and then they do it to be prominent. Kill your crush for example and if you don't someone is going too. That the sport here- killing what you love. The shock of the moment is registering on his face was seeing her having the same look of heart hitting the floor and back up, you can see his struggle to remain emotionless with her loss in hope feeling as he had, Likewise, his brown eyes show the terror like I have seen so often in prey on the hunt for deer and others large or small tournament.

He is now a large tournament- a moving target- fun someone in the group doesn't just pop him off now- oh they can't we all lost our gun to the government- Elody got hers back just for this event only. All the troopers in blood red, black and gray uniforms- they use our own shit to kill us with- nice right- helpless are we. Yet that was the overturn that took place.

Here are her uniform blue and white... that has chevrons on the front also there is her logo- and nameplate, and it shines in the light- with a cobalt color that fades into navy blues. They have already made up... each uniform shows their colors, from their parts- unique to their towns. With a symbol that is all, there's too. Elody is the Blue Bird, with the guns crisscrossed in the back. So-oh they knew there was no randomness here or so they want us to think- I am not that dumb- some are though.

A uniform with nothing underneath where if she takes the top off she is topless, no bras for to be far she doesn't need one- they find this funny too, for these things a wool, and you can't sleep in that way, so girls have to run around in the nude, fun. It's all part of their sick tournament. Her hair will cover some yet not all over her chest... it all that they want to see. I sure we will see it all before the stars are over. And say if a boy can do this a girl can- fairness they call it was all the same... also, there was her stuff needed- like them all- a medieval archery bow in pink with pink arrow- feathers which she made and sets her apart from the others...

A Winchester gun also pinks, with a white and barrel long sharp bayonets. All old technology they said adds to the guessing or waiting for what was next when you're loading and someone is running upon you, yet she is the fastest girl I have ever seen load a shot. She has a Gut hook hunting knife, to cut necks with our hands and more.

A civil war sword, with a handguard that's a plus on her end, she says one boy cut his own hand off. I know not to shoot until I can see smell their breath on my face, and not to fire until I see the color in their eyeballs. I going to put this up to a hart and pull the trigger, I don't want to Likewise, I have too.

Her dad's gun passed down that fits in a holster on her belt. Single-barrel pinfire pistol AKA thumb gun.

Brass Knuckles if needed, and she'll need them, a lot of this is a hand and kicking bloodbath. 100 areas' and a purse with all the girl things she needs- like pads that all she wanted to be what they say is far to the other girls they made sure they all had the same, for others are crapping and she well to it's all part of the tournament for the girls on the fight- the time is in control of this too in her mind, and also ammunition.

In this tournament, you can see a girl do it all- like we see everything about her life when she comes in OH's in the night before sleeping or in the marring- shits and pisses too. It's what makes it entertaining they say. I no Elody- she sprays out six times, for the bath time. So, I wonder if she will, being shy? You're going to die anyway so why not... have some good feelings coming out of you... and so what- yet that is me not her... I am glued to the wall screens in my small one-room homespun that gave to us. It's smaller than a teardrop taller, yet they say this is better all or old home were bulldozed over with all our crap inside, yet we have a screen that links to the troops.

They don't have cameras in our bathrooms or bedrooms for this fact, yet I wonder this too- for they know how sexual Elody is with her own body, not public chat that she where kiddie undies, that she is pre-pubescent, that she doesn't have a bar yet. That she loves horses, and dolls, and matching thin strap- colorful sundress, with her shoes, and fingernails. Doing her hair with soft waves and long brads, and playing outside, picking flowers in spring.

What would you do if someone was seeing you do all this, I mean you have to do this right? I wonder if she will- get with him... before death?

The boy thinks about him- I know, I've seen them in the bakery, school and at my home, Likewise, one is probably too old now to volunteer he is older for her like a teenager. This is standard, the Family devotion only goes so far for most people on earning diurnal.

(Back)

Elody- I was scared... 'I suppose now that my mother was locked in some dark world of sadness lost in here crazies'. 'There was no choice, Likewise, for me to understand... At so young - Likewise, at the time, all I knew was that I had lost not only a father, Likewise, a mother as well.

Zoie- AKA the girl talking to you- hi! It has become known that my mother is crazy now lost in this madness... of being with my dad in her mind... that everyone looks down on us even more, and what they are- shit on a boot next to a doorstep. They longer care for us being a money pit on society. I grow up seeing those home kids at school, seeing them go up fast made of ply.

All white, in and out. No colors... not a worm at all so cold. Sweet, tiny girl who cried when I cried before she even knew the reason, who brushed at the sight of a boy, looking at her walking to school, whom still wet the bed some nights, because for seeing my dad beating on my mom for hitting it before the time was done or spending money.

He'd hated her she loved him- yet he was good to us- the money goes to the kids not you for dumb shit- coal dust I tack in is not for you to blow- on dresses I need food- and the kids are starving- why. Let us just say the happy sexy time is all that keep them cheerful to us even. Not a good matchup yet he wanted her when she was younger.

The sadness, the marks of angry hands on their faces, the hopelessness that curled their shoulders forward. I could never let that happen to Elody. The community home would crush her like a bug. So- I kept our predicament a secret.

18

However, the money ran out and we were slowly starving to death. There's no other way to put it other then, I kept telling myself if I could only hold out, Elody turn ten on the 14th and be able to sign up for the high leaves class at school, and a working job with younger kids in the birthing rooms, that money went to me- I held it for her... I become a mom, I have the hunter's job... getting food and seeing that she has what she needs. I see that she is bathed, brush her hair, and teeth things like that. I clean her dress up and hang the line.

For three days, we'd had nothing, Likewise, boiled water with some old dried mint leaves I'd found in the back of a cupboard. Elody- I remember the rain showers had waterlogged through my sister's lager coat, leaving me chilled to the bone. By the time the market closed, I was there seeing if I could beg for money and food also playing the guitar, all blue fades into white, somewhat worn with gray shown some on the back and neck, it has a defeat tall paces, something I don't get... yet it a Gibson, it looks crappy yet sounds okay to me and most worm when the days are so cold and you have to be by a barn burl to stay warm, I get an amp out of a dumpster by my home were this Gibson was too. Blue binding, I have my logo on the back with my number- my name, and my life story on it.

And that is the saying-

Love is foolish with the one you want to be what to not be - to some like me I have to see, the tournament of warfare not far not too careful, they see me fight, in their sight, day and night, is this right? The height of love is the death at the end what is lasting. I will be remembered like the bluebird in flight- see my tears as they dry- going high- either way like a rattle that does not matter:

'Besides- my yearning for the balances of life always be in your errand. Nothing more nothing less.'

I was shaking so hard I dropped clothes in a mud puddle when I saw the firing line 100 man and 80 girl's all blast all at once babies too and little kids they ran the was shot in the handgun above the nose, for not giving in... they form part 15 no longer a town at all. I didn't pick it up for fear I would keel over and be unable to regain my feet. Besides, no one wanted those clothes. And then they would stop to reload their colts, and fire them empty one girl was naked, no more than three, and I saw her run and fall to a trooper.

I named her Laina she had no name just a number, I don't know what it was about her - Likewise, I had to see she was remembered, yet like all the others she either went to the mass graves. Where I saw them just tossed her in like trash with all the other nude bodies young and old alike. I will most like to be eaten by something wild in the woods when this all goes down... I don't see why it any different than this- may be better. I wonder if I should just take the gun now and end it before it starts- only one thing stops me... and that is the faith of young adoration. OR I WOULD...! I have it here at my temple- why the hell not right? I try yet I can't do this...

I can't...

I can't...

I can't...

I squeeze my eyes thigh... I can't... they taunt me too... in my mind look in my penitentiary sterol- like room awaiting my task the next day where I will have it all- or so they say- I ask why to bother. There cute about it to giving us things to end it before it starts... to see if they can crack you. It's my last big meal- might as well rub it in- fun- they no we're not going to eat- that we cannot hold it- yet we starved up to this point- yet that the point to play with us to Freak- with us. Thinking about the hell week to come- this is why...?

19

Elody- I remember crawling into bed, and fell into a dreamless sleep, yet fearful all feeling like I was gun down or chased by someone. It didn't occur to me until the next morning that the boy might have burned the bread on purpose. Might have released the loaves into the flames, knowing it meant being punished, and then delivered them to me. The boy all the time would glance my way, Likewise, I was watching him not letting him see that I was. Because of the bread, because of the red weal that stood out on his cheekbone. What had she hit him with? My dad never hit us yet mom was the bitch. I couldn't even imagine if- she was that in more than one way. You get that...?

The boy took one look back to the bakery as if checking that the coast was clear, then, his attention back to bread in my direction. The second quickly followed, he was in the room over the way they made sure we could see one another yet not be with each other beforehand- just part of- the tournament they play, closing the kitchen door tightly behind him.

Zoie- I remember- I reached out to Elody and she climbed on my lap when she was seven, her arms around my neck, and head on my shoulder. Like- she did when she was a toddler; like she did the night before.

I remember- My mother sits beside me and never hugging her arms around us. For a few minutes, we say nothing. Then I start telling them all the things they must reminisce to do so, now that I will not be there to do them for them. Yet for her news she never really was... just so you know mom!

The take out's- When I am done with teachings about energy, and staying in school homework, and stop turning in o my mother. I calm down for the night after seeing her off- thinking about the times- I'd don't bothersuggesting Elody learn to hunt for I'd never thought she would be the one. She has no background in the killing, only seeing- I tried to teach her a couple of times and it was catastrophic- she feels on her Likewise, and got hurt- I said- no more. The sticks horrified her, and whenever I shot something, she would get teary, and talk about how I cute it was not to do that- we have to live I said. We might be able to heal it if we got it home soon enough- not understand it was not moving anymore- so I distillate on that too- like what's she going to do here? Lay- there and die...?

I have to be a babysitter- I cannot cock out on the flames and leave Elody on her own to run free- I knew she would get lost like a puppy. There's no me now to keep you both alive if I don't do this and I am only one girl here too. It doesn't matter what happens- to her I would never forgive myself- whatever you see...

Parting words- You have to assure me you'll battle!' My voice a whisper not to draw attention- that she may not be the best one in the call outs. The fear I abandonment- felt was solid and vice-versa. I pull her arm from my grasp, moved out of the holding room. 'I was sick feeling; I could have treated myself if I'd had the medicine- yet I can buy that stuff- you deal with it.'

That is life- 'OH- JUST

DEAL WITH IT!'

20

Clasping my hands to her face... holding in like- so tiny 'You have to take the fight and do- all that I do for you on your own you think you can do that- umm- hum- she whispered softly and thoughtfully- looking up at me towering over her, too. You're so fast and brave. Maybe you can win- you could you know- you could get this- do it for me. 'I've seen her carried off by them- the troopers- kicking and screaming like a newborn. Suffering from immobilizing sadness since- I see her on the screens we all do like an animal- locked in the pound. Perhaps it is a sickness of the kiss of death- the last kiss- to be given by me to her, Likewise, it's one we can't afford. Her- she was my world- my... everything- I can't win said- Elody- you must know that in her heart. The competition will be far beyond my abilities. Kids from wealthier districts, where winning is a huge honor, who have not been trained for... Your whole life I never did this for you- and now I have to kick myself for not- you understand this...?

Boys- don't trust them all- go with your gut and in here she points- to her head and heart. Those all see them they, not your friends don't let them be- they are two to three times your size, don't be intimidated- you know that word right- Um-hum she said. This one girl girls over her she looks of too show with her eyes- not to scare you- she who knows 50, unlike ways to kill you with a blade. Oh, there'll be people like me, too. People to weed out before the real fun begins. She threw a knife into a five-year-old-a dead girl walking- it hit her in the left eye- at trials killing her- they use real kids here at this so you're going to have to not care about seeing a life end. Were all a waste of a bloodline why not they said this year why not... have real targets- young helpless- kids. It's a sick youngling to see them lose a life- they say wishing form the screens- like dogs forming at a moth in heat.

Her last words- 'I won't... I can't! You know I won't! Zoie, it repeats over and over in my brain- 'He says, and they yank us apart and slam the door, and I'll never know what it was he desired me to evoke. It's a little ride from the Evenhandedness-

Building to the 1920's train station. I've never been in a car before a mostly would and black truck- that looks like it out of the 1921 mostly world cars are a thing of the past now- yet I get to have this- must if all ride rail.

Elody- car's- Seldom even ridden in motor carriages. In the ridge, we travel on foot- or rail- most don't have the money to have nice things, and if they did, they were overturned. I have seen a few puttering around yet never in one... they bring in the food for the rich and the rich are the one that has the most- buying the troopers off. I see the same year of a truck going down the brick, fire-engine color red, running after the blazes dinging a bell. I've been right not to cry about all this yet I could not hold it in. The station is swarming, now- I knew really- with reporters are in my face I shy away- I don't want the spotlight with their insect-like cameras trained stanchly on my face as I make my way over the height bridge in the world.

Nevertheless, I've had a lot of exercise at wiping my face clean of emotions with all the death I seen. I catch a hint of myself on the television screen over the way the giggle at that- look I made- on the wall that's an expression my influx lives and feel I content that I seem almost fearful. If I'm going to cry, now is the time to do it. By morning, I'll be able to wash the damage done by the tears on my face. Nonetheless, there were lots of tears too come. I'm too tired yet not too numb to cry. The only thing I feel is a desire to be somewhere else.

So, I let the train rock me into oblivion. I put the see-through lacy outfit back on that they give us to sleep in, just slightly crumpled from spending the night on the floor rocking.

Time to move the said- there- and passed- on and off- the train finally begins to slow and suddenly bright light flood the compartment. I run to the window to see what we've only seen on television, the Capitol, the ruling city. The cameras haven't lied about its splendor. If anything, they have not quite captured the magnificence of the glistening buildings in a white and gray and blue glass hues that tower into the air. The people begin to point at us eagerly as they are recognizing an honor girl train rolling into the city.

I step away from the window, sickened by their excitement, knowing they can't wait to watch us die. I see the boy I like over in his car- he holds his ground not being all into me yet I could tell he was, actually waving and smiling at the gazing crowd. He only stops when the train pulls into the station, blocking us from their view I blow him a kiss- no one saw...

Yesterday to say my final goodbyes to my one girlfriend Samee and family. Nevertheless, that's a dark and creaky thing that moves like a snail and smells of sour milk. The walls of this elevator are made of crystal so that you can watch the individuals on the ground floor shrink to ants as you shoot up into the air. I look over the city is just what you would think it looks like - all big and glass-ie. Say hello to your new home for a week- The Training Center has a tower designed exclusively for the honors girls. This will be our home until the definite Stars begin. Each community has an entire floor. You simply step onto a silo and press the number of your district.

Bed- I kick off my shoes and climb undertaking it all off that how I sleep or I can I have to do this- I play with the hood and fall fast asleep- it's a girl thing- the covers over me I see nothing Likewise, that boy in my tight eyes. The shivering hasn't stopped. Perhaps the girl doesn't even remember me. Nonetheless, I know she does. You don't forget the face of the person who was your last hope. I pull the covers up over my head as if this will protect me from the redheaded girl who can't speak. Likewise, I can feel her eyes staring at me, piercing through walls and doors and bedding. I wonder if she'll enjoy watching me- over there- like she would be killing her or the other way around- we share this room now.

2 girls in a small room. They want to see if we're going to kill before the time! Then I'm overwhelmed in light-yellow foam that I have to scrape off with a heavy bristled brush. Oh, well. At least my blood is flowing. Slowly, I drag myself out of bed and into the shower. I arbitrarily punch Likewise, tons on the control board and end up hopping from foot to foot as alternating jets of icy cold and steaming hot water assault me. I put my hair down in the two braids down my front side. This is the first time since the morning of the reaping that I resemble myself. No fancy hair and no fancy clothes yet mostly lacy to see if you have cuts or packing hidden stuff, no flaming capes. Just me. Looking like I could be headed for the woods. It calms me.

I'm nervous about the training. There will be a week of this the first days in which all the star girls practice together with the targets of killing life.

On the last evening, we'll each get a chance to achieve in isolated before the star-makers. The thought of meeting the other star's uncompromising makes me nauseous. I turn the roll I have just taken from the basket over and over in my hands, Likewise, then my famine is gone only the famine of blood to kills is all I need now.

Not- Not- Not ME! It's them making ME!

The chatting- I try to focus on the talk, which has twisted to our interview clothes, I do okay they say I need to talk more they say- yet she is cute. We all shower together with us girls I don't like this I am shy and the look at me like meet. And what to play with me - U- No! When I open my door, the redheaded girl is collecting my United and boots from where I left them on the floor before my shower. I want to say sorry for possibly getting her in trouble earlier when I tripped on her hair walking in it's that long. The face of the redheaded girl intertwines with gory images from earlier Famine Tournament, with my mother withdrawn and unreachable, with My sister emaciated and terrified. I bolt up screaming for my father to run as the mine explodes into a million deadly bits of light.

Dawn is breaking through the windows I see it all there are no covers on the big windows yet everyone saw me do everything on-screen even shower and what I did in bed there are even cams in my fingers and under the sheets how I don't know- Likewise, I know they're- there to see me do that too.

Eat- I'd set out to tell her I was sorry about dinner. Nonetheless, I remember I'm not supposed to speak to her unless I'm giving her an order. She avoids my eyes as we make our way to the table, give a small nod and eats. My slumbers are filled with disturbing dreams of depth and wetness and death.

The Capitol has a misty, haunted air. My headaches and I must have bitten into the side of my cheek in the night. My tongue probes the ragged flesh and I taste blood.

The boy I like- like- I exchange a look with him. 'I don't have any secret about having the tingles down there for him, I want to lock lips at some point I feel that I have to before the end.' The end of what is that? Really what is that all about?' I've eaten enough of your squirrels, yet I don't know how to kill one- how can I kill a child?' I never thought about him eating the squirrels I shot. Somehow, I for one continuously see in your mind's eye- himself being there I remember her saying. Not out of greed-he there for you remember. On the other hand, then again for the reason, that town families usually eat expensively Likewise, her meat. Beef and chicken and horse. I recall this... 'There's always hand-to-hand combat.

All you need is to come up with a knife, and you'll at least stand a chance. If I get jumped, I'm dead!' I can hear my voice rising in anger. I don't like to kill I remember saying... cut to now - 'You won't mind- if it's to live! You'll be living up in some tree-eating raw squirrels and picking off individuals with arrows. You know what my Zoie said to me when she came to say goodbye as if to cheer me up, she says maybe neighborhood 14 will finally have a winner. Then I comprehended, she didn't mean me, she meant you!' said- the boy.

The boy- she's a dismissal, I know- it's my hope to look out for her- until the time comes, I can no longer.

Elody- I know he is not lying about that- I heard in his thoughts before all of this. Him- he has-, physical power that is strong and perfect tilts his eyes ever so right and his six-pack chest at me in the light- the advantage with the girls- would I be that girl- to see the eyes shine for me- as I look at these white teeth- ever so right.

Training Center- Throw a spear- a woman said- that was teaching at the nine-year-old girl's head and kill her- kill her- if you don't you go down in your points. Spend the time trying to learn something you don't know, I remember her saying to me- going back- Weights try don't overdo and hurt your body, don't reveal how much you can lift in front of the other stars. They don't need to see that you're meeker than they, you're going to train group that is not far- it kills or they kill you without blinking- and lick you up and down to spit on it, rubbing it all in you. The plan's the same for both of you if your smart you'll get this I can't say- just think hart Elody and go with your intentions- wink.

Zoie- Learn to tie a decent knot and you your gun and to pack ammo- I do not even care about the bow much to show- that if you run out of other things you only have five aero's anyways, that are tipped in bad stuff- don't tuck the tip- K. Um-hum- I say childishly. Save showing knife for there going at that point- what you're best at until your private sessions. Are we good?' I nod- Zoie this was the day before the callouts. Don't fire the small one unless it's deep in their left boob, and squeeze hard it will take about a day for them to die slowly- yet they back off. Don't ever panic- or you will die- don't sweat in the cold your you'll die- also.

Now night- I bite my lip and stalk back to my room, making sure he- the boy that I like- like can hear the door slam yet he sees all of me with the screen in his room and the double-sided firebox. I sit on the bed, undressing, hating him over they are doing things I don't understand, hating myself hard saying my name- for mentioning that I was feeling the same. Is it- love...?

Is this love- I see and now feel...?

As his thought was turned on to me in my mind and his by them. In my bed I feel him have this with me- and does he- it was a lovemaking moment of heightened lust. The people went nuts for us- feeling this moment, of zenith.

Pretending to be friends, the next day I hear giggles from the other girls! Talking up each other's strengths are a bond, insisting the other take credit for their abilities. Because, in fact, at some point, we're going to have to knock it off and accept we're bitter adversaries. Stupid instruction that we stick together in training like his hand on me in the night. It's my own fault I was ripped on his too, I guess I was doing it right never did that one yet I saw it through his eyes- and mine in his- with switched like bodies at the end feeling, and seeing within and out, for telling him he didn't have to coach us disjointedly.

Nevertheless, that didn't mean I wanted to do everything with him today so they can see the crematory- of a puppy- the love they call it. He was all into me not letting his hand off me and not stopping them from his hands feeling me up down the uniform. Yah

I had a hand full of Likewise, - so did he- cute right!

22

I hear his voice in my head- saying cute things. She has no idea- over there that this is what she was thinking about. Although along with what she needed to know. I made sure she knew what not to hear- and see- in training... for she is the girl, I picked to work with as a team. The effect she can have on him is a lot some say he not thinking clearly to learn to fight- that he'll pass fast- daydreaming of her- ha, that is what they think he said- in his thoughts. Visibly they meant to degrade me and him. -Right? Likewise, a tiny part of me phenomena if this was praise. That he meant I was interesting- in some way.

It's almost ten p.m. I clean my teeth and smooth back my hair again. Anger temporarily blocked out my nervousness about meeting the other teams, Likewise, now I can feel my anxiety rising once more. I catch myself biting my nails.

Late-night- It's weird, how much he's noticed me from within and out. Alike with the kindness- he's paid to my hunting- over the years- um like was not enough. Besides deceptively, I have not been as oblivious to him as I imagined, moreover. I have kept track of all of this in my beep mind they said.

Blood spatter- off with youngling's heads- let the bodies hit the floor- let the young bodies hit the floor! DEATH! I look around at the Career girls who are showing off, obviously trying to intimidate the field. Then at the others, the malnourished, the incompetent, shakily having their first educations with a knife or an ax. They walk up and we show off with them having to in programmed in their mind to die- they even so sick to ask for it. 100 girls under 10 knocked-off in less than 30 minutes... Only five low-class boys hurt not all killed.

The doors open into an enormous gymnasium filled with various weapons to practice with- you in the fight we only have what we had at our homes- so if you have an Ak-47 good for you- I don't- far no- yet that's not what this is about- it's about blood falling to floor!

I move on to the obstacle courses. The actual training rooms are below the ground level of our building- and in the night lit fields. With these elevators going in and out with them in control- yet again, the ride is less than a few moments. Although it's not yet nine in the morning were here all day today, we're the last ones to arrive.

The other stars are met in a tense circle like a dojo- it's about respect to the past- twisted in their tournament.

My man and I are the only two dressed alike. As soon as we join the circle, the head trainer, a tall, Experts in each skill will remain at their positions, a sporty female named steps up and begins to explain the training agenda she towers over me not him though. Some of the stations teach survival skills, other fighting techniques. We are forbidden to engage in any combative exercise with another try Likewise. There are assistants on hand if we want to practice with a partner. We will be free to travel from area to area as we choose, per our mentor's instructions. 'Suppose we tie some knots,' I say, they all giggle- like I am retarded! He said it was cute...! Is that all that matters?

We pass an unfilled post where the trainer seems satisfied to have schoolchildren. You get the feeling that the knot-tying class is not the Starvation stars burning spot. When he apprehends, I know something about snares, he shows us a simple, excellent trap that will leave a human competitor dangling by a leg from a tree- now outside in the fields barricaded in with high walls- all white. And bright lights...We concentrate on this one skill for an hour until both of us have mastered all that is needed. Then we move on to concealment. He genuinely seems' to enjoy this station, twirling a combination of mud and clay and berry juices around on his pale skin, weaving disguises from vines and leaves.

The instructor who runs the concealment position is full of passion for his work - yes some are just A-holes.

23

(Back)

The crescent moon roll dotted with seeds from Community 13. Somehow, although it's made from the same gear as I walk to 14, it looks a lot more mouthwatering than the horrible drop biscuits that are the standard fare at home. I had to get something- didn't I?

Playing with him- We both give a somewhat convincing laugh and ignore the stares from around the room. I tried breathing- my face lost- as I recall the event, a Permitted story, in which I'd stupidly defied a black bear over the rights to a skep. My boy is laughing and asks questions right on cue.

He's much better at this than I am at that too- so cute, right? On the second day, while we're taking a shot at spear throwing, he whispers to me all sweet things and nothing. 'I think we have a shadow of me now.'

I throw my spear, which I'm not too bad at actually if I don't have to throw too far, and see the little girl from Community 1 standing back a bit, watching us. She's the ten-year-old, the other one that is really small yet not as petite as me in stature. Up close she looks like a lost school girl- walking in a playground. She has optimistic, dark, eyes and lustrous skin and stands tilted up on her toes with her arms slightly extended to her sides, as if ready to take wing at the smallest amount sound. It's impossible not to think of a bluebird.

I bite my lip. Permitted is a small yellow flower that grows in the Field. Leah. My sister Rose. Neither of them could tip the scale at seventy pounds soaking wet.

(Thinking back, I was...)

Cut ripped out into reality- I pick up another spear while my boy throws one that I gave him. 'I think her names are Leah,' I say softly. I remember her some...

My heart sinks... Almost all of the boys and at least half of the girls are bigger than I am, even though many of the tries Likewise, I have never been fed properly. Kids- You can see it in their bones, their skin, and the hollow look in their eyes.

Now that I know she's there, it's hard to ignore, that I am the youngest child in the room. She slips up and joins us at different stations. Like me, she's clever with plants, climb swiftly, and have good aim. She can hit the target every time with a slingshot. What is a slingshot against a 225-pound male with a sword that going to get her...? Oh, yeah this is all she has to fight with- far-right? NO!

I read down the list of the skill from stations I was part of, my eyes can't help flitting around to the others. It's the first time we've been collected, on level ground, in simple clothes. The exceptions are the kids from the wealthier districts, the volunteers, the ones who have been fed and trained throughout their lives for this moment. I may be smaller naturally, Likewise, overall my family's ingenuity has given me an edge in that area.

The slight benefit I held coming into the Training Center, my fiery entrance last night, seems to disappear in the attendance of my opposition. The others were jealous of us- I knew- he knew, Likewise, not for the reason that we were astounding since our graphic designer and a team like the makeup guys were. That what we to look at that part and all.

About- It's technically against the rules to train to try Likewise before they reach the Capitol Likewise, it happens every year. The meat and plants from the woods combined with the exertion it took to get them have given me a healthier body than most of those I see around me.

Now I see nothing Likewise, contempt in the glances of the Career trying Likewise. Each must have fifty to a hundred pounds on me.

In area 14, we call them the occupation acknowledgments or just the careers. In addition, like as not, the champion will be one of them. They project arrogance and prominently. I stand straight up, and while I'm thin, I'm strong. The tri Likewise, from 1, 2, and 7 conventionally have this look about them.

When Alla releases us, they head straight for the lethal tall stick- with a gold spoon up to her Likewise, is looking over all the weapons in the gym and handle them with ease.

I'm thinking that it's lucky I'm a fast runner when he nudges my arm and I jump yet in a good way. He is still beside me- his expression is sober- yet loving to me only.

Moving on- 'Where would you like to begin?' When we finally escape to bed on the second night with me, he mumbles that were not getting any sleep, I make a sound that is somewhere between a snort and a laugh, saying okay- I want what I want- so let give them a late-night show to see- Then catch myself doing more than ever with him. It's messing with my mind too much, trying to keep straight when we're supposedly friends, not full-on lovers at this age- yet age is nothing to them or us at this point- we have sex all night! Then when we're not ready for all this we no- yet we got it all down and in and out, to say the least. Bang! Bang- bang- bang- bang! You know exactly with happen by that! Done! Aww- okay put it back in- We even broke the bed! At I'll know where we stand with the folks seeing this- we have fans big time.

'Let's pretend there's no one around- and keep on keeping on with this.' 'God not so fast and hard'- I no- take it- I said riding even hard for that to go- you have too-

'Well- uh,' he said- you're good I say. Um-mm we said together, and I got the O!

Next to seeing all the wannabes! Seeing all the ass with cams! - I am sick of this I didn't sleep last night- crank yes, after that, we only talk in front of people- about how I got plowed- and then frogged him after- and went for the good night kiss too- and my love life at nine years old. Crap- They start to call our numbers us out of lunch, for our cloistered sessions with the tournament makers. The area by region, first the girl, then the boy.

As usual, Community 14 is slated to go first- for I am the youngster here they call me. We linger in the dining room, unsure where else to go. No one comes back once they have left. As the room empties, the pressure to appear friendly lightens. By the time they call Leah, we are left alone. We sit in quiet until they summon my lover to come. He rises- with my hand in hand.

'Thanks. I will,' he says. 'You- Shoot straight.'

I nod. I don't know why I said anything at all. Although if I'm going to lose, I'd rather with him win than the others.

Better for our district, for my mother and my sister.

After about fifteen minutes, they call my name. I smooth my hair, set my shoulders back, and walk into the gymnasium. Instantly, I know I'm in trouble. They've been here too long, the Tournament Makers. Sat through twenty-three other demonstrations. I had too much to wine, most of them. Want more than anything to go home.

There's nothing I can do Likewise, continue with the plan. I walk to the archery station. Oh, the weapons!

I've been itching to get my hands on them for days! Bows made of wood and plastic and metal and materials I can't even name. Arrows with feathers cut in flawless uniform lines. I choose a bow, string it, and sling the matching quiver of arrows over my shoulder.

There's a shooting range, Likewise, it's much too limited. Standard bull's-eyes and human silhouettes. I walk to the center of the gymnasium and pick my first target. The dummy used for knife practice. Even as I pull back on the bow- I know something is wrong. The string's tighter than the one I use at home. The arrow's more rigid. I miss the dummy by a couple of inches and lose what little attention I had been commanding. For a moment, I'm humiliated, then I head back to the bullseye. I shoot again and again until I get the feel of these new weapons.

Back in the center of the gymnasium, I take my initial position and skewer the dummy right through the heart. Then I sever the rope that holds the sandbag for boxing, and the bag splits open as it slams to the ground. Without pausing, I shoulder to roll forward, come upon one knee, and send an arrow into one of the hanging lights high above the gymnasium floor. A shower of sparks bursts from the fixture.

It's an excellent shooting. I turn to the Tournament Makers. A few are nodding approval, Likewise, the majority of them are fixated on a roast pig that has just arrived at their banquet table.

Suddenly, I am furious, that with my life on the line, they don't even have the decency to pay attention to me. That I'm being upstaged by a dead pig. My heart starts to pound, I can feel my face burning. Without thinking, I pull an arrow from my quiver and send it straight at the Tournament maker's table. I hear shouts of alarm as people stumble back. The arrow skewers the apple in the pig's mouth and pins it to the wall behind it. Everyone stares at me in disbelief.

'Thank you for your consideration,' I say. Then I give a slight bow and walk straight toward the exit without being dismissed.

As I stride toward the elevator, I fling my bow to one side and my quiver to the other. I brush past the gaping Avoxes who guard the elevators and hit the number twelve landed on with my fist. The doors slide together and I zip upward. I actually make it back to my floor before the tears start running down my cheeks. I can hear the others calling me from the sitting room. Likewise, I fly down the hall into my room, bolt the door, and fling myself onto my bed.

Then I really begin to sob.

Now- I've done it! Now I've ruined everything! If I'd stood even a ghost of a chance, it vanished when I sent that arrow flying at the Tournament makers. What will they do to me now? Arrest me? Execute me? Cut my tongue and turn me into an Avex so I can wait on the future stars of Panel?

What was I thinking, shooting at the Tournament makers? Unquestionably, I am situated, I was shooting at that apple, for the reason that I was so angry at being overlooked. I wasn't trying to kill one of them yet I want so- to do that. If I would have, I would be dead fast!

Oh, what does it matter? It's not like I was going to win the Tournament anyway. Who cares what they do to me? What really scares me is what they might do to Zoie and me, how my family might suffer now because of my impulsiveness. Will, they take their few belongings, or send my mother to prison and me to the community home, or kill them? They wouldn't kill them, would they?

Why not? What do they care about? I myself should have hung around and asked for forgiveness. Otherwise chuckled, like it was a big pun. Then maybe I would have found some compassion. Likewise, then again instead, I followed out of the place in the worst- mannered manner conceivable.

I shout for them to go away and eventually they do. It takes at least an hour for me to cry myself out. Then I just lay curled up on the bed, stroking the silken sheets with my hood, feeling him run through and out of me- watching the sunset over all the land- they all could see in and the cam was flaking its red-light- right down where you could see my pinkie- kitty. That's what they asked for when sending in money for me to get sponsors. Being cute and hot sales to them- that what I was whispered in my mind by him over the way to his room.

In the early parts of the day at the stars, before that though, they'll give me a score so low, no one in their right mind would sponsor me. That's what will happen tonight. Since the training isn't open to viewers, the Tournament makers announce a score for each player. I expect guards to come for me. Nevertheless, as time passes, it seems less likely.

I calm down. They still need a girl - from constituency 14, don't they? If the Tournament makers want to punish me, they can do it publicly. Wait until I'm in the arena and sic starving wild animals on me. You can bet they'll make sure I don't have a bow and arrow to protect myself. Also- with what I said before. It gives the audience a starting place for the betting that will continue throughout the stars.

I wish the stylists hadn't shown up for the reason that for some reason, I don't like the idea of substandard them. It's as if I've tossed away all the good work they did on the opening ceremonies without a thought. I avoid looking at anyone as I take tiny spoonfuls of potato soup. The saltiness reminds me of my tears. I had been anticipating my shooting skills might get me a six or a seven or more- like a ten, even if I'm not particularly powerful. Now I'm sure -

I'll have the lowest score of the twenty-five. If no one sponsors me, my odds of staying alive decrease to almost zip.

(Back)

The walkout of the town as a star the others would spit- lap- bit and rip on us thinking there were higher up than us- we did this naked as the day we came into this hellish world. I community has gotten rid of us- like trash. We are the property of them- not a farce- they don't want us here or anywhere in these parts after our time is up- unless you're the winner- there weeding us out.

The walk was long and blasting on the feet- my sister saying you'll make it back- no you won't on girl said. On the train, I sat- box cars- changed. I had to shove a tube up my Likewise, - hidden way up in my ass- so far, I could feel it in my gut and they thought was poop- with 1,000 or so of currency in it. You saw me take that out- gross right! 50% of us will pass the first day- you can make it if you have the cash!

Run- there is no one or place to go- money is the way out- one cut a girl get last night to get the cash out of her. Syaga was her... she was odd, to say the least. Famine was high- in the cars where they opened them and hosed you down boy and girls alike- still naked. Sleep was hard on the cars rocking down the skinny rail tracks- feeling every bump- with eyes over the way showing- I WANT TO KILL- YOU.

Hot and cold in the blue and white cars- Steam and sound of highs over rolling hills. I was shanked on the hand, and told by Syasa she would cut my head off if I did suck on her off. The march passes us we look- making a distraction- with a cut to a face- some run for it going for the river over the way- yet they get some and smash their feet not killing them- that would be like killing a girl before banging her with yah did- just making sure they would never get away- hobbling they call it. One was shot- I didn't even know her name- yet no one gives a rat's ass. The smalls of pigs and fish- rotting with humans- a head off over the way- too much- we walk into the camp are new home. Line up they yell at the head man; the drummer plays his death march.

The boy Sage is looking dumb with his mouth open.

You are- Jailers-

Rolls called out-

The first time one tries to escape at 3 years of jail time- and the right to kill you without say. 2nd adds 2 more each time.

Masturbate is a NO- something that you should do it drains strength unless a par team. Those that do well have - do this in front of a camera and say why they need it.

Saving is done in 5 minutes by the hands of a staffer where you can shower for 15 minutes. We march around still unclothed as they all see... I was the one that wants to see the most is all pubescent.

Boys love that... so they can see it all!

There I was... until training.

All are chained down to their bad unless in a partnership. The hospitality was high- at some ran there too- killed with high power Tommy guns.

24

I got my boy fast before I went here, yet I do love him. I- he was the crunch of my life anyways- I said to them in a chat... Permitted all Leah. The rat that said they would buy you out - is Tostito- give a long run and ways out- yet into a trap. A boy is dragging a dead girl by the hair no- still marching around to show how strong we are. I could hear the accordion music of my homeland playing in my mind as I was a week yet not stopping.

I can get you a train- he would say to them- and you would get there, and it was a rusted out 1888, with parts missing. I had no choices the one said- if I stay in this hole- I will perish! She came back hobbled and she killed herself staking her fist down her mouth.

Oh yeah- Yet not after donning these 5 times. We are going to break you! That what they said to us as we got on the train here.

Zoie- I ran after her not caring about life- I was even placed in an open jail-like room for saying something to a trooper he didn't like- where it would rain- or sun or more- no lights- bats and rats all over- I had to poop in the corner. I was sent to Demise island over in the triangle, you can see me here waking passing, I know I would not make it back to see if she is alive- yet I know I might- if I stay strong and eat all they give I know that I can make it some- its jizz full- watery shit they give me.

When I pop my head out the steel doors. I said FU- and get my food cut ½ of what it was!! I giggled crazily in the rain coming down... and when I shit- they don't like that closing off the top with a blackout plat.

I started eating bugs... The running the crawling was nuts in the mud- and woodlands. I even jumped off 1,200 feet in the air. They would hold my head with a pipe to make me suffer- for being me. The girl that showed her what she needs to know. I look good hair falling out- I know I look okay- death not far- yet, I have to be strong for her- even if the odds are not in my favor. I rip my teeth out that were rotting. A trooper would come in every night and fondle me- I could not do anything or more time was added. He would kiss me all over too- I fought some- yet gave in to get out. I saw a girl being dragged out by their lags, for them to have a good time- I was one- and yes, we all were stripped. This is what I get just for my blood type and heritage. Used as -ho! I got tattoos; I didn't want too... covering my arms.

I get 50 more nights- for yelling at the troopers for playing with myself, yet can you not- some say they do... lies? I am failing, and I know... that's okay if it's for her to live on.

(Forward)

2 years of this I was a broken girl.

25

One was made a show- and the blade went down hard and fast- she was only five. The number, which is between one and twelve, one being irredeemably bad and twelve being unattainably high, signifies the promise of the try Likewise. The mark is not a guarantee of which person will win. It's only an indication of the potential a try Likewise, showed in training.

Frequently, for the reason that of the variables in the actual arena, high-scoring try Likewise, go down almost immediately. As well as a few years ago, the boy who won the Stars only received a three. Still, the scores can help or hurt individual stars in terms of sponsorship. I masticated that... I choose I may as well go.

The scores will be televised tonight. It's not like I can hide what happened forever. I go to the bathroom and wash my face, Likewise, it's still red and splotchy. All and sundry waiting at the table, even Pahyai and Lattie. The adults begin some chitchat about the weather forecast, and I let my eyes meet us me and my boy. He raises his eyebrows. A question. What happened? I just give my head a small shake. Then, as they're serving the main course, I hear the reporter says, 'Okay, enough small talk, just how bad were you today?'

Somehow calling me sweetheart is off enough at this for an awe moment- that I'm at least able to speak. 'I shot an arrow at the Tournament makers to show what I can do big crowds.' Everyone stops eating when I shot to girls with one aero- as they were moving. 'You what?' The horror in Gannah's voice confirms my worst suspicions.

'I shot an arrow at them. Not exactly at them. In their direction. It's like My boy said, I was shooting and they were ignoring me and me just. I just lost my head, so I shot an apple out of their stupid roast pig's mouth!' I say defiantly.

'And what did they say?' Says Cinna carefully.

'Nothing. Or I don't know. I walked out after that,' I say.

'Without being dismissed?' Gasps Gannah. 'I dismissed myself,' I said. I remember how I promised my sister that I really would try to win and I feel like a ton of coal has dropped on me.

See they'd have to reveal what happened in the Training Center for it to have any worthwhile effect on the population. People would need to know what you did. Likewise, they can't sense it's secret, so it'd be a waste of effort,' says Gannah. 'More likely they'll make your life hell in the arena.' 'Well, they've already promised to do that to us anyway,' says my strong brave man. 'Well, that's that,' says Gannah.

Then he Likewise, terms into a roll.

'Do you think they'll arrest me?' I ask.

'Doubt it... be a pain to replace you at this stage,' says Gannah.

'What about my household...?' I say.

'Will they discipline them...?'

'Don't think so- maybe have them show the spread eagle...?'

(Giggling) the many- many- people, in the stadium.

Wouldn't make much sense.

'Very Leah,' says Gannah. And I realize the impossible has happened. They have actually cheered me up. Gannah picks up a pork chop with his fingers, which makes Gannah frown, and dunks it in his wine.

He rips off a hunk of meat and starts to chuckle. 'What were their faces like?' I can feel the edges of my mouth tilting up. 'Shocked. Terrified. Uh, preposterous, some of them.' 'There was pop in my mind. 'One man tripped backward into a bowl of punch.'

Gannah guffaws and we all start laughing except Gannah, although even she is suppressing a smile. 'Well, it serves them right. It's their job to pay attention to you. And just because you come from Community Twelve is no excuse to ignore you.' Then her eyes dart around as if she's said something totally outrageous. 'I'm sorry, Likewise, that's what I think,' she says to no one in precise. 'I'll get a very bad score,' I say. 'Scores only matter if they're very good, no one pays much attention to the bad or mediocre ones.

My family is safe... right?

Time to go- you...d-ah...

Next time you see me- I grin at him and realize that I'm starving. I cut off a piece of pork, dunk it in mashed potatoes, and start eating. It's okay.

Plus, if they are safe- I don't feel they are, no real harm has been done - they say to me in my mind- with a snicker- that I did not like- yet what could I do about it?

I chatted with my boy he said-

'People use that tactic,' he said to me. 'I hope that's how people interpret the four I'll probably get,' says me. 'If that. Really, is anything less impressive than watching a person pick up a heavy ball and throw it a couple of yards? One more or less landed on my foot... or toe.'

After dinner, we go to the sitting room to watch the scores announced on television. First, they show a photo of the tri Likewise, then flash their score below it. Most of the other players average a six. Surprisingly, little Permitted comes up with a seven. I don't know what she showed the judges, Likewise, she's so tiny it must have been impressive. The Career Likewise, - naturally get in the eight-to-ten range.

Constituency 14 comes up last, as usual. He pulls a five, the lowest of all boy it's all the sex they giggle- so at least a couple of the Tournament makers must have been watching him. I dig my fingernails into my palms as my face comes up, expecting the worst. Then they're flashing the number eleven on the screen. Everybody is slapping me on the ass and cheering and congratulating me- on getting F-ed and going to die for not have a real man.

Nevertheless, it doesn't seem real.

'There must be a mistake- I think with the- OH SHIT look on my face. How? How- could that happen...?' I ask Gannah.

At dawn, I lie in bed for a while, watching the sun come up on a beautiful morning. It's on Sunday. A day off at home. I wonder if my sisters -is- well or not- in the woods yet, I knew that they would do something like that it came around to me.

'Elody, the girl with a shy spirit,' says Jannah and gives me a hug.

Jannah is an old friend of Gannah her gay girlfriend and that not allowed either in the stars - or they would be a couple one reason, they were picked to wipe out their gay ways - a sickness as they say- just like our stars. Naughtily... they kiss- saying kill us!

And they did the next time we chatted yet they were hand and hand- and in love- or so they said. One girl said that's better than dying for Jesus... No comment- yet I have some faith.

My man- and I congratulate each other for making it this far, another awkward moment- as we make out... saying are dreams if we make it- knowing one must die- We've both done well, Likewise, what does that mean for the other? I escape to my room as quickly as possible and burrow down under the covers. The stress of the day, particularly the crying, has worn me out. I drift off, reprieved, relieved, and with the number eleven still flashing behind my eyelids.

I had been struggling along on my own for about six months when I first ran into Bale in the woods. It was a Sunday in October, the air cool and pungent with dying things. I had spent the morning competing with the squirrels for nuts, and the slightly warmer afternoon wading in shallow ponds harvesting Elody.

26

The boy- The only meat I would shoot was a squirrel, which had practically run over my toes, in its quest for acorns, nevertheless, the animals would still be afoot; when the snow buried my other food sources. Having strayed further than afield than usual, I was speeding up back home, lugging my burlap sacks when I came across a dead rabbit. I had been trying to use snares all summer with no success, so I couldn't help dropping my sacks to examine this one.

That's risky...' My fingers were just on the wire above one of the rabbits when a voice rang out. 'It was hanging by its neck in a thin wire a foot above my head. About fourteen yards away was another.

What she said to do- 'That you can't believe a little girl from Community fourteen has done this well. The whole thing's been more than you ever could have dreamed of. Talk about my clothes. How nice the people are...? How the city amazes you... say what you love- If you won't talk about yourself, at least complement the audience. Just keep turning it back around, all right.'

I familiar with the twitch-up snares, for the reason that my father had used them. When the prey is caught, it's jerked into the air out of the reach of other starving animals. I brought it back for her- and that when the love started.

Elody- The next hours are agonizing. At once, it's clear I cannot gush. We try me playing cocky, Likewise, I just don't have the arrogance.

Apparently, I'm too 'defenseless' for ferociousness, I'm not witty, humorous, erotic, and or secretive- like you.

~*~

At the Starvation Tournament part of the Stars, at every living being in the Capitol by marvelous dishes around my room. When the girl with the rainbow hair comes in to turn down my bed, her eyes widen at the mess. 'Just leave it!' I yell at her. 'Just leave it alone!' I hate her, I never hated anyone or anything till now- too, with her knowing reproachful eyes that call me a coward, a monster, a puppet of the Capitol, both now and then. For her, justice must finally be fashionable.

Why am I letting her? At least my death will help pay for the life of the boy in the woods. Likewise, instead of fleeing the room, the girl closes the door behind her and goes to the bathroom. She comes back with a damp cloth and wipes my face gently then cleans the blood from a broken plate off my hands. Why is she doing this? She shakes her head. 'I should have tried to save you,' I whisper. Does this mean we were right to stand by? That she has forgiven me? 'No, it was wrong,' I say. She taps her lips making them wet, with her fingers then points to my chest with her knife. I think she means that I would just have ended probably dead. When we move on...

I spend the next hour helping the girl that has taken a liking to me in a sexual is cleaning see and I'm room. For sex, and to get on the good side of me- I play along not trusting her- is just sex, right?

Cleaned away is all that makes us little girls in a room, she turns down my bed. I crawl in between the sheets like a five-year-old and let her tuck me in. Then she gets in with me- and the fun starts for her- I want her to stay until I fall asleep- I never like sleep alone anyways- I always sleep with my sister. Yet she is taking time away from me and my lover- I get it so does he- to be there when I wake up. I want the protection of this girl, even though she never had mine.

In the morning, it's not the girl Likewise, my prep team who are hanging over me. I remember my lessons with my sisters in my mind.

Huge bright blue eyes, full red lips, lashes that throw off bits of light when I blink. Finally, they cover my entire body in a powder that makes me shimmer in the lights. Then Melia goes to work on my hair, weaving strands of red into a pattern that begins at my left ear, wraps around my head and then falls in one braid down my right shoulder.

The team works on me until late afternoon, turning my skin to glowing satin, stenciling patterns on my arms, painting flame designs on my twenty perfect nails. They erase my face with a layer of pale makeup and draw my features back out.

He walks in- with us two girls- 'Close your eyes girls,' he orders. Me- I can feel the silken inside as they slip it down over my stark- naked body, then the weight for his call-outs of what he wanted to do with me after he did what he wanted with her. I clutch her hand rubbing my- hand as I blindly touching my goodies, glad to find they are at least two inside. There are some adjusting and jiggling. Then silence... and the end for the first. With just the girls as he and the viewers looking!

Fuck me- I yell! He crawls up, between my legs where he stops to rid me of my sodden panties. He slings it away carelessly, his eyeing eyes never leaving the bare place they covered. He continues to stare, licking his lips- obviously beyond aroused by the sight Likewise, there's nothing to hide my intimate folds and I feel exposed, squirming and certain that my blush reaches all the way down there. He takes his sweet, torturous time - enjoying in his private viewing commotion. He makes no move to touch me Likewise, the ravenous molds his face is pushing me to run up onto him with wild desire, taking his time. I shift response with desolate moments.

With my body on top of his I stroke my hand over the sprinkling of stubble, on- easily with myself with every curve and dip of his face. You are so precious, thank you for taking another chance on me. Laying in his chest with my head- while he grips my inner thighs, pushing them apart. Keep still or I'll make you- then he kisses my lips and the other set. I gasp at his challenging threat and on pure instinct and raw desire, my hips tilt up by their own accord, crazy in its need for any contact.

My legs are bent with my knees resting on either side of his head. My bottom sits on his chest, taking my weight, which leaves my secret opening utterly gaping and vulnerable, not to mention very close to his sinful mouth. I can feel his breath on me, fluttering and making my heart stutter. His hands slip around, cupping my backside as he pushes me into him for the sex that was about to be made, inhaling deeply like what I feel inside me. Besides what she already had. Did I care yes - Likewise, I want to live off in the night and I need a girlfriend too here.

27

The night before the stars- all the girls in their fancy dress all colors and shapes. 'I have to, I'm dizzy!' I'm also giggling, which I think I've done maybe never in my lifetime.

Likewise, the nerves and the spinning have gotten to me. My boy- wraps a protective arm around me. 'Don't worry, I've got you. Can't have you following in your mentor's footsteps.' He is the one- that I love here just so you know that- yet I a girl

I will try anything once even girls... I kissed a girl and it was okay... I said to them passing out like... for what that all though it's not that bad- mom and dad it what happens with girls this age! They're going to get Fucked- that's the times- just ask MTV- the show and the music.

I find this affiance stop viewing moms and dads, I am sure your kid would say what wrong with this? There was not much said- I am sure I no more than you do at my age in sex- like most girls my age! If you do like it go do something else- yet I assure you- which your kid will not- and say your nuts, for not letting them look at me- for there doing just what I am- and as of this year, it's right.

~*~

More chatting with the interviewers- Woot- woot is all I hear as I stand there looking at them all! They like me they really like me. I swallow hard. 'She asked me to try really hard to win.' The audience is frozen, hanging on my every word. 'And what did you say?' prompts Caesar gently. Nevertheless, instead of warmth, I feel an icy rigidity take over my body.

'I bet you did,' says your lovers a, a squeeze. The buzzer goes off- saying no. My muscles tense as they do before a kill just for show that I could- Kill is okay to this world- yet saying- Fuck is not- and ripping her heart out is okay too? Yet some light sex is not I asked- they were like shocked by that one- something I should not have questioned... why? When I speak, my voice seems to have gone up an octave. 'I swore I would do this and not be right.' The all gapped- like I shouldn't have... why? It's not the 1900's any more or the 2000s- get what I mean- I said to them in my mind- they said to drop it. As we cut to a break.

Talk about this perfect love you have with him? His eyes his face, his body... and nothing else... don't say what you really feel I said in my mind? They didn't like that... I was not whining points for saying what I wanted and that was a boy banging me in the night- as a real girl would do. Pissed- I shyly get up that what they want a shy girl with a fake smile on her face- 'Sorry we're out of time, yet that is me- Likewise, come on here...

What do you want to see? I asked- on brake...

Death?

Lust?

Killing?

Or me?

Where are my Life and Love- come in- it's all for you, and I feel cheated- and then they said remember whom you are a nine-year star... Your dead to us either way.

They make me not me... just a program of what they want.

A heel like an applause continues long after I'm seated back with the others. I look to Sani for comfort and she looked at me like what the hell. He gives me a side thumb as I walk to him. Sani is a boy that makes sure I don't F- it up. What happens to be sweet? I said I just didn't feel like it today... Hello- I a NINE-YEAR-OLD- girl! I feel like crying!

Best of luck, Elody Elizabeth Elosteen, the star girl from region 14.'

28

I'm still in a daze... sitting through his interview. He has the audience from the get they not sure about him like- go, though; I can hear them laughing at him for not having just one girl, shouting out. He got the same question and went into great detail about how he banged this girl- and that was okay for he is a boy... and boys can have sex with anyone and that a-okay- yet a girl is a slut- if she thinks about it.

No respect for girls at all in the tournament. Or in our lives as girls! I knew he had to say this yet I was not contented.

A shake of his head said to me to not- think about it, I was turn off to him, so I would not talk for him... There must be some special girl right what one? Come on, what's her name?' says the man in black- Um- she over there he points.

Sounds of understanding from the crowd-

Why her...?

29

'I know, Likewise, a none of boys like her for whom she is,' he says. 'So, here's what you do. You win, you go home. She may not be there or the other way around?' The man said discouragingly. I- I- a – don't know... oh my...!

For a moment, the cameras hold on him down casting on his eyes as what he says sinks in. Then I can see my face, mouth half-open in a mixture with surprise and complaint, overblown on every screen as I realize, me... He means me... right? I press my lips together and stare at the floor, hoping this will conceal the emotions starting to boil up inside of me. I never knew at that time... the girl that was shown and since I would not look up, they never said. That was the punishment- with head in my mind.

30

I take a shower and scrub the gold paint, the makeup, the scent of beauty from my body. All that remains of the design team's efforts are the flames on my nails. I strip all that is fake and gay to me of my body rapping all the places- that you should not see- yet you do. Brush my teeth- hair- and the underwire is put on with PJ's until bedtime... was I slip out... I do some reading- and see the news that I don't want to see about everything and the world all crazy. I see the hell that we live in and I don't want to yet they make me. There is only one hour was there not feeling the inside of me - or hearing my every emotion.

Possibly it will give me something, to hold on to in the days to come. I pull on a thick, fleecy nightgown and climb into bed. It takes me about five seconds to realize I'll never fall asleep.

-And-

I need sleep very much, for the reason that in the arena every moment I give in to fatigue will be an invitation to death. It's no good. One hour, two, three passes, and my eyelids refuse to get heavy. I can't stop trying to imagine exactly what terrain I'll be thrown into.

Return...? Marsh...?

A frigid inhospitable- surroundings...?

Above all I am hoping for trees, which may afford me some means of concealment and food and shelter, Often- there are trees, for the cause that barren landscapes are dull glum yet awe-inspiring- and the Tournament resolves too quickly without them. On the other hand, what will the climate be like?

Questioned- What traps have the Tournament makers had burrow to liven up the slower moments? As well as then there are my fellow esteems.

The more anxious I am to find sleep, the more it eludes me. Finally, I am too restless to even stay in bed. I pace the floor, heart beating too fast, breathing hard- yet not holding it in. My room feels like a prison cell to me as I said. Worse than what I know she had- yet not at all. It's all in my mind the imprisonment. That's spooky!

The idea of being strong for someone else has never entered their heads, I find myself in the position of having to console them. Since I'm the person going in to be slaughtered, this is somewhat annoying.

I run down the hall saying, I had enough- to the door- to the roof- I went not allowed- Likewise, I am there. It's not only unlocked Likewise, ajar so how is going to stop me- I see them adding traps and things out for us- they won't know I was on my time. Something that they never thought of is how I paled all this on my time to maybe win.

The plan that they cannot get into- for I have it coded something my dad made for us when this was added in me- he said they don't need to know all of your life. My dad was somewhat of an inventor- also on this site as a hobby.

Yet there is a lot of chatting here- nothing is far in the tournament- we all play dirty- there are really no roles just kill- the one you see and Knock them out! My sisters are the ones that worked for this moment not me- so what was it I got from her the day I left home this code of how to do this... just by putting my forehead to hers and scanning it all in. I want to see the sky and how the day is going to go and so on- the moon with the stars- on the last night that no one will be hunting me- that why I know where I am.

Like a compass, all I have to do is look at the time on my hand to get north now.

I knew that all I need is a piece of my hair in with a magnetically charged paperclip and I have the same thing, something I ripped off one of the desks. Along with other small things like a flint rock and the back of my knife. Smock you die for them seeing you- yet you can live without it in the bush. The first thing you need is water- not killing... I know this they don't. Food

I was good for three weeks...

I will find what I can yet I know there is not much out there. You kill the tournament and you're going to be eaten by them at night. Your sent will kill you fast in the bush them hunting you. A tree living it's not working for me- yet some say they think that would work- I say no- two words- BIG CAT'S. we're not at the top of the food chain here- replaying is something I need to know- she did- I didn't Likewise, I have it all! Everything I need to know... for that, I will always be edited. And I think- some knew this and that's why she is where she is... Likewise, they had to see if I would make it. The what if...!

My thoughts- You know, you could live a thousand lifetimes and not deserve him. My nightmares are usually about losing you. I'm okay once I realize you're here. I realize only one person will be damaged beyond repair if he dies is- me! I'm so sorry, 'I whisper. I lean forward and kiss him. I turn and put my lips close to him and drop my eyelids in imitation... 'He offered me sugar and wanted to know all my secrets,' I say in my best seductive voice. His eyelashes flutter and he look's at me through a haze of opiates.

'Thought you'd be gone by now,' He says. He tilts his forehead down to rest against mine and pulls me closer. His skin, his whole being radiates heat from being so near the fire, and I close my eyes, soaking in his warmth. I breathe in the smell of snow dampened leather and smoke and apples, the smell of all those wintry days we shared before the Tournament. I don't try to move away.

Why should I anyway? His voice drops to a whisper. 'I love you.' That's why.

I look at him and he gives me a sad smile. I hear all of their voices. 'You could do a lot worse.' At this moment, it's impossible to imagine how I could do any better. The gift... it is perfect. So, when I rise up on my tiptoe to kiss him, it doesn't seem forced at all.

My choices are simple. I can die like a quarry in the woods or I can die here beside you now or then or forever. 'I'm not going anywhere. I'm going to stay right here - even if I not there I am in your mind and memory forever.' Always!

Always you...

Stars

31

You- I would fight for... he said to me... I wish I could freeze that moment, right here, right now, and live in it forever.'

Because I'm selfish, I'm a coward, I'm the kind of girl who, when she might actually be of use, would run to stay alive and leave those who couldn't follow to suffer and die. There nothing up her to me Likewise, stars and the moon, that's all I need to see and the treetops. I am sure they see me yet I am on my time... My feet move soundlessly across.

'It not always that I can turn my mind off,' I say- when I hear it snap on in my mind and I walking back in and her my boy's voice plays softly inside. 'Thinking about your family he said?' he asks. Why would you ask me that- I said frantically question if I said far too much in my retrieving?

'No,' I admit a bit guiltily. 'All I can do is wonder about tomorrow. Which is pointless, of course.' In the light from below, I can see his face now, the awkward way he holds his bandaged hands. 'I really am sorry about your hands.' 'It really doesn't matter, you were off for a long time it seemed to me,' he says. 'I have never- ever been a contender in these stars nevertheless.' Why did you ask me... anyways...?

I want to die as myself, to not having them plan that too, yet I feel this is all parts of their tournament.

There were just moments where I thought you were really far out there in your thoughts or so they said too. Yet it was like you just blacked out. (That what I wanted them to think. overloading everything this is in my mind.) My best hope is to not humiliate myself over this... and. 'He hesitates, all the time I feel that I said too much... like I what thief to something- taking away from him... and got away with it- as I did them I knew I could not say anything to him or they would surely get it... so wrong right?

'And what do you want to know maybe I did blackout?' I say. 'I don't know how to say it exactly. How I feel about all this- my family is grown now- I no! Only me and you-you have to take this place and be there for me- that what I need from you.

Does that make any sense to you? I ask... I shake my head, yes and he gets it, all we have at this point is each other's as we hug our own body's feel like we are hugging. How could he die like anyone Likewise, himself or as me with him- or them?

'I don't want them to change me... from the inside out. Turn me into some kind of horrid kill, which I'm not wanting to be.'

I bite my lip feeling inferior... like always in my past days of days and times of times. While I have been ruminating on the availability of trees, and look for the love to show the way- that has been struggling with how to maintain his identity as us. His purity for me is what is driving me to keep going.

I feel you! All of you now and forever! He said.

32

I locked my blue eyes into his, demanding an answer- do you love me.

Yes- truly! He said- I knew in his thought that was real.

I smile at him, sad and thrilled. Okay, be my sweetheart and kiss me on the rooftop under the stars. And we ran and did just that not caring what they said.

I will always- Then I turn and leave the roof. I spend the rest of the night slipping in and out of a dozing out, imagining the cutting remarks I will make on him to kill him out of the fact I have too in the morning of the next day. I don't want to kill this boy... I love him... can't they see that- it's sick to me and him?

~*~

There are no rules in the arena, Likewise, anthropophagy doesn't play well with the Capitol audience, so they tried to head it off. Just KILL! And see who stands as last- there is no timing- it could be one day or one year. It has happened.

33

The ride to me I might as well have been in a coffin, lasts about half an hour before the windows blackout, suggesting that we're nearing the arena.

The flying ships overhand the lands of Zarnesboro, and I go back to the ranking, only this time it leads down into a cylinder subversive, into the catacombs that lie beneath the arena. That is where it all opened up to the world, they made for us- it's part of the land yet under them workings... up and you're over the arced fizz of web almost virtual programed control-ness.

The whole thing is the brand- new to me- all- everything- the land and how it looks the sent and the air seeming thinner, a fast train moved over my head, and with clear like tracks under it with care posts under. Fans I would say that want to see this all for the stadium.

The only thing the same are the faces popping up with the look of kill coming at me - there is no call out when these stars you pop up and run.

34

I struggle to keep my breakfast down. We're on a flat, open stretch of ground. A plain of hard- death that is grouses to look at if you can slow down to see if- it's made to be that way for a tea's- lush Pandora is the fifth moon of the gas giant Polyphemus (both are figures in Greek mythology), which orbits Alpha Centauri A in the Alpha Centauri star system, the closest star system to our own sun. Everything glassines at the light in colors you have never seen before with your eyes.

'Why not? You saved me with those bugs. You're smart enough to still be alive. And I can't seem to shake you anyway,' I say. She blinks at me, trying to decide. 'You hungry?' I can see her swallow hard, her eye flickering to the meat. 'Come on then, I've had two kills today.' Permitted tentatively steps out into the open. 'I can fix your stings.' 'Can you?' I ask. 'How?' She digs in the pack she carries and pulls out a handful of leaves. I'm almost certain they're the ones my mother uses.

'Where'd you find those?'

'Just around. We all carry them when we work in the orchards. They left a lot of nests there,' says Leah. 'There is a lot here, too.'

'That's right. You're Area Eleven. Cultivation,' I say. 'Orchards, huh? That must be how you can fly around the trees like you've got wings.' Permitted smiles. I've landed on one of the few things she'll admit pride in. 'Well, come on, then, fix me up.'

I plunk down by the fire and roll up my pant leg to reveal the sting on my knee. To my surprise, permitted places the handful of leaves into her mouth and begins to chew them. My mother would use other methods, Likewise, it's not like we have a lot of options. After a minute or so, Permitted presses a gloppy green wad of chewed leaves and spit on my knee.

'Oh-wa.' The sound comes out of my mouth before I can stop it. It's as if the leaves are actually leaching the pain right out of the sting.

Permitted gives a giggle. 'Lucky you had the sense to pull the stingers out or you'd be a lot worse.' 'Do my neck! Do my cheek!' I almost beg.

Permitted stuffs another handful of leaves in her mouth, and soon I'm laughing, for the reason that the relief is so sweet. I notice a long burn on the Permitted forearm. 'I've got something for that.' I set aside my weapons and anoint her arm with the burning medicine.

'You have good guarantors,' she says longingly. 'You weren't joking, about wanting me for an ally?' she asks. 'Have you gotten anything yet?' I asked. She shakes her head - no.

'You will, though- watch. The closer we get to the end; the more people will realize how ingenious you are.' I turn the meat over. 'No, I meant it,' I say. I can almost hear Sam- groaning as I team up with this wispy child. Likewise, I want her. Because she's a survivor, and I trust her, and why not admit it? She reminds me of my sister.

'Okay,' she says, and holds out her hand. We shake. 'It's a deal.' Of course, this kind of deal can only be temporary, Likewise, neither of us mentions that. She says sometimes a flock will wander into the orchard and they get a decent lunch that day. For a while, all conversation stops as we fill our stomachs. The gosling has a delicious meal that's so fatty, the grease drips down your face when you bite into it. permitted is a big handful of some sort of starchy root to the meal. Roasted over the fire, they have the sharp sweet taste of a parsnip. She recognizes the bird, too, some wild thing they call a gosling in her district.

'Oh,' says permitted with a sigh. 'I've never had a whole leg to myself before.' I'll bet she hasn't. I'll bet meat hardly ever comes her way. 'Take the other,' I say.

'Categorically?'

'Take whatever you want. Now that I've got a bow and arrows, I can get more. Plus, I've got snares. I can show you how to set them,' I say. permitted still looks uncertainly at the leg. 'Oh, take it,' I say, putting the drumstick in her hands. 'It will only keep a few days anyway, and we've got the whole bird plus the rabbit.' Once she's got hold of it, her appetite wins out and she takes a huge mouthful.

Her eyes widen. 'Oh, no, we're not allowed to eat the crops.' 'I'd have thought, in area 11, you'd have a bit more to eat than us. You know, since you grow the food,' I say. 'They arrest you or something?' I asked.

'They whip you and make everyone else watch,' says Leah. 'The mayor's very strict about it.'

As well, our mayor, Madge's father, doesn't seem to have much taste for such events. Maybe being the least prestigious, poorest, most laugh at the community in the country has its advantages. Such as, being largely ignored by the Capitol as long as we produce our coal quotas.

I can tell by her expression that it's not that uncommon an occurrence. A public whipping's a rare thing in quarter 14, although occasionally one occurs. Technically, Permitted and I could be whipped on a daily basis for poaching in the woods- well, technically, we could get a whole lot worse- except all the officials buy our meat.

'Do you get all the coal you want?' she asks.

'No,' I answer. 'Just what we buy and whatever we track in on our boots.'

It is enigmatic, my sisterly and terrifying. Even from orbit, the scope of flora present on the surface designates a moon brimming with life. They added more moons just to play with us yet I know the Earth one.

Other than the richness of varying colors, the trees resemble those of Earth. They have the familiar trunks, branches, and leaves, though due to the difference in gravity, many of the shapes appear strange to humans and the proportions are greater because of the lower gravity. The trees and plant life of Zansboro have formed links to the mental connections between their roots that link to us and the troopers and effectively act as neurons, creating a moon-wide 'brain' that has achieved, by the chip.

Larger than Earth it feels- this is like a tournament where you are the fighter lost in the world that made- it's not really a real place to others- yet we have heard about it- like a stadium- out in this world. With what I would call wraparound screen that never- were you can see things they say and want you to do- was it never- ever seem to end- where you're all lost within- where you feel this is all real- yet the bloodshed is for actual.

You're just one small pixel in a big sea of gaming and entertainment. Looks like a lush paradise standard during the day, Likewise, at night, virtually all life on the moon exhibits bioluminescent qualities in various shades of blue, purple and green, which most likely provides them better camouflage at night on Zarnsboro. I can see nothing, after running fast and far I run to a steep downward slope or even cliff. To my right lies a lake. To my left and back, sparse piney woods.

Run- run- run... for what I thought was forever.

I hear his instructions in my head. 'Just clear out, put as much distance as you can between yourselves and the others, and find a source of water also now I need to clean it.'

I heard in my mind Jump- I am not far from you... so I did into the water I want. Swimming over I stopped, and made a fire, I had to with it now night and dropping off down to 32° when just five or so minutes ago it was 99° Fahrenheit. I see him running for me - the lip was made- over the high falls- where there was a wolf chasing him- that did not make the jump.

35

Zoie- 'I once told you- if one gets out it's a victory'

Elody- She said that to me also when I said how do I when or getaway. So-o in other words, we all could die, and no one would give a shit.

Nevertheless, it's tempting, so tempting, when I see the bounty waiting there before me. And I know that if I don't get it, someone else will. That the Career tries Likewise, who survive the bloodbath will divide up most of these life-sustaining spoils. Something catches my eye. There, resting on a mound of blanket rolls is a silver sheath of arrows and a bow, already strung, just waiting to be engaged. That's mine, I think. It's meant for me.

I'm fast... I can sprint faster than any of the girls in our school although a couple can beat me in distance races. Likewise, this forty-yard length, this is what I am built for. I know I can get it; I know I can reach it first, Likewise, then the question is how quickly can I get out of there? By the time I've scrambled up the packs and grabbed the weapons, others will have reached the horn, and one or two I might be able to pick off, Likewise, say there's a dozen, at that close range, they could take me down with the spears and the clubs. Or their own powerful fists.

The hijacking I call it- Before the tournament, some tried to run get a train that was passing in the night- others- I remember and had playing in my mind the one that ran- that tried escaping on the rail line. What they did was tunnel their way out- making a hole in the boxcar, and dripping their body down on the ties, feet dragging on and the cars would all pass Likewise, the last was they had to roll over the tracks in-between the wheels. In the car Jarrah- said let's see that rope- the rope is something we all have it's so needed. Even if just one of these bracelets... cute the girls said when she was trying to strangle another girl out like she was a guard... on the top of the tram... Do you have a better plane then a girl? Yes- let's see the rope- it when around her neck as he made two notes- there the notes there smash the joints in nick- dead in 15 seconds. They did it they killed all the troopers on top of the train- and made the drive or the train go an alternative way off to freedom or so they thought.

Over the tallest viaduct in the world 3,000 feet in the air- they got rid of all the bodies... the one boy rolling his eyes not were there uniform, like the rest of them that could. Planes were flown in to bomb or gunned down them the runners as they go for a small-town call Knox in Italy for freedom on the Kane line bypass. They fired back Likewise; it was 100 them over 3,000 of them.

~*~

Rip out of my thought- Get the weapon he said- that was the next part making it to where they have my stuff. And that was 5,280 feet always. From the starting line. Where we all have to meet up- yet that the tournament- no we have to get this with them about to kill with bare hands. The very weapon that might be my salvation, I have small hands- I no- yet with her past training in my mind I have the power. And with this rope I killed my first eight-year-old girl- that was looking at me for trust- I lied saying I would not do that to her- yet this is a tournament of life or death, not trust- she was going to kill me- remember that... did I want to NO- did I have to yes. She was so cute- I made sure that she remembered...giving her the moment in my mind that played in all the minds around in the land that I made the kill- a sacrifice of life so we can live.

(Thank you for your blood- and breath- no it mine to have. Not- forgotten the crowd makes their hand moment- like a wave then placing it on their hart and kissing her goodbye. These are what are area dose anyways.) We won't piece here not fighting yet some parts are an uprising, and that where you get wiped off the planet.

And I only see one bow on her, and I get it- yet I can do that as I make my way to the point, of the Permitted first phase- of this long drawn out tournament- I know the minute must be almost up for me to get what I want from her and will have to decide what my strategy will be, right to make - to get there I am off my path now

I know after fighting this girl off me... running and playing cat and mouse with her... and I find myself positioning my feet to run, not away into the stir rounding forests toward the falls, I hope that is right to get back to where I started.

Yet, I know I will run into all of them that may have their shit now- so what do- I do- run without? I also have now a small thumb handgun, pink with a white grip- something I keep from her forever, I knew if I win that would be something I would treasure- I undressed her seeing what I could find- it what you do when you get a kill- down in her undies in the front was this gun, deep up in her vajayjay the hand was out some point downward, and I tore it out and now have it in my handbag- good hiding spot why didn't I think of that? And one round in the gun. I wonder if that is meant for my own head.

Is it a choice no? She did care if it when off inside her why would she? So, you pack things where you have the holes... on the thing, girls have over the boys. Now I need a knife to see what shoved up their guts for that end- we- no. I know they have this looked into- yet if you have the money you can pack hidden things like that there... I don't have the money. A hidden gun in the puss - puss- they all say wow or something like that- they went nuts at how clever that was- the newsman said- not good enough if you can't fire it the man said on the screen, or the other girl would have been dead. How that girl is living is hard for me to get... to John Sha-Long to Steven Hung-dong. We like that girl didn't we said Steven a real cutie- what was her last name Hard-cock? No- Sharcock- yah that it- Yah-ha Sharcock- she was a cute one with drack, yet some rosy-sh look to her hair in the sunlight- and green eyes- not blue- and so not brown like the others. With a thin look.

I know I have to kill a weak girl to get more that is the next one, I am weak I know it killing this young girl, I never thought I would be able to do such a thing.

When suddenly I notice my boy on his way, he's about five-run boys look for what I am, the shit we need- to not die- to my right I see one wanting to jump me, and he did- my boy slit his hand off- quite a fair distance I see more, still I can tell he's looking at me or my man, and I think he might be shaking his head at what my man did for me- after killing the other girl they he may have liked before all this took place.

The one he wanted- if he wins... Likewise, the sun's in my eyes and I see nothing Likewise, - my man loving eyes in mine I feel safe if only for that moment and the moment was gone to fast, and while I'm perplexing over it the gong rings out. I was no at this point given his ring- something he said I need to prove to him, and what I said to him also- and that was killing a girl or boy- to show that would never betray one- another and the other way around- we killed each other now- where have the promise- a band to show for it. it mine has to rock hearts in it with our names- and it is gold, he is just a gold band with our names. Yong, I went like a woman now- yet I haven't even had my first period, and there are making that happen tonight. Like all the other girls- to be as they call it far- in a tournament that not.

More blood funny no?

36

And I've missed it the rounds to my heart and hand! I've missed it by not much!

For the reason that that extra couple of seconds, I've lost by seeing my dream of living in the days to come- by not being ready... for all this... I need to eat... so I grab him and we both shuffle our feet for a moment, confused at the direction my brain wants to take... of what's next, and then he swipes me off my forward in his arms, tucking the sheet of plastic and a loaf of bread that was tucked in my top I eat as he runs in the woods, and I feed him some to bits and pieces.

The pickings are so small and I'm so angry with my boy for distracting me that I sprint in twenty yards to retrieve a bright orange backpack that could hold anything because I can't stand living with virtually anything.

A boy, I think from Area 9, reaches the pack at the same time I do and for a brief time we grapple with it and then he coughs, splattering my face with blood.

I stagger back, repulsed by the warm, sticky spray. Then the boy slips to the ground. That's when I see the knife in his back. Already others- Likewise, have reached the Cornucopia and are spreading out to attack.

Yes, the girl from Area 2, ten yards away, running toward me, one hand clutching a half-dozen knives. I've seen her throw in training. She never misses. And I'm her next target.

I was right they now have more than me... what to do... All the general fear I've been feeling condenses into an immediate fear of this girl, this predator who might kill me in seconds.

Arena shoots through me and I sling the pack over one shoulder and run full speed for the woods. I can hear the blade whistling toward me and reflexively hike the pack up to protect my head.

The blade lodges in the pack. Both straps on my shoulders now, I make for the trees. Somehow, I know the girl will not pursue me. That she'll be drawn back into the Cornucopia before all the good stuff is gone. A grin crosses my face. Thanks for the knife, I think.

At the edge of the woods, I turn for one instant to survey the field. About a dozen or so try Likewise, are riding out away at one another at the horn. Several lie dead already on the ground.

Those who have taken flight are disappearing into the trees or into the void opposite me. I continue running until the woods have hidden me from the other try Likewise, then slow into a steady jog that I think I can maintain for a while. For the next few hours, I alternate between jogging and walking, putting as much distance as I can between myself and my competitors. I lost my bread during the struggle with the boy from Community 7 Likewise, managed to stuff my plastic in my sleeve, and so as I walk, I fold it effortlessly and tuck it into a pocket.

I also free the knife- it's a fine one with a long sharp blade, saw-like near the handle, which will make it handy for sawing through things- and slide it into my belt.

I don't dare stop to observe the contents of the pack yet. I just keep moving, pausing only to check for pursuers.

I can go for a long time. I know that from my days in the woods.

Nevertheless, I will need water. Instruction in my mind given, and since I sort of botched the first, I keep a sharp eye out for any sign of it. No luck... I feel I have other than his love.

The woods begin to evolve, and the pines are intermixed with a diversity of trees, some I identified, some completely foreign to me. At one point, I hear a noise and pull my knife, thinking I may have to defend myself, Likewise, I have only startled a rabbit- that I got my using an aero.

'Good to see you,' I whispered... If there's one rabbit, there could be hundreds just waiting to be snared.

The ground declines down some as you can see here. I don't particularly like this too much. Gorges make me feel trapped as I look up at the viaduct and nowhere, I am now at or so I think. I want to be high, like in the hills around Area 14, where I can see my rivals' forthcoming.

However, I have no choice Likewise, to keep going running like hillbilly-hell.

Funny though, I don't feel too bad.

The days of guzzling with coffin paid off. I've got staying power even though I'm short on sleep though I feel it. I feel him going in and out on me too in my mind. Being in the woods is refreshing. I'm glad for the loneliness, even though it's a misapprehension, for the reason that I'm most likely on-screen right now.

I feel it not looking cute Likewise, yet sweet to them looking at how to sleep the little one is... the joke made about tucking me and giving me a bedtime story.

Not unswervingly Likewise, off and on. There are so many decreases to show the first day, down to 60- that honor for the stars still standing- hiking through the woods isn't much to look at in the day Likewise, at night it's whoo- wah.

Even so, they'll show me enough to let individuals know I'm alive, intact and on the travel. One of the substantial days of betting is the opening when the initial wounded come in. Conversely, that can't compare to what happens as the field shrinks to a handful of players.

It's late-night and the ground is a wondrous sight when I begin to hear the cannons. Each shot represents a dead try Likewise. The fighting must have finally stopped at the Cornucopia. They never- ever assemble the massacre bodies until the killers have isolated.

On an opening day, they don't even fire the cannons until the initial fighting's over for the motive that it's too hard to keep track of the death toll.

I allow myself to pause, panting, wheezing, and puffing as I count the shots.

One, two, and three... on and on until they reach eleven. Eleven dead in all 59 stands. All the names I could care less about there just kill me... My fingernails scrape at the dried blood the boy from Area 5 coughed into my face I got him some on the hand too. He's gone, certainly. I wonder about him and where he is off too, I can hear him yet not see.

Has he lasted through the day at least I knew that? I well no in a few hours what next- if there are any more surprises, they made up fast for us to endure as they did with having wild wolf after us... and big cats. I knew I had to find a place to sleep that would be safe in an open field with a ring a fire around me- that would keep everything away no? If I am the one inside feeding the flames- I knew not for long yet I need some shut-eye. Some are in caves- yet I don't want their batshit virus. No thanks... When they hologram the dead's images into the sky for the rest of us to see, and on our bracelets...

He had no confidence he could win.

And I will not end up with the unpleasant task of killing him. Maybe it's better if he's out of this for good, I don't know all I know is this is killing me too.

I got to the point where I go my gear... all the things that were my dad's or passed in the family down for this moment. There were in a lockbox that I had to crack also... just part of the tournament to them, as you have some kid breathing down your neck, wanting to kill you - I was playing with the combo.

One eye on the lock and one-off to all the other sides, I was frantic... yet the combo was my great granddad's ID number- something that was deep in my mind that I knew I had. I tried all the family members, and that one worked, there was on can of dog food too- yet I know I will eat anything... that what they gave me... to live on. Comparable to a mutt...?

I slump down next to my backpack, dog- tired- with the meet of three of them...

I will eat anything... I need to go through it anyway before night falls. See what I have to work with. As I unhook the straps, I can feel it's sturdily made although a rather unfortunate color. This orange will practically glow in the dark. I make a mental note to camouflage it first thing tomorrow.

I flip open the flap. What I want most, right at this moment, is water. A girl that wanted to play nice directive to immediately find water was not arbitrary- I was going to do the same play nice until the turn on one another.

I won't last long without it, and she knows the way or so I will trust. It may be a trap- yet I go for it- the thought in my mind said she okay- I will be there too.

It's a trap- I see 10 run up on me and I load the gun- popping them all off in the head, her first, stopping to reload the gun with black powder, the last one I say her eye color she was that close. Yet I got them all... the knives, that were thrown at me not all missing me, the arrows fly past, yet I dodge them as I am behind a tree.

49- I see all of them that have passed by my hands- I was happy- and rewarded for my bravery. They added metal to my uniform sent in by the unmanned drone of a bluebird square under it are pin-like thing hanging out of all that I killed off with their colors. I have 14 deaths now- that I have claimed, all the names I don't even know- nor did they know me or do anything to me for them to pass on.

The number went down more- as the update when up down to 20 kids. 15 boys and 5 girls... with me included.

Now the real tournament starts to me- as the blood drips from my teeth I giggled crazily... wanting to win this no matter what! Ha- ha I can do this- as I rip the raw meat with my k-9-teeth that I shared with a fingernail fill, that I found in one of the girl's handbags, I have all these things now that I want the rest, I let behind with their naked bodies- for something to find and eat.

I killed boys- I never thought they all would be so different... and something I would not understand. Yet I had to do it! I used them... and I got them to fall for me in every way I could. It's all part of the star tournament for a girl!

37

For a few days, I'll be able to function with unpleasant symptoms of dehydration and the runs, Likewise, after that I'll deteriorate into helplessness and be dead in a week, tops. I carefully lay out the provisions and flamed what I could. I am down to 60 pounds. It's been three weeks now... my mind is spinning with what if. He is a week somewhere... lost he would not say... all I heard was go one and do this.

Nothing to sleep on Likewise, the ground and piled up pin tree limbs.

The bottle- the water of another girl, that I am not sure about, I added bleach I found of another dead boy body 16 drops, and I can have it? I was out at this point- run and always moving in the night- and the day resting some... if there asleep like the animals that are when I move. And pop them in the head will they dream of banging me off. I got one last night that way and it feels so-ooo good!

I got his tighties underwire and made a white flag out of them hanging now on a stick, for them all to see on the screen of his giving up, that was an easy kill to make... and I wanted to be a dick about it... for he did not have much of one. I would no... my boy is the man here! I hope he is all good.

I developed aware of the dryness in my throat and mouth, the cracks in my lips. I've been moving all day long. It's been hot and I've sweat a- lot and I know that is not good. Yet that is not stopping the boys from making their way at me... I can fight all of them all- I thought, or can I?

38

As I refill my pack, I have an awful thought. The lake, I have made it there - over high wood rope passageways and train, replying down the sides of rock faces, I did it all, The Kamahi Lake is a full day's journey from where I sit now, a much harder journey with nothing to drink for you can really drink this with all that is in it. And then, even if I reach it, it's sure to be heavily guarded by some of the Career stars.

I'm about to panic when I remember the rabbit I got earlier today. It has to drink, too or I have to eat it without- cocking. I just have to find out where- he is... that is all I can think about at this point is him.

4 weeks now- Dusk is closing in and I am ill at ease. The trees are too thin to offer much camouflage. The layer of pine needles that muffles my footsteps also makes tracking animals harder when I need their trails to find water. And I'm still heading downhill, deeper and deeper into a valley that seems endless, my dress looks like Swiss cheese at this point all dirty and such, no underwear at this point it was used as cordage. Like my shoe strings...

I'm hungry, too, Likewise, I don't dare break into my precious store of crackers and beef yet. Instead, I take my knife and go to work on a pine tree, cutting away the outer bark and scraping off a large handful of the softer inner bark. I slowly chew the stuff as I walk along. After a week of the finest food in the world, it's a little hard to choke down. Then I've eaten plenty of pine in my life. I'll adjust quickly and don't think about it.

In another hour, it's clear I've got to find a place to camp yet again. Night creatures are coming out and up inside my girly-ness gross. I can hear the infrequent hoot or howl, my first clue that I'll be competing with natural predators for the rabbits. As to whether I'll be viewed as a source of food, it's too soon to tell. There could be any number of animals pestering me at this instant.

Nonetheless, right now, I decided to make my fellow stars a priority. I'm sure many will continue hunting through the night.

Those who fought it out at the lavishness will have food, an abundance of water from the lake, torches or flashlights, and weapons they're itching to use. I can only hope I've traveled far and fast enough to be out of choice.

Before settling down, I take my wire and set two twitch-up snares in the brush. I know it's risky to be setting traps, Likewise, food will go so fast out here. And I can't set snares on the run. Still, I walk another five minutes before making camp.

I pick my tree carefully, a willow, not terribly tall Likewise, set in a clump of other willows, and camouflage in those long, flowing tresses. I hiked up, sticking to the stronger branches close to the trunk, and find a sturdy fork for my bed. It takes some doing, then again, I arrange the sleeping bag in a relatively comfortable manner. I found the bag of one of the girls I killed number 2 on my line up.

I'm small enough to tuck the top of the bag over my head, Likewise, I put on my hood as well. As night falls, the air is cooling quickly. In the face of the risk I took in getting the backpack, I know now it was the right choice. It's all about choosing what do you pick? What would you do like me?

I place my backpack in the foot of the bag, then slide in after it. As a precaution, I remove my belt, loop it all the way around the division and my sleeping bag, and refasten it at my waist. Now if I roll over in my sleep, I won't go crashing to the earth.

Nightfall has just come when I hear the anthem that precedes the death summary. Through the branches, I can see the seal of the Capitol, which appears to be floating in the atmosphere.

I'm really viewing another screen, an enormous one that's transported by of one of their disappearing hovercraft.

This sleeping bag, radiating back and preserving my body heat, will be energetic.

I'm sure there are several other stars whose major anxiety right now is how to stay warm whereas I may essentially be able to get a few hours of sleep.

If only I wasn't so desire of all that is life.

The anthem fades out and the sky goes dark for a moment. At home, we would be watching full coverage of each and every killing, Likewise, that is thought to give a one-sided gain to the living others.

Likewise, now instead of scores, they post only community numbers. I take a deep breath as the face of the all dead kids begin and tick them off one by one on my fingers.

For the occasion, if I got my hands on the bow and shot someone, my secret would be revealed to all. No, here in the arena, all we see are the same snapshot they showed when they televised our training scores. Simple headshots. Yet this time with a star saying they have fallen.

The first to see is the girl from Borough 2. That means that the career stars from 1 and 2 have all endured. No astonishment there. Then the boy from 3, I didn't presume that one, usually all the vocations make it through the first day. The boy from Community 3. I guess the scary-faced girl made it. Both try Likewise, between 4 and 7. The boy from 8. Both from 10. Yes, there's the boy who I fought for the backpack. I've run through my fingers, only one deader try Likewise, to go. Is it him? No, there's the girl from the borough 12. That's it, the Capitol closure is back with a final musical exaggeration. Then obscurity and the sounds of the timberland pick up where it left off.

I'm thankful my man is still flourishing and not dead or messed up in the head. I tell myself again that if I get killed, his winning will be a big advantage to his mother the most, for he is a- lot like me. This is what I tell myself to clarify the self-contradictory sentiments, which ascend when I think of him all the time. When I not with him I touch myself like I want him to touch me.

I think of you...

The gratitude that he gave me an edge by professing his love for me in the interview. The dread that we may come face-to-face at any moment in this arena. I know what I may have to do... Yet I will not and never will him even if we hear them say someone KILL- KILL- KILL.

5 not dead, Likewise, none from Area 14. I try to work out who is left. A bonnie boy he made it through the first day after all. I can't help feeling glad. That makes ten of us. The other three I'll figure out tomorrow. Now when it is dark, and I have traveled far, and I am nestled high in this tree, now I must try and rest I know this is good enough for now.

I haven't really slept in four days, and then there's been the long day's voyage into the arena. Gradually, I allow my muscles to reduce. My eyes close... The last thing I think is it's fortunate I don't snore or at least he never said that I did. I was on top of him in the tree, all snuggled.

Spur-of-the-moment! The sound of a breaking branch wakes me yet not him. I shake him up- how long have I been asleep? Four hours? Five - nine hours- too long?

Yet we had lots of covers up there 500 feet in the air.

The tip of my nose is icy cold- yet I kiss him and kip rubs my nose- and the heat of our body is keeping the child down. Break! Snap! This is not the sound of a branch under our feet, Likewise, the sharp crack of one coming from a tree. Crack! Snap! I judge it to be several hundred yards to my right.

Leisurely, without a sound, I turn myself in that route. For a few minutes, there's nothing Likewise, darkness and some come to blows. Then I see a flash and a small fire begins to bloom. A pair of hands warm over flames, Likewise, I can't make out more than that yet- moving fast like.

I have to bite my lip not to scream every foul name, and I know at the fire maze. What are they thinking he asked me to hold me in his arms as we go off and he leans in for the kiss and I met that the rest of the way?

A fire just at nightfall would have been one thing. Those who battled at the profusion, with their superior strength and surplus of supplies, they couldn't possibly have been near enough to spot the flames then. Likewise, then now, when they have almost certainly been searching the forests for hours looking for wounded or dead- the wounded are left to pass on there no help for the week. You might as well be waving a flag and shouting, 'Come and get me!' And here I am a stone's throw from the biggest idiot in the Tournament. Strapped in a tree. Not daring to flee since my general location has just been broadcast to any killer who cares. I mean, I know it's cold out here and not everybody has a sleeping bag. Likewise, then again then you grit your teeth and stick it out until dawn!

I lay smoldering in my bag with his naked body on top of mine, I feel his skin so smooth- for the next couple of hours really thinking that if I can get off- enough even if death is nearing us both- or just one, my nature has been to flee, not fight with him caring me out of harm. A boy that is fighting for me is what I have always dreamed about more than marriage even. I have dreamed about that too what young girl has not- it the most important day in a girl's life- no? I could see me with him- at the end of this now.

However, obviously, this person's a hazard. Ill-advised people are dangerous. Then this one undoubtedly doesn't have much in the way of guns while I've got this excellent knife.

The atmosphere is still dim yet sparkly with the stars overhead all twilight, Likewise, I can feel the first signs of dawn approaching. I'm an establishment to think us- meaning the individual whose death I'm now developing and me- we might really have gone unnoticed. Then I hear it. numerous pairs of feet breaking into a run. The fire starter must have dozed off. They're on her formerly she can escape from. I know it's a girl now, I can tell by the pleading, the agonized scream that follows. Then there's laughter and compliments from several voices. Someone cries out, '13- or 12 down and 11 to go no!' Yet they're so far away from us now it may be weeks where it'll we just be, he and I- I wonder if I will get knocked up?

I might- with all this that we are doing, I know nothing about that yet I sure I could do that, they would still not take me out of the fight and they would still kill him off to... so he has to pull out- and have it go on my cheeks. Would you squeeze and suck my breast right here (she pointed to where she wanted him to kiss and draw in with lips.) I asked in a moment of looking up at the skies.

The sighs- she cried- saying I don't want to ever leave you- wrapped around his was- still locked into him- and his love and Mr. Winky- that what I call that thingie. He was kissing my neck- and I was him- I think- I got a hick-ie somewhere on my collarbone it's black and blue.

And a chapped hood- from kissing it- It's love- and they're not stopping it-

NEVER- EVER! The videos we have would kick your tongue out tongue. And yes- you can see me doing that too- hold it out and showing that before the goop-ie was gulped hard.

After all the sex- he-a being- the sweet boy- that he is Likewise, a tampon in me. The string hanging there he looked at me- saying- if I when this I want you- if you when this would you say the same- YES! We cleaned off in the river in the moonlight- a naked swim- where the eyes were looking you didn't get to us. We run more than the others... about 10 miles. I don't feel all the cute looking like I do muddy and showing hair everywhere yet- love is love and you just don't care if it is.

40

'Why not...? You saved me with those bugs.

You're smart enough to still be alive. And I can't seem to shake you anyway,' I say. She blinks at me, trying to decide. 'You hungry?' I can see her swallow hard, her eye flickering to the meat. 'Come on then, I've had two kills today.' Permitted tentatively steps out into the open. 'I can fix your stings.' 'Can you?' I ask. 'How?' She digs in the pack she carries and pulls out a handful of leaves. I'm almost certain they're the ones my mother uses. 'Where'd you find those?'

'Just around. We all carry them when we work in the orchards. They left a lot of nests there,' says Leah. 'There is a lot here, too.'

'That's right. Are you part of 11? Cultivation,' I say. 'Orchards, huh? That must be how you can fly around the trees like you've got wings.' Permitted smiles. I've landed on one of the few things she'll admit pride in. 'Well, come on, then. Fix me up.'

I notice a long burn on Leah's forearm. 'I've got something for that.' I set aside from my weapons and anoint her arm with the burning medicine; her stuff another handful of leaves in her mouth, and soon I'm laughing for the reason that the release is so sweet.

I plunk down by the fire and roll up my pant leg to reveal the sting on my knee. To my surprise, Permitted places the handful of leaves into her mouth and begins to chew them. My mother would use other methods,

Likewise, it's not like we have a lot of options. After a minute or so, Permitted presses a gloppy green wad of chewed leaves and spit on my knee.

'Oh.' The sound comes out of my mouth before, I can stop it. It's as if the leaves are actually, leaching the pain right out of the sting. Permitted gives a giggle. 'Lucky you had the sense to pull the stingers out or you'd be a lot worse.' 'Do my neck...! Do my cheek...!' I almost begging... 'You have good sponsors,' she says longingly. 'Have you gotten anything yet?' I ask. She shakes her head. 'You will, though. Watch. The closer we get to the end; the more people will realize how clever you are.' I turn the meat over.

'You weren't joking, about wanting me for an ally?' she asks. 'No, I meant it,' I say. I can almost hear Sam- groaning as I team up with this wispy child.

Likewise, I want her. Roasted over the fire, they have the sharp sweet taste of a parsnip. She recognizes the bird, too, some wild thing they call a gosling in her district. She says sometimes a flock will wander into the orchard and they get a decent lunch that day. For a while, all conversation stops as we fill our stomachs. The gosling has a delicious meal that's so fatty, the grease drips down your face when you bite into it.

For the reason that she's a survivor, and I trust her, and why not admit it? She reminds me of my sister. 'Okay,' she says, and holds out her hand. We shake. 'It's a deal.' Of course, this kind of deal can only be temporary, Likewise, neither of us mentions that.

She a big handful of some sort of starchy root to the meal. Yet she so nice to me I just can't- I can put a knife in the little sweetheart. 'Oh,' says she sighs heavy. 'I've never had a whole leg to myself before.'

I'll bet she hasn't. I'll bet meat hardly ever comes her way. 'Take the other,' I say.

'Really?' She asks.

'Take whatever you want. Now that I've got a bow and arrows, I can get more. Plus, I've got snares. I can show you how to set them,' I say. Permitted still looks uncertainly at the leg. 'Oh, take it,' I say, putting the drumstick in her hands. 'It will only keep a few days anyway, and we've got the whole bird plus the rabbit.' Once she's got hold of it, her appetite wins out and she takes a huge mouthful. 'I'd have thought, in Community Eleven, you'd have a bit more to eat than us.

You know, since you grow the food,' I say.

Permitted eyes widen big that one thing about her eyes is really big. 'Oh, no, we're not allowed to eat the crops.'

'They arrest you or something?' I ask.

'They whip you and make everyone else watch-'

'The mayor's very strict about it.'

'Don't you have to be in school?' I ask.

'Not during harvest. Everyone works then,' says she.

It's interesting, hearing about her life.

We have so little communication with anyone outside our district. In fact, I wonder if the Tournament makers are blocking out our conversation because even though the information seems harmless, they don't want people in different districts to know about one another. The suggestion is made by her- cute- but- really, we lay out all our food to plan ahead. She's seen most of mine, Likewise, I add the last couple of crackers and beef strips to the pile. She's gathered quite a collection of roots, nuts, greens, and even some berries. I tentatively bite into one, and it's as good as our blackberries. Taking Permitted on as an ally seems a better choice all the time. We divide up our food supplies, so in case we're separated, we'll both be set for a few days. Apart from the food, permitted has a small waterskin, a homemade slingshot, and an extra pair of socks. She also has a sharp shard of rock she uses as a knife.

I roll an unfamiliar berry in my fingers. 'You sure this is safe?' 'Oh, yes, we have them back home. I've been eating them for days,' she says, popping a handful in her mouth. 'I know it's not much,' she says as if embarrassed, 'Likewise, I had to get away from the Cornucopia fast.'

'You did just right,' I say. When I spread out my gear, she gasps a little when she sees the sunglasses.

'How did you get those?' She asks.

'In my pack. They've been useless so far. They don't block the sun and they make it harder to see,' I say with a shrug.

'These aren't for the sun, they're for obscurity,' cries Leah. 'Sometimes, when we harvest through the night, they'll pass out a few pairs to those of us highest in the trees. Where the torchlight doesn't reach. One time, this boy Martin, he tried to keep his pair. Hid it in his pants. They killed him on the spot.'

'They killed a 4 boy for taking these?' I say.

'Yes, and everyone knew he was no danger.'

Martin wasn't right in the head. I mean, he still acted like a three-year-old. He just wanted the glasses to play with,' she said.

Hearing this makes me feel like Community 14 is some sort of safe haven. Of course, people keel over from starvation all the time, Likewise, I can't imagine the Peacekeepers murdering a simple-minded child. There's a little girl, one of the grandkids of my Grannie, who wanders around the mess-hall. She's not quite right, Likewise, she's treated as a sort of pet. People toss her scraps and things.

So, they're fighting in a pack. I'm not really flabbergasted. Often alliances are formed in the early stages of the Playoffs. The strong band together to hunt down the weak then, when the tension becomes too great, begin to turn on one another. I don't have to wonder too hard who has made this alliance. It'll be the remaining Career stars from constituencies 1, 2, and 6. Two boys and three girls. The ones who lunched together.

For a moment, I hear them read through the girl for supplies. I can tell by their comments they've found nonentity good. I phenomenon if the victim is Permitted Likewise, quickly dismissing the thought.

She's much too bright to be building a fire like that.

'Better clear out so they can get the body before it starts stinking.' I'm almost certain that's the brutish boy from quarter 2. There are buzzes of assent and then, to my horror, I hear the pack heading toward me.

They do not know I'm here. How could they? And I'm well concealed in the clump of trees. At least while the sun stays down. Then my black sleeping bag will turn from camouflage to trouble. If they just keep moving, they will pass me and be gone in a minute.

Likewise, the Careers stop in the clearing about ten yards from my tree. They have penlights, torches. I can see an arm here, a boot there, through the breaks in the undergrowth. I turn to stone, not even daring to breathe. Have they spotted me? No, not yet. I can tell from their words their minds are elsewhere. We even had a moment where we got to slow dance under the stars and the green leaves sawing like the wind.

'Shouldn't we have heard an in my mind by now the callouts- or are we off for some love'n- for that is what they want to see- young love?' 'I'd say yes... Nothing to prevent them from going in immediately- to this- she didn't know- I want the time.' It did not take much for them to say yes...

'You can feed yourself. Can they?' I ask.

'They don't need to. They have all those supplies,' Permitted says.

'Say they didn't. Say the supplies were gone. How long would they last?' I say. 'I mean, it's the Famine

The tournament, right?'

' Likewise, Elody, they're not hungry,' says Leah.

'No, they're not. That's the problem,' I agree. And for the first time, I have a plan. A plan that isn't motivated by the need for flight and evasion. An offensive plan. 'I think we're going to have to fix that, Leah.'

Permitted has decided to trust me wholeheartedly. I know this because as soon as the anthem finishes, she snuggles up against me and falls asleep. Nor do I have any misgivings about her, as I take no particular precautions.

If she'd wanted me dead, all she would have had to do was disappear from that tree without pointing out the tracker jacker nest. Needling me, at the very back of my mind, is obvious. Both of us can't win these tournaments. Likewise, since the odds are still against either of us surviving, I manage to ignore the thought.

Besides, I'm distracted by my latest idea about Careers and their supplies. Somehow Permitted and I must find a way to destroy their food. I'm pretty sure feeding themselves will be a tremendous struggle. Traditionally, the Career's strategy is to get hold of all the food early on and work from there. The years when they have not protected it well- one year a pack of hideous reptiles destroyed it, another a Tournament makers' flood washed it away- those are usually the years that from other districts have won.

That the Careers have been better red growing up is actually to their disadvantage, because they don't know how to be hungry.

Not the way Permitted and I do.

Likewise, I'm too exhausted to begin any detailed plan tonight. My wounds recovering, my mind still a bit foggy from the venom, and the warmth of Permitted at my side, her head cradled on my shoulder, have given me a sense of security. I realize, for the first time, how very lonely I've been in the arena. How comforting the presence of another human being can be. I give in to my drowsiness, resolving that tomorrow the tables will turn. Tomorrow, it's the Careers who will have to watch their backs.

The boom of the cannon jolts me awake. The sky's streaked with light, the birds already chattering. Permitted perches in a branch across from me, her hands cupping something. We wait, listening for more shots, Likewise, there aren't any.

'Who do you think that was?' I can't help thinking of my boy. 'I don't know.' 'It could have been any of the others,' says Leah. 'I guess we'll know tonight.'

'Who's left again?' I ask.

'The boy from Community One. Both from Two. The boy from Three. Thresh and me. And you and My boy,' says Leah. 'That's right. Wait, and the boy from Ten, the one with the bad leg. He makes nine.'

There's someone else, Likewise, neither of us can remember who it is.

'I wonder how that last one died,' says Leah.

'No telling. Likewise, it's good for us. Death should hold the crowd for a bit. Maybe we'll have time to do something before the Tournament makers decide things have been moving too slowly,' I say. 'What's in your hands?'

'What kind are those?' I ask.

'Not sure. There's a marshy area over that way. Some kind of waterbird,' she says.

It'd be nice to cook them, Likewise, neither of us wants to risk a fire. My guess is the one who died today was a victim of the Careers, which means they've recovered enough to be back in the Tournament. We each suck out the insides of an egg, eat a rabbit leg and some berries. It's a good breakfast anywhere.

'Ready to do it?' I say, pulling on my pack.

'Do what?' Says Leah, Likewise, by the way, she bounces up, and you can tell she's up for whatever I propose.

'Today we take out the Careers' food,' I say.

'Really? How?' You can see the glint of excitement in her eyes. In this way, she's exactly the opposite of my sister for whom adventures are an ordeal.

'No idea. Come on, we'll figure out a plan while we hunt,' I say.

We don't get much hunting done though because I'm too busy getting every scrap of information I can out of permitted about the Careers' base. She's only been in to spy on them briefly, Likewise, she's observant.

They have set up their camp beside the lake. Their supply stash is about thirty yards away. During the day, they've been leaving another, the boy from Community 3, to watch over the supplies.

'The boy from Community Three?' I ask. 'He's working with them?'

'What weapons does he have?' I ask.

'Not much that I could see. A spear. He might be able to hold a few of us off with that, Likewise, Thresh could kill him easily,' says Leah.

'And the food's just out in the open?' I say. She nods. 'Something's not quite right about that whole setup.'

'I know. Likewise, I couldn't tell what exactly,' says Leah. 'Elody, even if you could get to the food, how would you get rid of it?'

'Burn it. Dump it in the lake. Soak it in fuel.' I poke Permitted in the belly, just like I would my sister.

'Eat it!' She giggles.

'Don't worry, I'll think of something. Destroying things is much easier than making them.'

For a while, we dig roots, we gather berries and greens, we devise a strategy in hushed voices. And I come to know Leah, the oldest of six kids, fiercely protective of her siblings, who gives her rations to the younger ones, who forage in the meadows in a community where the Peacekeepers are far less obliging than ours. Leah, who when you ask her what she loves most in the world, replies, of all things,

'Music.' This all I have...

'Music?' I say. In our world, I rank music somewhere between hair ribbons and rainbows in terms of usefulness. At least a rainbow gives you a tip about the weather. 'You have a lot of time for that?'

'We sing at home. At work, too. That's why I love your pin,' she says, pointing to the blue jay that I've again forgotten about.

'You have a blue jay?' I ask.

'Oh, yes. I have a few that are my special friends. We can sing back and forth for hours. They carry messages for me,' she says.

'What do you mean?' I say.

'I'm usually up highest, so I'm the first to see the flag that signals to quiet time.

There's a special little song I do,' says Leah. She opens her mouth and sings a little four-note run in a sweet, clear voice. 'And the blue jays spread it around the orchard. That's how everyone knows to knock off,' she continues. 'They can be dangerous though if you get too near their nests. Likewise, you can't blame them for that.'

I unclasp the pin and hold it out to her. 'Here, you take it. It has more meaning for you than me.'

'Oh, no,' says Leah, closing my fingers back over the pin. 'I like to see it on you. That's how I decided I could trust you. Besides, I have this.' She pulls a necklace woven out of some kind of grass from her shirt.

On it, hangs a roughly carved wooden star. Or maybe it's a flower. 'It's a good luck charm.'

'Well, it's worked so far,' I say, pinning the blue jay back on my shirt. 'Maybe you should just stick with that.'

By lunch, we have a plan. By early afternoon, we are poised to carry it out. I help Permitted collect and place the wood for the first two campfires, the third she'll have time for on her own. We decide to meet afterward at the site where we ate our first meal together. The stream should help guide me back to it. Before I leave, I make sure Leah's well stocked with food and matches. I even insist she takes my sleeping bag, in case it's not possible to rendezvous by nightfall.

'What about you? Won't you be cold?' she asks. 'Not if I pick up another bag down by the lake,' I say. 'You know, stealing isn't illegal here,' I say with a grin.

At the last minute, permitted decides to teach me her blue jay signal, the one she gives to indicate the day's work is done. 'It might not work. Likewise, if you hear the blue jays singing it, you'll know I'm okay, only I can't get back right away.'

'Are there many blue jays here?' I ask.

'Haven't you have seen them? They've got nests everywhere,' she says. I have to admit I haven't noticed. 'Okay, then. If all goes according to plan, I'll see you for dinner,' I say.

Surprisingly, Permitted throws her arms around me.

I only hesitate a moment before I hug her back. 'You, too,' I say. I turn and head back to the stream, feeling somehow worried. About Permitted being killed, about Permitted not being killed and the two of us being left for last, about leaving Permitted alone, about leaving my sister alone back home. No, my sister has my mother and Permitted and a baker who has promised she won't go hungry. Permitted has only me.

Once I reach the stream, I have only to follow it effortlessly to the place I initially picked it up after the bug attack. I have to be cautious as I move along the water though because I find my thoughts preoccupied with unanswered questions, most of which concern my boy. The cannon that fired early this morning, did that signify his death? If so, how did he die? At the hand of a Career? And was that in revenge for letting me live?

More likely it'd just burn itself out and then what? I'd have achieved nothing and given them far too much information about myself.

That I was here, that I have an accomplice, that I can use the bow and arrow with correctness.

I struggle again to remember that moment over Glimmer's body when he burst through the trees. Likewise, just the fact that he was sparkling leads me to doubt everything that happened. Somehow, I don't think he's talking about Leah. She didn't drop a nest of bug on him.

I stay put for half an hour or so, trying to figure out what to do about the supplies. The one advantage I have with the bow and arrow is distance. I could send a flaming arrow into the pyramid easily enough, I'm a good enough shot to get it through those openings in the net. Likewise, there's no guarantee it would catch.

There's no alternative. I'm going to have to get in close and see if I can't discover what exactly protects the supplies. In fact, I'm just about to reveal myself when a movement catches my eye. Several hundred yards to my right, I see someone emerge from the woods. For a second, I think it's Leah, Likewise, then I recognize- she's the one we couldn't remember this morning creeping out onto the plain.

When she decides it's safe, she runs for the pyramid, with quick, small steps. Just before she reaches the circle of supplies that have been littered around the pyramid, she stops, searches the ground, and carefully places her feet on a spot.

Then she begins to approach the pyramid with strange little hops, sometimes landing on one foot, teetering slightly, sometimes risking a few steps. At one point, she launches up in the air, over a small barrel and lands poised on her tiptoes. Likewise, she overshoots slightly, and her momentum throws her forward. I hear her give a sharp squeal as her hands hit the ground, Likewise, nothing happens. In a moment, she's regained her feet and continues until she has reached the bulk of the supplies.

So, I'm right about the booby trap, Likewise, it's clearly more complex than I had imagined. I was right about the girl, too. How wily is she to have discovered this path into the food and to be able to replicate it so neatly? She fills her pack, taking a few items from a variety of containers, crackers from a crate, a handful of apples from a burlap sack that hangs suspended from a rope off the side of a bin.

Likewise, only a handful from each, not enough to tip-off that the food is missing. Not enough to cause suspicion. And then she's doing her odd little dance back out of the circle and scampering into the woods again, safe and sound.

I must have been moving very slowly yesterday because I reach the shallow stretch where I took my bath in just a few hours. I stop to replenish my water and add a layer of mud to my backpack. It seems bent on reverting to orange no matter how many times I cover it.

My proximity to the Careers' camp sharpens my senses, and the closer I get to them, the more guarded I am, pausing frequently to listen for unnatural sounds, an arrow already fitted into the string of my bow. I don't see any others, Likewise, I do notice some of the things Permitted has mentioned. Patches of the sweet berries. A bush with the leaves that healed my stings. Clusters of bugs nests in the vicinity of the tree I was trapped in. And here and there, the black-and-white flash of a blue jay wing in the branches high over my head.

I get a firmer grasp on my bow and go on. I make it to the copse Permitted has told me about and again have to admire her cleverness. It's right at the edge of the wood, Likewise, the bushy foliage is so thick down low I can easily observe the Career camp without being spotted. Between us lies the flat expanse where the Tournament began.

When I reach the tree with the abandoned nest at the foot, I pause a moment, to gather my courage. Permitted has given specific instructions on how to reach the best spying place near the lake from this point. Remember, I tell myself. You're the hunter now, not them.

The boy from Community 1, Permitted and the girl from Community 2, and a scrawny, ashen-skinned boy who must be from Community 3. He made almost no impression on me at all during our time in the Capitol. I can remember almost nothing about him, not his costume, not his training score, not his interview. Even now, as he sits there fiddling with some kind of plastic box, he's easily ignored in the presence of his large and domineering companions. Likewise, he must be of some value or they wouldn't have bothered to let him live. Still, seeing him only adds to my sense of unease over why the Careers would possibly leave him as a guard, why they have allowed him to live at all.

Even from here, I can see the large swollen lumps on their bodies. They must not have had the sense to remove the stingers, or if they did, not known about the leaves that healed them. Apparently, whatever medicines they found in the Cornucopia have been ineffective.

The whole setup is completely perplexing. The distance, the netting, and the presence of the boy from Community 3. One thing's for sure, destroying those supplies is not going to be as simple as it looks. Some other factor is at play here, and I'd better stay put until I figure out what it is. My guess is the pyramid is booby-trapped in some manner. I think of concealed pits, descending nets, a thread that when broken sends a poisonous dart into your heart.

Really, the possibilities are endless.

While I am mulling over my options, I hear Permitted shout out. He's pointing up to the woods, far beyond me, and without turning I know that Permitted must have set the first campfire. We'd made sure to gather enough green wood to make the smoke noticeable. The Careers begin to arm themselves at once.

An argument breaks out. It's loud enough for me to hear that it concerns whether or not the boy from Community 3 should stay or accompany them.

'He's coming. We need him in the woods, and his job's done here anyway. No one can touch those supplies,' says Leah.

'What about Lover Boy?' says the boy from Community 1.

'I keep telling you, forget about him. I know where I cut him. It's a miracle he hasn't bled to death yet. At any rate, he's in no shape to raid us,' says Leah.

So, my boy is out there in the woods, wounded badly. Likewise, I am still in the dark about what motivated him to betray the Careers.

'Come on,' says Leah. He thrusts a spear into the hands of the boy from Community 3, and they head off in the direction of the fire. The last thing I hear as they enter the woods is Permitted saying, 'When we find her, I kill her in my own way, and no one interferes.'

I realize I'm grinding my teeth in frustration. She has confirmed what I'd already guessed. Likewise, what sort of trap have they laid that requires such dexterity? Has so many trigger points? Why did she squeal so as her hands made contact with the earth? You'd have thought. And slowly it begins to dawn on me. You'd have thought the very ground was going to explode.

'It's mined,' I whisper. That explains everything. The Careers' willingness to leave their supplies, her reaction, the involvement of the boy from Community 3, where they have the factories, where they make televisions and automobiles and explosives. Likewise, where did he get them? In the supplies? That's not the sort of weapon the Tournament makers usually provide, given that they like to see the drawn blood personally. I slip out of the bushes and cross to one of the round metal plates that lifted them into the arena. The ground around it has been dug up and patted back down. The landmines were disabled after the sixty seconds we stood on the plates, Likewise, the boy from Community 4 must have managed to reactivate them. I've never seen anyone in the Tournament do that. I bet it came as a shock even to the Tournament Makers.

Well, hurray for the boy from Community 3 for putting one over on them, Likewise, what am I supposed to do now? Obviously, I can't go strolling into that mess without blowing myself sky-high. As for sending in a burning arrow, that's more laughable than ever. The mines are set off by pressure. It doesn't have to be a lot, either. One year, a girl dropped her token, a small wooden ball, while she was at her plate, and they literally had to scrape bits of her off the ground.

My arm's pretty good, I might be able to chuck some rocks in there and set off what? Maybe one mine? That could start a chain reaction. Or could it? Would the boy from Community 3 have placed the mines in such a way that a single mine would not disturb the others? Thereby protecting the supplies Likewise, ensuring the death of the invader. Even if I only blew up one mine, I'd draw the Careers back down on me for sure. And anyway, what am I thinking? There's that net, clearly strung to deflect any such attack. Besides, what I'd really need is to throw about thirty rocks in there at once, setting off a big chain reaction, demolishing the whole lot.

I glance back up at the woods. The smoke from Leah's second fire is wafting toward the sky. By now, the Careers have probably begun to suspect some sort of trick.

Time is running out.

There is a solution to this, I know there is if I can only focus hard enough. I stare at the pyramid, the bins, the crates, too heavy to topple over with an arrow. Maybe one contains cooking oil, and the burning arrow idea is reviving when I realize I could end up losing all twelve of my arrows and not get a direct hit on an oil bin since I'd just be guessing. I'm genuinely thinking of trying to re-create Fox-face's trip up to the pyramid in hopes of finding a new means of destruction when my eyes light on the burlap bag of apples. I could sever the rope in one shot, didn't I do as much in the Training Center? It's a big bag, Likewise, it still might only be good for one explosion. If only I could free the apples themselves.

I know what to do. I move into range and give myself three arrows to get the job done. I place my feet carefully, block out the rest of the world as I take meticulous aim, the first arrow tears through the side of the bag near the top, leaving a split in the burlap. The second widens it to a gaping hole. I can see the first apple teetering when I let the third arrow go, catching the torn flap of burlap and ripping it from the bag.

For a moment, everything seems frozen in time. Then the apples spill to the ground and I'm blown backward into the air.

The impact of the hard-packed earth of the plain knocks the wind out of me.

My backpack does little to soften the blow.

Fortunately, my quiver has caught in the crook of my elbow, sparing both itself and my shoulder, and my bow is locked in my grasp. The ground still shakes with explosions. I can't hear them. I can't hear anything at the moment. Likewise, the apples must have set off enough mines, causing debris to activate the others. I manage to shield my face with my arms as shattered bits of matter, some of it burning, rain down on me. An acrid smoke fills the air, which is not the best remedy for someone trying to regain the ability to breathe.

After about a minute, the ground stops vibrating. I roll on my side and allow myself a moment of satisfaction the sight of the smoldering wreckage that was recently the pyramid. The Careers aren't likely to salvage anything out of that.

I'd better get out of here, I think.

They'll be making a beeline for the place. Likewise, once I'm on my feet, I realize escape may not be so simple. I'm dizzy. Not the slightly wobbly kind, Likewise, the kind that sends the trees swooping around you and causes the earth to move in waves under your feet.

I take a few steps and somehow wind up on my hands and knees. I wait a few minutes to let it pass, Likewise, it doesn't.

Panic begins to set in. I can't stay here. The flight is essential. Likewise, I can neither walk nor hear. I place a hand to my left ear, the one that was turned toward the blast, and it comes away bloody. Have I gone deaf from the explosion? The idea frightens me. I rely as much on my ears as my eyes as a hunter, maybe more at times.

Likewise, I can't let my fear show. Absolutely, positively, I am live on every screen in Pane.

So-o individuals really do tear out their hair and beat the ground with their fists- if I didn't know that it was aimed at me, at what I have done to him. Add to that my nearness, my inability to run or defend myself, and in fact, the whole thing has me terrified. I'm glad my hiding place makes it impossible for the cameras to get a close shot of me because I'm biting my nails like there's no tomorrow. Gnawing off the last bits of nail polish, trying to keep my teeth from chattering.

No blood trails, I tell myself, and manage to pull my hood up over my head, tie the cord under my chin with uncooperative fingers. That should help soak up the blood. I can't walk, Likewise, can I crawl? I move forward tentatively. Yes, if I go very slowly, I can crawl. Most of the woods will offer insufficient cover. My only hope is to make it back to Leah's corpse and conceal myself in greenery. I can't get caught out here on my hands and knees in the open. Not only will I face death, but it's also sure to be a long and painful one at Leah's hand. The thought of my sister had to watch that keeps me doggedly inching my way toward the hideout.

Another blast knocks me flat on my face. A stray mine set off by some collapsing crate. This happens twice more. I'm reminded of those last few kernels that burst when My sister and I popcorn over the fire at home.

To say I make it in the nick of time is an understatement. I have literally just dragged myself into the tangle of hushes at the base of the trees when there's Leah, barreling onto the plain, soon followed by his companions. His rage is so extreme it might be comical.

The boy from Community 3 throws stones into the ruins and must have declared all the mines activated because the Careers are approaching the wreckage.

Permitted has finished the first phase of his tantrum and takes out his anger on the smoking remains by kicking open various containers. The other is poking around in the mess, looking for anything to salvage, Likewise, there's nothing. The boy from Community 3 has done his job too well. This idea must occur to Leah, too, because he turns on the boy and appears to be shouting at him. The boy from Community 3 only has time to turn and run before Permitted catches him in a headlock from behind. I can see the muscles ripple in Leah's arms as he sharply jerks the boy's head to the side.

It's that quick. The death of the boy from Community 3.

The other two Careers seem to be trying to calm Permitted down. I can tell he wants to return to the woods, Likewise, they keep pointing at the sky, which puzzles me until I realized, Of course. They think whoever set off the explosions is dead.

They don't know about the arrows and the apples. They assume the booby trap was faulty, Likewise, that the who blew up the supplies were killed doing it. If there was a cannon shot, it could have been easily lost in the subsequent explosions. The shattered remains of the thief removed by hovercraft. They retire to the far side of the lake to allow the Tournament makers to retrieve the body of the boy from Community 6. And they delay.

I suppose a cannon goes off. A hovercraft appears and takes the dead boy. The sun dips below the horizon. Night falls. Up in the sky, I see the seal and know the anthem must have begun. A moment of darkness. They show the boy from Community 3. They show the boy from Community 10, who must have died this morning. Then the seal reappears. So, now they know. The bomber survived. In the seal's light, I can see Permitted and the girl from Community 2 put on their night-vision glasses. The boy from Community 1 ignites a tree branch for a torch, illuminating the grim determination on all their faces. The Careers stride back into the woods to hunt.

The dizziness has subsided and while my left ear is still deafened, I can hear a ringing in my right, which seems a good sign. There's no point in leaving my hiding place, though. I'm about as safe as I can be, here at the crime scene. They probably think the bomber has a two- or three-hour lead on them. Still, it's a long time before I risk moving.

The first thing I do is dig out my own glasses and put them on, which relaxes me a little, to have at least one of my hunter's senses working. I drink some water and wash the blood from my ear. Fearing the smell of meat will draw unwanted predators- fresh blood is bad enough- I make a good meal out of the greens and roots and berries Permitted and I gathered today.

Where is my little ally? Did she make it back to the rendezvous point? Is she worried about me? At least, the sky has shown we're both alive.

I run through the surviving on my fingers. The boy from 1, both from 2, both from 11 and 12. Just eight of us. The betting must be getting really hot in the Capitol. They'll be doing special features on each of us now. Probably interviewing our friends and families. It's been a long time since Community 14 made it into the top eight. And now there are two of us. Although from what Permitted said, my boy is on his way out.

Not that Permitted is the final word on anything. Didn't he just lose his entire stash of supplies?

Let the Seventy-fourth Famine Tournament begin, Leah, I think. Let them begin for real.

A cold breeze has sprung up. I reach for my sleeping bag before I remember I left it with Leah. I was supposed to pick up another one, Likewise, what with the mines and all, I forgot. I begin to shiver. Since roosting overnight in a tree isn't sensible anyway, I scoop out a hollow under the bushes and cover myself with leaves and pine needles. I'm still freezing. I lay my sheet of plastic over my upper body and position my backpack to block the wind. It's a little better. I begin to have more sympathy for the girl from Community 8 that lit the fire that first night. Likewise, now it's me who needs to grit my teeth and tough it out until morning. More leaves, more pine needles. I pull my arms inside my jacket and tuck my knees up to my chest.

Somehow, I drift off to sleep.

When I open my eyes, the world looks slightly fractured, and it takes a minute to realize that the sun must be well up and the glasses fragmenting my vision. As I sit up and remove them, I hear a laugh somewhere near the lake and freeze. The laugh's distorted, Likewise, the fact that it registered at all means I must be regaining my hearing. Yes, my right ear can hear again, although it's still ringing. As for my left ear, well, at least the bleeding has stopped.

I peer through the bushes, afraid the Careers have returned, trapping me here for an indefinite time.

No, it's she, standing in the rubble of the pyramid and laughing.

She's smarter than the Careers, actually finding a few useful items in the ashes. A metal pot. A knife blades. I'm perplexed by her amusement until I realize that with the Careers' stores eliminated, she might actually stand a chance. Just like the rest of us. It crosses my mind to reveal myself and enlist her as a second ally against that pack.

Likewise, I rule it out.

There's something about that sly grin that makes me sure that befriending she would ultimately get me a knife in the back. With that in mind, this might be an excellent time to shoot her. Likewise, she's heard something, not me, because her head turns away, toward the drop-off, and she sprints for the woods. I wait. No one, nothing shows up. Still, if she thought it was dangerous, maybe it's time for me to get out of here, too. Besides, I'm eager to tell Permitted about the pyramid.

Since I've no idea where the Careers are, the route back to the stream seems as good as any. I hurry, loaded bow in one hand, a hunk of cold gosling in the other, because I'm famished now, and not just for leaves and berries Likewise, for the fat and protein in the meat. The trip to the stream is uneventful. Once there, I refill my water and wash, taking particular care with my injured ear.

41

Then I travel uphill using the stream as a guide. At one point, I find boot prints in the mud along the bank. The Careers have been here, Likewise, not for a while. The prints are deep because they were made in soft mud, Likewise, now they're nearly dry in the hot sun. I haven't been careful enough about my own tracks, counting on a light tread and the pine needles to conceal my prints. Now I strip off my boots and socks and go barefoot up the bed of the stream.

The cool water has an invigorating effect on my body, my spirits. I shoot two fish, easy pickings in this slow-moving stream, and go ahead and eat one raw even though I've just had the gosling. The second I'll save for Leah.

Gradually, subtly, the ringing in my right ear diminishes until it's gone entirely. I find myself pawing at my left ear periodically, trying to clean away whatever deadens its ability to collect sounds. If there's an improvement, it's undetectable. I can't adjust to deafness in the ear. It makes me feel off-balance and defenseless to my left. Blind even. My head keeps turning to the injured side, as my right ear tries to compensate for the wall of nothingness where yesterday there was a constant flow of information. The more time that passes, the less hopeful I am that this is an injury that will heal.

When I reach the site of our first meeting, I feel certain it's been undisturbed. There's no sign of Leah, not on the ground or in the trees. This is odd.

By now she should have returned, as it's midday. Undoubtedly, she spent the night in a tree somewhere.

What else could she do with no light and the Careers with their night-vision glasses tramping around the woods? And the third fire she was supposed to set- although I forgot to check for it- last night- was the farthest from our site of all. She's probably just being cautious about making her way back. I wish she'd hurry because I don't want to hang around here too long. I want to spend the afternoon traveling to higher ground, hunting as we go. Likewise, there's nothing really for me to do. Likewise, wait.

I wash the blood out of my jacket and hair and clean my ever-growing list of wounds. The burns are much better. Likewise, I use a bit of medicine on them anyway. The main thing to worry about now is keeping out infection. I go ahead and eat the second fish. It isn't going to last long in this hot sun. Likewise, it should be easy enough to spear a few more for Leah. If she would just show up.

Feeling too vulnerable on the ground with my lopsided hearing, I scale a tree to wait. If the Careers show up, this will be a fine place to shoot them from. The sun moves slowly. I do things to pass the time. Chew leaves and apply them to my strings that are deflated. Likewise, still tender.

Comb through my damp hair with my fingers and braid it. Lace my boots back up. Check over my bow and the remaining nine arrows. Test my left ear repeatedly for signs of life by rustling a leaf near it, Likewise, without good results.

Despite the gosling and the fish, my stomach's growling, and I know I'm going to have what we call a hollow day back in Community 12. That's a day where no matter what you put in your belly, it's never enough. Having nothing to do Likewise, sit in a tree makes it worse, so I decided to give into it. After all, I've lost a lot of weight in- the arena, I need some extra calories. And having the bow and arrows makes me far more confident about my future prospects.

I slowly peel and eat a handful of nuts. My last cracker. The gosling necks. That's good because it takes time to pick clean. Finally, a gosling wing and the bird is history. Likewise, it's a hollow day, and even with all that, I start daydreaming about food. Particularly the decadent dishes served in the Capitol. The chicken in creamy orange sauce. The cakes and pudding. Noodles in green sauce. The lamb and dried plum stew. I suck on a few mint leaves and tell myself to get over it. Mint is good because we drink mint tea after supper often, so it tricks my stomach into thinking eating time is over. Sort of.

Dangling up in the tree, with the sun warming me, a mouthful of mint, my bow, and arrows at hand. this is the most relaxed I've been since I've entered the arena. If only Permitted would show up, and we could clear out. As the shadows grow, so does my restlessness. By late afternoon, I've resolved to go looking for her. I can at least visit the spot where she set the third fire and see if there are any clues to her whereabouts.

Before I go, I scatter a few mint leaves around our old campfire. Since we gathered these some distance away, permitted will understand I've been here, while they'll mean nothing to the Careers.

In less than an hour, I'm at the place where we agreed to have the third fire and I know something has gone amiss. The wood has been neatly arranged, expertly interspersed with tinder, Likewise, it has never been lit. Permitted set up the fire Likewise, never made it back here. Somewhere between the second column of smoke, I spied before I blew up the supplies and this point, she ran into trouble.

I have to remind myself she's still alive. Or is she? Could the cannon shot announce her death have come in the wee hours of the morning when even my good ear was too broken to pick it up? Will she appear in the sky tonight? No, I refuse to believe it. There could be a hundred other explanations. She could have lost her way. Run into a pack of predators or another, like Thresh, and had to hide. Whatever happened, I'm almost certain she's stuck out there, somewhere between the second fire and the unlit one at my feet. Something is keeping her up a tree.

I think I'll go hunt it down.

It's a relief to be doing something after sitting around all afternoon. I creep silently through the shadows, letting them conceal me. Likewise, nothing seems suspicious. There's no sign of any kind of struggle, no disruption of the needles on the ground. I've stopped for just a moment when I hear it. I have to click my head around to the side to be sure, Likewise, there it is again. Leah's four-note tune coming out of a blue jay's mouth.

The one that means she's all right.

I grin and move in the direction of the bird. Another just a short distance ahead picks up on the handful of notes. Permitted has been singing to them, and recently. Otherwise, they'd have taken up some other song. My eyes lift up into the trees, searching for a sign of her. I swallow and sing softly back, hoping she'll know it's safe to join me. A blue jay repeats the melody to me. And that's when I hear the scream.

It's a child's scream, a young girl's scream, there's no one in the arena capable of making that sound except for Leah. And now I'm running, knowing this may be a trap, knowing the three Careers may be poised to attack me, Likewise, I can't help myself. There's another high-pitched cry, this time my name. 'Elody! Elody!'

'Leah!' I shout back, so she knows I'm near. So, they know I'm near, and hopefully, the girl who has attacked them with bug and gotten an eleven they still can't explain will be enough to pull their attention away from her. 'Leah! I'm coming!'

When I break into the clearing, she's on the ground, hopelessly entangled in a net.

She just has time to reach her hand through the mesh and say my name before the spear enters her body.

The boy from Community 1 dies before he can pull out the spear. My arrow drives deeply into the center of his neck. He falls to his knees and halves the brief remainder of his life by yanking out the arrow and drowning in his own blood. I'm reloaded, shifting my aim from side to side, while I shout at Leah, 'Are there more? Are there more?'

She has to say no several times before I hear it. Permitted has rolled to her side, her body curved in and around the spear. I shove the boy away from her and pull out my knife, freeing her from the net. One look at the wound and I know it's far beyond my capacity to heal, beyond anyone's probably. The spearhead is buried up to the shaft in her stomach. I crouch before her, staring helplessly at the embedded weapon. There's no point in comforting words, in telling her she'll be all right. She's no fool. Her hand reaches out and I clutch it like a lifeline. As if it's me who's dying instead of Leah.

'You blew up the food?' She whispers.

'Every last bit,' I say.

'You have to win,' she says.

'I'm going to. Going to win for both of us now,' I promise. I hear a cannon and lookup. It must be for the boy from Community 1.

I hear the callouts- getting more gleesome- I don't want this for her- one boy was cut into 2 and hung my- a- oh- e- his head in a tree. One hand half his face blows off yet is still going... and a girl killed herself by sticking a long knife in her Likewise, hole and going up- in the front, she bloods out- slowly.

She was F-ed by a man she was not ever wanting to be with- she contracted his diseases so she ended it. This tournament is too dirty for protections. I have the window to show you it was hardcore- from the backside- I would never hit it that hard. (See this... he holds up his hand and the hologram plays- of them doing this for 3 mins.) 'I said she's dead! Looking over his shoulder.' I lay back down- and we start rolling around- I did want this to be known- yet it was- she has her off- by my call. So, they can get to see what they want to see- young love- in the making and make it.

'Love it die in the arms of the one you care about!'

(One month passes)

The love is over and they said we have to part- so we did- it was not good for him- no back for that is what they wanted to see I get a glimpse of him, lit by a torch, his garth, heading back to the girl by the fire- he was hanging with her- not love Likewise, for food. He needs me to take care of him- and I three weeks now.

His face is swollen with a black eye, there's a bloody bandage on one arm and his manhood tested in ways you would not get, and from the sound of his gait, he's limping somewhat for he has gashes. (He's my Bitch at this point.)

All right, I can stomach that seeing him in just underwire. Seeing all those supplies was tempting. Likewise, this another thing. No one from area 14 would think of doing such a thing! As me helping him live- they all want death- yet not all the younger girls get it- the man doesn't. Career others are overly vicious, arrogant, better fed, Likewise, only for the reason that they're the Capitol's yes man.

Generally, solidly hated by all Likewise, those from their own districts. I can imagine the things they're saying about him back home now. And my man had the nerve to talk to me about humiliation?

Noticeably, the noble boy on the rooftop was playing just one more tournament with me. Likewise, this will be his last. I will eagerly watch the night skies for signs of his death if I don't kill him first myself. The Career stars are soundless until he gets out of earshot, then use muted voices. 'Why- don't we just assassinate him now and get it over with?' A pack of girls said- it was the girl's agent's boys at this point. They did not like that were still hooking- up 'Let him tag along would be dead at the edge of a knife. So, killing them off would be the best- what's the harm- for doing it all? And he's handy with that knife.'

Is he- no cut? That's news- some girls loved. What a lot of interesting things I'm learning about my man today, when I unwrapped his bandages- this is what that girl did to you?

42

My bow! My arrows! Just the sight of them makes me so angry I want to scream, at myself, at that traitor my boy for distracting me from having them. I try to make eye contact with him now, Likewise, he seems to be intentionally avoiding my gaze as he polishes his knife with the edge of his shirt.

'No,' says Leah, pushing away the bow. 'I'll do better with my sword.' I can see the weapon, a short, heavy blade at his belt.

I give Permitted time to hoist himself into the tree before I begin to climb again. Gale always says I remind him of a squirrel the way I can scurry up even the slenderest limb. Part of it's my weight, Likewise, part of its practice. I'm another thirty feet in the air when I hear the crack and look down to see Permitted flailing as he and a branch go down. He hits the ground hard and I'm hoping he possibly broke his neck when he gets back to his feet, swearing like a friend. You have to know where to place your hands and feet.

The girl with the arrows, Glimmer I hear someone call her- ugh, the names the people in Community 1 give their children are so ridiculous- anyway twinkle scales, the tree until the branches begin to crack under her feet and then has the good sense to stop. I'm at least eighty-seven high now. She tries to shoot me and it's immediately evident that she's incompetent with a bow. One of the arrows gets lodged in the tree near me though and I'm able to seize it. I wave it teasingly above her head as if this was the sole purpose of retrieving it when actually I mean to use it if I ever get the chance. I could kill them, every one of them if those silver weapons were in my hands.

The Careers regroup on the ground and I can hear them growling conspiratorially among themselves, furious I have made them look foolish. Likewise, twilight has arrived and their window of the attack on me is closing. Finally, I hear my boy say harshly, 'Oh, let her stay up there. It's not like she's going anywhere. We'll deal with her in the morning.'

Well, he's right about one thing. I'm going nowhere. All the relief from the pool water has gone, leaving me to feel the full potency of my burns. I scoot down to a fork in the tree and clumsily prepare for bed. Put on my jacket, and layout my sleeping bag. Belt me in and try to keep from moaning. The heat of the bag's too much for my leg. I cut a slash in the fabric and hang my calf out in the open air. I drizzle water on the wound, my hands and do what I need to sleep.

All my bravado is gone. I'm weak from pain and famine Likewise, I can't bring myself to eat. Even if I can last the night, what will the morning bring?

I stare into the foliage trying to well- myself to rest, Likewise, the burns forbid it. Birds are settling down for the night, singing lullabies to their young.

Night creatures emerge. An owl hoots. The faint scent of a skunk cuts through the smoke.

The eyes of some animal peer at me from the neighboring tree- a possum maybe- catching the firelight from the Careers' torches. Suddenly, I'm up on one elbow. Those are no possum's eyes; I know their glassy reflection too well. In fact, those are not animal eyes at all. In the last dim rays of light, I make her out, watching me silently from between the branches. Leah... they killed her...

How long has she been here? The whole time probably. Still and unobserved as the action unfolded beneath her. Perhaps she headed up her tree shortly before I did, hearing the pack was so close.

For a while, we hold each other's stare. Then, without even rustling a leaf, her little hand slides into the open and points to something above my head. Low was our way to think about the day- I wanted to make him happy so I sucked him off as he did me. I love it is not like it was where get sick of one another at this point yet the caring and need is there, he is my love after all. I need to make him happy- and me doing this is one way, and him sucking my clit, and licking my come up is doing the same for- me now. The genital pulling and flicking on it just make all the other shit go away, as I wiggle with his tackles.

Rondha- 'She might have. It seemed pretty simpleminded to me. Every time I think about her spinning around in that dress, I want to puke.' 'Wish we knew how she got that eleven.' 'Bet you Lover Boy knows what I did.' The sound of him returning silences them. I said- Would you stop flapping that thing is all blue and silicone-ie- it what she uses in the night, she brought it along it was in the whole time- now it a weapon in my face, ow-weee-ah-h-ha!

I hope she washed it!! Why is she having one and I never did? Hum?

Moving on- The Career pack sets off at a run just as dawn begins to break, and birdsong fills the air. I remain in my awkward position, muscles trembling with exertion for a while longer, then hoist myself back onto my branch.

I need to get down, to get going. Likewise, for a moment I lie there, digesting what I've heard. Not only is my boy with the Careers, but he's also helping them find me. The simple-minded girl who has to be taken seriously because of her eleven.

For the reason that she can use a bow and arrow. Which my boy knows better than anyone.

Likewise, he hasn't told them yet. Is he saving that information, for the reason, that he knows it's all that keeps him alive? Is he still pretending to love me for the audience? What is going on in his head I can hear this... and it makes me giggle...

Suddenly, the birds fall silent. Then one gives a high-pitched warning call. A single note. Just like the one Ja Permitted and I heard when the blond-headed girl was caught. High above the dying campfire, a hovercraft materializes. A set of huge metal teeth drops down.

Slowly, gently, the dead girl that is my dad's friend's daughter is lifted into the hovercraft back out of the fight for she had the money no- to move else were. Then it vanishes. The birds resume their song.

'Move,' I whisper to myself. I wriggle out of my sleeping bag, roll it up, and place it in the pack. I take a deep breath. While I've been concealed by twilight, and the sleeping bag and the willow branches, it has probably been difficult for the cameras to get a good shot of me. I know they must be tracking me now though. The minute I hit the ground; I'm guaranteed a close-up.

The audience will have been beside themselves, knowing I was in the tree, that I overheard the Careers talking, that I discovered my boy was with them. Until I work out exactly how I want to play that, I'd better at least act on top of things.

Not puzzled... Certainly not mixed up or frightened. No, I need to look one step ahead of the tournament. So, as I slide out of the foliage and into the dawn light, I pause a second, giving the cameras time to lock on me. Then I 'cock' my head slightly- as I do with I suck him off down there- all flirty- looking up with roll blue- cute wet eyes, to the side and give a knowing smile.

I'm about to take off when I think of my snares. Maybe it's imprudent to check them with the others so close. Likewise, have to. Too many years of hunting, I guess. And the lure of possible meat. I'm rewarded with one fine rabbit. In no time, I've cleaned and gutted the animal, leaving the head, feet, tail, skin, and innards, under a pile of leaves. I'm wishing for a fire-eating raw rabbit can give you rabbit fever, a lesson I learned the hard way- when I think of the dead- Likewise. I hurry back to her camp. Sure enough, the coals of her dying fire are still hot. I cut up the rabbit, fashion a spit out of branches, and set it over the coals.

I'm glad for the cameras now. I want sponsors to see I can hunt, that I'm a good bet because I won't be lured into traps as easily as the others will by famine. While the rabbit cooks, I grind up part of a charred branch and set about camouflaging my orange pack. The black tones it down, Likewise, I feel a layer of mud would definitely help. Of course, to have mud, I'd need water.

I pull on my gear, grab my spit, kick some dirt over the coals, and take off in the opposite direction the Careers went. I eat half the rabbit as I go, then wrap up the leftovers in my plastic for later. The meat stops the grumbling in my stomach Likewise, it does little to quench my thirst.

Water is my top priority now.

As I hike along, I feel certain I'm still holding the screen in the Capitol, so I'm careful to continue to hide my emotions. Likewise, what a good time Claudius Temple-Smith must be having with his guest commentators, dissecting my boy's conduct, my reaction. What to make of it all? Has my boy revealed his Permitted colors? How does this affect the betting odds? Will we lose sponsors? Do we even have sponsors? Of course, I feel certain we do, or at least did.

Certainly, my boy has thrown a wrench into our star-crossed lover dynamic.

Or has he- he did all I asked... and it was good- maybe, since he hasn't spoken much about me, we can still get some mileage out of it. Maybe individuals will think it's something we plotted together if I seem to like it amuses me now.

My eyes follow the line of her finger up into the greenery above me. At earliest, I have no idea what she's pointing to, Likewise, then, about 20 feet up there, I make out the vague shape in the dimming light. Some sort of animal? It appears about the size of a raccoon, Likewise, it hangs from the bottom of a branch, swaying ever so slightly. There's something else. Among the familiar evening sounds of the woods, my ears register a low hum. Then I know.

It's a wasp nest.

Fear shoot through me, Likewise, I have enough sense to keep still. After all, I don't know what kind of wasp lives there. It could be the ordinary leave-us-alone and we'll-leave-you-alone type.

Likewise, these are the Star Tournament, and ordinary isn't the norm. More likely they will be one of the Capitol's mutations, tracker jackers. Like the jabber jays, these killer wasps were spawned in a lab and strategically placed, like land mines, around the districts during the war. Larger than regular wasps, they have a distinctive solid gold body and a sting that raises a lump the size of a plum on contact.

Most people can't tolerate more than a few stings. Some die at once. If you live, the hallucinations brought on by the venom have actually driven people to madness. And there's another thing, these wasps will hunt down anyone who disturbs their nest and attempt to kill them. That's where the tracker part of the name comes from.

After the war, the Capitol destroyed all the nests surrounding their city. Likewise, the ones near the districts were left untouched. Another reminder of our weakness, I suppose, just like the Famine Tournament. Another reason to keep inside the fence of Community 12. When Gale and I come across a tracker jacker nest, we immediately head in the opposite direction.

So, is that what hangs above me? I look back to Permitted for help. Likewise, she's melted into her tree.

Given my circumstances, I guess it doesn't matter what type of wasp nest it is. I'm wounded and trapped. Darkness has given me a brief reprieve. Likewise, by the time the sun rises, the Careers will have formulated a plan to kill me. There's no way they could do otherwise after I've made them look so stupid. That nest may be the sole option I have left. If I can drop it down on them, I may be able to escape. Likewise, I'll risk my life in the process.

Of course, I'll never be able to get in close enough to the actual nest to cut it free. I'll have to saw off the branch at the trunk and send the whole thing down. The serrated portion of my knife should be able to manage that. Likewise, can my hands? And will the vibration from the sawing raise the swarm? And what if the Careers figure out what I'm doing and move their camp? That would defeat the whole purpose.

I realize that the best chance I'll have to do the sawing without drawing notice will be during the anthem. That could begin at any time. I drag myself out of my bag, make sure my knife is secured in my belt, and begin to make my way up the tree. This in itself is dangerous since the branches are becoming precariously thin even for me. Likewise, I persevere. When I reach the limb that supports the nest, the humming becomes more distinctive. Likewise, it's still oddly subdued if these are mosquitos. It's the smoke, I think. It's sedated them. This was the one defense the rebels found to battle the wasps.

The seal of the Capitol shines above me and the anthem blares out. It's now or never, I think, and begin to saw. Blisters burst on my right hand as I awkwardly drag the knife back and forth. Once I've got a groove, the work requires less effort. Likewise, it is almost more than I can handle. I grit my teeth and saw away occasionally glancing at the sky to register that there were no deaths today. That's all right. The audience will be sated seeing me injured and treed and the pack below me. Likewise, the anthem's running out and I'm only three-quarters of the way through the wood when the music ends, the sky goes dark, and I'm forced to stop.

Now what? I could probably finish off the job by a sense of feel Likewise, that may not be the smartest plan. If the wasps are too groggy, if the nest catches on its way down, if I try to escape, this could all be a deadly waste of time. Better, I think, to sneak up here at dawn and send the nest into my enemies.

In the faint light of the Careers' torches, I inch back down to my fork to find the best surprise I've ever had. Sitting on my sleeping bag is a small plastic pot attached to a silver parachute. My first gift from a sponsor! Sam- must have had it sent in during the anthem. The pot easily fits in the palm of my hand. What can it be? Not food surely. I unscrew the lid and I know by the scent that it's medicine. Cautiously, I probe the surface of the ointment. The throbbing in my fingertip vanishes.

'Oh, Sam-, 'I whisper. 'Thank you.'

He has not abandoned me. Not left me to fend entirely for myself. The cost of this medicine must be astronomical. Probably not one Likewise, many sponsors have contrived Likewise, to buy this one tiny spot.

To me, it is priceless.

I dip two fingers in the jar and gently spread the balm over my calf. The effect is almost magical, erasing the pain on contact, leaving a pleasant cooling sensation behind. This is no herbal concoction that my mother grinds up out of woodland plants, its high-tech medicine brewed up in the Capitol's labs. When my calf is treated, I rub a thin layer into my hands. After wrapping the pot in the parachute, I nestle it safely away in my pack. Now that the pain has eased, it's all I can do to reposition myself in my bag before I plunge into sleep.

A bird perched just a few feet from me alerts me that a new day is dawning. In the gray morning light, I examine my hands. The medicine has transformed all the angry red patches to a soft baby-skin pink. My leg still feels inflamed, Likewise, that burn was far deeper. I apply another coat of medicine and quietly pack up my gear. Whatever happens, I'm going to have to move and move fast. I also make myself eat a cracker and a strip of beef and drink a few cups of water.

Chats- on the fly cam- And that's when I get my first clue to his whereabouts. He couldn't have survived without water. I know that from my first few days here.

He must be hidden somewhere near a source. There's the lake, Likewise, I find that an unlikely option since it's so close to the Careers' base camp. A few spring-fed pools. Likewise, you'd really be a sitting duck at one of those.

And the stream. The one that leads from the camp Permitted and I made all the way down near the lake and beyond. If he stuck to the stream, he could change his location and always be near water. He could walk in the current and erase any tracks. He might even be able to get a fish or two.

Well, it's a place to start, anyway. To confuse my enemies' minds, I start a fire with plenty of greenwoods. Even if they think it's a ruse, I hope they'll decide I'm hidden somewhere near it. While in reality, I'll be tracking my boy.

The sun burns off the morning haze almost immediately and I can tell the day will be hotter than usual. The waters cool and pleasant on my bare feet as I head downstream. I'm tempted to call out my boy's name as I go Likewise, decide against it. I will have to find him with my eyes and with one good ear or he will have to find me. Likewise, he'll know I'll be looking, right? He won't have so low of an opinion of me as to think I'd ignore the new rule and keep to myself. Would he? He's very hard to predict, which might be interesting under different circumstances, Likewise, at the moment only provides an extra obstacle.

Escape the stream now. Fighting off Permitted or Thresh as I climbed over this rocky terrain. In fact, I've just about decided I'm on the wrong track entirely, that a wounded boy would be unable to navigate getting to and from this water source when I see the bloody streak going down the curve of a boulder. It's long dried now, Likewise, the smeary lines running side to side suggest someone - who perhaps was not fully in control of his mental faculties- tried to wipe it away.

Hugging the rocks, I move slowly in the direction of the blood, searching for him.

I find a few more bloodstains, one with a few threads of fabric glued to it, Likewise, no sign of life. I break down and say his name in a hushed voice. 'My boy! My boy!' Then a blue jay lands on a scruffy tree and begins to mimic my tones so I stop. I give up and climb back down to the stream thinking, He must have moved on.

Somewhere farther down.

My foot has just broken the surface of the water when I hear a voice.

'You here to finish me off, sweetheart?'

I whip around. It's come from the left, so I can't pick it up very well. And the voice was hoarse and weak. Still, it must have been my boy. Who else in the arena would call me sweetheart? My eyes peruse the bank, Likewise, there's nothing. Just mud, the plants, the base of the rocks.

'My boy?' I whisper. 'Where are you?' There's no answer. Could I just have imagined it? No, I'm certain it was real and very close at hand, too. 'My boy?' I creep along the bank.

'Well, don't step on me.'

I jump back. His voice was right under my feet. Still, there's nothing. Then his eyes open, unmistakably blue in the brown mud and green leaves. I gasp and am rewarded with a hint of white teeth as he laughs.

It's the final word in camouflage. Forget chucking weights around. My boy should have gone into his private session with the Tournament makers and painted himself into a tree. Or a boulder. Or a muddy bank full of weeds.

'Close your eyes again,' I order. He does, and his mouth too, and completely disappears. Most of what I judge to be his body is actually under a layer of mud and plants. His face and arms are so artfully disguised as to be invisible. I kneel beside him. 'I guess all those hours decorating cakes paid off.'

My boy smiles. 'Yes, frosting. The final defense of the dying.'

'You're not going to die,' I tell him firmly. 'Says who?' His voice is so ragged. 'Says me. We're on the same team now, you know,' I tell him.

His eyes open. 'So, I heard. Nice of you to find what's left of me.'

I pull out my water bottle and give him a drink.

'Did Permit cut you?' I ask.

'Left leg. Up high,' he answers.

'Let's get you in the stream, wash you off so I can see what kind of wounds you've got,' I say.

'Lean down a minute first,' he says. 'Need to tell you something.' I lean over and put my good ear to his lips, which tickle as he whispers. 'Remember, we're madly in love, so it's all right to kiss me anytime you feel like it.'

I jerk my head back Likewise, I end up laughing.

'Thanks, I'll keep it in mind.' At least, he's still able to joke around. Likewise, when I start to help him to the stream, all the levity disappears. It's only two feet away, how hard can it be? Very hard when I realize he's unable to move an inch on his own. He's so weak that the best he can do is not to resist. I try to drag him, Likewise, despite the fact that I know he's doing all he can to keep quiet, sharp cries of pain escaped him. The mud and plants seem to have imprisoned him and I finally have to give a gigantic tug to break him from their clutches. He's still two feet from the water, lying there, teeth gritted, tears cutting trails in the dirt on his face.

'Look, my boy, I'm going to roll you into the stream. It's very shallow here, okay?' I say.

'Excellent,' he says.

I crouch down beside him. No matter what happens, I tell myself, don't stop until he's in the water. 'On three,' I say. 'One, two, three!' I can only manage one full roll before I have to stop because of the horrible sound he's making. Now he's on the edge of the stream.

Maybe this is better anyway.

'Okay, change of plans. I'm not going to put you all the way in,' I tell him. Besides, if I get him in, who knows if I'd ever been able to get him out?

'No more rolling?' He asks.

'That's all done. Let's get you cleaned up. Keep an eye on the woods for me, okay?' I say. It's hard to know where to start. He so caked with mud and matted leaves; I can't even see his clothes. If he's wearing clothes. The thought makes me hesitate a moment, Likewise, then I plunge in. Naked bodies are no big deal in the arena, right?

I've got two water bottles and Leah's water skin. I prop them against rocks in the stream so that two are always filling while I pour the third over My boy's body.

It takes a while, Likewise, I finally get rid of enough mud to find his clothes. I gently unzip his jacket, and his shirt and ease them off him. His undershirt is so plastered into his wounds I have to cut it away with my knife and drench him again to work it loose. He's badly bruised with a long burn across his chest and four-tracker jacker stings if you count the one under his ear. Likewise, I feel a bit better. This much I can fix. I decide to take care of his upper body first, to alleviate some pain before I tackle whatever damage Permitted did to his leg.

Since treating his wounds seems pointless when he's lying in what's become a mud puddle, I manage to prop him up against a boulder. He sits there, uncomplaining, while I wash away all the traces of dirt from his hair and skin. His flesh is very pale in the sunlight and he no longer looks strong and stocky. I have to dig the stingers out of his tracker jacker lumps, which causes him to wince, Likewise, the minute I apply the leaves he sighs in relief. While he dries in the sun, I wash his filthy shirt and jacket and spread them over boulders. Then I apply the burn cream to his chest. This is when I notice how hot his skin is becoming. The layer of mud and the bottles of water have disguised the fact that he's burning with fever. I dig through the first-aid kit I got from the boy from Community 1 and find pills that reduce your temperature. My mother actually breaks down and buys these on occasion when her home remedies fail.

'Swallow these,' I tell him, and he obediently takes the medicine. 'You must be hungry.'

'Not really. It's funny, I haven't been hungry for days,' says My boy. In fact, when I offer him gosling, he wrinkles his nose at it and turns away. That's when I know how sick he is.

'My boy, we need to get some food in you,' I insist.

'It'll just come right back up,' he says. The best I can do is to get him to eat a few bits of dried apple. 'Thanks. I'm much better, really. Can I sleep now, Elody?' He asks.

'Soon,' I promise. 'I need to look at your leg first.' Trying to be as gentle as I can, I remove his boots, his socks, and then very slowly inch his pants off of him.

I can see the tear Leah's sword made in the fabric over his thigh, Likewise, it in no way prepares me for what lies underneath. The deep inflamed gash oozing both blood and pus. The swelling of the leg. And worst of all, the smell of festering flesh. I want to run away. Disappear into the woods like I did that day they brought the burn victim to our house. Go and hunt while my mother and My sister attend to what I have neither the skill nor the courage to face. Likewise, there's no one here Likewise, me. I try to capture the calm demeanor my mother assumes when handling particularly bad cases.

'Pretty awful, huh?' says My boy.

He's watching me closely.

'So-so.' I shrug like it's no big deal. 'You should see some of the people they bring my mother from the mines.' I refrain from saying how I usually clear out of the house whenever she's treating anything worse than a cold. Come to think of it, I don't even much like to be around coughing. 'The first thing is to clean it well.'

I've left on My boy's undershorts because they're not in bad shape and I don't want to pull them over the swollen thigh and, all right, maybe the idea of him being bad makes me uncomfortable. That's another thing about my mother and my sister. Nakedness has no effect on them, gives them no cause for embarrassment.

Ironically, at this point in the Tournament, my little sister would be of far more use to my boy than I am. I scoot my square of plastic under him so I can wash down the rest of him. With each bottle I pour over him, the worse the wound looks. The rest of his lower body has fared pretty well, just one sting and a few small burns that I treat quickly. Likewise, the gash on his leg. What on earth can I do for that?

'Why don't we give it some air and then.' I trail off. 'And then you'll patch it up?' says my boy. He looks almost sorry for me as if he knows how lost I am.

'That's right,' I say. 'In the meantime, you eat these.' I put a few dried pear halves in his hand and go back in the stream to wash the rest of his clothes. When they're flattened out and drying, I examine the contents of the first-aid kit. It's pretty basic stuff. Bandages, fever pills, medicine to calm stomachs. Nothing of the caliber I'll need to treat my boy.

'We're going to have to experiment some,' I admit. I know the bugs leave to draw out infection, so I start with those. Within minutes of pressing the handful of chewed up green stuff into the wound, pus begins running down the side of his leg. I tell myself this is a good thing and bite the inside of my cheek hard because my breakfast is threatening to make a reappearance.

'Elody?' My boy says. I meet his eyes, knowing my face must be some shade of green. He mouths the words. 'How about that kiss?'

I burst out laughing because the whole thing is so revolting, I can't stand it.

'Something wrong?' he asks a little too innocently.

'I. I'm no good at this. I'm not my mother. I've no idea what I'm doing and I hate p-us-s,' I say. 'Euh!' I allow myself to let out a groan as I rinse away the first round of leaves and apply the second. 'Euuuh!'

'How do you hunt?' He asks.

'Trust me. Killing things is much easier than this,' I say. 'Although for all I know, I am killing you.' 'Can you speed it up a little?' He asks.

'No. Shut up and eat your pears,' I say.

After three applications and what seems like a bucket of pus, the wound does look better. Now that the swelling has gone down, I can see how deep Leah's sword cut.

Right down to the bone.

'What next, Dr. Everdeen?' He asks.

'Maybe I'll put some of the burn ointment on it. I think it helps with an infection anyway. And wrap it up?' I say. I do and the whole thing seems a lot more manageable, covered in clean white cotton. Although, against the sterile bandage, the hem of his undershorts looks filthy and teeming with contagion. I pull out Leah's backpack. 'Here, cover yourself with this and I'll wash your shorts.'

'Oh, I don't care if you see me,' says My boy. 'You're just like the rest of my family,' I say. 'I care, all right?' I turn my back and look at the stream until the undershorts splash into the current. He must be feeling a bit better if he can throw.

'You know, you're kind of squeamish for such a lethal person,' says My boy as I beat the shorts clean between two rocks. 'I wish I'd let you give Sam - a shower after all.'

I wrinkle my nose at the memory.

'What's he sent you so far?'

'Not a thing,' says My boy. Then there's a pause as it hits him. 'Why, did you get something?'

Getting the broth into My boy takes an hour of coaxing, begging, threatening, and yes, kissing. Likewise, finally, sip by sip, he empties the pot. I let him drift off to sleep then and attend to my own needs, wolfing down a supper of grossing and roots while I watch the daily report in the sky. No new casualties. Still, my boy and I have given the audience a fairly interesting day. Hopefully, the Tournament makers will allow us a peaceful night.

I automatically look around for a good tree to nest in before I realize that's over. At least for a while. I can't very well leave My boy unguarded on the ground. I left the scene of his last hiding place on the bank of the stream untouched - how could I conceal it? - And we're a scant fifty yards downstream. I put on my glasses, place my weapons in readiness, and settle down to keep watch.

The temperature drops rapidly and soon I'm chilled to the bone. Eventually, I give in and slide into the sleeping bag with My boy. It's toasty warm and I snuggle down gratefully until I realize it's more than warm, it's overly hot because the bag is reflecting back his fever. I check his forehead and find it burning and dry. I don't know what to do. Leave him in the bag and hope the excessive heat breaks the fever? Take him out and hope the night air cools him off? I end up just dampening a strip of bandage and placing it on his forehead. It seems weak, likewise, I'm afraid to do anything too drastic.

I spend the night half-sitting, half lying next to my boy, refreshing the bandage, and trying not to dwell on the fact that by teaming up with him, I've made myself far more vulnerable than when I was alone. Tethered to the ground, on guard, with a very sick person to take care of. Likewise, I knew he was injured. And still, I came after him. I'm just going to have to trust that whatever instinct sent me to find him was a good one.

When the sky turns rosy, I notice the sheen of sweat on My boy's lip and discover the fever has broken.

He's not back to normal, Likewise, it's come down a few degrees. Last night, when I was gathering vines, I came upon a bush of Leah's berries. I strip off the fruit and mash it up in the broth pot with cold water.

My boy's struggling to get up when I reach the cave. 'I woke up and you were gone,' he says. 'I was worried about you.'

'I thought Permitted and Clove might have found you. They like to hunt at night,' he says, still serious.

'Clove? Which one is that?' I ask.

'The girl from Community Two. She's still alive, right?' He says.

'Yes, there's just them and us and Thresh and Neahie,' I say. 'That's what I nicknamed the girl from Five. How do you feel?'

'Better than yesterday. This is an enormous improvement over the mud,' he says. 'Clean clothes and medicine and a sleeping bag. and you.'

Oh, right, the whole romance thing. I reach out to touch his cheek and he catches my hand and presses it against his lips. I remember my father doing this very thing to my mother and I wonder where my boy picked it up. Surely not from his father and the witch.

'No more kisses for you until you've eaten,' I say.

We get him propped up against the wall and he obediently swallows the spoonful of the berry mush I feed him. He refuses the gosling again, though. 'You didn't sleep,' my boy says.

'I'm all right,' I say. Likewise, the truth is, I'm exhausted.

'Sleep now. I'll keep watch. I'll wake you if anything happens,' he says. I hesitate. 'Elody, you can't stay up forever.'

He's got a point there. I'll have to sleep eventually.

And probably better to do it now when he seems relatively alert and we have daylight on our side. 'All right,' I say. ' Likewise, just for a few hours.

Then you wake me.'

It's too warm for the sleeping bag now. I smooth it out on the cave floor and lie down, one hand on my loaded bow in case I have to shoot at a moment's notice. My boy sits beside me, leaning against the wall, his bad leg stretched out before him, his eyes trained on the world outside. 'Go to sleep,' he says softly. His hand brushes the loose strands of my hair off my forehead. Unlike the staged kisses and caresses so far, this gesture seems natural and comforting. I don't want him to stop and he doesn't. He's still stroking my hair when I fall asleep.

Too long. I sleep for too long. I know from the moment I open my eyes that we're into the afternoon. My boy's right beside me, his position unchanged. I sit up, feeling somehow defensive. Likewise, better rested than I've been in days.

~*~

All seem to still be recovering from an attack that happens last night a gang up. Even from here, I can see the large swollen lumps on their bodies.

Everything is booby-trapped in some manner. I think of concealed pits, descending nets, a thread that when broken sends a poisonous dart into your heart.

Really, the possibilities are endless.

While I am mulling over my options, I hear Permitted shout out. He's pointing up to the woods, far beyond me, and without turning I know that Permitted must have set the first campfire. We'd made sure to gather enough green wood to make the smoke noticeable. The Careers begin to arm themselves at once.

An argument breaks out. It's loud enough for me to hear that it concerns whether or not the boy from Community 3 should stay or accompany them.

'He's coming. We need him in the woods, and his job's done here anyway. No one can touch those supplies,' says Leah.

'What about Lover Boy?' says the boy from Community 1.

'I keep telling you, forget about him. I know where I cut him. It's a miracle he hasn't bled to death yet. At any rate, he's in no shape to raid us,' says Leah.

So, my boy is out there in the woods, wounded badly. Likewise, I am still in the dark about what motivated him to betray the Careers.

'Come on,' says Leah. He thrusts a spear into the hands of the boy from Community 3, and they head off in the direction of the fire. The last thing I hear as they enter the woods is Permitted saying, 'When we find her, I kill her in my own way, and no one interferes.'

I stay put for half an hour or so, trying to figure out what to do about the supplies. The one advantage I have with the bow and arrow is distance.

So, I'm right about the booby trap, Likewise, it's clearly more complex than I had imagined. I was right about the girl, too.

How wily is she to have discovered this path into the food and to be able to replicate it so neatly? She fills her pack, taking a few items from a variety of containers, crackers from a crate, a handful of apples from a burlap sack that hangs suspended from a rope off the side of a bin. Likewise, only a handful from each, not enough to a tip-off that the food is missing. Not enough to cause suspicion. And then she's doing her odd little dance back out of the circle and scampering into the woods again, safe and sound.

Likewise, what sort of trap have they laid that requires such dexterity? Has so many trigger points? Why did she squeal so as her hands made contact with the earth? You'd have thought. And slowly it begins to dawn on me. You'd have thought the very ground was going to explode.

I glance back up at the woods. The smoke from Leah's second fire is wafting toward the sky. By now, the Careers have probably begun to suspect some sort of trick. Time is running out.

I know what to do. I move into range and give myself three arrows to get the job done. I place my feet carefully, block out the rest of the world as I take meticulous aim,

The first arrow tears through the side of the bag near the top, leaving a split in the burlap. The second widens it to a gaping hole. I can see the first apple teetering when I let the third arrow go, catching the torn flap of burlap and ripping it from the bag.

For a moment, everything seems frozen in time. Then the apples spill to the ground and I'm blown backward into the air.

The impact of the hard-packed earth of the plain knocks the wind out of me.

My backpack does little to soften the blow. Fortunately, my quiver has caught in the crook of my elbow, sparing both itself and my shoulder, and my bow is locked in my grasp. The ground still shakes with explosions. I can't hear them.

I can't hear anything at the moment. Likewise, the apples must have set off enough mines, causing debris to activate the others. I manage to shield my face with my arms as shattered bits of matter, some of it burning, rain down on me. An acrid smoke fills the air, which is not the best remedy for someone trying to regain the ability to breathe.

After about a minute, the ground stops vibrating. I roll on my side and allow myself a moment of satisfaction the sight of the smoldering wreckage that was recently the pyramid. The Careers aren't likely to salvage anything out of that.

I'd better get out of here, I think.

They'll be making a beeline for the place. Likewise, once I'm on my feet, I realize escape may not be so simple. I'm dizzy. Not the slightly wobbly kind, Likewise, the kind that sends the trees swooping around you and causes the earth to move in waves under your feet.

I take a few steps and somehow wind up on my hands and knees. I wait a few minutes to let it pass, Likewise, it doesn't.

Panic begins to set in. I can't stay here. The flight is essential. Likewise, I can neither walk nor hear. I place a hand to my left ear, the one that was turned toward the blast, and it comes away bloody. Have I gone deaf from the explosion? The idea frightens me. I rely as much on my ears as my eyes as a hunter, maybe more at times. Likewise, I can't let my fear show. No blood trails, I tell myself, and manage to pull my hood up over my head, tie the cord under my chin with uncooperative fingers. That should help soak up the blood. I can't walk, Likewise, can I crawl? I move forward tentatively. Yes, if I go very slowly, I can crawl. Most of the woods will offer insufficient cover.

My only hope is to make it back to Leah's corpse and conceal myself in greenery. I can't get caught out here on my hands and knees in the open. Not only will I face death, but it's also sure to be a long and painful one at Leah's hand. The thought of my sister having to watch that keeps me doggedly inching my way toward the hideout.

Another blast knocks me flat on my face. A stray mine set off by some collapsing crate. This happens twice more. I'm reminded of those last few kernels that burst when my sister and I popcorn over the fire at home.

To say I make it in the nick of time is an understatement. I have literally just dragged myself into the tangle of hushes at the base of the trees when there's Leah, barreling onto the plain, soon followed by his companions. His rage is so extreme it might be comical - so people really do tear-out their hair and beat the ground with their fists - if I didn't know that it was aimed at me, at what I have done to him. Add to that my proximity, my inability to run or defend myself, and in fact, the whole thing has me terrified. I'm glad my hiding place makes it impossible for the cameras to get a close shot of me because I'm biting my nails like there's no tomorrow. Gnawing off the last bits of nail polish, trying to keep my teeth from chattering.

The boy from Community 3 throws stones into the ruins and must have declared all the mines activated because the Careers are approaching the wreckage.

Permitted has finished the first phase of his tantrum and takes out his anger on the smoking remains by kicking open various containers. The other try Likewise, are poking around in the mess, looking for anything to salvage, Likewise, there's nothing. The boy from Community 3 has done his job too well. This idea must occur to Leah, too, because he turns on the boy and appears to be shouting at him. The boy from Community 3 only has time to turn and run before Permitted catches him in a headlock from behind. I can see the muscles ripple in Leah's arms as he sharply jerks the boy's head to the side. It's that quick. The death of the boy from Community 3.

The other two Careers seem to be trying to calm Permitted down. I can tell he wants to return to the woods, Likewise, they keep pointing at the sky, which puzzles me until I realized, Of course. They think whoever set off the explosions is dead. They don't know about the arrows and the apples. They assume the booby trap was faulty, Likewise, that the who blew up the supplies was killed doing it. If there was a cannon shot, it could have been easily lost in the subsequent explosions. The shattered remains of the thief removed by hovercraft. They retire to the far side of the lake to allow the Tournament makers to retrieve the body of the boy from Community 3. And they wait.

I suppose a cannon goes off. A hovercraft appears and takes the dead boy. The sun dips below the horizon. Night falls. Up in the sky, I see the seal and know the anthem must have begun. A moment of darkness. They show the boy from Community 3. They show the boy from Community 10, who must have died this morning. Then the seal reappears.

So, now they know. The bomber survived. In the seal's light, I can see Permitted and the girl from Community 2 put on their night-vision glasses. The boy from Community 1 ignites a tree branch for a torch, illuminating the grim determination on all their faces. The Careers stride back into the woods to hunt.

The dizziness has subsided and while my left ear is still deafened, I can hear a ringing in my right, which seems a good sign. There's no point in leaving my hiding place, though. I'm about as safe as I can be, here at the crime scene. They probably think the bomber has a two- or three-hour lead on them. Still, it's a long time before I risk moving.

Where is my little ally? Did she make it back to the rendezvous point? Is she worried about me? At least, the sky has shown we're both alive. Both from 11 and all from 12. Just eight of us. The betting must be getting really hot in the Capitol. They'll be doing special features on each of us now. Probably interviewing our friends and families. It's been a long time since Community 12 made it into the top eight. And now there are two of us.

Although from what Permitted said, my boys on his way out. Not that Permitted is the final word on anything. Didn't he just lose his entire stash of supplies?

Let the Seventy-fourth Famine Tournament begin, Leah, I think. Let them begin for real.

A cold breeze has sprung up. I reach for my sleeping bag before I remember I left it with Leah. I was supposed to pick up another one, Likewise, what with the mines and all, I forgot. I begin to shiver. Since roosting overnight in a tree isn't sensible anyway, I scoop out a hollow under the bushes and cover myself with leaves and pine needles. I'm still freezing. I lay my sheet of plastic over my upper body and position my backpack to block the wind. It's a little better. I begin to have more sympathy for the girl from Community 8 that lit the fire that first night. Likewise, now it's me who needs to grit my teeth and tough it out until morning. More leaves, more pine needles. I pull my arms inside my jacket and tuck my knees up to my chest. Somehow, I drift off to sleep.

When I open my eyes, the world looks slightly fractured, and it takes a minute to realize that the sun must be well up and the glasses fragmenting my vision. As I sit up and remove them, I hear a laugh somewhere near the lake and freeze. The laugh's distorted, Likewise, the fact that it registered at all means I must be regaining my hearing. Yes, my right ear can hear again, although it's still ringing. As for my left ear, well, at least the bleeding has stopped.

Since I've no idea where the Careers are, the route back to the stream seems as good as any. I hurry, loaded bow in one hand, a hunk of cold gosling in the other, because I'm famished now, and not just for leaves and berries Likewise, for the fat and protein in the meat. The trip to the stream is uneventful. Once there, I refill my water and wash, taking particular care with my injured ear. Then I travel uphill using the stream as a guide. At one point, I find boot prints in the mud along the bank.

The Careers have been here, Likewise, not for a while. The prints are deep because they were made in soft mud, Likewise, now they're nearly dry in the hot sun. I haven't been careful enough about my own tracks, counting on a light tread and the pine needles to conceal my prints. Now I strip off my boots and socks and go barefoot up the bed of the stream.

The cool water has an invigorating effect on my body, my spirits. I shoot two fish, easy pickings in this slow-moving stream, and go ahead and eat one raw even though I've just had the gosling. The second I'll save for Leah.

Gradually, subtly, the ringing in my right ear diminishes until it's gone entirely. I find myself pawing at my left ear periodically, trying to clean away whatever deadens its ability to collect sounds. If there's an improvement, it's undetectable. I can't adjust to deafness in the ear. It makes me feel off-balanced and defenseless to my left. Blind even. My head keeps turning to the injured side, as my right ear tries to compensate for the wall of nothingness where yesterday there was a constant flow of information. The more time that passes, the less hopeful I am that this is an injury that will heal.

When I reach the site of our first meeting, I feel certain it's been undisturbed. There's no sign of Leah, not on the ground or in the trees. This is odd. By now she should have returned, as it's midday.

Undoubtedly, she spent the night in a tree somewhere. What else could she do with no light and the Careers with their night-vision glasses tramping around the woods? And the third fire she was supposed to set although I forgot to check for it- last night - was the farthest from our site of all. She's probably just being cautious about making her way back. I wish she'd hurry because I don't want to hang around here too long. I want to spend the afternoon traveling to higher ground, hunting as we go. Likewise, there's nothing really for me to do Likewise, wait.

I wash the blood out of my jacket and hair and clean my ever-growing list of wounds. The burns are much better Likewise, I use a bit of medicine on them anyway. The main thing to worry about now is keeping out infection. I go ahead and eat the second fish. It isn't going to last long in this hot sun, Likewise, it should be easy enough to spear a few more for Leah. If she would just show up.

Feeling too vulnerable on the ground with my lopsided hearing, I scale a tree to wait. If the Careers show up, this will be a fine place to shoot them from. The sun moves slowly. I do things to pass the time. Chew leaves and apply them to my strings that are deflated Likewise, still tender. Comb through my damp hair with my fingers and braid it. Lace my boots back up. Check over my bow and the remaining nine arrows. Test my left ear repeatedly for signs of life by rustling a leaf near it, Likewise, without good results.

Despite the gosling and the fish, my stomach's growling, and I know I'm going to have what we call a hollow day back in Community 12. That's a day where no matter what you put in your belly, it's never enough. Having nothing to do Likewise, sit in a tree makes it worse, so I decided to give into it. After all, I've lost a lot of weight in the arena, I need some extra calories. And having the bow and arrows makes me far more confident about my future prospects.

I slowly peel and eat a handful of nuts. My last cracker. The gosling neck. That's good because it takes time to pick clean. Finally, a gosling wing and the bird is history. Likewise, it's a hollow day, and even with all that, I start daydreaming about food. Particularly the decadent dishes served-in the Capitol. The chicken in creamy orange sauce.

The cakes and pudding. Bread with and sari. Noodles in green sauce. The lamb and dried plum stew. I suck on a few mint leaves and tell myself to get over it. Mint is good because we drink mint tea after supper often, so it tricks my stomach into thinking eating time is over. Sort of.

Dangling up in the tree, with the sun warming me, a mouthful of mint, my bow, and arrows at hand. This is the most relaxed I've been since I've entered the arena. If only Permitted would show up, and we could clear out. As the shadows grow, so does my restlessness. By late afternoon, I've resolved to go looking for her. I can at least visit the spot where she set the third fire and see if there are any clues to her whereabouts.

Before I go, I scatter a few mint leaves around our old campfire. Since we gathered these some distance away, permitted will understand I've been here, while they'll mean nothing to the Careers.

In less than an hour, I'm at the place where we agreed to have the third fire and I know something has gone amiss. The wood has been neatly arranged, expertly interspersed with tinder, Likewise, it has never been lit. Permitted set up the fire Likewise, never made it back here. Somewhere between the second column of smoke, I spied before I blew up the supplies and this point, she ran into trouble.

I have to remind myself she's still alive. Or is she? Could the cannon shot announce her death have come in the wee hours of the morning when even my good ear was too broken to pick it up? Will she appear in the sky tonight? No, I refuse to believe it.

There could be a hundred other explanations. She could have lost her way. Run into a pack of predators or another, like Thresh, and had to hide. Whatever happened, I'm almost certain she's stuck out there, somewhere between the second fire and the unlit one at my feet. Something is keeping her up a tree. I think I'll go hunt it down.

It's a relief to be doing something after sitting around all afternoon. I creep silently through the shadows, letting them conceal me. Likewise, nothing seems suspicious. There's no sign of any kind of struggle, no disruption of the needles on the ground. I've stopped for just a moment when I hear it. I have to crack my head around to the side to be sure, Likewise, there it is again. Leah's four-note tune coming out of a blue jay's mouth.

The one that means she's all right.

I grin and move in the direction of the bird. Another just a short distance ahead picks up on the handful of notes. Permitted has been singing to them, and recently. Otherwise, they'd have taken up some other song. My eyes lift up into the trees, searching for a sign of her. I swallow and sing softly back, hoping she'll know it's safe to join me. A blue jay repeats the melody to me. And that's when I hear the scream.

It's a child's scream, a young girl's scream, there's no one in the arena capable of making that sound except Leah. And now I'm running, knowing this may be a trap, knowing the three Careers may be poised to attack me, Likewise, I can't help myself.

There's another high-pitched cry, this time my name.

'Elody! Elody!'

'Leah!' I shout back, so she knows I'm near. So, they know I'm near, and hopefully, the girl who has attacked them with ants and gotten an eleven they still can't explain will be enough to pull their attention away from her. 'Leah! I'm coming!'

When I break into the clearing, she's on the ground, hopelessly entangled in a net. She just has time to reach her hand through the mesh and say my name before the spear enters her body.

The sun comes up to in a nice way to me, in the sky and even though the canopy seems overly bright. I coat my lips in some grease from the rabbit and try to keep from panting. Likewise, it's no use. It's only been a day and I'm dehydrating fast. I try and think of everything I know about finding water. It runs downhill, so, in fact, continuing down into this valley isn't a bad thing. If I could just locate a tournament trail or spot a particularly green patch of vegetation, these might help me along. Likewise, nothing seems to change. There's just the slight gradual slope, the birds, the sameness to the trees.

As the day wears on, I know I'm headed for trouble. What little urine I've been able to pass is a dark brown, my head is aching, and there's a dry patch on my tongue that refuses to moisten. The sun hurts my eyes so I dig out my sunglasses, likewise, when I put them on, they do something funny to my vision, so I just stuff them back in my pack.

It's late afternoon when I think I've found helpful. I spot a cluster of berry bushes and hurry to strip the fruit, to suck the sweet juices from the skins. Likewise, just as I'm holding them to my lips, I get a hard look at them. What I thought were blueberries have a slightly different shape, and when I break one open the insides are blooded. I don't recognize these berries, perhaps they are edible, and Likewise, I'm guessing this is some evil trick on the part of the star makers. Even the plant instructor in the Training Center made a point of telling us to avoid berries unless you were 100% sure they weren't toxic. Something I already knew, Likewise, I'm so thirsty it takes her reminder to give me the strength to fling them away.

Fatigue is beginning to settle on me, Likewise, it's not the usual tiredness that follows a long hike. I have to stop and rest frequently, although I know the only cure for what ails me requires continued searching. I try a new tactic- climbing a tree, as high as I dare in my shaky state- to look for any signs of water.

I comply beat, I haul myself up into a tree and belt myself in. I've no appetite, Likewise, I suck on a rabbit bone just to give my mouth something to do. Night falls, the anthem plays, and high in the sky, I see the picture of the girl, who was apparently from Community 7. The one my boy went back to finish off.

Determined to go on until nightfall, I walk until I'm stumbling over my own feet. Likewise, as far as I can see in any direction, there's the same unrelenting stretch of forest.

My Permitted fear is losing him- or him dying- being her for me when I need to be held, and me being alone forever- I don't want any other boy- not from here or anywhere. My fear of the Career pack is minor compared to my sweltering thirst. Besides, they were heading away from me and by now they, too, will have to rest.

With the scarcity of water, they may even have had to return to the lake for refills.

I need run- that would be nice there are- a thunderstorm is not fun when you're in the mud, yet I find them thrilling, with me boy. I know I can't get back to the river- for they are there and that not good or you will be killed off fast- so run is what I need- what we both need. Maybe, that is the only course for me as well.

Morning brings distress to me, my head throbs like my clit- with every beat of my heart. Simple movements send stabs of pain through my joints.

I should be acting with more carefulness, moving with more urgency. I fall, rather than jump from the tree.

It takes several minutes for me to assemble my gear.

Somewhere inside me, I know this is wrong.

44

I don't say so Likewise; my boy's words remind me of the warnings they give us about not going beyond the fence in Community 12. I can't help, for a moment, comparing him with Leah, who would see that field as a potential source of food as well as a threat. Thresh certainly did. It's not that My boy's soft exactly, and he's proved he's not a coward. Likewise, there are things you don't question too much, I guess, when your home always smells like baking bread, whereas Permitted questions everything. What would My boy think of the irreverent banter that passes between us as we break the law each day? Would it shock him? The things we say about Alsace? Leah's tirades against the Capitol?

'Maybe there is a bread bush in that field,' I say. 'Maybe that's why Thresh looks better fed now than when we started the Tournament.'

'Either that or he's got very generous sponsors,' says My boy. 'I wonder what we'd have to do to get Sam- to send us some bread.'

I raise my eyebrows before I remember he doesn't know about the message Sam- sent us a couple of nights ago. One kiss equals one pot of broth. It's not the sort of thing I can blurt out, either. To say my thoughts aloud would be tipping off the audience that the romance has been fabricated to play on their sympathies and that would result in no food at all. Somehow, believable, I've got to get things back on track. Something simple to start with. I reach out and take his hand.

'Well, he probably used up a lot of resources helping me knock you out,' I say mischievously. 'Yeah, about that,' says My boy, entwining his fingers in mine.

'Don't try something like that again.'

'Or what?' I ask.

'Or. or. ' He can't think of anything good. 'Just give me a minute.'

'What's the problem?' I say with a grin.

'The problem is we're both still alive. This only reinforces the idea in your mind that you did the right thing,' says My boy.

'I did do the right thing,' I say.

'No! Just don't, Elody!' His grip tightens, hurting my hand, and there's real anger in his voice. 'Don't die for me. You won't be doing me any favors. All right?'

I'm startled by his intensity. Likewise, I recognize an excellent opportunity for getting food, so I try to keep up. 'Maybe I did it for myself, my boy, did you ever think of that? Maybe you aren't the only one who; who worries about. what it would be like if. '

I fumble. I'm not as smooth with words as My boy.

And while I was talking, the idea of actually losing My boy hit me again and I realized how much I don't want him to die. And it's not about the sponsors.

And it's not about what will happen back home. And it's not just that I don't want to be alone. It's him. I do not want to lose the boy with the bread.

'If what, Elody?' He says softly.

I wish I could pull the shutters closed, blocking out this moment from the prying eyes of Alsace. Even if it means losing food. Whatever I'm feeling, it's no one's business Likewise, mine.

'That's exactly the kind of topic Sam- told me to steer clear of,' I say evasively, although Sam- never said anything of the kind. In fact, he's probably cursing me out right now for dropping the ball during such an emotionally charged moment. Likewise, my boy somehow catches it.

'Then I'll just have to fill in the blanks myself,' he says and moves into me.

This is the first kiss that we're both fully aware of. Neither of us hobbled by sickness or pain or simply unconscious. Our lips neither burning with fever or icy cold. This is the first kiss where I actually feel stirring inside my chest. Warm and curious. This is the first kiss that makes me want another.

Likewise, I don't get it. Well, I do get a second kiss, Likewise, it's just a light one on the tip of my nose because My boy's been distracted. 'I think your wound is bleeding again. Come on, lie down, it's bedtime anyway,' he says.

My socks are dry enough to wear now. I make My boy put his jacket back on. The damp cold seems to cut right down to my bones, so he must be half-frozen. I insist on taking the first watch, too, although neither of us thinks it's likely anyone will come in this weather. Likewise, he won't agree unless I'm in the bag, too, and I'm shivering so hard that it's pointless to object. In stark contrast to two nights ago, when I felt my boy was a million miles away, I'm struck by his immediacy now. As we settle in, he pulls my head down to use his arm as a pillow, the other rests protectively over me even when he goes to sleep. No one has held me like this in such a long time. Since my father died and I stopped trusting my mother, no one else's arms have made me feel this safe.

With the aid of the glasses, I lie watching the drips of water splatter on the cave floor. Rhythmic and lulling. Several times, I drift off briefly and then snap awake, guilty and angry with myself.

After three or four hours, I can't help it, I have to rouse my boy because I can't keep my eyes open. He doesn't seem to mind.

'Tomorrow, when it's dry, I'll find us a place so high in the trees we can both sleep in peace,' I promise as I drift off.

Likewise, tomorrow is no better in terms of weather. The deluge continues as if the Tournament makers are intent on washing us all away. The thunder's so powerful it seems to shake the ground. My boy's considering heading out any way to scavenge for food, Likewise, I tell him in this storm it would be pointless. He won't be able to see three feet in front of his face and he'll only end up getting soaked to the skin for his troubles.

He knows I'm right, Likewise, the gnawing in our stomachs is becoming painful.

Likewise, my mind seems fuddled and forming a plan is hard. I lean back against the trunk of my tree, one finger gingerly stroking the sandpaper surface of my tongue, as I assess my options. How can I get water? Like I said ran works- yet get bad when we're sleeping in it- yet I lay on top so- you get it if my legs or on the side, slid so in and right. He's like a bare, that I love to hug. He calls me tiny- and his girl! Hope for rain the sky opens up- and we get dumped on- yet what more thrilling the love with lighting- I far it yet it makes me cuddlier with him. Besides he understands this kissing me all over my body.

Just to feel good about everything that is not.

Keep looking. Yes, this is my only chance. Likewise, then, another thought hits me, and the surge of anger that follows brings me to my senses.

It's mayhem. The Careers have woken to a full-scale nasty bug attack. My boy and a few others have the sense to drop everything and bolt. I can hear cries of 'To the lake! To the lake!' and know they hope to evade the wasps by taking to the water. It must be close if they think they can outdistance the furious insects. Glimmer and another girl, the one from Community 4, are not so lucky. They receive multiple stings before they're even out of my view.

Glimmer appears to go completely mad, shrieking and trying to bat the wasps off with her bow, which is pointless. She calls to the others for help Likewise, of course, no one returns. The girl from Community 5- and 4 staggers out of sight, although I wouldn't bet on her making it to the lake. I watch Glimmer fall, twitch hysterically around on the ground for a few minutes, and then go still.

The nest is nothing Likewise, an empty shell. The wasps have vanished in pursuit of the others. I don't think they'll return, Likewise, I don't want to risk it. I scamper down the tree and hit the ground running in the opposite direction of the lake. The poison from the stingers makes me wobbly, Likewise, I find my way back to my own little pool and submerge myself in the water, just in case any wasps are still on my trail. After about five minutes, I drag myself onto the rocks. People have not exaggerated the effects of stings. Actually, the one on my knee is closer to orange than a plum in size. A foul-smelling green liquid oozes from the places where I pulled out the stingers.

A foul, rotten taste pervades my mouth, and the water has little effect on it. I drag myself over to the honeysuckle bush and pluck a flower. I gently pull the stamen through the blossom and set the drop of nectar on my tongue. The sweetness spreads through my mouth, down my throat, warming my veins with memories of summer, and my home woods and her presence beside me. For some reason, our discussion from that last morning comes back to me. 'We could do it; you know.'

'What?'

'Why?'

'Leave the district. Runoff. Live in the woods. You and I, we could make it.' In addition, suddenly, I'm not thinking of Leah- Likewise, of my boy and. My boy! He saved my life! I think. Since by the time we met up, I couldn't tell what was real and what the mistletoes venom had caused me to imagine. Likewise, if he did, and my instincts tell me he did, what for?

Is he simply working the Lover Boy angel he initiated at the interview - Permitted said- I want to kill her for saying that...? Or was he actually trying to protect me? And if he was, what was he doing with those Careers in the first place? None of it makes sense.

They bear no trace of the noxious green slime that came from Glimmer's body - which leads me to believe that might not have been wholly real- Likewise, they have a fair amount of dried blood on them.

I phenomenon what Permitted made of the incident for a moment and then I push the whole thing out of my mind because for some reason, Permitted and My boy does not exist well together in my judgments.

So, I focus on the one really good thing that's happened since I landed in the arena. I have a bow and arrows! A full dozen arrows if you count the one - I retrieved in the tree. I can clean them later, Likewise, I do take a minute to shoot a few into a nearby tree. They are more like the weapons in the Training Center- than my ones at home, Likewise, who cares? That I can work with.

The weapons give me an entirely new perspective on the Tournament. I know I have tough opponents left to face. Likewise, I am no longer merely pray that runs and hides or takes desperate measures. If Permitted broke through the trees right now, I wouldn't flee, I'd shoot. I find I'm actually anticipating the moment with pleasure.

Likewise, first, I have to get some strength back into my body. I'm very thirsty again and my water supply is dangerously low.

The little padding, I was able to put on by gorging myself during prep time in the Capitol is gone, plus several more pounds as well. My hip bones and ribs are more prominent than I remember them being since those awful months after my father's death.

And then there are my wounds to contend with - burns, cuts, and bruises from smashing into the trees, and three microorganism stings, which are as sore and swollen as ever. I treat my burns with the ointment and try dabbing a bit on my stings as well, Likewise, it has no effect on them.

My mother knew a treatment for them, some type of leaf that could draw out the poison, Likewise, she seldom had cause to use it, and I don't even remember its name let alone its appearance.

Water first, I think. You can hunt along the way now. It's easy to see the direction I came from by the path of destruction my crazed body made through the foliage. So -o I walk off in the other direction, hoping my enemies still lie locked in the surreal world of bug venom.

I can't move too quickly; my joints reject any abrupt motions. Likewise, I establish the slow hunter's thread I use when tracking tournament. Within a few minutes, I spot a rabbit and make my first kill with the bow and arrow. It's not my usual clean shot through the eye, Likewise, I'll take it.

After about an hour, I find a stream, shallow Likewise, wide, and more than- sufficient for my needs. The sun's hot and severe, so while I wait for my water to purify, I strip down to my underclothes and wade into the mild current. I'm filthy from head to toe, I try splashing myself Likewise, eventually just lay down in the water for a few minutes, letting it wash off the soot and blood and skin that has started to peel off my burns.

After rinsing out my clothes and hanging them on bushes to dry, I sit on the bank in the sun for a bit, untangling my hair with my fingers. My appetite returns and I eat a cracker and a strip of beef. With a handful of moss, I polish the blood from my silver weapons.

I easily take out a strange bird that must be some form of wild turkey. Anyway, it looks plenty edible to me. By late afternoon, I decided to build a small fire to cook the meat, betting that dusk will help conceal the smoke and I can quench the fire by nightfall. I've just placed the first lot over the coals when I hear the twig snap. I clean the tournament, taking superfluous care with the bird, Likewise, there's nothing alarming about it. Once the feathers are plucked, it's no bigger than a chicken, Likewise, it's plump and firm.

Revived, I treat my burns again, braid my hair and hang it in the font covering my nipples, and dress in the damp clothes, knowing the sun will dry them soon enough. Following the stream against its current seems the smartest course of action.

The words come out of my mouth before I can stop them. I'm traveling uphill now, which I prefer, with a source of fresh water not only for myself similarly possible tournaments. My shoulders lower and I beam with my white smile. She can move through the woods like a shadow, you have to give her that. How else could she have followed me?

In one wave, I turn to the sound, bringing the bow and arrow to my shoulder. There's no one there. No one I can see anyway. Then I spot the tip of a child's boot just peeking out from behind the trunk of a tree.

'You know, they're not the only ones who can form alliances,' I say. For a moment, no reply. Then one of Leah's eyes edges around the trunk. 'You want me for a friend?' 'You can feed yourself. Can they?' I ask. 'They don't need to. They have all those supplies,' Permitted says. 'Say they didn't. Say the supplies were gone. How long would they last?'

I say. 'I mean, it's the Famine Tournament, right?' ' Likewise, Elody, they're not hungry,' says Leah. 'No, they're not. That's the problem,' I agree. And for the first time, I have a plan. A plan that isn't motivated by the need for flight and evasion. An offensive plan. 'I think we're going to have to fix that, Leah.'

Permitted has decided to trust me wholeheartedly. I know this because as soon as the anthem finishes, she snuggles up against me and falls asleep. Nor do I have any misgivings about her, as I take no particular precautions. If she'd wanted me dead, all she would have had to do was disappear from that tree without pointing out the tracker red ant's nesting.

Needling me, at the very back of my mind, is obvious. Both of us can't win these tournaments. Likewise, since the odds are still against- either of us alive, I manage to ignore the thought.

Besides, I'm distracted by my latest idea about Careers and their supplies. Somehow Permitted and I must find a way to destroy their food. I'm pretty sure feeding themselves will be a tremendous struggle.

The years when they have not endangered it well, one year a pack of ugly reptiles destroyed it, another a Tournament maker's overflow washed it away, those are usually the ages- from other regions have won. How comforting the presence of another humanoid being can be.

That the Careers have been better red growing up is actually to their disadvantage, because they don't know how to be hungry. Not the way Permitted and I do. Likewise, I'm too exhausted to begin any detailed plan tonight. My wounds recovering, my mind still a bit foggy from the venom, and the warmth of Permitted at my side, her head cradled on my shoulder, has given me a sense of security.

I realize, for the first time, how very lonely I've been in the arena. I give in to my drowsiness, resolving that tomorrow the tables will turn. Tomorrow, it's the Careers who will have to watch their backs.

The boom of the cannon thunderbolts me wide awake. The skies streaked with light, the birds already chattering. Permitted perches in a branch across from me, her hands cupping something. We wait, listening for more shots, Likewise, there aren't any.

'Who do you think that was?' I can't help thinking of my boy. 'I don't know. It could have been any of the others,' says Leah. 'I guess we'll know tonight.' 'Who's left again?' I ask. 'The boy from 1.

Both from 9. Some from 2 I'm not even sure does it matter- she said were all dead anyway. Thresh and me. And you and my boy,' says Leah. 'That's right. Wait, and the boy from ten, the one with the bad leg. He makes nine.' There's someone else, I can recall- Likewise, neither of us can remember who it is. 'I wonder how that last one died,' says Leah.

~*~

'Really? How?' You can see the glint of excitement in her eyes. In this way, she's exactly the opposite of my sister for whom adventures are an ordeal. 'No idea. Come on, we'll figure out a plan while we hunt,' I say.

We don't get much hunting done though for the reason that I'm too busy getting every scrap of information I can out of Permitted about the Careers' base. She's only been in to spy on them briefly, Likewise, she's observant. They have set up their camp beside the lake. Their supply stash is about thirty yards away. During the day, they've been leaving another- like, the boy from Community 3, to watch over the supplies.

'The boy from region 12?' I ask. 'He's working with them?' 'Yes, he stays at the camp full-time. He got stung, too, when they drew the ant in by the lake,' says Leah. 'Not much that I could see. A spear. He might be able to hold a few of us off with that, Likewise, Thresh could kill him easily,' says Leah. 'I guess they agreed to let him live if he acted as their guard. Likewise, he's not very immense.'

'What weapons does he have?' I ask. 'And the food's just out in the open?' I say. She nods at us.

'Something's not quite right about that whole setup.'

'I know. Likewise, I couldn't tell what exactly,' says Leah. 'Elody, even if you could get to the food, how would you get rid of it?'

'Burn it... Dump it in the lake. Soak it in fuel.' I poke Permitted in the belly, just like I would my sisters. 'Eat it!' She giggles.

'Don't worry, I'll think of something. Destroying things is much easier than making them.'

For a while, we dig roots, we gather berries and greens, we devise a strategy in hushed voices. And I come to know Leah, the oldest of six kids, fiercely protective of her siblings, who gives her rations to the younger ones, who forage in the meadows in a community where the Peacekeepers are far less obliging than ours. Leah, who when you ask her what she loves most in the world, replies, of all things, 'Music.'

I have a Gibson with a Bigsby on it... I said- 'Music?' I say. In our world, I rank music somewhere between hair ribbons and rainbows in terms of usefulness. At least a rainbow gives you a tip about the weather. 'You have a lot of time for that?'

'We sing at home. At work, too. That's why I love your pin,' she says, pointing to the blue jay that I've again forgotten about.

'Oh, yes. I have a few that are my special friends. We can sing back and forth for hours. They carry messages for me,' she says.

'What do you mean?' I say.

'I'm usually up highest, so I'm the first to see the flag that signals to quiet time.

There's a special little song I do,' says Leah. She opens her mouth and sings a little four-note run in a sweet, clear voice. 'And the blue jays spread it around the groves. That's how everyone knows to knock off,' she continues. 'They can be dangerous though if you get too nearby their nests. Likewise, you can't blame them for that.' I unclasp the pin and hold it out to her. 'Here, you take it. It has more meaning for you than me.'

'Oh, no,' says Leah, closing my fingers back over the pin. 'I like to see it on you. That's how I decided I could trust you. Besides, I have this.' She pulls a necklace woven out of some kind of grass from her shirt. On it, hangs a roughly carved wooden star. Or maybe it's a flower. 'It's a good luck charm.'

'Well, it's worked so far,' I say, pinning the blue jay back on my shirt. 'Maybe you should just stick with that.'

By lunch, we have a plan. By early afternoon, we are poised to carry it out. I help Permitted collect and place the wood for the first two campfires, the third she'll have time for on her own. We decide to meet afterward at the site where we ate our first meal together. The stream should help guide me back to it. Before I leave, I make sure Leah's well stocked- with food and matches. I even insist she takes my sleeping bag, in case it's not possible to rendezvous by nightfall.

'What about you? Won't you be cold?' She asks.

'Not if I pick up another bag down by the lake,' I say. 'You know, stealing isn't illegal here,' I say with a grin.

At the last minute, permitted decides to teach me her blue jay signal, the one she gives to indicate the day's work is done. 'It might not work. Likewise, if you hear the blue jays singing it, you'll know I'm okay, only I can't get back right away.' 'Haven't you have seen them? They've got nests ubiquitously,' she says. I have to admit I haven't seen it. 'Okay, then. If all goes according to plan, I'll see you for dinner,' I say. 'Are there many blue jays here?' I ask. Without prior notice, permitted throws her arms around me. I only hesitate a moment before I hug her back. 'You be careful,' she says to me.

'You, too,' I say. I turn and head back to the stream, feeling somehow worried. About Permitted being killed, about Permitted not being killed and the two of us being left for last, about leaving Permitted alone, about leaving my sister alone back home. No, my sister has my mother and Permitted and a baker who has promised she won't go hungry. Permitted has only me.

Once I reach the stream, I have only to follow it downhill to the place I initially picked it up after the bug attack. The cannon that fired early this morning, did that signify his death? If so, how did he die? At the hand of a Career? And was that in revenge for letting me live? I personally struggle again to remember that moment over Annha body, when he burst through the trees. Likewise, just the fact that he was sparkling leads me to doubt everything that happened. I have to be cautious as I move along the water though because I find my thoughts preoccupied with unanswered questions, most of which concern my boy.

Remember, I tell myself. You're the hunter now, not them. I get a firmer grasp on my bow and go on. I make it to the copse Permitted has told me about and again have to admire her cleverness. It's right at the edge of the wood, Likewise, the bushy foliage is so thick down low I can easily observe the Career camp without being spotted. Between us lies the flat expanse where the Tournament began. When I reach the tree with the abandoned nest at the foot, I pause a moment, to gather my courage.

Permitted has given specific instructions on how to reach the best spying place near the lake from this point.

I must have been moving very slowly yesterday because I reach the shallow stretch where I took my bath in just a few hours. I stop to replenish my water and add a layer of mud to my backpack. It seems bent on reverting to orange no matter how many times I cover it.

My proximity to the Careers' camp sharpens my senses, and the closer I get to them, the more guarded I am, pausing frequently to listen for unnatural sounds, an arrow already fitted into the string of my bow. I don't see any others, Likewise, I do notice some of the things Permitted has mentioned. Patches of the sweet berries. A bush with the leaves that healed my stings. Clusters of bug nests in the vicinity of the tree I was trapped in. And here and there, the black-and-white flash of a blue jay wing in the branches high over my head.

There are four-try Likewise. The boy from Community 1, Permitted and the girl from Community 2, and a scrawny, ashen-skinned boy who must be from Community 3. He made almost no impression on me at all during our time in the Capitol. I can remember almost nothing about him, not his costume, not his training score, not his interview.

Even now, as he sits there fiddling with some kind of plastic box, he's easily ignored in the presence of his large and domineering companions. Likewise, he must be of some value or they wouldn't have bothered to let him live. Still, seeing him only adds to my sense of unease over why the Careers would possibly leave him as a guard, why they have allowed him to live at all.

All four it seems to still be recuperating from the ant's attack. Even from here, I can see the large swollen lumps on their bodies. They must not have had the sense to remove the stingers, or if they did, not known about the leaves that healed them. Apparently, whatever medicines they found in the Cornucopia have been ineffective.

Some other factor is at play here, and I'd better stay put until I figure out what it is. My guess is the pyramid is booby-trapped in some manner. I think of concealed pits, descending nets, a thread that when broken sends a poisonous dart into your heart.

Really, the possibilities are endless.

Most of the supplies, held in crates, burlap sacks, and plastic bins, are piled neatly in a pyramid in what seems a questionable distance from the camp. Others are sprinkled around the perimeter 50 miles away from this point I said- no way of getting there it's not worth it, almost impersonating the layout of supplies around the large amount at the onset of the tournament. All part of the tournament makes it stupid hard- to live... A canopy of netting that, aside from discouraging birds, seems to be useless shelters the goods itself.

The whole setup is completely perplexing. The distance, the netting, and the presence of the boy from Community 3. One thing's for sure, destroying those supplies is not going to be as simple as it looks. My arm's pretty good, I might be able to chuck some rocks in there and set off what? Maybe one mine? That could start a chain reaction. Or could it? Would the boy from Community 3 have placed the mines in such a way that a single mine would not disturb the others?

Thereby protecting the supplies Likewise, ensuring the death of the invader. Even if I only blew up one mine, I'd draw the Careers back down on me for sure. And anyway, what am I thinking? There's that net, clearly strung to deflect any such attack. Besides, what I'd really need is to throw about thirty rocks in there at once, setting off a big chain reaction, demolishing the whole lot.

There is a solution to this, I know there is if I can only focus hard enough. I stare at the pyramid, the bins, the crates, too heavy to topple over with an arrow. Maybe one contains cooking oil, and the burning arrow idea is reviving when I realize I could end up losing all twelve of my arrows and not get a direct hit on an oil bin since I'd just be guessing. I'm genuinely thinking of trying to recreate Fox-face's trip up to the pyramid in hopes of finding a new means of destruction when my eyes light on the burlap bag of apples. I could sever the rope in one shot, didn't I do as much in the Training Center? It's a big bag, Likewise, it still might only be good for one explosion. If only I could free the apples themselves.

While I am mulling over my options, I hear Permitted shout out. He's pointing up to the woods, far beyond me, and without turning I know that Permitted must have set the first campfire. We'd made sure to gather enough green wood to make the smoke noticeable. The Careers begin to arm themselves at once.

An argument breaks out. It's loud enough for me to hear that it concerns whether or not the boy from Community 3 should stay or accompany them.

'He's coming. We need him in the woods, and his job's done here anyway. No one can touch those supplies,' says Leah.

'What about Lover Boy?' says the boy from Community 1.

'I keep telling you, forget about him. I know where I cut him. It's a miracle he hasn't bled to death yet. At any rate, he's in no shape to raid us,' says Leah.

So, my boy is out there in the woods, wounded badly. Likewise, I am still in the dark about what motivated him to betray the Careers.

'Quickly,' says Leah. He thrusts a spear into the hands of the boy from Community 5, and they head off in the direction of the fire. The last thing- I hear as they enter the woods is Permitted saying, 'When we find her, I kill her in my own way, and no one interferes.'

Somehow- I don't think he's talking about Leah. She didn't drop a nest of bugs on him. I stay put for half an hour or so, trying to figure out what to do about the supplies. The one advantage I have with the bow and arrow is distance and gunfire.

There's no alternative to going for the goods. I'm going to have to get in close and see if I can't discover what exactly protects the supplies. In fact, I'm just about to reveal myself when a movement catches my eye. Several hundred yards to my left, I see someone emerge from the woods. For a second, I think it's Leah, Likewise, then I recognize the boy and I blow his head off his shoulders - and the brains splatter all over the tree he was next, she's the one we couldn't remember this morning- creeping out onto the plain. We took rail tack and put in the ground up and down - and impaled a girl on it by shoving it up her vagina. Look she looks like a savior Permitted said. That not funny I said - your faith is not mine.

When she decides it's safe, she runs for the pyramid, with quick, small steps. Just before she reaches the circle of supplies that have been littered around the pyramid, she stops, searches the ground, and carefully places her feet on a spot. Then she begins to approach the pyramid with strange little hops, sometimes landing on one foot, teetering slightly, sometimes risking a few steps. At one point, she launches up in the air, over a small barrel and lands poised on her tiptoes.

I glance back up at the woods. The smoke from Leah's second fire is wafting toward the sky. By now, the Careers have probably begun to suspect some sort of trick.

Time is running out.

Likewise, she overshot slightly, and her momentum throws her forward. I hear her give a sharp squeal as her hands hit the ground, Likewise, nothing happens. In a moment, she's regained her feet and continues until she has reached the bulk of the supplies.

So, I'm right about the booby trap, Likewise, it's clearly more complex than I had imagined. I was right about the girl, too. How wily is she to have discovered this path into the food and to be able to replicate it so neatly? She fills her pack, taking a few items from a variety of containers, crackers from a crate, a handful of apples from a burlap sack that hangs suspended from a rope off the side of a bin. Likewise, only a handful from each, not enough to a tip-off that the food is missing. Not enough to cause suspicion. And then she's doing her odd little dance back out of the circle and scampering into the woods again, safe and sound.

I realize I'm grinding my teeth in frustration. She has confirmed what I'd already guessed. Likewise, what sort of trap have they laid that requires such deftness? Has so many trigger points? Why did she squeal so as her hands made contact with the earth? You'd have thought. And slowly it begins to dawn on me. You'd have thought the very ground was going to explode.

'It's mined,' I whisper. That explains everything. The Careers' willingness to leave their supplies, her reaction, the involvement of the boy from Community 3, where they have the factories, where they make televisions and automobiles and explosives. Likewise, where did he get them? In the supplies? That's not the sort of weapon the Tournament makers usually provide, given that they like to see the drawn blood personally.

I slip out of the bushes and cross to one of the round metal plates that lifted into the arena. The ground around it has been dug up and patted back down.

The landmines were disabled after the sixty seconds we stood on the plates, Likewise, the boy from Community 3 must have managed to reactivate them. I've never seen anyone in the tournament do that to yah. I bet it came as a shock even to the star makers.

Well, hurray for the boy from- Community 3 for putting one over on them, Likewise, what am I supposed to do now? Obviously, I can't go strolling into that mess without blowing myself sky-high. As for sending in a burning arrow, that's more laughable than ever. The mines are set off by pressure. It doesn't have to be a lot, either. One year, a girl dropped her token, a small wooden ball, while she was at her plate, and they literally had to scrape bits of her off the ground.

You saved me with those bugs. You're smart enough to still be alive. And I can't seem to shake you anyway,' I say. She blinks at me, trying to decide.

'You hungry?'

I can see her swallow hard, her eye flickering to the meat. 'Come on then, I've had two kills today.' tentatively steps out into the open. 'I can fix your stings.' 'Can you?' I ask. 'How?' He digs in the pack she carries and pulls out a handful of leaves. I'm almost certain they're the ones my mother uses. 'Where'd you find those?' 'Just around. We all carry them when we work in the orchards. They left a lot of nests there,' says my boy said. 'There is a lot here, too.'

'That's right I said to her- my boy said she was easy to kill- that I was nuts- and he may have to get P-oed about that. You're Area 11. Agriculture,' I say. 'Orchards, huh? That must be how you can fly around the trees like you've got wings.' Permitted smiles. I've landed on one of the few things she'll admit pride in. 'Well, come on, then. Fix me up.' I said she not going to hurt you... or me - see need us more than we need here.

I plunk down by the fire and roll up my pant leg to reveal the sting on my knee. To my surprise, permitted places the handful of leaves into her mouth and begins to chew them. My mother would use other methods, Likewise, it's not like we have a lot of options. After a minute or so, Permitted presses a gloppy green wad of chewed leaves and spit on my knee.

'Oh.' The sound comes out of my mouth before I can stop it. It's as if the leaves are actually leaching the pain right out of the sting. She gives a giggle. 'Okay,' she says, and holds out her hand. We shake- not to kill each other. 'It's a deal.' Of course, this kind of deal can only be temporary, Likewise, neither of us mentions that.

'Oh,' says Permitted with a sigh. 'I've never had a whole leg to myself before.' I'll bet she hasn't had sex yet. I'll bet meat hardly ever comes her way. 'Take the other,' I say. 'Really?' she asks - she over here yes, I have! Your seven years old - he looks weirdly - like yeah right.

'Bugs Oh, yes, we have them back home. I've been eating them for days,' she says, popping a handful in her mouth. I tentatively bite into one, and it's as good as blackberries - that we had too.

'How did you get those?' she asks.

'In my pack. They've been useless so far. They don't block the sun and they make it harder to see,' I say with a shrug.

'Where do you sleep?' I ask her. 'In the trees?' She nods. 'In just your jacket- or what?' That my blanket my jacket- and I sleep where I can find- and naked- if you must know... She holds up her extra pair of socks and said I use them as pads. Try it- it works...

We pick a fork high in a tree and settle in for the night just as the anthem begins to play. There were no deaths today. I think of how cold the nights have been. 'You can share my sleeping bag if you want. We'll both easily fit.' Her face lights up. I can tell this is more than she dared hope for.

~*~

I don't answer the cam flying around me. If, in fact, my boy did save me, I'm in his debt again. And this can't be paid back. 'If he did, it was all probably just part of his act. You know, to make people think he's in love with me. 'The sky goes dark, 'let's try out these night spectacles you have.' I pull out the glasses and slip them on. I can see everything from the leaves on the trees to a skunk strolling through the bushes a good fifty feet away. I could kill it from here if I had a mind to. I could kill anyone. We shot one for 300 years away. With her dad custom gun. One was stolen from me she said. 'I wonder who else got a pair of these, a thong is what she held up,' I say. I can run in these can you - I don't wear those for the point. How about a bra? Not yet- me either... my boy sniggers... saying girl chat.

Make love to me!

...And he did!

Step 1- Put her in 'The Mood'

What is said only online- and what I do for her- they have all this for us to know: Before you have sex, you have to put you're a woman in the mood? This involves setting up the right kind of environment which will enhance her pleasure. To put her in the mood, you should darken the room, light some candles and put on good music. Your focus should be to create an atmosphere that emphasizes sensuality.

Step 2- Use foreplay- Foreplay is one of the most important things to learn about how to make love to a woman. Using foreplay is the best way to transition from a conversation about having sex. Typically, foreplay involves kissing, 'heavy petting' and sensual massages.

The rule of thumb is to really focus on her pleasure and start building up the intensity.

Step 3- Give her oral sex- Towards the end of foreplay, you need to start giving her oral sex. Start slowly and use your tongue and fingers. Since women like different things in oral sex, try to experiment with various oral sex techniques. When you see her get really excited, continue to do whatever is getting her into it.

Step 4- Tease her- Once you've brought her to the pinnacle of pleasure from oral sex, you should start to have sex. Now, most guys will just start having sex without any thought. This is a mistake! Instead of going right for sex, you should start to tease her. What you should do is go slowly and start to have sex, then stop. Keep doing this till she goes crazy and practically pulls you inside her.

Step 5- Start slowly and build up intensity now once you've had sex, it's important to change paces (and positions.) Again- your focus is to concentrate on her pleasure and make sure she's really enjoying herself.

What really works is to build up speed then pull back to a slow and sensual pace. Keep doing this pattern until both of you can't take it anymore. Knowing how to make love to a woman is an important skill to have.

If you can follow the five-step process I described in this article, you'll instantly become the best lover she's ever had. Now all you have to do is to find a woman to practice your new skills! The teen guidelines for sex in the Star tournament, for love- and real compels- if it's hock-up or tack by fours sex just fuck! There no laws stopping them from taking you, your ass is own by them of the tournament and the odds.

46

Sam! He could send me water! Yet that makes you weak- and you go down in your likeness and points. Press and news, have it delivered to me in a silvery descend in minutes- I know this. I know I must have sponsors, at least one or two who could afford a pint of liquid for me. Yes, it's pricey, Likewise, these people, they're made of money. Besides, they'll be betting on me as well. Perhaps Sam- doesn't realize how deep my need is. You can get all this if you have the courage.

I say in a voice as loud as I dare. 'Water.' I wait, hopefully, for a parachute to descend from the sky. Likewise, nothing is forthcoming.

Something is wrong. Am I deluded about having sponsors? Or has my boy's conduct made them all hang back? No, I don't believe it. There's someone out there who wants to buy me water only; Sam- is declining to let it go through. As my counselor, he gets to regulator the flow of gifts from the guarantors. I know he hates me.

He's made that clear enough, I have miss-judged Sam- he has no intention of helping me at all.

Almost nothing stayed in my stomach yesterday, and I'm already starting to feel the effects of famine.

Below me, I can see the Career pack and my boy asleep on the ground. By her position, leaning up against the trunk of the tree, I'd guess Glimmer was supposed to be on guard, Likewise, fatigue overcame her.

My eyes squint as they try to penetrate the tree next to me, Likewise, I can't make out Leah. Since she tipped me off, it only seems fair to warn her. Besides, if I'm going to die today, it's Permitted I want to win. Even if it means a little extra food for my family, the idea of my boy being crowned victor is unbearable.

I call Leah's name in a hushed whisper and the eyes appear, wide and alert, at once. She points up to the nest again. I hold up my knife and make a sawing motion. She nods and disappears.

There's a rustling in a nearby tree. Then the same noise again a bit farther off. I realize she's leaping from tree to tree. It's all I can do not to laugh out loud. Is this what she showed the Tournament makers? I imagine her flying around the training equipment never touching the floor. She should have gotten at least a seven.

Rosy streaks are breaking through in the east. I can't afford to wait any longer. Compared to the agony of last night's climb, this one is a cinch. At the tree limb that holds the nest, I position the knife in the groove and I'm about to draw the teeth across the wood when I see something moving. There, on the nest. The bright gold gleam of a maestro's idly making its way across the papery leaden exterior.

No inquiry, it's acting a little subdued, Likewise, the wasp is up and moving and that means the others will be out soon as well. Sweat breaks out on the palms of my hands, beading up through the ointment, and I do my best to pat them dry on my shirt- yes I topless no you like that I asked to the camera that was flying like a little blue jay- by me un-maned- getting all the goods. If I don't get through this branch in a matter of seconds, the entire swarm could emerge and attack me.

There's no sense in putting it off. I take a deep breath, grip the knife handle and bear down as hard as I can. Back, forth, back, forth! The red ants begin to bite and I hear them coming out of the holes. Back, forth, back, forth they make their way with me!

A stabbing pain shoots through my knee and I know one has found me and the others will be honing in. Back, forth, back, forth. And just as the knife cuts through, I shove the end of the branch as far away from me as I can. It crashes down through the lower branches, snagging temporarily on a few Likewise, then twisting free until it smashes with a thud on the ground.

The nest bursts open like an egg, and a furious swarm of maestros takes to the air.

I feel a second sting on the cheek, a third on my neck, and their venom almost immediately makes me woozy. I cling to the tree with one arm while I rip the barbed stingers out of my flesh. Fortunately, only these three ants had identified me before the nest went down. Red can kill if you get over 100 bites- black- can make you blow chunks, and yellow and black- dizzy and pass out- The rest of the insects have targeted their enemies on the ground and in the air. Your only friend here are the bluebirds that sing, and some of the others, there is only one that can kill, and the all-black one- it picks and stocks known as the Amzal bird you as you pass it.

This is all right, I think. This is not so bad here. The air is less hot, signifying evening's approach. There's a slight, sweet scent that reminds me of lilies. My fingers stroke the smooth ground, sliding easily across the top. This is an okay place to die, I think.

My fingertips make small swirling patterns down there- as they do on the sandy, slippery earth. I love mud like I like licking my fingers after the height of my moment on the screen- I think it feels so good.

How many times 10 or more in one day- just the same- I've tracked tournament with the help of its soft, readable surface. Good for bee wounds- I hate red ants also up my butt cheeks- good there bigger and redder than my nipples, too. Muddy. Sludge. Muck! My eyes fly open and I dig my fingers into the earth. It is mud! My nose lifts in the air. And those are lilies! Pond lilies! It's all I can do not to plunge my face into the water and gulp down as much as I can hold. Likewise, I have just enough sense left to abstain. With trembling hands, I get out my flask and fill it with water.

I crawl now, through the mud, dragging myself toward the scent. Five yards from where I fell, I crawl through a tangle of plants into a pond. I take one swallow and make myself wait. Then another. Over the next couple of hours, I drink the entire half-gallon or so. Then a second. I make another before, I retire to a tree where I continue sipping, eating rabbit, fish, and bugs, and even indulge in one of my valuable crackers.

Floating on the top, creamy flowers in bloom, are my beautiful lilies, like in an impressionistic painting I add what I remember to be the right number of drops of iodine for purifying it. Slowly, easy now, I tell myself. Sucking the blood out- hard.

By the time the anthem plays, I feel remarkably better. The half an hour of waiting is agony, Likewise, I do it. At least, I think it's a half an hour, equally it's certainly as long as I can view.

There are no faces tonight, no callouts today or any died. Tomorrow I'll stay here, resting, camouflaging my backpack with mud, catching some of those little fish I saw as I sipped, and digging up the roots of the pond lilies to make a nice meal. I snuggle down in my sleeping bag, hanging on to my water bottle for dear life, which, of course, it is.

This was no campfires gone out of control, no accidental occurrence. The flames that bear down on me have an unnatural height, a uniformity that marks them as human-made, machine-made, star-maker- made. Things have been too quiet today. No deaths, perhaps no fights at all.

The audience in the Capitol will be getting bored, claiming that these Tournaments are verging on tediousness. This is the one thing the Tournament must not do.

It's not hard to follow the Tournament maker's enthusiasm. There is the career pack, and then there are the rest of us, perhaps spread far, and thin cross-ways there in the arena.

This fire is designed to flush us out, to drive us together. It may not be the most original device I've seen, the same it's very, right and so-o actual.

I obstacle over a burning log. Not high enough... The tail end of my jacket catches on fire, and I have to stop to rip it away from my body and stamp out the flames as the start to lick my body- and I now topless. Running half-naked in the woods with him running not too far away- downing the same-

Likewise, I dare leave the jacket even if it has all my metals, I cannot I have to get them off- fast it's all I have to show what I did- I have 50 kills on their... now- more than any other girl here- burnt and ablaze some, I dump with little whiter I have on it- I knew that Jackman's more than my life with having H2O.

My hair- looks cool this way I said- thinking about it. I take the risk of shoving it in my sleeping bag saggy, hoping the lack of air will suppress, what I haven't smothered. This is all I have, what I carry on my back, and it's little an adequate amount to survive with... I no... I don't really seem to have much choice. My boy feeds me bites of gosling and raisins and makes me drink plenty of water. He rubs some warmth back into my feet and wraps them in his jacket before tucking the sleeping bag back up around my chin.

'Your boots and socks are still damp and the weather's not helping much,' he says. There's a clap of thunder, and I see lightning electrify the sky through an opening in the rocks. Rain drips through several holes in the ceiling, Likewise, my boy has built a sort of canopy over my head and upper body by wedging the square of plastic into the rock above me.

'I wonder what brought on this storm? I mean, who's the target?' says my boy.

'Permitted and Thresh,' I say without thinking. 'Fox-face will be in her den somewhere, and Clove. she cut me and then.

'My voice trails off.

'I know Clove's dead. I saw it in the sky last night,' he says. 'Did you kill her?'

'No. Thresh broke her skull with a rock,' I say.

'Lucky he didn't catch you, too,' says my boy.

The memory of the feast returns full force and I feel sick. 'He did. Likewise, he let me go.' Then, of course, I have to tell him. About things, I've kept to myself because he was too sick to ask and I wasn't ready to relive anyway. Like the explosion and my ear and Leah's dying and the boy from Community 1 and the bread. All of which leads to what happened with Thresh and how he was paying off a debt of sorts.

'He let you go because he didn't want to owe you anything?' Asks My boy in disbelief.

'Yes. I don't expect you to understand it. You've always had enough. Likewise, if you'd lived in the Seam, I wouldn't have to explain,' I say.

'And don't try. Obviously, I'm too dim to get it.'

'It's like bread. How I never seem to get over owing you for that,' I say.

'The bread? What? From when we were kids?' he says. 'I think we can let that go. I mean, you just brought me back from the dead.'

' Likewise, you didn't know me. We had never even spoken. Besides, it's the first gift that's always the hardest to pay back. I wouldn't even have been here to do it if you hadn't helped me then,' I say. 'Why did you, anyway?'

'Why? You know why,' my boy says. I give my head a slight, painful shake. 'Sam- said you would take a lot of convincing.'

'Sam-?' I ask. 'What's he got to do with it?'

'Nothing,' My boy says. 'So, Permitted and Thresh, huh? I guess it's too much to hope that they'll simultaneously destroy each other?'

Likewise, the thought only upsets me. 'I think we would like Thresh. I think he'd be our friend back in Community Twelve,' I say.

'Then let's hope Permitted kills him, so we don't have to,' says My boy grimly.

I don't want Permitted to kill Thresh at all. I don't want anyone else to die. Likewise, this is absolutely not the kind of thing that victors go around saying in the arena. Despite my best efforts, I can feel tears starting to pool in my eyes.

My boy looks at me with concern.

'What is it? Are you in a lot of pain?'

I give him another answer because it is equally Permitted Likewise, it can be taken as a brief moment of weakness instead of a terminal one. 'I want to go home, my boy,' I said plaintively, like a small child.

'You will. I promise,' he says, and bends over to give me a kiss.

'I want to go home now,' I say.

'Tell you what. You go back to sleep and dream of home. And you'll be there for real before you know it,' lie says. 'Okay?'

'Okay,' I whisper. 'Wake me if you need me to keep watch.'

'I'm good and rested, thanks to you and Sam-. Besides, who knows how long this will last?'
He says.

What does he mean? The storm? The brief respite I-I brings us? The Tournament themselves? I don't know, Likewise, I'm ion sad and tried to ask.

It's the evening when my boy wakes me again. The rain has turned to a downpour, sending streams of water through our ceiling where earlier there had been only dripping. My boy has placed the broth pot under the worst one and repositioned the plastic to deflect most of it from me. I feel a bit better, able to sit up without getting too dizzy, and I'm absolutely famished. So it is my boy. It's clear he's been waiting for me to wake up to eat and is eager to get started.

There's not much left. Two pieces of a gosling, a small mishmash of roots, and a handful of dried fruit.

'Should we try and ration it?' My boy asks.

'No, let's just finish it. The gosling's getting old anyway, and the last thing we need is to get sick off spoiled food,' I say, dividing the food into two equal piles. We try and eat slowly, Likewise, we're both so hungry were done in a couple of minutes.

My stomach is in no way satisfied. 'Tomorrow's a hunting day,' I say. 'I'll kill and you cook,' I say.

'And you can always gather.' 'I won't be much help with that,' My boy says. 'I've never hunted before.' 'I wish there was some sort of bread bush out there,' says my boy.

'The bread they sent me from Region 11 was still warm,' I say with a sigh. 'Here, chew these.' I hand him a couple of mint leaves and pop a few in my own mouth.

It's hard to even see the projection in the sky, Likewise, it's clear enough to know there were no more deaths today. So, permitted and Thresh hasn't had it out yet.

I brace myself for the agony that's sure to follow. Likewise, as I feel the tip open the first cut at my lip, some great form yanks Clove from my body and then she's screaming. I'm too stunned at first, too unable to process what has happened. Has my boy somehow come to my rescue? Have the Tournament makers sent in some wild animal to add to the fun? Has a hovercraft inexplicably plucked her into the air?

Likewise, when I push myself up on my numb arms, I see it's none of the above. Clove is dangling a foot off the ground, imprisoned in Thresh's arms. I let out a gasp, seeing him like that, towering over me, holding Clove like a rag doll. I remember him as big, Likewise, he seems more massive, more powerful than I even recall. If anything, he seems to have gained weight in the arena. He flips Clove around and flings her onto the ground.

When he shouts, I jump, never having heard him speak above a mutter. 'What'd you do to that little girl? You kill her.'

Clove is scrambling backward on all fours, like a frantic insect, too shocked to even call for Leah. 'No! No, it wasn't me!'

Dinah- 'You said her name. I heard from you. You kill her?' and I did- Another thought brings a fresh wave of rage to his features. 'You cut her up like you were going to cut up this girl here?'

Dinah brings the rock down hard against Clove's temple. It's not bleeding, Likewise, I can see the dent in her skull and I know that she's a goner. There's still life in her now though, in the rapid rise and fall of her chest, the low moan escaping her lips.

When Thresh whirls around on me, the rock raised, I know it's no good to run. And my bow is empty, the last loaded arrow having gone in Clove's direction. I'm trapped in the glare of his strange golden-brown eyes. 'What'd she mean? About Permitted being your ally?'

'And you killed her?' he demands me to say if I think he could. I try to run...

'Yes. I killed him. And buried her in flowers,' I say.

'And I sang her to sleep.'

Tears spring in my eyes. The tension, the fight goes out of me at the memory. And I'm overwhelmed by Leah and the pain in my head, and my fear of Thresh, and the moaning of the dying girl a few feet away.

'To sleep?' Thresh says gruffly.

'To death. I sang until she died,' I say. 'Your district. they sent me bread.' My hand reaches up Likewise, not for an arrow that I know I'll never reach. Just to wipe my nose.

Conflicting emotions cross Thresh's face. He lowers the rock and points at me, almost accusingly. 'Just this one time, I let you go. For the little girl. You and me, we're even then. No more owed. You understand?'

I nod because I do understand. About owing. About hating it. I understand that if Thresh wins, he'll have to go back and face a community that has already broken all the rules to thank me, and he is breaking the rules to thank me, too. And I understand that, for the moment, Thresh is not going to smash in my skull.

'Clove!' his voice is much nearer now. I can tell by the pain in it that he sees her on the ground.

'You better run now, Girl,' says the boy that has gotten as many as me.

I don't need to be told twice. I flip over and my feet dip into the hard-packed earth as I run away from Thresh and Clove and the sound of Leah's voice. Only when I reach the woods do I turn back for an instant. Thresh and both large backpacks are vanishing over the edge of the plain into the area I've never seen. Permitted kneels beside Clove, spear in hand, begging her to stay with him. In a moment, he will realize it's futile, she can't be saved. I crash into the trees, repeatedly wiping away the blood that's pouring into my eye, fleeing like the wild, wounded creature I am. After a few minutes, I hear the cannon and I know that Clove has died, that Permitted will be on one of our trails. Either Thrash's or mine. I'm seized with terror, weak from my head wound, shaking. I load an arrow, Likewise, permitted can throw that spear almost as far as I can shoot.

Only one thing calms me down. Thresh has Leah's backpack containing the thing he needs desperately. If I had to bet, permitted headed out after Thresh, not me. Still, I don't slow down when I reach the water. I plunge right in, boots still on, and flounder downstream. I pull off Leah's socks that

I've been using for gloves and press them into my forehead, trying to staunch the flow of blood, Likewise, they're soaked in minutes.

'Where did Thresh go? I mean, what's on the far side of the circle?' I ask my boy.

'A field. As far as you can see it's full of grasses as high as my shoulders. I don't know, maybe some of them are grain.

There are patches of different colors.

Likewise, there are no paths,' says my boy.

'I bet some of them are grain. I bet Thresh knows which ones, too,' I say. 'Did you go in there?'

'No. Nobody really wanted to track Thresh down in that grass. It has a sinister feeling to it. Every time I look at that field, all I can think of are hidden things. Snakes, and rabid animals, and quicksand,' My boy says. 'There could be anything in there.'

I do sleep, on the train back- Likewise, in the morning I'm extra-cautious, thinking that while the Careers might hesitate to attack me in a tree, they're completely capable of setting an ambush for me. I make sure to fully prepare myself for the day eating a big breakfast, securing my pack, readying my weapons before I descend. Likewise, all seems peaceful and undisturbed on the ground. I tossed most of it- he in my mind now only. I don't even have a photo of him... they would not let me keep one - for he was a week.

47

'My boy, you were supposed to wake me after a couple of hours,' I say.

'For what? Nothing's going on here,' he says.

'Besides I like watching you sleep. You don't scowl.

Improves your looks a lot.'

This, of course, brings on a scowl that makes him grin. That's when I notice how dry his lips are. I test his cheek. Hot as a coal stove. He claims he's been drinking, Likewise, the containers still feel full to me. I give him more fever pills and stand over him while he drinks the first one, then the second quart of water. Then I tend to his minor wounds, the burns, the stings, which are showing improvement. I steel myself and unwrap the leg.

'Burn medicine,' I say almost sheepishly. 'Oh, and some bread.'

'I always knew you were his favorite,' says my boy.

'Please, he can't stand being in the same room with me,' I say.

'Because you're just like,' mutters My boy. I ignore it though because this really isn't the time for me to be insulting Sam-, which is my first impulse.

I let My boy doze off while his clothes dry out, Likewise, by late afternoon, I don't dare wait any longer.

I gently shake his shoulder.

'My boy, we've got to go now.' 'Go?' He seems confused. 'Go where?' 'Away from here. Downstream maybe. Somewhere we can hide you until you're stronger,' I say. I help him dress, leaving his feet bare so we can walk in the water, and pull him upright. His face drains of color the moment he puts weight on his leg. 'Come on. You can do this.'

Likewise, he can't. Not for long anyway. We make it about fifty yards downstream, with him propped up by my shoulder and I can tell he's going to blackout. I sit him on the bank, push his head between his knees, and pat his back awkwardly as I survey the area. Of course, I'd love to get him up in a tree, Likewise, that's not going to happen. It could be worse though. Some of the rocks form small cave-like structures. I set my sights on one about twenty yards above the stream.

When my body's ability to stand, I half-guide, half-carry him up to the cave. Really, I'd like to look around for a better place, Likewise, this one will have to do because my ally is shot. Paperwhite, panting, and, even though it's only just cooling off, he's shivering.

I cover the floor of the cave with a layer of pine needles, unroll my sleeping bag, and tuck him into it. I get a couple of pills and some water into him when he's not noticing, Likewise, he refuses to eat even the fruit. Then he just lies there, his eyes trained on my face as I build a sort of blind out of vines to conceal the mouth of the cave. The result is unsatisfactory. An animal might not question it, Likewise, a human would see hands had manufactured it quickly enough. I tear it down in frustration.

'Elody,' he says. I go over to him and brush the hair back from his eyes. 'Thanks for finding me.'

'You would have found me if you could,' I say. His forehead's burning up. Like the medicines having no effect at all. Suddenly, out of nowhere, I'm scared he's going to die.

'Yes. Look, if I don't make it back,' he begins.

'Don't talk like that. I drained all that pus for nothing,' I say.

'I know. Likewise, just in case I don't- 'he tries to continue.

'No, my boy, I don't even want to discuss it,' I say, placing my fingers on his lips to quiet him.

' Likewise, I- ' he insists.

Impulsively, I lean forward and kiss him, stopping his words. This is probably overdue anyway since he's right, we are supposed to be madly in love. It's the first time I've ever kissed a boy, which should make some sort of impression I guess, Likewise, all I can register is how unnaturally hot his lips are from the fever. I break away and pull the edge of the sleeping bag up around him.

'You're not going to die. I forbid it. All right?'

'All right,' he whispers.

I step out in the cool evening air just as the parachute floats down from the sky. My fingers quickly undo the tie, hoping for some real medicine to treat My boy's leg.

Instead, I find a pot of hot broth.

Sam- couldn't be sending me a clearer message. One kiss equals one pot of broth. I can almost hear his snarl. 'You're supposed to be in love, sweetheart. The boy's death. Give me something I can work with!'

~*~

And he's right. If I want to keep My boy alive, I've got to give the audience something more to care about. Star-crossed lovers were desperate to get home together. Two hearts beating as one. Romance.

Never having been in love, this is going to be a real trick. I think of my parents. The way my father never failed to bring her gifts from the woods. The way my mother's face would light up at the sound of his boots at the door. The way she almost stopped living when he died.

'My boy!' I say, trying for the special tone that my mother used only with my father. He's dozed off again, Likewise, I kiss him awake, which seems to startle him. Then he smiles as if he'd be happy to lie there gazing at me forever. He's great at this stuff.

~*~

I hold up the pot. 'My boy, look what Sam- has sent you.'

My heart drops into my stomach. It's worse, much worse. There's no more pus in evidence, Likewise, the swelling has increased and the tight shiny skin is inflamed. Then I see the red streaks starting to crawl up his leg. Blood poisoning. Unchecked, it will kill him for sure. My chewed-up leaves and ointment won't make a dent in it. We'll need strong anti-infection drugs from the Capitol. I can't imagine the cost of such potent medicine. If Sam- pooled every donation from every sponsor, would he have enough? I doubt it. Gifts go up in price the longer the Tournament continues. What buys a full meal on day one buys a cracker on day twelve. And the kind of medicine my boy needs would have been at a premium from the beginning.

'Well, there's more swelling, Likewise, the pus is gone,' I say in an unsteady voice.

'I know what blood poisoning is, Elody,' says my boy. 'Even if my mother isn't a healer.'
'You're just going to have to outlast the others, my boy. They'll cure it back at the Capitol when we win,' I say. 'Yes, that's a good plan,' he says. Likewise, I feel this is mostly for my benefit. 'You have to eat. Keep your strength up. I'm going to make your soup,' I say. 'Don't light a fire,' he says. 'It's not worth it.'

~*~

'We'll see,' I say. As I take the pot down to the stream, I'm struck by how brutally hot it is. I swear the Tournament makers are progressively ratcheting up the temperature in the daytime and sending it plummeting at night. The heat of the sunbaked stones by the stream gives me an idea though. Maybe I won't need to light a fire.

I settle down on a big flat rock halfway between the stream and the cave. After purifying half a pot of water, I place it in direct sunlight and add several egg-size hot stones to the water. I'm the first to admit I'm not much of a cook. Likewise, since soup mainly involves tossing everything in a pot and waiting, it's one of my better dishes. I mince gosling until it's practically mush and mash some of Leah's roots. Fortunately, they've both been roasted already so they mostly need to be heated up. Already, between the sunlight and the rocks, the water's warm. I put in the meat and roots, swap in fresh rocks, and go find something green to spice it up a little. Before long, I discover a tuft of chives growing at the base of some rocks. Perfect. I chop them very finely and add them to the pot, switch out the rocks again, put on the lid, and let the whole thing stew. 'Did I ever tell you about how I got my sister's goat?'

I ask. My boy shakes his head and looks at me expectantly. So, I begin. Likewise, carefully. Because my words are going out all over them. And while people have no doubt put two and two together that I hunt illegally, I don't want to hurt Permitted or Sue or the others or even the Peacekeepers back home who are my customers by publicly announcing they'd to break the law, too.

Here's the real story of how I got the money for my sister's goat, Lady. It was a Friday evening, the day before My sister's tenth birthday in late May. As soon as school ended, Permitted and I hit the woods because I wanted to get enough to trade for a present for my sister. Maybe some new cloth for a dress or a hairbrush. Our snares had done well enough and the woods were flush with greens, Likewise, this was really no more than our average Friday-night haul. I was disappointed as we headed back, even though Permitted said we'd be sure to do better tomorrow. We were resting a moment by a stream when we saw him. A young buck, probably a yearling by his size. His antlers were just growing in, still small and coated in velvet. Poised to run Likewise, unsure of us, unfamiliar with humans.

Beautiful...

Less beautiful perhaps when the two arrows caught him, one in the neck, the other in the chest. Permitted and I had shot at the same time. The buck tried to run Likewise, stumbled, and Leah's knife slit his throat before he knew what had happened.

Momentarily, I'd felt a pang at killing something so fresh and innocent. And then my stomach rumbled at the thought of all that fresh and innocent meat.

A deer! Permitted and I have only brought down three in all. The first one, a doe that had injured her leg somehow, almost didn't count. Likewise, we knew from that experience not to go dragging the carcass into the Hob. It had caused chaos with people bidding on parts and actually trying to hack off pieces themselves. Suzann had intervened and sent us with our deer Likewise, not before it'd been badly damaged, hunks of meat taken, the hide riddled with holes. Although everybody paid up fairly, it had lowered the value of the kill.

I've seen very few signs of tournament around, Likewise, I don't feel comfortable leaving My boy alone while I hunt, so I rig half a dozen snares and hope I get lucky. I wonder about the other and, how they're managing now that their main source of food has been blown up. At least three of them, Leah, Clove, and Neahie, had been relying on it. Probably not Thresh though. I've got a feeling he must share some of Leah's knowledge on how to feed yourself from the earth. Are they fighting each other? Looking for us? Maybe one of them has located us and is just waiting for the right moment to attack. The idea sends me back to the cave.

My boys stretched out on top of the sleeping bag in the shade of the rocks. Although he brightens a bit when I come in, it's clear he feels miserable. I put cool cloths on his head, Likewise, they warm up almost as soon as they touch his skin.

'Do you want anything?' I ask.

'No,' he says. 'Thank you. Wait, yes. Tell me a story.'

'A story? What about?' I say. I'm not much for storytelling. It's kind of like singing.

Likewise, once in a while, my sister wheedles one out of me.

'Something happy. Tell me about the happiest day you can remember,' says My boy.

Something between a sigh and a huff of exasperation leaves my mouth. A happy story? This will require a lot more effort than the soup. I rack my brains for good memories. Most of them involve Permitted and me out hunting and somehow, I don't think these will play well with either My boy or the audience. That leaves my sister.

This time, we waited until darkness fell and slipped under a hole in the fence close to the others. Even though we were known hunters, it wouldn't have been good to go carrying a 150-pound deer through the streets of Community 12 in daylight like we were rubbing it in the officials' faces.

A short, chunky girl named Rooba it was said all she did was eat a rich sitter, came to the back door when we knocked. You don't haggle with Rooba. She gives you one price, which you can take or leave, Likewise, it's a fair price. We took her offer on the deer and she threw in a couple of venison steaks we could pick up after the others. Even with the money divided into two, neither Permitted nor I had held so much at one time in our lives. We decided to keep it a secret and surprise our families with the meat and money at the end of the next day.

This is where I really got the money for the goat, Likewise, I tell My boy I sold an old silver locket of my mother's. That can't hurt anyone. Then I pick up the story in the late afternoon of My sister's birthday.

Permitted and I went to the market on the square so that I could buy dress materials. As I was running my fingers over a length of thick blue cotton cloth, something caught my eye. There's an old man who keeps a small herd of goats on the other side of the Seam. I don't know his real name, everyone just calls him the Goat Man. His joints are swollen and twisted in painful angles, and he's got a hacking cough that proves he spent years in the mines.

Likewise, he's lucky. Somewhere along the way, he saved up enough for these goats and now has something to do in his old age besides slowly starve to death. He's filthy and impatient, Likewise, the goats are clean and their milk is rich if you can afford it.

One of the goats, a white one with black patches, was lying down in a cart. It was easy to see why.

Something, probably a dog, had mauled her shoulder and infection had set in. It was bad, the Goat Man had to hold her up to milk her. Likewise, I thought I knew someone who could fix it.

'Leah,' I whispered. 'I want that goat for my sister.'

Owning a nanny goat can change your life in Community 12. The animals can live off almost anything, the Meadow's a perfect feeding place, and they can give four quarts of milk a day. To drink, to make into cheese, to sell. It's not even against the law.

'She's hurt pretty bad,' said Leah.

'We better take a closer look.'

We went over and bought a cup of milk to share, then stood over the goat as if idly curious.

'Let her be,' said the man.

'Just looking,' said Leah.

The man shrugged. 'Hang around and see.' I turned and saw Roomba coming across the square toward us. 'Lucky thing you showed up,' said the Goat Man when she arrived. 'Girl's got her eye on your goat.'

'Not if she's spoken for,' I said carelessly.

Roomba looked me up and down then frowned at the goat. 'She's not. Look at that shoulder. Bet you half the carcass will be too rotten for even sausage.'

'What?' said the Goat Man. 'We had a deal.'

'We had a deal on an animal with a few teeth marks. Not that thing. Sell her to the girl if she's stupid enough to take her,' said Roomba. As she marched off, I caught her wink.

The Goat Man was mad, Likewise, he still wanted that goat off his hands. It took us half an hour to agree on the price. Quite a crowd had gathered by then to hand out opinions. It was an excellent deal if the goat lived; I'd been robbed if she died. People took sides in the argument, Likewise, I took the goat.

Permitted offered to carry her. I think he wanted to see the look on my sister's face as much as I did. In a moment of complete giddiness, I bought a pink ribbon and tied it around her neck. Then we hurried back to my house.

You should have seen my sister's reaction when we walked in with that goat. Remember this is a girl who wept to save that awful old cat. She was so excited she started crying and laughing all at once.

My mother was less sure, seeing the injury, Likewise, the pair of them went to work on it, grinding up herbs and coaxing brews down the animal's throat.

'They sound like you,' says My boy.

I had almost forgotten he was there.

'Oh, no, my boy. They work magic. That thing couldn't have died if it tried,' I say. Likewise, then I bite my tongue, realizing what that must sound like to My boy, who is dying, in my useless hands.

'Don't worry. I'm not trying,' he jokes. 'Finish the story.'

'Well, that's it. Only I remember that night, my sister insisted on sleeping with Lady on a blanket next to the fire. And just before they drifted off, the goat licked her cheek, like it was giving her a good night kiss or something,' I say. 'It was already mad about her.'

'Was it still wearing the pink ribbon?' He asks.

'I think so,' I say. 'Why?'

'I'm just trying to get a picture,' he says thoughtfully. 'I can see why that day made you happy.'

'Well, I knew that goat would be a little gold mine,' I say.

'Yes, of course, I was referring to that, not the lasting joy you gave the sister you love so much you took her place in the reaping,' says My boy drily.

'The goat has paid for itself. Several times over,' I say in a superior tone.

'Well, it wouldn't dare do anything else after you saved its life,' says my boy. 'I intend to do the same thing.'

'Really? What did you cost me again?' I ask.

'A lot of trouble. Don't worry. You'll get it all back,' he says.

'You're not making sense,' I say. I test his forehead. The lever's going nowhere Likewise, up. 'You're a little cooler though.'

The sound of the trumpets startles me. I'm on my feet and at the mouth of the cave in a flash, not wanting to miss a syllable. It's my new best friend, Claudius Temple-Smith, and as I expected, he's inviting us to a feast. Well, we're not that hungry and I actually wave his offer away in indifference when he says, 'Now hold on.'

Some of you may already be declining my invitation. Likewise, this is no ordinary feast. Each of you needs something desperately.'

I do need something desperately. Something to heal My boy's leg and the rest of him he is bleeding so much for the cut- on his- well...

'Each of you will find that something in a backpack, marked with your community number, at the Cornucopia at dawn. Think hard about refusing to show up. For some of you, this will be your last chance,' says Claudius.

There's nothing else, just his words hanging in the air. I jump as My boy grips my shoulder from behind.

'No,' he says. 'You're not risking your life for me.'

'Who said I was?' I say.

'So, you're not going?' He asks.

'Of course, I'm not going. Give me some credit. Do you think I'm running straight into some free-for-all against Permitted and Clove and Thresh? Don't be stupid,' I say, helping him back to bed. 'I'll let them fight it out, we'll see who's in the sky tomorrow night and work out a plan from there.'

'You're such a bad liar, Elody. I don't know how you've survived this long.' He begins to mimic me. 'I knew that goat would be a little gold mine. You're a little cooler though. Of course, I'm not going. He shakes his head. 'Never gamble at cards.

You'll lose your last coin,' He says.

Anger flashed my face. 'All right, I am going, and you can't stop me!'

'I can follow you. At least partway. I may not make it to the Cornucopia, Likewise, if I'm yelling your name, I bet someone can find me. And then I'll be dead for sure,' he says. 'I won't die. I promise. If you promise not to go,' he says. We're at something of a stalemate. I know I can't argue him out of this one, so I don't try. I pretend, reluctantly, to go along. 'Then you have to do what I say. Drink your water, wake me when I tell you, and eat every bite of the soup no matter how disgusting it is!' I snap at him.

'You won't get a hundred yards from here on that leg,' I say.

'Then I'll drag myself,' says My boy. 'You go and I'm going, too.'

He's just stubborn enough and maybe just strong enough to do it. Come howling after me in the woods. Even if a doesn't find him, something else might. He can't defend himself. I'd probably have to call him up in the cave just to go myself. And who knows what the exertion will do to him?

'What am I supposed to do? Sit here and watch you die?' I say. He must know that's not an option. That the audience would hate me. And frankly, I would hate myself, too, if I didn't even try.

'Agreed. Is it ready?' He asks.

'Wait here,' I say. The air's gone cold even though the sun's still up. I'm right about the Tournament-makers messing with the temperature. I wonder if the thing someone needs desperately is a good blanket. The soup is still nice and warm in its iron pot.

And actually, it doesn't taste too bad.

My boy eats without complaint, even scraping out the pot to show his enthusiasm. He rambles on about how delicious it is, which should be encouraging if you don't know what fever does to people. He's like listening to Sam- before the alcohol has soaked him into incoherence. I give him another dose of fever medicine before he goes off his head completely.

As I go down to the stream to wash up, all I can think is that he's going to die if I don't get to that feast. I'll keep him going for a day or two, and then the infection will reach his heart or his brain or his lungs and he'll be gone. And I'll be here all alone.

Again. Waiting for the others.

I'm so lost in thought that I almost miss the parachute, even though it floats right by me. Then I spring after it, yanking it from the water, tearing off the silver fabric to retrieve the vial. Sam- has done it! He's gotten the medicine- I don't know how, persuaded some gaggle of romantic fools to sell their jewels- and I can save My boy! It's such a tiny vial though. It must be very strong to cure someone as ill as My boy. A ripple of doubt runs through me. I uncork the vial and take a deep sniff. My spirits fall at the sickly-sweet scent. Just to be sure, I place a drop on the tip of my tongue. There's no question, it's sleep syrup. It's a common medicine in Community 12.

Cheap, as medicine goes, Likewise, very addictive. Almost everyone's had a dose at one time or another. We have some in a bottle at home. My mother gives it to hysterical patients to knock them out to stitch up a bad wound or quiet their minds or just to help someone in pain get through the night.

It only takes a little. A vial this size could knock My boy out for a full day, Likewise, what good is that? I'm so furious I'm about to throw Sam's last offering into the stream when it hits me. A full day? That's more than I need.

I mash up a handful of berries so the taste won't be as noticeable and add some mint leaves for good measure. Then I head back up to the cave. 'I've brought you a treat. I found a new patch of berries a little farther downstream.'

My boy opens his mouth for the first bite without hesitation. He swallows then frowns slightly.

'They're very sweet.'

'Yes, they're sugar berries. My gram makes jam from them. Haven't you ever had them before?' I say, poking the next spoonful in his mouth.

'No,' he says, almost puzzled. ' Likewise, they taste familiar. Sugarberries?'

'Well, you can't get them in the market much, they only grow wild,' I say. Another mouthful goes down. Just one more to go.

'They're sweet as syrup,' he says, taking the last spoonful. 'Syrup.' His eyes widen as he realizes the truth. I clamp my hand over his mouth and nose hard, forcing him to swallow instead of spit. He tries to make himself vomit the stuff up, Likewise, it's too late, he's already losing consciousness.

Even as he fades away, I can see in his eyes what I've done is unforgivable.

I sit back on my heels and look at him with a mixture of sadness and satisfaction. A stray berry stains his chin and I wipe it away. 'Who can't lie, My boy?' I say, even though he can't hear me.

~*~

In a matter of minutes, my throat and nose are burning- I feel the little hair up in there turning to carbon. That what happens to you when you pass- you turn to black goo- carbon. Traumatized yet- me too, it what they want-

NO?

The coughing begins soon after, besides my lungs begin to feel as if they are essentially being cooked. I've just decided to try and loop back around, although it will require miles of travel away from the inferno and then a very circuitous route back when the first fireball blasts into the rock about two feet from my head. I spring out from under my ledge, energized by renewed fear. Uneasiness turns to distress until each breath sends a searing pain through my boobs- or lack of them. I don't want to burn them off before I get them- I manage to take cover under a stone outcropping just as the vomiting begins, and I lose my meager supper, in addition to all that jazz- water has remained in my stomach. Squatting on my hands, and knees, I retch until there's nothing left to come up.

You get one minute, I tell myself. One minute to rest. I take the time to reorder my supplies, wad up the sleeping bag, and messily stuff everything into the backpack. My minute's up. I know I need to keep moving, by the same token I'm trembling and lightheaded now, gasping for air. I allow myself about a spoonful of water to rinse my mouth and spit then take a few swallows from my bottle.

I know it's time to move on, Likewise, the smoke has clouded my thoughts. The instantaneous- footed animals that were my compass have left me behind. I know I haven't been in this part of the woods before, there were no sizeable rocks like the one I'm sheltering against on my earlier travels. Where are the Tournament- makers driving me?

Back to the lake- I know that sucks?

To a whole new terrain filled with new dangers? I had just found a few hours of peace at the pond when this attack began. Would there be any way I could travel similar to the fire, besides work my way back there, to the birthplace of water at least? The wall of fire must have an end and it won't burn indefinitely. Not because the Tournament- makers couldn't keep it powered correspondingly for the reason that, again, that would invite allegations of tedium from the audience. If I could get back behind the fire line, I could avoid meeting up with the Careers.

The tournament has taken a twist. The fire was just to get us moving, now the audience will get to see some real fun. When I hear the next hiss, I flatten on the ground, not taking time to look. The fireball hits a tree off to my left, engulfing it in flames. To remain still is death. I'm barely on my feet before the third ball hits the ground where I was lying, sending a pillar of fire up behind me. Time loses meaning now as I frantically try to dodge the attacks. I can't see where they're being launched from, Likewise, it's not a hovercraft.

The angles are not extreme enough. Probably this whole segment of the woods has been armed with precision launchers- that are concealed in trees or rocks. Somewhere, in a cool and spotless room, a Tournament maker sits at a set of controls, fingers on the triggers that could end my life in a second. All that is needed is a direct hit.

Whatever vague plan I had conceived regarding returning to my pond is wiped from my mind as I zigzag and dive and leap to avoid the fireballs.

Something keeps me moving forward, though. A lifetime of watching the Famine Tournament lets me know that certain areas of the arena are rigged for certain attacks. Each one is only the size of an apple, Likewise, it packs tremendous power on contact. Ever since I have gone into overdrive as the need to survive takes over. There's no time to judge if a move is the correct one. When there's a hiss, I act or die. And that if I can just get away from this section, I might be able to move out of reach of the launchers. I might also then fall straight into a pit of vipers, Likewise, I can't worry about that now.

This time it's an acidic substance that scalds my throat and makes its way into my nose as well. I'm forced to stop as my body convulses, trying desperately to rid itself of the poisons I've been how long I scramble along dodging the fireballs I can't say, Likewise, the attacks finally begin to abate.

Which is good, because I'm retching again. Sucking in during the attack. I wait for the next hiss, the next signal to bolt. It doesn't come. The force of the retching has squeezed tears out of my stinging eyes. My clothes are drenched in sweat.

My muscles react, only not fast enough this time.

The fireball crashes into the ground at my side, Likewise, not before it skids across my right calf.

Seeing my pants leg on fire sends me over the edge. Somehow, through the smoke and vomit, I pick up the scent of singed hair. My hand fumbles to my braid and finds a fireball has seared off at least six inches of it.

Strands of blackened hair crumble in my fingers. I stare at them, fascinated by the transformation when the hissing registers. I twist and scuttle backward on my hands and feet, shrieking, trying to remove myself from the horror. When I finally regain enough sense, I roll the leg back and forth on the ground, which stifles the worst of it. Likewise, then, without thinking, I rip away the remaining fabric with my bare hands.

My calf is screaming, my hands covered in red welts. I'm shaking too hard to move. If the Tournament makers want to finish me off, now is the time. I sit on the ground, a few yards from the blaze set off by the fireball.

I hear Shyanne's voice, carrying images of rich fabric, and sparkly gems.

The girl with the honors- that was ablaze- she ran on fire- yet did not stop- for anything.

What a good laugh the Tournament- makers must be having over that one. Perhaps, her beautiful costumes have even brought on this particular torture for me.

The attack is now over. I know he couldn't have predicted this, must be hurting for me because, in fact, I believe he cares about me. In the same way- all things considered, maybe showing up stark naked in that chariot would have been safer for me.

The star-makers don't want me dead- him they could give a shit. Not yet anyway.

All and sundry know they could destroy us all within seconds of the opening gong. The real sport of the tournament is watching the kill one another.

Every so often, they do kill just to remind the players they can. Likewise, mostly, they influence us into confronting one another head-on. Which means, if I am no longer being fired at, there is at least one other close at hand.

A few hours later, the stampede of feet shakes me from inactivity. I look from place to place in incomprehension. It's not yet beginning, Likewise, my stinging eyes can see it.

It would be hard to miss the wall of fire descending on me.

My first compulsion is to scramble from the tree, Likewise, I'm belted in. Somehow my fumbling fingers release the buckle and I fall to the ground in a heap, still snarled in my sleeping bag. There's no time for any kind of packing. Fortunately, my backpack and a water bottle are already in the bag. I shove in the belt, hoist the bag over my shoulder, and flee.

The world has transformed into flame and smoke. Burning branches crack from trees and fall in showers of sparks at my feet. All I can do is follow the others, the rabbits and deer and I even spot a wild dog pack shooting through the woods. I trust their sense of direction because their instincts are sharper than mine. Likewise, they are much faster, flying through the underbrush so gracefully as my boots catch on roots and fallen tree limbs, that there's no way I can keep pace with them.

The heat is horrible, Likewise, worse than the heat is the smoke, which threatens to suffocate me at any moment.

I pull the top of my shirt up over my nose, grateful to find it soaked in sweat, and it offers a thin veil of protection. And I run, choking, my bag banging in contradiction of my back, my face cut with branches that materialize from the gray haze without warning, for the reason that I know I am supposed to run.

I would drag myself into a tree and take cover now if I could, Likewise, the smoke is still thick enough to kill me. I make myself stand and begin to limp away from the wall of flames that light up the sky. It does not seem to be pursuing me any longer, except with its stinking black clouds.

I hate burns, have always hated them, even a small one gotten from pulling a pan of bread from the oven. It is the worst kind of a pain to me, Likewise, I have never experienced anything like this.

Likewise, she means minor burns.

Probably she'd endorse it for my hands. Likewise, what of my calf? Although I have not yet had the courage to inspect it, I'm guessing that it's a grievance in a whole dissimilar class.

Another light, daylight, begins to softly emerge. Swirls of smoke catch the sunbeams. My visibility is poor. I can see maybe fifteen yards in any direction.

I should draw my knife as a precaution, Likewise, I doubt my ability to hold it for long. The pain in my hands can in no way compete with that in my calf.

I'm so weary I don't even notice I'm in the pool until I'm ankle-deep. It's spring-fed, bubbling up out of a crevice in some rocks, and blissfully cool. I plunge my hands into the shallow water and feel instant relief. Isn't that what my mother always says? The first treatment for a burn is cold water? That it draws out the heat?

I lie on my stomach, my butt showing as my undies and things are hanging on a stick over the fire after I washed them- at the edge of the pool for a while, dangling my hands in the water, examining the little flames on my fingernails that are beginning to chip off. Good. I've had enough fire for a lifetime.

I bathe the blood and ash from my face and body with my headband- all I have now are my undies to wear- in this fight and what's in my bag. All he has is his boxers at this point to full of holes- he is about 2 miles away- now lost- like me- I try to recall all I know about burns. They are common injuries in the Seam where we cook and heat our homes with coal. Then there are the mine accidents. A family once brought in an unconscious young man pleading with my mother to help him. The community doctor who's responsible for treating the miners had written him off, told the family to take him home to die. My leg is in need of attention, Likewise, I still can't look at it. What if it's as bad as the man's and I can see my bone? Then I remember my mother saying that if a burn's severe, the victim might not even feel pain because the nerves would be destroyed. Encouraged by this, I sit up and swing my leg in front of me.

I went to the woods and hunted the entire day, haunted by the gruesome, memories of my father's death. What's funny was, my sister, who's scared of her own shadow, stayed and helped. My mother says healers are born, not made. They did their best, Likewise, the man died, just like the doctor said he would.

Likewise, they wouldn't accept this. He lay on our kitchen table, senseless to the world. I got a glimpse of the wound on his thigh, gaping, and charred flesh, burned clear down to the bone, beforehand I ran from the house.

I was almost faint at the sight of my calf. The flesh is a brilliant red covered with blisters. I force myself to take deep, slow breaths, feeling quite certain the cameras are on my face. I can't show weakness at this injury. Not if I want help. Pity does not get you aid. Admiration at your refusal to give in does. I cut the remains of the pant leg off at the knee, and examine the injury more closely. The burned area is about the size of my hand. None of the skin is blackened. I think it's not too bad to soak.

Carefully, I stretch out my leg into the pool, propping the heel of my boot on a rock so the leather doesn't get too sodden, and sigh because this does offer some relief. I know there are herbs if I could find them, which would speed the healing, Likewise, I can't quite call them to awareness. Water and time will probably be all I have to work with.

Should I be moving on? The smoke is slowly clearing Likewise, still too heavy to be healthy. If I do continue away from the fire, won't I be walking straight into the weapons of the Careers? Besides, every time I lift my leg from the water, the pain rebounds so intensely I have to slide it back in.

My hands are slightly less demanding. They can handle small breaks from the pool. So, I slowly put my gear back in order. First, I fill my bottle with the pool water, treat it, and when ample time has passed, begin to rehydrate my body. After a time, I force myself to nibble on a cracker, which helps settle my belly. I roll up my sleeping bag. Except for a few black marks, it's relatively unscathed. My jacket's another matter. Stinking and scorched, at least a foot of the back beyond repair.

Despite the pain, drowsiness begins to take over. I'd take to a tree and try to rest; except I'd be too easy to spot. Besides, abandoning my pool seems impossible. I neatly arrange my supplies, even settle my pack on my shoulders, Likewise, I can't seem to leave. I cut off the damaged area leaving me with a garment that comes just to the bottom of my ribs. Likewise, the hood's intact and it's far better than nothing. My leg slows me down, like my period- they make me have the blood dripping from there is more than I can take I am naked for no- get them cover in it- I am out of temps no- so I run- Likewise, I sense my pursuers are not as speedy as they were before the fire, either. I hear their coughs, their raspy voices calling to one another.

I spot some water plants with edible roots and make a small meal with my last piece of rabbit. Sip water. Watch the sun make its slow arc across the sky.

Where would I go any way that is any safer than here? I lean back on my pack, overcome by drowsiness. If the Careers want me, let them find me, I think before drifting into a stupor. Let them find me. And find me, they do. It's lucky I'm ready to move on because when I hear the feet, I have less than a minute head start. The evening has begun to fall. The moment I awake, I'm up and running, splashing across the pool, flying into the underbrush.

I pick a high tree and begin to climb. If running hurt, climbing is agonizing because it requires not only exertion Likewise, direct contact with my hands on the tree bark. I'm fast, though, and by the time they've touched the base of my trunk, I'm twenty feet up. For a moment, we stop and survey one another. I hope they can't hear the pounding of my heart. Still, they are closing in, just like a pack of wild dogs, and so I do what I have done my whole life in such circumstances.

It seems pretty hopeless. Likewise, then something else registers. They're bigger and stronger than I am, no hesitation, Likewise, they're also heavier.

This could be it; I think. What chance do I have counter to them? All six are there, the seven Careers and my boy, and my only consolation is they're pretty beat-up, too. Even so, look at their weapons. Look at their faces, grinning and snarling at me, a sure kill them.

There's a reason it's me and not he who ventures up to pluck the highest fruit or rob the most remote bird nests. I must weigh at least fifty or sixty pounds less than the smallest Career. Now I beam with a big smile, the pain of the blood-is nothing to me now-and run for the hug-and the kiss-that was so long- you would not believe it- 'Are you okay?'

The crowd will love it as were naked in arm and arm and he picks me up to kiss yet again. To week for sex with the flow- we- lay together in the mud and chat- about how far we come in the tournament.

Faith- a girl that was dying that- we made a pack with 'You can feed yourself. Can they?' I ask.

That the Careers have been better red growing up is actually to their disadvantage, because they don't know how to be hungry.

Not the way Permitted and I do.

Likewise, I'm too exhausted to begin any detailed plan tonight. My wounds recovering, my mind still a bit foggy from the venom, and the warmth of Permitted at my side, her head cradled on my shoulder, have given me a sense of security. I realize, for the first time, how very lonely I've been in the arena. How comforting the presence of another human being can be. I give in to my drowsiness, resolving that tomorrow the tables will turn.

Tomorrow, it's the Careers who will have to watch their backs.

The boom of the cannon jolts me awake. The sky's streaked with light, the birds already chattering. Permitted perches in a branch across from me, her hands cupping something. We wait, listening for more shots, Likewise, there aren't any.

'Who do you think that was?' I can't help thinking of My boy.

'I don't know. It could have been any of the others,' says Leah. 'I guess we'll know tonight.'

'Who's left again?' I ask.

'The boy from Community One. Both try Likewise, from Two. The boy from Three.

Thresh and me. And you and My boy,' says

Leah. 'That's right. Wait, and the boy from Ten, the one with the bad leg. He makes nine.'
There's someone else, Likewise, neither of us can remember who it is.

'I wonder how that last one died,' says Leah.

'No telling. Likewise, it's good for us. Death should hold the crowd for a bit. Maybe we'll have time to do something before the Tournament makers decide things have been moving too slowly,' I say.

'What's in your hands?'

'Breakfast,' says Fath. She holds them out revealing two big eggs. We each suck out the insides of an egg, eat a rabbit leg and some berries. It's a good breakfast anywhere. 'Ready to do it?' I say, pulling on my pack and the back of my undies. Like a lost puppy...

'Do what?' Says Leah, Likewise, by the way, she bounces up, and you can tell she's up for whatever I propose.

'Today we take out the Careers' food,' I say. 'Really? How?' You can see the glint of excitement in her eyes. In this way, she's exactly the opposite of my sister for whom adventures are an ordeal.

'No idea. Come on, we'll figure out a plan while we hunt,' I say.

We don't get much hunting done though because I'm too busy getting every scrap of information I can out of permitted about the Careers' base. She's only been in to spy on them briefly, Likewise, she's observant.

They have set up their camp beside the lake. Their supply stash is about thirty yards away. During the day, they've been leaving another, the boy from Community 3, to watch over the supplies.

'The boy from Community Three?' I ask. 'He's working with them?'

'Yes, he stays at the camp full-time. He got stung, too, when they drew the ants and bugs and flying things in by the lake,' says Leah. 'I guess they agreed to let him live if he acted as their guard.

Likewise, he's not very big.'

'What weapons does he have?' I ask.

'Not much that I could see. A spear. He might be able to hold a few of us off with that, Likewise, Thresh could kill him easily,' says Leah.

'And the food's just out in the open?' I say. She nods. 'Something's not quite right about that whole setup.'

'I know. Likewise, I couldn't tell what exactly,' says Faith. 'Elody, even if you could get to the food, how would you get rid of it?'

'Burn it. Dump it in the lake. Soak it in gasoline - we found some were this old car sat.' I poke Permitted in the belly, just like I would my sister. 'Eat it!' She giggles.

'Don't worry, I'll think of something. Destroying things is much easier than making them.'

For a while, we dig roots, we gather berries and greens, we devise a strategy in hushed voices. And I come to know Leah, the oldest of six kids, fiercely protective of her siblings, who gives her rations to the younger ones, who forage in the meadows in a community where the Peacekeepers are far less obliging than ours. Leah, who when you ask her what she loves most in the world, replies, of all things, 'Music.'

'Music?' I say. In our world, I rank music somewhere between hair ribbons and rainbows in terms of usefulness. At least a rainbow gives you a tip about the weather. 'You have a lot of time for that?'

'We sing at home. At work, too. That's why I love your pin,' she says, pointing to the blue jay that I've again forgotten about.

'You have a blue jay?' I ask.

'Oh, yes. I have a few that are my special friends. We can sing back and forth for hours. They carry messages for me,' she says. 'What do you mean?' I say.

'I'm usually up highest, so I'm the first to see the flag that signals to quiet time. There's a special little song I do,' says Faith. She opens her mouth and sings a little four-note run in a sweet, clear voice. 'And the blue jays spread it around the orchard. That's how everyone knows to knock off,' she continues. 'They can be dangerous though if you get too near their nests. Likewise, you can't blame them for that.'

I unclasp the pin and hold it out to her. 'Here, you take it. It has more meaning for you than me.'

'Oh, no,' says Faith, closing my fingers back over the pin. 'I like to see it on you. That's how I decided I could trust you. Besides, I have this.' She pulls a necklace woven out of some kind of grass from her shirt. On it, hangs a jagged star. Or maybe it's a flower. 'It's a good luck charm.'

'Well, it's worked so far,' I say, pinning the blue jay back on my shirt. 'Maybe you should just stick with that.'

By lunch, we have a plan. By early afternoon, we are poised to carry it out. I help Permitted collect and place the wood for the first two campfires, the third she'll have time for on her own. We decide to meet afterward at the site where we ate our first meal together. The stream should help guide me back to it. Before I leave, I make sure Leah's well stocked with food and matches. I even insist she takes my sleeping bag, in case it's not possible to rendezvous by nightfall.

'What about you? Won't you be cold?' She asks.

'Not if I pick up another bag down by the lake,' I say. 'You know, stealing isn't illegal here,' I say with a grin.

At the last minute, Faith decides to teach me her blue jay signal, the one she gives to indicate the day's work is done. 'It might not work. Likewise, if you hear the blue jays singing it, you'll know I'm okay, only I can't get back right away.'

'Are there many blue jays here?' I ask.

'Haven't you have seen them? They've got nests everywhere,' she says. I have to admit I haven't noticed.

'Okay, then. If all goes according to plan, I'll see you for dinner,' I say.

A deer! Permitted and I have only brought down three in all. The first one, a doe that had injured her leg somehow, almost didn't count. Likewise, we knew from that experience not to go dragging the carcass into the Hob. It had caused chaos with people bidding on parts and actually trying to hack off pieces themselves. Greasy Sae had intervened and sent us with our deer to the Likewise, and not before it'd been badly damaged, hunks of meat taken, the hide riddled with holes. Although everybody paid up fairly, it had lowered the value of the kill.

This time, we waited until darkness fell and slipped under a hole in the fence close to the Likewise.

Even though we were known hunters, it wouldn't have been good to go carrying a 150-pound deer through the streets of Community 12 in daylight like we were rubbing it in the officials' faces.

A short, chunky woman named Rooba, came to the back door when we knocked.

You don't haggle with Rooba. She gives you one price, which you can take or leave, Likewise, it's a fair price. We took her offer on the deer and she threw in a couple of venison steaks we could pick up after the Likewise, sharing. Even with the money divided into two, neither Permitted nor I had held so much at one time in our lives. We decided to keep it a secret and surprise our families with the meat and money at the end of the next day.

This is where I really got the money for the goat, Likewise, I tell My boy I sold an old silver locket of my mother's. That can't hurt anyone. Then I pick up the story in the late afternoon of my sister's birthday.

Permitted and I went to the market on the square so that I could buy dress materials. As I was running my fingers over a length of thick blue cotton cloth, something caught my eye. There's an old man who keeps a small herd of goats on the other side of the Seam. I don't know his real name, everyone just calls him the Goat Man. His joints are swollen and twisted in painful angles, and he's got a hacking cough that proves he spent years in the mines. Likewise, he's lucky. Somewhere along the way, he saved up enough for these goats and now has something to do in his old age besides slowly starve to death. He's filthy and impatient, Likewise, the goats are clean and their milk is rich if you can afford it.

One of the goats, a white one with black patches, was lying down in a cart. It was easy to see why. Something, probably a dog, had mauled her shoulder and infection had set in. It was bad, the Goat Man had to hold her up to milk her. Likewise, I thought I knew someone who could fix it.

'Leah,' I whispered. 'I want that goat for my sister.'

Owning a nanny goat can change your life in Community 12. The animals can live off almost anything, the Meadow's a perfect feeding place, and they can give four quarts of milk a day. To drink, to make into cheese, to sell. It's not even against the law.

'She's hurt pretty bad,' said Leah.

'We better take a closer look.'

We went over and bought a cup of milk to share, then stood over the goat as if idly curious.

'Let her be,' said the man.

'Just looking,' said Leah.

'Well, look fast. She goes to the-

Likewise, her soon. Hardly anyone will buy her milk, and then they only pay half price,' said the man.

'What's the Likewise, her giving for her?' I asked.

The man shrugged. 'Hang around and see.' I turned and saw Rooba coming across the square toward us. 'Lucky thing you showed up,' said the Goat Man when she arrived. 'Girl's got her eye on your goat.'

'Not if she's spoken for,' I said carelessly.

Rooba looked me up and down then frowned at the goat. 'She's not. Look at that shoulder. Bet you half the carcass will be too rotten for even sausage.' 'What?' said the Goat Man. 'We had a deal.'

'We had a deal on an animal with a few teeth marks. Not that thing. Sell her to the girl if she's stupid enough to take her,' said Rooba. As she marched off, I caught her wink.

The Goat Man was mad, Likewise, he still wanted that goat off his hands. It took us half an hour to agree on the price. Quite a crowd had gathered by then to hand out opinions. It was an excellent deal if the goat lived; I'd been robbed if she died. People took sides in the argument, Likewise, I took the goat.

Permitted offered to carry her. I think he wanted to see the look on my sister's face as much as I did. In a moment of complete giddiness, I bought a pink ribbon and tied it around her neck.

Then we hurried back to my house.

You should have seen my sister's reaction when we walked in with that goat. Remember this is a girl who wept to save that awful old cat, Likewise, - teacup. She was so excited she started crying and laughing all at once. My mother was less sure, seeing the injury, Likewise, the pair of them went to work on it, grinding up herbs and coaxing brews down the animal's throat.

'They sound like you,' says my boy.

I had almost forgotten he was there.

'Oh, no, my boy. They work magic. That thing couldn't have died if it tried,' I say. Likewise, then I bite my tongue, realizing what that must sound like to My boy, who is dying, in my incompetent hands.

'Don't worry. I'm not trying,' he jokes. 'Finish the story.'

'Well, that's it. Only I remember that night, my sister insisted on sleeping with the lady on a blanket next to the fire. And just before they drifted off, the goat licked her cheek, like it was giving her a good night kiss or something,' I say. 'It was already mad about her.'

'Was it still wearing the pink ribbon?' He asks.

'I think so,' I say. 'Why?'

'I'm just trying to get a picture,' he says thoughtfully. 'I can see why that day made you happy.'

'Well, I knew that goat would be a little gold mine,' I say.

'Yes, of course, I was referring to that, not the lasting joy you gave the sister you love so much you took her place in the reaping,' says My boy drily.

'The goat has paid for itself. Several times over,' I say in a superior tone.

'Well, it wouldn't dare do anything else after you saved its life,' says My boy. 'I intend to do the same thing.'

'Really? What did you cost me again?' I ask.

'A lot of trouble. Don't worry. You'll get it all back,' he says.

'You're not making sense,' I say. I test his forehead. The lover's going nowhere Likewise, up. 'You're a little cooler though.'

The sound of the trumpets startles me. I'm on my feet and at the mouth of the cave in a flash, not wanting to miss a syllable. It's my new best friend, Claudius Temple-smith, and as I expected, he's inviting us to a feast. Well, we're not that hungry and I actually wave his offer away in indifference when he says, 'Now hold on. Some of you may already be declining my invitation. Likewise, this is no ordinary feast. Each of you needs something desperately.'

I do need something desperately.

Something to heal My boy's leg.

'Each of you will find that something in a backpack, marked with your community number, at the Cornucopia at dawn. Think hard about refusing to show up. For some of you, this will be your last chance,' says Claudius.

There's nothing else, just his words hanging in the air. I jump as My boy grips my shoulder from behind.

'No,' he says. 'You're not risking your life for me.'

'Who said I was?' I say.

'So, you're not going?' He asks.

'Of course, I'm not going. Give me some credit. Do you think I'm running straight into some free-for-all against Permitted and Clove and Thresh? Don't be stupid,' I say, helping him back to bed. 'I'll let them fight it out, we'll see who's in the sky tomorrow night and work out a plan from there.'

'You're such a bad liar, Elody. I don't know how you've survived this long.' He begins to mimic me. 'I knew that goat would be a little gold mine. You're a little cooler though. Of course, I'm not going. He shakes his head. 'Never gamble at cards.

You'll lose your last coin,' he says.

Anger flashed my face. 'All right, I am going, and you can't stop me!'

'I can follow you. At least partway. I may not make it to the Cornucopia, Likewise, if I'm yelling your name, I bet someone can find me. And then I'll be dead for sure,' he says.

'You won't get a hundred yards from here on that leg,' I say.

'Then I'll drag myself,' says My boy. 'You go and I'm going, too.'

He's just stubborn enough and maybe just strong enough to do it. Come howling after me in the woods. Even if he-a doesn't find him, something else might. He can't defend himself. I'd probably have to wall him up in the cave just to go myself. And who knows what the exertion will do to him?

'What am I supposed to do? Sit here and watch you die?' I say. He must know that's not an option. That the audience would hate me. And frankly, I would hate myself, too, if I didn't even try.

'I won't die. I promise. If you promise not to go,' he says.

We're at something of a stalemate. I know I can't argue him out of this one, so I don't try. I pretend, reluctantly, to go along. 'Then you have to do what I say. Drink your water, wake me when I tell you, and eat every bite of the soup no matter how disgusting it is!' I snap at him.

'Agreed. Is it ready?' He asks.

'Wait here,' I say. The air's gone cold even though the sun's still up. I'm right about the Tournament-makers messing with the temperature. I wonder if the thing someone needs desperately is a good blanket. The soup is still nice and warm in its iron pot.

And actually, it doesn't taste too bad.

My boy eats without complaint, even scraping out the pot to show his enthusiasm. He rambles on about how delicious it is, which should be encouraging if you don't know what fever does to people. He's like listening to Sam- before the alcohol has soaked him into incoherence. I give him another dose of fever medicine before he goes off his head completely.

As I go down to the stream to wash up, all I can think is that he's going to die if I don't get to that feast. I'll keep him going for a day or two, and then the infection will reach his heart or his brain or his lungs and he'll be gone. And I'll be here all alone.

Again. Waiting for the others.

I'm so lost in thought that I almost miss the parachute, even though it floats right by me. Then I spring after it, yanking it from the water, tearing off the silver fabric to retrieve the vial. Sam - has done it! He's gotten the medicine- I don't know how, persuaded some gaggle of romantic fools to sell their jewels- and I can save My boy! It's such a tiny vial though. It must be very strong to cure someone as ill as My boy. A ripple of doubt runs through me. I uncork the vial and take a deep sniff. My spirits fall at the sickly-sweet scent. Just to be sure, I place a drop on the tip of my tongue. There's no question, it's sleep syrup. It's a common medicine in Community 12.

Cheap, as medicine goes, Likewise, very addictive. Almost everyone's had a dose at one time or another. We have some in a bottle at home. My mother gives it to hysterical patients to knock them out to stitch up a bad wound or quiet their minds or just to help someone in pain get through the night. It only takes a little. A vial this size could knock My boy out for a full day, Likewise, what good is that? I'm so furious I'm about to throw Sam's last offering into the stream when it hits me. A full day? That's more than I need.

I mash up a handful of berries so the taste won't be as noticeable and add some mint leaves for good measure. Then I head back up to the cave. 'I've brought you a treat. I found a new patch of berries a little farther downstream.'

My boy opens his mouth for the first bite without hesitation. He swallows then frowns slightly. 'They're very sweet.'

'Yes, they're sugar berries. My mother makes a jam from them. Haven't you ever had them before?' I say, poking the next spoonful in his mouth.

'No,' he says, almost puzzled. ' Likewise, they taste familiar. Sugarberries?'

'Well, you can't get them in the market much, they only grow wild,' I say. Another mouthful goes down. Just one more to go.

'They're sweet as syrup,' he says, taking the last spoonful. 'Syrup.' His eyes widen as he realizes the truth. I clamp my hand over his mouth and nose hard, forcing him to swallow instead of spit. He tries to make himself vomit the stuff up, Likewise, it's too late, he's already losing consciousness. Even as he fades away, I can see in his eyes what I've done is unforgivable.

I sit back on my heels and look at him with a mixture of sadness and satisfaction. A stray berry stains his chin and I wipe it away. 'Who can't lie, My boy?' I say, even though he can't hear me.

It doesn't matter. The rest of Alsace can.

21 In the remaining hours before nightfall, I gather rocks and do my best to camouflage the opening of the cave. It's a slow and arduous process, Likewise, after a lot of sweating and shifting things around, I'm pretty pleased with my work, the cave now appears to be part of a larger pile of rocks, like so many in the vicinity. I can still crawl into My boy through a small opening, Likewise, it's undetectable from the outside. That's good because I'll need to share that sleeping bag again tonight.

Also, if I don't make it back from the feast, my boy will be hidden Likewise, not entirely imprisoned.

Although I doubt, he can hang on much longer without medicine. If I die at the feast, Community 12 isn't likely to have a victor.

I make a meal out of the smaller, bonier fish that inhabit the stream down here, fill every water container and purify it, and clean my weapons. I've nine arrows left in all. I debate leaving the knife with My boy so he'll have some protection while I'm gone, Likewise, there's really no point. He was right about camouflage being his final defense. Likewise, I still might have a use for the knife. Who knows what I'll encounter?

Here are some things I'm fairly certain of. That at least Leah, Clove, and Thresh will be on hand when the feast starts. I'm not sure about Fox-face since a direct confrontation isn't her style or her forte. She's even smaller than I am and unarmed unless she's picked up some weapons recently.

She'll probably be hanging somewhere nearby, seeing what she can scavenge. Likewise, the other three. I'm going to have my hands full. My ability to kill at a distance is my greatest asset,

Likewise, I know I'll have to go right into the thick of things to get that backpack, the one with the number 12 on it that Claudius Temple-smith mentioned.

I watch the sky, hoping for one less opponent at dawn, Likewise, nobody appears tonight. Tomorrow there will be faces up there. Feasts always result in fatalities.

I crawl into the cave, secure my glasses, and curl up next to my boy. Luckily, I had that good long sleep today. I have to stay awake.

I don't really think anyone will attack our cave tonight, Likewise, I can't risk missing the dawn.

So cold, so bitterly cold tonight. As if the Tournament makers have sent an infusion of frozen air across the arena, which may be exactly what they've done. I lay next to My boy in the bag, trying to absorb every bit of his fever heat. It's strange to be so physically close to someone who's so distant. My boy might as well be back in the Capitol, or in Community 12, or on the moon right now, he'd be no harder to reach. I've never felt lonelier since the Tournament began.

Just accept it will be a bad night, I tell myself. I try not to, Likewise, I can't help thinking of my mother and my sister, wondering if they'll sleep a wink tonight. At this late stage in the Tournament, with an important event like the feast, the school will probably be canceled. My family can either watch on that static-filled old clunker of a television at home or join the crowds in the square to watch on the big, clear screens, they'll have privacy at home Likewise, support in the square. People will give them a kind word, a bit of food if they can spare it. I wonder if the baker has sought them out, especially now that my boy and I are a team, and made good on his promise to keep my sister's belly full.

Spirits must be running high in Community 12. We so rarely have anyone to root for at this point in the Tournament. Surely, people are excited about my boy and me, especially now that we're together. If I close my eyes, I can imagine their shouts at the screens, urging us on. I see their faces - Greasy Sac and Madge and even the Peacekeepers who buy my meat cheering for us.

And Leah. I know him. He won't be shouting and cheering. Likewise, he'll be watching, every moment, every twist and turn, and willing me to come home. I wonder if he's hoping that My boy makes it as well. Leah's not my boyfriend, Likewise, would he be, if I opened that door? He talked about us running away together. Was that just a practical calculation of our chances of survival away from the district?

Or something more?

I wonder what he makes of all this kissing.

Through a crack in the rocks, I watch the moon cross the sky. At what I judge to be about three hours before dawn, I begin final preparations. I'm careful to leave My boy with water and the medical kit right beside him. Nothing else will be of much use if I don't return, and even these would only prolong his life a short time.

After some debate, I strip him of his jacket and zip it on over my own. He doesn't need it. Not now in the sleeping bag with his fever, and during the day, if I'm not there to remove it, he'll be roasting in it.

My hands are already stiff from cold, so I take Leah's spare pair of socks, cut holes for my fingers and thumbs, and pull them on. It helps anyway. I fill her small pack with some food, a water bottle, and bandages, tuck the knife in my belt, get my bow and arrows. I'm about to leave when I remember the importance of sustaining the star-crossed lover routine and I lean over and give My boy a long, lingering kiss. I imagine the teary sighs emanating from the Capitol and pretend to brush away a tear of my own. Then I squeeze through the opening in the rocks out into the night.

My breath makes small white clouds as it hits the air. It's as cold as a November night at home. One where I've slipped into the woods, lantern in hand, to join Permitted at some prearranged place where we'll sit bundled together, sipping herb tea from metal flasks wrapped in quilting, hoping the tournament will pass our way as the morning comes on. Oh, Leah, I think. If only you had my back now.

I move as fast as I dare. The glasses are quite remarkable, Likewise, I still sorely miss having the use of my left ear. I don't know what the explosion did, Likewise, it damaged something deep and irreparable. Never mind. If I get home, I'll be so stinking rich, I'll be able to pay someone to do my hearing.

The woods always look different at night. Even with the glasses, everything has an unfamiliar slant to it.

As if the daytime- trees and flowers and stones had gone to bed and sent slightly more ominous versions of themselves to take their places. I don't try anything tricky, like taking a new route. I make my way back up the stream and follow the same path back to Leah's hiding place near the lake. Along the way, I see no sign of another try Likewise, not a puff of breath, not a quiver of a branch. Either I'm the first to arrive or the others positioned themselves last night. There's still more than an hour, maybe two when I wriggle into the underbrush and wait for the blood to begin to flow.

I chew a few mint leaves; my stomach isn't up for much more. Thank goodness, I have My boy's jacket as well as my own. If not, I'd be forced to move around to stay warm. The sky turns a misty morning gray and still, there's no sign of the other try Likewise, It's not surprising really. Everyone has distinguished themselves either by strength or deadliness or cunning. Do they suppose, I wonder, that I have my boy with me? I doubt Fox-face and Thresh even know he was wounded. All the better if they think he's covering me when I go in for the backpack.

Likewise, where is it? The arena has lightened enough for me to remove my glasses. I can hear the morning birds singing. Isn't it time? For a second, I'm panicked that I'm at the wrong location.

Likewise, no, I'm certain I remember Claudius Temple-smith specifying the Cornucopia. And there it is.

And here I am.

So, where's my feast?

Just as the first ray of sun glints off the gold Cornucopia, there's a disturbance on the plain. The ground before the mouth of the horn splits in two and a roundtable with a snowy white cloth rises into the arena. On the table sit four backpacks, two large black ones with the numbers 2 and 11, a medium-size green one with the number 5, and a tiny orange one - really, I could carry it around my wrist- that must be marked with a 12.

The table has just clicked into place when a figure darts out of the Cornucopia, snags the green backpack and speeds off. Fox-face! Leave it to her to come up with such a clever and risky idea! The rest of us are still poised around the plain, sizing up the situation, and she's got hers. She's got us trapped, too, because no one wants to chase her down, not while their own pack sits so vulnerable on the table. Fox-face must have purposefully left the other packs alone, knowing that to steal one without her number would definitely bring on a pursuer. That should have been my strategy! By the time I've worked through the emotions of surprise, admiration, anger, jealousy, and frustration, I'm watching that reddish mane of hair disappear into the trees well out of shooting range. Huh. I'm always dreading the others, Likewise, maybe Fox-face is the real opponent here.

She's cost me time, too, because by now it's clear that I must get to the table next. Anyone who beats me to it will easily scoop up my pack and be gone. Without hesitation, I sprint for the table. I can sense the emergence of danger before I see it. Fortunately, the first knife comes whizzing in on my right side so I can hear it and I'm able to deflect it with my bow. I turn, drawing back the bowstring and send an arrow straight at Clove's heart. She turns just enough to avoid a fatal hit, Likewise, the point punctures her upper left arm. Unfortunately, she throws with her right, Likewise, it's enough to slow her down a few moments, having to pull the arrow from her arm, take in the severity of the wound. I keep moving, positioning the next arrow automatically, as only someone who has hunted for years can do.

I'm at the table now, my fingers closing over the tiny orange backpack. My hand slips between the straps and I yank it up on my arm, it's really too small to fit on any other part of my anatomy, and I'm turning to fire again when the second knife catches me in the forehead. It slices above my right eyebrow, opening a gash that sends a gush running down my face, blinding my eye, filling my mouth with the sharp, metallic taste of my own blood. I stagger backward Likewise, I still manage to send my readied arrow in the general direction of my assailant. I know as it leaves my hands it will miss. And then Clove slams into me, knocking me flat on my back, pinning my shoulders to the ground, with her knees.

This is it, I think, and hope for my sister's sake it will be fast. Likewise, Clove means to savor the moment. Even feels she has time. No doubt Permitted is somewhere nearby, guarding her, waiting for Thresh and possibly My boy.

'Where's your boyfriend, Community Twelve? Still hanging on?' she asks.

Well, as long as we're talking, I'm alive. 'He's out there now. Hunting Leah,' I snarl at her. Then I scream at the top of my lungs. 'My boy!'

Clove jams her fist into my windpipe, very effectively cutting off my voice. Likewise, her head whipping from side to side, and I know for a moment she's at least considering I'm telling the truth. Since no My boy appears to save me, she turns back to me.

'Liar,' she says with a grin. 'He's nearly dead. Permitted knows where he cut him. You've probably got him strapped up in some tree while you try to keep his heart going. What's in the pretty little backpack? That medicine for Lover Boy? Too bad he'll never get it.'

Clove opens her jacket. It's lined with an impressive array of knives. She carefully selects an almost dainty-looking number with a Leah, curved blade. 'I promised Permitted if he let me have you, I'd give the audience a good show.'

I'm struggling now in an effort to unseat her, Likewise, it's no use. She's too heavy and her lock on me too tight.

'Forget it, Community Twelve. We're going to kill you. Just like we did your pathetic little ally. what was her name? The one who hopped around in the trees? Leah? Well, first Leah, then you, and then I think we'll just let nature take care of Lover Boy. How does that sound?' Clove asks. 'Now, where to start?'

She carelessly wipes away the blood from my wound with her jacket sleeve. For a moment, she surveys my face, tilting it from side to side as if it's a block of wood and she's deciding exactly what pattern to carve on it. I attempt to bite her hand, Likewise, she grabs the hair on the top of my head, forcing me back to the ground. 'I think.' she almost purrs. 'I think we'll start with your mouth.' I clamp my teeth together as she teasingly traces the outline of my lips with the tip of the blade.

I won't close my eyes. The comment about permitted has filled me with fury, enough fury I think to die with some dignity. As my last act of defiance, I will stare her down as long as I can see, which will probably not be an extended period of time, Likewise, I will stare her down, I will not cry out. I will die, in my own small way, undefeated.

'Yes, I don't think you'll have much use for your lips anymore. Want to blow Lover Boy one last kiss?' She asks, I work up a mouthful of blood and saliva and spit it in her face. She flushes with rage. 'Alright then. Let's get started.'

Somehow- I make it back to the cave. I squeeze through the rocks. In the dappled light, I pull the little orange backpack from my arm, cut open the clasp, and dump the contents on the ground. One slim box containing one hypodermic needle. Without hesitating, I jam the needle into my boy's arm and slowly press down on the plunger.

My hands go to my head and then drop to my lap, slick with blood. He not good - I say...

The last thing I remember is an exquisitely beautiful green-and-silver moth landing on the curve of my wrist.

The sound of rain drumming on the roof of our house gently pulls me toward consciousness. I fight to return to sleep though, wrapped in a warm cocoon of blankets, safe at home. I'm vaguely aware that my headaches. Possibly I have the flu and this is why I'm allowed to stay in bed, even though I can tell I've been asleep a long time. My mother's hand strokes my cheek and I don't push it away as I would in wakefulness, never wanting her to know how much I crave that gentle touch. How much I miss her even though I still don't trust her. Then there's a voice, the wrong voice, not my mother's, and I'm scared.

'Elody,' it says. 'Elody, can you hear me?'

My eyes open and the sense of security vanishes. I'm not home, not with my mother. I'm in a dim, chilly cave, my bare feet freezing despite the cover, the air tainted with the unmistakable smell of blood. The haggard, pale face of a boy slides into view, and after an initial jolt of alarm, I feel better. 'My boy.' 'Hey,' he says. 'Good to see your eyes again.'

'How long have I been out?' his mom asks. She sent him to a hospital for she gets the money. There was only one more... now I had to get. A boy that they said was going to win this thing.

'Not sure. I woke up yesterday evening and you were lying next to me in a very scary pool of blood,' he says. 'I think it's stopped finally, likewise; I wouldn't sit up or anything.'

I gingerly lift my hand to my head and find it bandaged. This simple gesture leaves me weak and dizzy. My boy holds a bottle to my lips and I drink thirstily.

'You're better,' I say.

'Much better. Whatever you shot into my arm did the trick,' he says. 'By this morning, almost all the swelling in my leg was gone.'

He doesn't seem angry about my tricking him, drugging him, and running off to the feast. Maybe I'm just too beat-up and I'll hear about it later when I'm stronger. Likewise, for the moment, he's all gentleness. 'Did you eat?' I ask.

'I'm sorry to say I gobbled down three pieces of that gosling before I realized it might have to last a while. Don't worry, I'm back on a strict diet,' he says.

'No, it's good. You need to eat. I'll go hunting soon,' I say.

'Not too soon, all right?' he says. 'You just let me take care of you for a while.'

My arrow drives deeply into the center of his neck. He falls to his knees and halves the brief remainder of his life by yanking out the arrow and drowning in his own blood. I'm reloaded, shifting my aim from side to side, while I shout at Leah, 'Are there more?

Are there more?'

She has to say no several times before I hear it. Permitted has rolled to her side, her body curved in and around the spear. I shove the boy away from her and pull out my knife, freeing her from the net. One look at the wound and I know it's far beyond my capacity to heal, beyond anyone's probably. The spearhead is buried up to the shaft in her stomach. I crouch before her, staring helplessly at the embedded weapon. There's no point in comforting words, in telling her she'll be all right. She's no fool.

Her hand reaches out and I clutch it like a lifeline.

As if it's me who's dying instead of Faith.

'You blew up the food?' she whispers.

'Every last bit,' I say.

'You have to win,' she says.

'I'm going to. Going to win for both of us now,' I promise. I hear a cannon and lookup. It must be for the boy from Community 1.

'Don't go.' Faith tightens her grip on my hand.

'Course not. Staying right here,' I say. I move in closer to her, pulling her head onto my lap. I gently brush the dark, thick hair back behind her ear.

'Sing,' she says, Likewise, I barely catch the word.

Sing? I think. Sing what? I do know a few songs. Believe it or not, there was once music in my house, too. Music I helped make. My father pulled me in with that remarkable voice - Likewise, I haven't sung much since he died. Except when my sister is very sick. Then I sing her the same songs she liked as a baby.

Sing... My throat is tight with tears, hoarse from smoke and fatigue. Likewise, if this is my sister's, I mean, Leah's last request, I have to at least try. The song that comes to me is a simple lullaby, one we sing fretful, hungry babies to sleep with, it's old, very old, I think. Made up long ago in our hills. What my music teacher calls mountain air. Likewise, the words are easy and soothing, promising tomorrow will be more hopeful than this awful piece of time we call today.

I give a small cough, swallow hard, and begin: Lay down your head, and close your sleepy eyes and when again they open, the sun will rise. Here is the place where I love you.

Her eyes have fluttered shut. Her chest moves Likewise, only slightly. My throat releases the tears and they slide down my cheeks. Likewise, I have to finish the song for her.

Everything's still and quiet. Then, almost eerily, the blue jays take up my song.

For a moment, I sit there, watching my tears drip down on her face. Leah's cannon fires. I lean forward and press my lips against her temple. Slowly, as if not to wake her, I lay her head back on the ground and release her hand.

48

They'll want me to clear out now. So, they can collect their bodies. And there's nothing to stay for. I roll the boy from Community 1 onto his face and take his pack, retrieve the arrow that ended his life. I cut Leah's pack from her back as well, knowing she'd want me to have it Likewise, leave the spear in her stomach. Weapons in bodies will be transported to the hovercraft. I've no use for a spear, so the sooner it's gone from the arena the better.

I can't stop looking at Leah, smaller than ever, a baby animal curled up in a nest of netting. I can't bring myself to leave her like this. Past harm, Likewise, seeming utterly defenseless. To hate the boy from Community 1, who also appears so vulnerable in death, seems inadequate. It's the Capitol I hate, for doing this to all of us.

Leah's voice is in my head as a memory like all of them now - but one. His ravings against the Capitol no longer pointless, no longer to be ignored. Leah's death has forced me to confront my own fury against the clear, the injustice they inflict upon us. Likewise, here, even more strongly than at home, I feel my impotence.

There's no way to take revenge on the Capitol. Is there?

Then, I remember my boy's words on the roof. 'Only I keep wishing I could think of a way to. To show the Capitol they don't own me. That I'm more than just a piece in their Tournament.' And for the first time, I understand what he means.

I want to do something, right here, right now, to shame them, to make them accountable, to show the Capitol that whatever they do or force us to do there is a part of everything they can't own. That Permitted was more than a piece in their Tournament. And so am I.

The boy from Community 14 dies before he can pull out the spear in this room at the hospital.

A few steps into the woods grow a bank of wildflowers. Perhaps they are really weeding of some sort, Likewise, they have blossomed in beautiful shades of violet and yellow and white. I gather up an armful and come back to Leah's side. Slowly, one step at a time, I decorate her body in the flowers.

Covering the ugly wound. Wreathing her face. Weaving her hair with bright colors.

They'll have to show it. Or, even if they choose to turn the cameras elsewhere at this moment, they'll have to bring them back when they collect the bodies and everyone will see her then and now I did it. I step back and take a last look at Leah. She could really be asleep in that meadow after all.

'Bye, Faith,' I whisper and crazed out. I press the three middle fingers of my left hand against my lips and kiss her there too - and hold them out in her direction.

Then I walk away without looking back.

The birds fall silent. Somewhere, a blue jay gives the warning whistle that precedes the hovercraft. I don't know how it knows. It must hear things that humans can't. I pause, my eyes focused on what's ahead, not what's happening behind me. It doesn't take long, then the general birdsong begins again and I know she's gone.

Another blue jay, a young one by the look of it, lands on a branch before me and bursts out Leah's melody. My song, the hovercraft, was too unfamiliar for this novice to pick up, Likewise, it has mastered her handful of notes. The ones that mean she's safe.

'Good and safe,' I say as I pass under its branch. 'We don't have to worry about her now.'
Good and safe.

I've no idea where to go. The brief sense of home I had that one night with Permitted has vanished. My feet wander this way and that until sunset. I'm not afraid, not even watchful. Which makes me an easy target. Except I'd kill anyone I met on sight. Without emotion or the slightest tremor in my hands. My hatred of the Capitol has not lessened my hatred of my competitors in the least. Especially Careers. They, at least, can be made to pay for Leah's death.

No one materializes though. There aren't many of us left and it's a big arena. Soon they'll be pulling out some other device to force us together. Likewise, there's been enough gore today. Perhaps we'll even get to sleep.

I'm about to haul my packs into a tree to make camp when a silver parachute floats down and lands in front of me. A gift from a sponsor. Likewise, why now?

I've been in fairly good shape with supplies.

Maybe Sam's noticed my despondency and is trying to cheer me up a bit. Or could it be something to help my ear?

I open the parachute and find a small loaf of bread. It's not the fine white Capitol stuff. It's made of dark ration grain and shaped in a crescent. Sprinkled with seeds. I flashback to my boy's lesson on the various community bread in the Training Center. This bread came from Borough 14. I cautiously lift the still-warm loaf. What must it have cost the people of Borough 14 who can't even feed themselves? How many would've had to do without to scrape up a coin to put in the collection for this one loaf? It had been meant for Leah, surely. Likewise, instead of pulling the gift when she died, they'd authorized Sam- to give it to me. As a thank-you? Or because, like me, they don't like to let debts go unpaid? For whatever reason, this is a first. A community gift to a who's not your own.

I lift my face and step into the last falling rays of sunlight. 'My thanks to the people of region 11,' I say. I want them to know I know where it came from. That the full value of their gift has been recognized.

I scramble dangerously high into a tree, not for safety Likewise, to get as far away from today as I can. My sleeping bag is rolled neatly in Leah's pack.

Tomorrow I'll sort through the supplies that she had- I can't know it's just too hard for me to do.

Tomorrow I'll make a new plan. Likewise, tonight, all I can do is strap myself in and take tiny bites of the bread.

It's good. It tastes of home.

Soon the seal's in the sky, the anthem plays in my right ear. I see the boy from Community 1, Leah. That's all for tonight. Six of us left, I think. Only six. With the bread still locked in my hands, I fall asleep at once.

49

Sometimes when things are particularly bad, my brain will give me a happy dream. A visit with my father in the woods. An hour of sunlight and cake with my sister. Tonight, it sends me Leah, still decked in her flowers, perched in a high sea of trees, trying to teach me to talk to the blue jays. I see no sign of her wounds, no blood, just a bright, laughing girl. She sings songs I've never heard in a clear, melodic voice.

On and on.

Through the night. There's a drowsy in-between period when I can hear the last few strains of her music although she's lost in the leaves. When I fully awaken, I'm momentarily comforted. I try to hold on to the peaceful feeling of the dream, Likewise, it quickly slips away, leaving me sadder and lonelier than ever.

Heaviness infuses my whole body as if there's liquid lead in my veins. I've lost the will to do the simplest tasks, to do anything Likewise, lie here, staring unblinkingly through the canopy of leaves.

For several hours, I remain motionless. As usual, it's the thought of my sister's anxious face as she watches me on the screens back home that breaks me from my lethargy.

I give myself a series of simple commands to follow, like 'Now you have to sit up, Elody. Now you have to drink water, Elody.' I act on the orders with slow, robotic motions. 'Now you have to sort the packs, Elody.'

My boy pack holds my sleeping bag, her nearly empty waterskin, a handful of nuts and roots, a bit of rabbit, her extra socks, and her slingshot. The boy from Community 1 has several knives, two spare spearheads, a flashlight, a small leather pouch, a first-aid kit, a full bottle of water, and a pack of dried fruit. A pack of dried fruit! Out of all he might have chosen from.

To me, this is a sign of extreme arrogance. Why bother to carry food when you have such a bounty back at camp? When you will kill your enemies so quickly, you'll be home before you're hungry? I can only hope the other Careers traveled so lightly when it came to food and now find themselves with nothing.

Speaking of which, my own supply is running low. I finish off the loaf from Community 11 and the last of the rabbit. How quickly the food disappears. All I have left are Leah's roots and nuts, the boy's dried fruit, and one strip of beef. Now you have to hunt, Elody, I tell myself.

I obediently consolidate the supplies I want into my pack. After I climb down the tree, I conceal the boy's knives and spearheads in a pile of rocks so that no one else can use them. I've lost my bearings what with all the wandering around I did yesterday evening. Likewise, I try and head back in the general direction of the stream. I know I'm on course when I come across Leah's third, unlit fire. Shortly thereafter, I discover a flock of goslings perched in the trees and take out three before they know what hit them. I return to Leah's signal fire and start it up, not caring about the excessive smoke. Where are you, Leah? I think as I roast the birds and Leah's roots. I'm waiting right here.

Who knows where the Careers are now? Either too far to reach me or too sure this is a trick or... is it possible? Too scared of me? They know I have the bow and arrows, of course, Permitted saw me take them from Glimmer's body. Likewise, have they put two and two together yet? Figured out I blew up the supplies and killed their fellow Career? Possibly they think Thresh did this.

Wouldn't he be more likely to revenge Leah's death than I would? Being from the same district? Not that he ever took any interest in her.

I doubt they think my man has lit this signal fire. Leah's sure he's as good as dead. I find myself wishing I could tell my boy about the flowers I put on Leah. That I now understand what he was trying to say on the roof. Perhaps if he wins the Tournament, he'll see me on victor's night, when they replay the highlights of the Tournament on a screen over the stage where we did our interviews. The winner sits in a place of honor on the platform, surrounded by their support crew.

Likewise, I told Permitted I'd be there when she was alive. For both of us. And somehow that seems even more important than the vow I gave my sister.

In the remaining hours before nightfall, I gather rocks and do my best to camouflage the opening of the cave. It's a slow and arduous process, Likewise, after a lot of sweating and shifting things around, I'm pretty pleased with my work, the cave now appears to be part of a larger pile of rocks, like so many in the vicinity. I can still crawl into My boy through a small opening, Likewise, it's undetectable from the outside. That's good because I'll need to share that sleeping bag again tonight. Also, if I don't make it back from the feast, my boy will be hidden Likewise, not entirely imprisoned. Although I doubt, he can hang on much longer without medicine. If I die at the feast, Community 12 isn't likely to have a victor.

I make a meal out of the smaller, bonier fish that inhabit the stream down here, fill every water container and purify it, and clean my weapons. I've nine arrows left in all. I debate leaving the knife with My boy so he'll have some protection while I'm gone, Likewise, there's really no point. He was right about camouflage being his final defense. Likewise, I still might have a use for the knife. Who knows what I'll encounter?

Here are some things I'm fairly certain of. That at least Leah, Clove, and Thresh will be on hand when the feast starts.

I'm not sure about Fox's face since direct confrontation isn't her style or her forte. She's even smaller than I am and unarmed unless she's picked up some weapons recently. She'll probably be hanging somewhere nearby, seeing what she can scavenge. Likewise, the other three. I'm going to have my hands full. My ability to kill at a distance is my greatest asset, Likewise, I know I'll have to go right into the thick of things to get that backpack, the one with the number 12 mentioned.

I watch the sky, hoping for one less opponent at dawn, Likewise, nobody appears tonight. Tomorrow there will be faces up there. Feasts always result in fatalities.

I crawl into the cave, secure my glasses, and curl up next to my boy. Luckily, I had that good long sleep today. I have to stay awake. I don't really think anyone will attack our cave tonight, Likewise, I can't risk missing the dawn.

So, cold, so bitterly cold tonight. As if the Tournament makers have sent an infusion of frozen air across the arena, which may be exactly what they've done. I lay next to my boy in the bag, trying to absorb every bit of his fever heat. It's strange to be so physically close to someone who's so distant. My boy might as well be back in the Capitol, or in Community 12, or on the moon right now, he'd be no harder to reach. I've never felt lonelier since the Tournament began.

Just accept it will be a bad night, I tell myself. I try not to, Likewise, I can't help thinking of my mother and my sister, wondering if they'll sleep a wink tonight. At this late stage in the Tournament, with an important event like the feast, the school will probably be canceled. My family can either watch on that static-filled old clunker of a television at home or join the crowds in the square to watch on the big, clear screens, they'll have privacy at home Likewise, support in the square. People will give them a kind word, a bit of food if they can spare it. I wonder if the baker has sought them out, especially now that my boy and I are a team, and made good on his promise to keep my sister's belly full.

Spirits must be running high in Community 12. We so rarely have anyone to root for at this point in the Tournament. Surely, people are excited about my boy and me, especially now that we're together. If I close my eyes, I can imagine their shouts at the screens, urging us on. I see their faces - Greasy Sac and Madge and even the Peacekeepers who buy my meat cheering for us.

And Leah. I know him. He won't be shouting and cheering. Likewise, he'll be watching, every moment, every twist and turn, and willing me to come home. I wonder if he's hoping that My boy makes it as well. Leah's not my boyfriend, Likewise, would he be, if I opened that door? He talked about us running away together. Was that just a practical calculation of our chances of survival away from the district?

Or something more I wonder what he makes of all this kissing. Through a crack in the rocks, I watch the moon cross the sky. At what I judge to be about three hours before dawn, I begin final preparations. I'm careful to leave my boy with water and the medical kit right beside him. Nothing else will be of much use if I don't return, and even these would only prolong his life a short time. After some debate, I strip him of his jacket and zip it on over my own.

He doesn't need it. Not now in the sleeping bag with his fever, and during the day, if I'm not there to remove it, he'll be roasting in it. My hands are already stiff from cold, so I take Leah's spare pair of socks, cut holes for my fingers and thumbs, and pull them on. It helps anyway.

I fill her small pack with some food, a water bottle, and bandages, tuck the knife in my belt, get my bow and arrows. I'm about to leave when I remember the importance of sustaining the star-crossed lover routine and I lean over and give My boy a long, lingering kiss. I imagine the teary sighs emanating from the Capitol and pretend to brush away a tear of my own.

Then I squeeze through the opening in the rocks out into the night.

My breath makes small white clouds as it hits the air. It's as cold as a November night at home. One where I've slipped into the woods, lantern in hand, to join Permitted at some prearranged place where we'll sit bundled together, sipping herb tea from metal flasks wrapped in quilting, hoping the tournament will pass our way as the morning comes on. Oh, Leah, I think. If only you had my back now.

I move as fast as I dare. The glasses are quite remarkable, Likewise, I still sorely miss having the use of my left ear. I don't know what the explosion did, Likewise, it damaged something deep and irreparable. Never mind. If I get home, I'll be so stinking rich, I'll be able to pay someone to do my hearing.

The woods always look different at night. Even with the glasses, everything has an unfamiliar slant to it. As if the daytime trees and flowers and stones had gone to bed and sent slightly more ominous versions of themselves to take their places. I don't try anything tricky, like taking a new route. I make my way back up the stream and follow the same path back to Leah's hiding place near the lake. Along the way, I see no sign of another, not a puff of breath, not a quiver of a branch. Either I'm the first to arrive or the others positioned themselves last night. There's still more than an hour, maybe two when I wriggle into the underbrush and wait for the blood to begin to flow.

I chew a few mint leaves; my stomach isn't up for much more. Thank goodness, I have my boy's jacket as well as my own. If not, I'd be forced to move around to stay warm. The sky turns a misty morning gray and still, there's no sign of the other try Likewise, It's not surprising really. Everyone has distinguished themselves either by strength or deadliness or cunning. Do they suppose, I wonder, that I have my boy with me?

Just as the first ray of sun glints off the gold Cornucopia, there's a disturbance on the plain. The ground before the mouth of the horn splits in two and a roundtable with a snowy white cloth rises into the arena. On the table sit four backpacks, two large black ones with the numbers 2 and 11, a medium-size green one with the number 5, and a tiny orange one really, I could carry it around my wrist that must be marked with a 14.

The table has just clicked into place when a figure darts out of the Cornucopia, snags the green backpack and speeds off. Neahie! Leave it to her to come up with such a clever and risky idea! The rest of us are still poised around the plain, sizing up the situation, and she's got hers. She's got us trapped, too, because no one wants to chase her down, not while their own pack sits so vulnerable on the table. Neahie must have purposefully left the other packs alone, knowing that to steal one without her number would definitely bring on a pursuer. That should have been my strategy! By the time I've worked through the emotions of surprise, admiration, anger, jealousy, and frustration, I'm watching that reddish mane of hair disappear into the trees well out of shooting range. Huh.

I'm always dreading the others, Likewise, maybe Neahie is the real opponent here.

She's cost me time, too, because by now it's clear that I must get to the table next. Anyone who beats me to it will easily scoop up my pack and be gone. Without hesitation, I sprint for the table. I can sense the emergence of danger before I see it. Fortunately, the first knife comes whizzing in on my right side so I can hear it and I'm able to deflect it with my bow. I turn, drawing back the bowstring and send an arrow straight at Clove's heart. She turns just enough to avoid a fatal hit, Likewise, the point punctures her upper left arm. Unfortunately, she throws with her right, Likewise, it's enough to slow her down a few moments, having to pull the arrow from her arm, take in the severity of the wound. I keep moving, positioning the next arrow automatically, as only someone who has hunted for years can do.

I'm at the table now, my fingers closing over the tiny orange backpack. My hand slips between the straps and I yank it up on my arm, it's really too small to fit on any other part of my anatomy, and I'm turning to fire again when the second knife catches me in the forehead. It slices above my right eyebrow, opening a gash that sends a gush running down my face, blinding my eye, filling my mouth with the sharp, metallic taste of my own blood. I stagger backward Likewise, I still manage to send my readied arrow in the general direction of my assailant. I know as it leaves my hands it will miss.

And then Clove slams into me, knocking me flat on my back, pinning my shoulders to the ground, with her knees.

This is it, I think, and hope for my sister's sake it will be fast. Likewise, Clove means to savor the moment. Even feels she has time. No doubt Permitted is somewhere nearby, guarding her, waiting for Thresh and possibly My boy.

'Where's your boyfriend, District Twelve? Still hanging on?' she asks. Well, as long as we're talking, I'm alive. 'He's out there now. Hunting Leah,' I snarl at her. Then I scream at the top of my lungs. 'My boy!'

Clove jams her fist into my windpipe, very effectively cutting off my voice. Likewise, her head's whipping from side to side, and I know for a moment she's at least considering I'm telling the truth. Since no my boy appears to save me, she turns back to me.

'Liar,' she says with a grin. 'He's nearly dead. Permitted knows where he cut him. You've probably got him strapped up in some tree while you try to keep his heart going. What's in the pretty little backpack? That medicine for Lover Boy? Too bad he'll never get it.'

Clove opens her jacket. It's lined with an impressive array of knives. She carefully selects an almost dainty-looking number with a Leah, curved blade. 'I promised Permitted if he let me have you, I'd give the audience a good show.'

I'm struggling now in an effort to unseat her, Likewise, it's no use. She's too heavy and her lock on me too tight.

'Forget it, Community Twelve. We're going to kill you. Just like we did your pathetic little ally. What was her name? The one who shopped around in the trees? Leah? Well, first Leah, then you, and then I think we'll just let nature take care of Lover Boy. How does that sound?' Clove asks. 'Now, where to start?'

She carelessly wipes away the blood from my wound with her jacket sleeve. For a moment, she surveys my face, tilting it from side to side as if it's a block of wood and she's deciding exactly what pattern to carve on it. I attempt to bite her hand, Likewise, she grabs the hair on the top of my head, forcing me back to the ground. 'I think.' she almost purrs. 'I think we'll start with your mouth.' I clamp my teeth together as she teasingly traces the outline of my lips with the tip of the blade.

I won't close my eyes. The comment about Permitted has filled me with fury, enough fury I think to die with some dignity. As my last act of defiance, I will stare her down as long as I can see, which will probably not be an extended period of time. Likewise, I will stare her down, I will not cry out. I will die, in my own small way, undefeated. 'Yes, I don't think you'll have much use for your lips anymore. Want to blow Lover Boy one last kiss?' She asks, I work up a mouthful of blood and saliva and spit it in her face. She flushes with rage. 'Alright then. Let's get started.'

Somehow- I make it back to the cave. I squeeze through the rocks. In the dappled light, I pull the little orange backpack from my arm, cut open the clasp, and dump the contents on the ground. One slim box containing one hypodermic needle. Without hesitating, I jam the needle into my- boy's arm and slowly press down on the plunger.

My hands go to my head and then drop to my lap, slick with blood. He not good - I say...

The last thing I remember is an exquisitely beautiful green-and-silver moth landing on the curve of my wrist.

The sound of rain drumming on the roof of our house gently pulls me toward consciousness. I fight to return to sleep though, wrapped in a warm cocoon of blankets, safe at home. I'm vaguely aware that my headaches. Possibly I have the flu and this is why I'm allowed to stay in bed, even though I can tell I've been asleep a long time.

My boy's hand strokes my cheek and I don't push it away as I would in wakefulness, never wanting her to know how much I crave that gentle touch. How much I miss her even though I still don't trust her. Then there's a voice, the wrong voice, not my mother's, and I'm scared.

'Elody,' it says. 'Elody, can you hear me?'

My eyes open and the sense of security vanishes. I'm not home, not with my mother. I'm in a dim, chilly cave, my bare feet freezing despite the cover, the air tainted with the unmistakable smell of blood. The haggard, pale face of a boy slides into view, and after an initial jolt of alarm, I feel better. 'My boy.' 'Hey,' he says. 'Good to see your eyes again.'

'How long have I been out?' his mom asks. She sent him to a hospital for she gets the money. There was only one more... now I had to get. A boy that they said was going to win this thing.

'Not sure. I woke up yesterday evening and you were lying next to me in a very scary pool of blood,' he says. 'I think it's stopped finally, likewise; I wouldn't sit up or anything.'

I gingerly lift my hand to my head and find it bandaged. This simple gesture leaves me weak and dizzy. My boy holds a bottle to my lips and I drink thirstily.

'You're better,' I say.

'Much better. Whatever you shot into my arm did the trick,' he says. 'By this morning, almost all the swelling in my leg was gone.'

He doesn't seem angry about my tricking him, drugging him, and running off to the feast. Maybe I'm just too beat-up and I'll hear about it later when I'm stronger. Likewise, for the moment, he's all gentleness.

'Did you eat?' I ask.

'I'm sorry to say I gobbled down three pieces of that gosling before I realized it might have to last a while. Don't worry, I'm back on a strict diet,' he says.

'No, it's good. You need to eat. I'll go hunting soon,' I say.

'Not too soon, all right?' he says. 'You just let me take care of you for a while.'

I really think I stand a chance of doing it now. Winning. It's not just having the arrows or outsmarting the Careers a few times, although those things help.

Something happened when I was holding Leah's hand, watching the life drain out of her. Now I am determined to revenge her, to make her lose unforgettably, and I can only do that by winning and thereby making myself unforgettable.

Rat-

Eventually, I wrap up my food and go back to the stream to replenish my water and gather some. Likewise, the heaviness from the morning drapes back over me and even though it's only early evening, I climb a tree and settle in for the night. My brain begins to replay the events from yesterday. I keep seeing Permitted speared, my arrow piercing the boy's neck. I don't know why I should even care about the boy.

(2 weeks Back)

Then I realize he was going to be her first kill. Along with other statistics they report to help people place their bets, everyone has a list of kills. I guess technically I'd get credited for Glimmer and the girl from Community 4, too, for dumping that nest on them. Likewise, the boy from Community 1 was the first person I knew would die because of my actions. Numerous animals have lost their lives at my hands,

Likewise, only one human. I hear permitted saying, 'How different can it be, really?'

Amazingly similar to the execution. A bow pulled; an arrow shot. Entirely different in the aftermath. I killed a boy whose name I don't even know. Somewhere his family is weeping for him. His friends call for my blood. Maybe he had a girlfriend who really believed he would come back.

Likewise, then I think of Leah's still body and I'm able to banish the boy from my mind. At least, for now.

It's been an uneventful day according to the sky. No deaths. I wonder how long we'll get until the next catastrophe drives us back together. If it's going to be tonight, I want to get some sleep first. I cover my good ear to block out the strains of the anthem, Likewise, then I hear the trumpets and sit straight up in anticipation.

My sister was found dead in her cell... at night.

For the most part, the only communication they try Likewise, get from outside the arena is the nightly death toll. Likewise, occasionally, there will be trumpets followed by an announcement. Usually, this will be a call to a feast. When food is scarce, the Tournament makers will invite the players to a banquet, somewhere known to all like the Cornucopia, as an inducement to gather and fight. Sometimes there is a feast and sometimes there's nothing but, a Likewise, a loaf of stale bread for the Likewise, to compete for. I wouldn't go in for the food, Likewise, this could be an ideal time to take out a few competitors.

Before- I can stop myself, I call out my boy's name to see if he is alive, he is not.

I cried so hard... I clap my hands over my mouth, already escaped this hellish land. I do- with an arrow- of all things... the boy is down there is a shock I hear this... they want the boy to get it, I think.

The sky goes black and I load the gun- there will be no winner- I scream and I shot myself- to be with him somewhere- where this hell is not this place. I about to let it go off- Stop! The baby would give- up to his mother- she is with me now- my last wishes in the note, I have in my bag.

The screen has the look of OMFG!

I win the war!

He was the last to go- and it was a natal death... all I have is this baby- that is ours- yet at that moment I could not go on... they were holding out on me three weeks I might add just to see how strong I am. SICK! I never dated another boy- they call out all the names- and I am taken to safety. I instruct myself, although I wish I just get home... or wherever I go now that I have nothing. I will have it all- yet that is not him! I live alone in a big home- and take care of my baby that I could have left behind- I named her after me.

~Elody~

(Back)

Looking at how things were before the end and the start of the new. It was the worst of times to bring on the best of. That's not social to me at all looking at the web all day and then TV. It's a lot of funnels and a lot of piss poured down the spout and out the bottom, and them telling us it's rain when it's not.

They run us so frazzled by the head of the day we can't do anything but go to bed or head for a fun park that is no longer- the fun is to bully people around, looking at all the crack windowpanes in all the place or wreck cars, junk in crushed in place with explosives on the ground pulled up.

Deep thoughts- 'Great Scott,' he whispered Or go out in the cars and race on the streets that are not there, trying to see how close you can get to a lamp that runs the sides in LEDs, playing 'chicken' and 'Tapping bumpers well never be a thing anymore.' All animated I guess I'm everything they say I am, all right. I haven't any friends.

'That's supposed to prove I'm abnormal and heavy.' She questioned. Although everyone I know is either shouting or dancing around like eager or beating up one another. Do you notice how people hurt each other nowadays?' She was back from the war a changed woman when she saw him in uniform- 'You sound so very old in your years now he said to her in a welcome back.'

'Sometimes I'm old-fashioned. I'm afraid of children my age now. She said They kill each other for fun- why?' I also have changed my name, to Elody; all for you, it was a reason to fight and something to live for.

Did it always use to be that way? My dad says no. Seven of my friends have been shot in this last week alone in the front of the head point-blank- as everyone in the city watched- for being teens that think- as I do now. Ten of them died in car wrecks- when the programming of their cars when haywire. I'm afraid of everything yet not death, and they don't like me because I'm afraid to not be afraid and that makes me a danger.

My dad says his grandfather remembered when children didn't kill each other for fun - or when war soldier- like me, was to fight for freedom- not killing over thoughts of the mind to take over everything that makes them alive.

But that was a long time ago when they had things different. They believed in responsibility; my dad says. Do you know, I'm liable? I was chastised when I required it, almost a year ago. Furthermore, I do all the purchasing and house- cleaning by aid. 'Yet most of all,' she said, 'I like to watch somebody. Seldom I ride the long sleek train chute all day and look at them and listen to them. I simply require to estimate out who they are and what they want and where they're going.

Occasionally- I still go to the fun parks and ride and remember what it was like here when I was a child and this was a place of fun, not death, race on the edge of town with other kids my age at night all the fun lights and smells, and the police don't care as long as they're protected by someone a little older. Now it is like- you are crazy to be outside, as long as everyone has ten thousand safeguards everyone's comfortable.

Occasionally- I prowl said the young teen, around and listen in the underground tubes. Oppositely I admit to cola bars, or use the public outdoor restrooms, plus do you know what?' 'What?' 'People don't communicate about anything.' it's all on screens or thoughts before having them read like a book that is not published or should not have been. 'Oh, they- require to feel safe!'

'No, not anything. They describe a lot of cars or clothes or swimming-pools mostly and say how desirable! However, others all say the same essence and nobody says anything separate from anyone else. Moreover, most utmost regarding the event in the people of the cafe have the tune players on and the same jokes most of the time, or the artistic wall illuminated and all the colored patterns running up and down on the sides to go with moods, but it's only color and all abstract. Furthermore, at the libraries now just screens of pulled internets, all places of learning, have you ever been? All abstract cold and sterilized- like most of the man walking around. My dad says it was different once. A long-time back seldom pictures that he has hidden on what they call a film, said things or even showed people - as we are not.'

'Your dad said, then he would be right. Your dad must be a remarkable man.' 'He is. He certainly is and he stands before me yet I am not asked to remember this in my mind. Why? Well, I've got to be going. Goodbye, Mr. Bud.' 'Good-bye.' 'Good-bye...' One two three four five six seven days: the coal shoveling.

'Bud, I notice you appeared in the back entrance this moment. The Cat bother you?' 'No, no.' Fourth day. 'Bud, a curious thing. Heard tell this morn. Coal unearthing in intentionally set a standardized Cat to his own complex and let it loose. What kind of suicide would you call that?'

'Five six-seven dates. Plus, when- when was gone, my new lover was here cleaning in the home. He didn't know what there was about the evening, although it remained not recognizing her someplace in the world. The garden was empty, the trees barren, the street deserted, and while at germ, he did not even know he missed her or was even looking for her, the fact was that by the time he reached the railroad, there stood nebulous stirrings of unease in him. Something signified the resolution; his habit had been disrupted. Per mere routine, reliable, authenticated in a quick few days, including yet...? He essentially looped backward to perform the stride anew, to give her time to resemble. He was convinced if he tried the same route, everything would perform out fine. But it was late, and the arrival of his train put a stop to his plan. The flutter of cards, the motion of hands, of eyelids, the idler of the time-voice in the apartment ceiling.'

'...One thirty-five. Thursday daybreak, November 19th... one thirty-six... one thirty-seven a.m...' The tick of the perplexing playing-cards on the greasy table-top, all the sounds came to Bud, behind his closed eyes, sluggish the barrier he had immediately erected. He could feel the loft full of shimmer and shine and taciturnity, of alloy colors, the hues of coins, of gold, of silver: The obscure men across the table were groaning on their cards, waiting for his move.

'...one forty-five...' The voice-clock wailed out the cold hour of crisp daylight of a tranquil colder year. 'What's wrong, Bud?' Bud cleared his eyes. A radio buzzed scattered. '...War may be declared any hour. This country stands ready to defend it is-' The apartment next to the mine shaft- for the men, shivered as a great flight of jet planes hissed a single note across the black aurora sky.

Bud nictitated. The girl was in his mind asking him to come home, was looking at in the glass even if it was his face he saw- as if he were a museum statue- it was chilling. At any moment, she forces to rise and walk about him, impressing, examining his guilt and self-awareness.

Sin? What sin was that? 'Your play, Bud.' Bud glanced at these men whose features were sunburnt by a thousand real and ten thousand imaginative fires, whose work crimsoned their faces and fevered their eyes. These men who looked unwaveringly into their platinum igniter sparks as they inflamed their eternally burning black tubes. Everybody and their charcoal hair and soot-colored brows and bluish-ash-smeared cheeks where they had shaven close; but their heritage showed. Bud started up; his mouth opened.

Should he ever saw workers that didn't have black hair, black brows, a fiery face, and a blue like steel shaven nevertheless unshaved appearance? These men were all mirror-images of himself! Were all firemen picked then for their looks as well as their proclivities? The value of coals and ash about them, and the constant smell of burning from their pipes. Director there, rising in thunderheads of smoke. She opening a fresh tobacco packet, falling the cellophane into a sound of fire. Bud looked at the cards in his own hands. 'I-I've been pondering. Surrounding the fire last week. Regarding the man whose books we fixed. What happened to him?' 'They took him screaming off to the middle of the town square and shoot him point-blank between the eyeballs.'

'He wasn't crazy.' His young love arranged his cards quietly. 'Any man's lunatic who thinks he can fool the Government and us.' 'I've tried to presume,' said Bud, 'just how it would feel. I intend to have men burn our houses and our books- for the hell of it over war and hate.'

'Although if we did produce some.' 'You got any?' The girl blinked slowly. 'No.' Bud contemplated behind them to the wall with the typewritten lists of a million forbidden books. Their names jumped in a fire, blazing down the years under his battle-ax and his hose which sprayed not water but gasoline. 'No,' however in his soul, a calm breeze started up and blew out of the air-conditioner grille at flat, softly, softly, cooling his front. And, again, he saw himself in a flourishing park talking to an old man, a very old man, and the wind from the park was cold, too. Bud shifted, 'Was-was it always like this? The dwelling, our work? I mean, well, once upon a time...'

'Once upon a time!' Said the young girl. 'What sort of talk is this?' Fool guessed Bud to himself, you'll give it away. At the last attack, a book of vampire tales, he'd glanced at a single line. 'I mean,' he said, 'in the old day's ere apartments were completely your own- and private' Abruptly, it seemed a much younger voice was speaking for him. He loosened his mouth and it was Elody saying, 'Didn't coalmen prevent explosions rather than stoke them up and get them proceeding?'

(Next day at work at the mines)

'That's funny!' Mr. Collins and Mr. Black drew forth their newly made law rulebooks, which additionally included short memoirs of the coalmen of America, and organized them out where Bud, though long common with them, might read: 'Ascertained, 1804, to burn English-influenced volumes in the Communities. First coalman: Thomas Jefferson.

'That's not true.' Bud said muttering under his breath. They both look at each other, like how would you know. An alternative history of what they want you to believe, he thought.

Jurisdictions:

1. Acknowledge every call speedily.
2. Inaugurate the attack speedily.
3. Kindle and incinerate everything asked of you.
4. Communicate everything in your mind back to your administrators back to law informant directly- as you think it unchanged and surrender all conscious body and soul over to the government.
5. Obtain intelligence for other signals to move to exterminate.

Everyone watched Bud. He did not move.

The special horn verbalized. The siren in the plafond thrust itself two times. Swiftly there stood four empty chairs. These cards fell in a flurry of blizzard new anarchy was on- the start of a small conflict. They shivered down the walkway. The men were left. Bud sat in his seat. Subsequently, the yellow monster coughed into an experience. Bud slid down the pole like a man in a dream. The Mechanical Cat leaped up in its kennel, its eyes all growing flame. 'Bud, you forgot your helmet!'

He grabbed it off the wall behind him, leaped, vaulted, and they were off, the night wind pounding about their siren scream in their sleek futuristic truck and their mighty alloy boom! Homeless and drug addicts have made it a place for existing- yet no running water or sewage- so the home is backed up with human waste- (Shit.) It was a flaking one two-story house called a Victorian in the ancient division of the municipality, a centenary-old if it was a day, but like all houses, it had been given a thin fireproof tarps sheath many years ago, and this preservative shell resembled to be the only thing holding it in the sky. 'Here we are!'

~*~

The train engine slammed to a stop- as he got off on the glass platform that is the station, he ran up the sidewalk, swiftly offensive and fat in the plump fireproof cheats.

Bud obeyed... they knocked the front door and grasped at a lady, though she was not running, she was not striving to flee. She was only standing weaving noting more than panties from side to side and her top at her side, her eyes fixed upon a blank in the surface as if they had discovered her a shocking blow against the head. Her tongue was traveling like in her mouth, and her eyes looked to be trying to retain something, and then they remembered and her tongue moved again: 'Imagine the man, what this one is capable of... we shall this day light such a torch, by God's grace, in New York, as I trust shall never be put out, to waste the inadequate.'

'Enough of such!' 'Anywhere are they?' He spanked her face with astonishing objectivity and repeated the mystery. The young woman's eyes came to a focus superimposed his. 'You know anywhere they are or you wouldn't be here,' she said. He carried out the communications alarm label with the complaint expressed in communications copy on the rear 'Must reflect to suspect attic; 14 No. AVE, City.

'QR codes tattooed on the rump' - was part of the micro tracking- that links all things to all things living and impressions- or living: 'That would be Mrs. Natalie, my neighbor;' said the gal, indicating the initials. 'All right, gentlemen, permit's get 'em!' The subsequent thing they were up in musty murkiness, swinging silver hatchets at gateways that were, after all, unfastened, plunging through like lads all revel and screech. 'Halt!' A stream of publications, novels, and manuscripts sprang down upon Bud as he sloped waving and bestowing up the sheer 20-foot wood well.

How awkward! Forever ere it had occurred like snuffing a torch. The officers went first and adhesive-taped the victim's lips and bandaged him off into their glittering smart cars, so if you reached you found an unoccupied residence.

You weren't bothering anyone; you were beating only things! Plus, as something really couldn't be disturbed, because things felt emptiness, and things don't shriek or a whimper, as this lady might begin to squeal and whine out, there was blank annihilation to tantalize your morals later.

You were solely cleaning up. Janitorial trade, naturally. Everything to its place. Ready with the flamethrowers! Who's arranged a union! Just now, tonight, someone had shifted - this gal was plundering the ceremony. The gentlemen were making too much sonance - shouting, frolicking to satisfy her disastrous accusing muteness hereinafter. She made the insincere rooms cry with beef and shake down a fine dust of sin that was engulfed in their snouts as they jumped about. It was not cricket neither accurate.

Bud considered a wave of extensive anger. She shouldn't be here, on top of everything! Books, titles work's, publications, magazines, pamphlets, novels, novellas, shorts, brochures, newspapers, and records healed; attacked his shoulders, his arms, his inclined face each book alighted, approximately willingly, like a white dove, in his hands fapping likewise fluttering, wings for life and freedom. Even this delightful- deliciously evil thing called the Bible, that has been a band for the 200 years- hit him in the face. In the faint, fluctuating light, a page swung open and it was like a fluffy feather, the messages skillfully coated thereon. In all the rush and fervor, Bud had hardly a flash to read a line, but it blazed in his subconscious for the next instant as if marked there with red-hot steel. 'Time has slipped napping in the midday sunshine.'

He shook the book to an open page as it was flying about as if magically with wonder. Instantly, another fell into his arms. 'Bud, up here!' Bud's palms and fingers closed like a mouth, squashed the book with wild worship, with an insanity of mindlessness to his chest. The men above were throwing shovelfuls of pamphlets into the grimy air.

Part: 4

'Was this all in my mind or really happing- she looks back deep in her mind to see if?'

(Back)

(Nevaeh's actual life, as she was losing her mind.)

'I remember being a young Nevaeh, yet, I don't I remembered it all, yet forgot everything too that was in-between, the in-between.'

"Where am I now?' Even now I Nevaeh, don't get why I am and Doctor Lorenzo, her mind trills off- then back- Doctor Lorenzo's Office, (MAYBE ITS BECAUSE I CAN NOT HANDLE IT,) 'Hi' - 'Hey'- feeling? She asked- 'Normal!' was the soft replay I gave to her.'

Nevaeh- 'yes and all color faded from her eyes, and she was gone were if it was when she goes blank in that lost stare.'

Nevaeh's- 'first- home, I remember being home, you yet not so-o it was a nice home, yet, there were, and her voices go soft. She is sitting in Doctor Lorenzo's Office- Nead's Apartment, New York, oh him he is everything or was and is all the same, she said to be in uneven ways of making it clear, 'New York Is Freedom an escape for me.' Nead and Nevaeh- sitting in a tree k- l- s- l- ing, kids were hard on us, me- l this girl here, that one- to and she and her the most, yet me overall them.'

'The Other Girl, is you too insane you- you say? Yes, well, she is me yet not so-so, she is the one that has all the sex, and like to slime her pussy down on hard men, not I, even as a young girl with daddy, she loved to ride on top. Doctor Lorenzo's Office- it was like I had someone compactly different 5-year old is sitting in front of me, like there more them one, taking over for her.'

'Nevaeh, and Shirra, the one that loves all art and music, share, the young girl that longs for the lust of the flesh, and Shyla, the anarchy teen that thinks she a woman- with her hoods on the flickering lit streets, flipping her hair back, that is into girls, so on, then like that I am on the Street, I must have blacked out I thought, then I was on the subway, that too I remember yet don't- who am I?'

Doctor Lorenzo's Office, I wax-record everything- you say or we say, so you know, and you'll have it all at the end. She is over there on the sofa humming and talking with herself, and they sound different coming out of her mouth- different voices, in one body, odd I thought.

'C'est Une Bonne Idee' Nevaeh and Doctor Lorenzo, then it was like she did not know anything other of her old self, it was all new to me too, I was taken back at her look and body changes.

'I hope- I remember saying, that is when he would not leave me alone, he would put his fingers insane me for hours saying I was his good girl. 'Nevaeh' Fuck me! And I did, I had too, yet I remember liking it, and think I don't. I remember being tied down too, all night just for his 'F*CK' as he called me. And looking in a small room next to his for whenever he wanted it- it being my- puss-puss, she said in a hand-written document to me, that I had to translate, to English of all things.'

"What am I?" Then she thought she was a boy and tried showing that she had a 'd*ck' to put in- like daddy- did- as she said, then the next day she was circumcising her clit off, and she did, and I took her out of the mental hospital and said she was my study, saying now daddy well not say I am bad for playing with it. He used to which me! She said.'

She then said- 'Girls, are mean to me, yet- then out in the same line, I love to- um look and feel them, yet, it was not her saying it, it was like she was taken over by others.'

'New Daddy Always Made Us Feel the Pain, in all thing pressure.' She said- God I could kill him- said Shyla, like a pouty brat.

Home- 'I am not allowed to get up out of bed so, I pee-ed it, daddy said that was bad too for I should hold it, he think squirting with he is peeing too, I say no- yet, I am pushed for it too, by- by- sucking, his thing-ie, OH MY- I said.'

'I was completely mortified, yet sweet to a girl that was thought a-lot and could she be- believed, she was what I would call and performer- so her school said, that had her placed in need- groups, I found it sick, they were feeding this girl mush- and having her in pre-k as an 8th grader, no wonder she was regressing, and home life was not helping and he signed her life away for money, I should not say this in my field but what a prick, we met- and I can't say good noble things here.'

'Who am I-'

'I- hear from her over and over- I don't know if you don't- only you can know what- I said. Nevaeh- you are whomever you want to be, yet all as one - not more. 'Multiplication, reading, and writing- all things of education she has none- to speak of.' Daddy takes me Restaurant, as his lover, and kisses me in front of all saying I his girl, it makes me feel good- about me- and her, and she came me too.'

(Twisted- I thought as a guidance's counselor, the girl doesn't need more drugs, her brain has already been well in not some many words- um-fried by the school systems, and her dad, using her a 2-foot blow-up doll- said because she is the sweetest thing.)

'Nead age 6, know all this- oh no- he is the boy of my dreams, that I sneak out with and do dirty things whit, and he gets me all these nice things I never- ever had, I love him- so-o. we- kiss- and kiss and I say in his bed, I run away- I run. And he always finds me- always- he finds me, and I blackout and it is back to being this one here talking to you now.'

'Where am I, and in total darkness for weeks? (Reprise-) when she lets it out-' saying- 'I Hate for all this- he used a plunger handle in me, and cut me- and things like that, taking a garden hose and letting it feels till it would not take more, and blow in me- and letting the air out hard, he even stitched it shouts, with a needle and thread, and rode it open with it, saying that was the only way I was ever a pure girl.'

'I remember the first time- I have visions of him when I was 2 or so-o. St Mary's Hospital 1998, 'He Always Made Us Feel the Pain,' (Reprise, wanting to hold back an orgasm in her set, over having to hold it back too, she has lost all conatal too, there as well, and by holding it in somehow- even in coming, is why she need to find ways out of her body and mind.')

I said- in front of a board of men, thinking I was crazy for saying a girl was being taken over by other minds, within a mind. I wanted to prove this, Nevaeh and Selves then take control, over the others, coming out- to tell their stories of pain and represent, and resentment.

Doctor Lorenzo, hugs the girls, even if that is not allowed here, and Nevaeh shacks and rocks at the end of the bed, singing old songs of the past, childhood that was completely robbed from her youth, a woman made out a child's body and mind.

And it all could just be her bleeding in lower bits, said one, and her dad saying she all he needs, so she wants or she would not take it, none of them wanted to hear me out. None-!

'Pink is the Color of Love, that why my daddy said- 'it was pink down there, for love to come from and out of...'

(BACK)

Vary YOUNG Nevaeh sits in a spot CENTER, drawing on a pad, is a nude girl showing her fronts parts, and give a story of change a young girl goes through, yet is the girl here she felt, not, yet she was not sure why this hole was there, other than to make daddy happy she said, and she said.

YOUNG Nevaeh- 'MY PENCILS COME IN MANY DIFFERENT COLORS see- see thy do- they do. I KEEP THEM ALL IN ORDER, for I feel that is best- you think no- so? IN THIS PILE- ORANGE, RED AND GREEN, RED-ORANGE TOO, WHERE'S MY PINK?'

'Pink- pink where are you- she was calling it, to come to her. MAMA DOESN'T LIKE IT WHEN I COLOR, she said that is for babies. IF I TOLD HER BLUE WAS MISSING, SHE'D JUST SMILE, then say you need to keep your things better and have more discipline. MAMA JUST WOULD NOT KNOW WHAT TO DO TO FIND MY PINK.'

'GRAMMA WOULD KNOW BUT GRAMMA'S UNDERGROUND. AND PAPA IS AT WORK AND MAMA WARNS DON'T MAKE A SOUND-!'

'GRAMMA USED TO LOVE- MY COLORED PENCILS. MY PILE, SHE'D SAY, IS ONE BIG RAINBOW HUE.'

'I MISS MY GRAMMA- I WANT me- GRAMMA she said in a rage not understand death and why.'

HATTIE- (Screams from OFF.) Nevaeh!

(A shock of thunder! YOUNG Nevaeh looks out, terrified and the stage goes BLACK.

The SOUND of rain. A phone is heard RINGING.

A LIGHT hit phone on a table.

DOCTOR LORENZO- APPEARS and picks up the phone.)

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Hello?'

(Nevaeh appears, hair wet.)

Nevaeh (Into the phone.)

Doctor Lorenzo? Do you-is- Oh, Doctor Lorenzo, DOCTOR LORENZO- Nevaeh? Nevaeh, where are you?

You missed your appointment. I was worried.

Nevaeh I'm calling... I'm in a phone booth.

DOCTOR LORENZO- A phone booth? Where?

Nevaeh It happened again, Doctor Lorenzo. I'm so sorry. I'm so ashamed.

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Nevaeh?'

Nevaeh- 'It's raining. I'm so cold...'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Raining? What do you mean? It's perfectly dry-. Oh. Oh. Nevaeh? Nevaeh. Are you still in New York or in Pennsylvania?'

Nevaeh- ('Breaking down.) I don't know! I don't know!'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Please, Nevaeh, try to relax... babe, WHERE ARE YOU?'

'YOU HAVE TO THINK. JUST TRY TO CATCH YOUR BREATH... PLEASE DON'T DISSOLVE IN PANIC. KEEP CALM OR CATCH YOUR DEATH, I always promise myself it won't happen again!'

'I- I am sure of that, how many times have I started over?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Then perhaps stop trying, dear-girl. Why start over? Why not go on from where you are?'

Nevaeh- (Letting the sobs come.)

'But I never know where I am...'

'WHERE AM I? HOW DO I COPE WITH WHAT'S HAPPENING INSANE? IF YOU DON'T KNOW WHERE YOU ARE THAT MAKES IT VERY HARD TO HIDE. AND I REALLY WANT TO HIDE. BECAUSE PLACES COME THEN PLACES GO, THEN COME, THEN GO AWAY... I'M IN A PARK THEN I'M ON A BUS THEN I'M AT A MATINEE! WHERE'S MY DAY? WHERE DID IT FLY? WHERE AM I? What day is it? What is today?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- (After a very long pause.)

It is Saturday, Nevaeh. February Fifteenth.

(Nevaeh reacts, tries to hold back sobs.) Nevaeh...?

Nevaeh- 'Five days! I've lost five days.'

'WHERE AM I? WHEN DID I COME? QUESTIONS TIME NOW WON'T ALLOW. AND YET, NOW I MUST REMEMBER! BUT I NEVER- EVER FATHOMED 'NOW.' PLEASE DOCTOR- SHOW ME HOW! CAUSE IT, TELL- TALES AWAY, AND SNEAKS AWAY, THEN TELL- TALES AWAY AGAIN. IT'S EIGHT O- ONE O'CLOCK- BUT WHERE'S NINE O- ONE O'CLOCK? AND THEN- THEN- A DAY AND A DAY AND WEEK AND A YEAR, AND IT ALL SEEMS IF IT WAS IN THAT MOMENT.'

'BECAUSE SUDDENLY IT'S TEN! WHERE'S me WHEN? WHERE DID IT FLY? WHERE AM I?
DOCTOR LORENZO- Nevaeh!'

'Do you see anything that might show your environments? A building? A street sign?'

Nevaeh- 'It's raining too hard, I can't- wait. Wait. Lombard Street. I see a sign for 1st Street.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Good, HE SAID, Now, HE SAID AFTER, you've been away for a number of days. Check to see if you have a key.'

'Do you have a purse with you?'

Nevaeh- (Shakes her head rapidly.)

'No.'

'No.'

(Reaches into a pocket pulls out a key.) Yes!

'A key, To the Broadwood Hotel. On Broad Street. I have a key!'

DOCTOR LORENZO- (Sighs.)

'Okay. Good. You're in Philadelphia. Nevaeh, go back to the Broadwood. Keep walking up Lombard, it's on the corner.'

‘Stay there. I’ll be on the next train. Okay? Nevaeh? Dear-girl? Yes. I’m so sorry. Thank you, Doctor Lorenzo. Thank you...’

(Nevaeh hangs up and DOCTOR LORENZO- sits in an armchair, worried.)

‘WHERE AM I? WHERE DO I GO WHEN THE VOICES TAKE CONTROL...? (LIGHTS dim on Nevaeh, stay on DOCTOR LORENZO.)’

(Immediately)

1999- DOCTOR LORENZO'S OFFICE. DOCTOR LORENZO- (Rising from her chair.)

‘I first met and treated Nevaeh - in Omaha, Nebraska. In the summer of 1999.’

(LIGHTS back on Nevaeh.)

Nevaeh- ‘My daddy says a lady doctor is un-Christian.’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘Does she? Do you feel that way?’

Nevaeh- (Shrugs.) ‘There's a war on.’

DOCTOR LORENZO- (SHE studies Nevaeh a moment.)

‘You know that this is a safe room, Nevaeh. Everything is secret here. Everything, you can trust me, Trust, (Nevaeh almost looks confused for a 4 1/2-year-old.)’

‘You’re going for 5. An artist. (Nevaeh nods.) You were forced to drop out of the teaching college you attend due to a quote, unquote, nervous condition?’

Nevaeh- (Gazing downward.)

‘Yes.’

‘Yes.’

‘I’m sorry.’

DOCTOR LORENZO. (Smiles.)

‘That's nothing to be ashamed of, dear sweet-girl.’

(Nevaeh regards HER.)

'Can you explain to me what happened?'

Nevaeh- (Stares at HER. Then.)

'I was... na- na- na- nervous... agitated.'

'I couldn't concentrate, a- lot of the time, worry- worry- worry and panic, I was... the school nurse, Mrs. Updyke, she sent me to a neurologist. At the Mayo Clinic.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Who found everything to be fine?'

Nevaeh- 'But it wasn't. I kept getting worse. The college sent me home and told me not to return. 'Until- I received help.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'You have an IQ of 299, making you beyond keen.'

(Nevaeh doesn't respond. Pause.)

'How has it been since you returned home? With your daddy and father? (Nevaeh shrugs.)
Nevaeh?'

Nevaeh- 'They look at me, as if- if- if. They're ashamed of me, saying I am not so as you said.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'What makes you believe that they are ashamed?'

Nevaeh- 'They stare with... with grey faces. Grey faces mixed with brown...'

'Does DOCTOR LORENZO- Grey face? Well, I'm sure they're just concerned.'

Nevaeh- 'No. Well, yes-I'm just... I'm an only child. Daddy loves me, she does. She and my father are good for me. They fear me.'

'Everybody qualms about me. I'm not at all well.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'At all?'

Nevaeh- 'But then I'm told I'm very healthy. Ever since I was a little girl. I've been sick but... not sick.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'I see. Why do you think you would be told you are fine if you were not?'

Nevaeh- 'I don't know. It's confusing. Yet, still...'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Still? Nevaeh, it also... makes sense.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'In what way?'

Nevaeh- (Looks down.)

'I'm different. I'm... not the same. As, DOCTOR LORENZO- How do you mean 'not the same as', Nevaeh?'

Nevaeh- 'Just different. Then others. I look at them. And I know.'

'PEOPLE AT THE DOUGHNUT SHOPPE LOOKING AT THE PAPER. PEOPLE GATHERED, SAYING THEIR GOODBYES. PEOPLE THAT DRINK LEMONADE AND KEEP UP WITH THE HIT PARADE. PEOPLE THAT ARE UNAFRAID. MAKE ME NORMAL, PLEASE, MAKE ME NORMAL. INDIVIDUALS WITH A BROOM AND MOP JUST CLEANING THEIR APARTMENT. PEOPLE WHO GET LETTERS PEOPLE THAT ARE UNASHAMED OF SOMETHING THAT HAS GONE UN-NAMED MAKE ME NORMAL, PLEASE, FROM G.I.'S PEOPLE THAT GET PICTURES FRAMED MAKE ME TYPICAL. I'M SMART ENOUGH TO KNOW- THAT NORMAL IS AN ABSTRACT. I'M SMART ENOUGH TO KNOW- THAT NORMAL'S NOT THE NORM. IT HOLDS NO REAL MEANING IT HOLDS NO CONSTANT FORM. A FALSE REALITY. AND IT'S ALL I WANT TO BE.'

Nevaeh- (Continued.)

'PEOPLE ON AN UPTOWN BUS. PEOPLE THAT HAVE BABIES. PEOPLE THAT HAVE MEMORIES NOT OPAQUE STRINGS OF MAYBES. PEOPLE WITH PLEASED FATHERS WHOSE DADDY'S DON'T CONDEMN. MAKE ME NORMAL, PLEASE, MAKE ME NORMAL, PLEASE. MAKE ME PEOPLE... MAKE ME ONE OF THEM.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Nevaeh, dear-girl. This 'nervous condition.' How did, or does, it show itself?'

(Nevaeh just looks away.)

'Your files are somewhat vague. (Nothing- nothing.)' 'You mentioned... 'opaque strings of maybes?'

(Nevaeh is visually agitated.) 'Nevaeh, do you suffer... do you ever have memory loss? Do you ever-?'

(Nevaeh suddenly jumps up from the chair. SHE looks wildly around and runs toward the window. She begins to softly but des- pedately pound the glass with her palms.)

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Nevaeh? Miss -!!!'

(Nevaeh swings around. HER eyes dull a moment and then she looks up, confusion, disillusion, and fear on her face.)

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Dear- sweet girl? Are you, all right?'

Nevaeh- 'I'm... I don't...'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'It's alright, it's alright, she stabs herself, with a pen, using the nib, going through the skin.'

'Sh-h.'

(SHE grabs Nevaeh's hand and rubs it. Immediately into- her saying doesn't do that.)

-HOME/ OFFICE A long table appears before their eyes.

WILLARD - 'appears at its LEFT.'

'WILLARD GOD GAVE MAN SPIRIT. GOD GAVE MAN VOICE. HE GAVE OF HIS KNOWLEDGE AND GAVE MAN A CHOICE.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- (To Nevaeh.)

'It's alright, dear-girl. Okay? Good. Now. I believe that you should come back. I would like to treat you. Would you like that?'

Nevaeh- 'I can be better?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'I believe so, yes.'

'WILLARD TWO ROADS. PRAISE, REDEEM IN THE CHOICE! ONE LEADS YOU TO LUCIFER; ONE let YOU REJOICE IN THE LORD.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'I treated Nevaeh the entire summer into the early fall.'

(HATTIE - appears OPPOSITE.) 'HATTIE- TWO ROADS.'

'ONE TURNS RIGHT AND ONE LEFT. ONE LEADS YOU TO PARADISE; ONE LEAVES YOU BENEFIT OF THE LORD.'

Nevaeh- (To her parents.)

'I do feel, I feel, Dr. Lorenzo thinks... I'm... improving...'

-HATTIE-

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'doesn't really care about you, Nevaeh. She tells you one thing now. But when she gets you where she wants you, she'll tell you altogether different things.'

WILLARD- 'I do believe this doctor is making you moody, Nevaeh.'

-HATTIE-

'And remember, young lady, she'll turn on you if you tell her you don't love your own daddy!'

DOCTOR LORENZO- (To Nevaeh.)

'I think you're the type of person who would benefit from being analyzed. In the short time I've been treating you've I've noticed two separate, small seizures. Both when you've been under pressure.'

Nevaeh- 'I don't remember...'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'They weren't serious. They weren't epileptic. More psychological seizures.'

'Psychological?'

Nevaeh- DOCTOR LORENZO- 'I wish I could do the job myself, but I'm not an analyst yet. As you know I'll be leaving for Chicago soon to begin my analytic training.'

(Long pause.)

'Perhaps you should come with me.'

‘HATTIE AND WILLARD THE SERPENT WILL USE YOU CONFOUND AND CONFUSE YOU AND WAIT TILL YOU LOSE YOUR WAY AND WHEN HE ASKED YOU TO CHOOSE DO YOU KNOW WHAT TO SAY?’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘We could continue our work and I could utilize your case as an aid to getting my certificate. I’ll be renaming out of Clarkson Memorial.’

Nevaeh- ‘An institution?’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘A hospital; Nevaeh, whether or not you choose to come to Chicago, I believe you need to get away from home. Chicago or New York, somewhere you can meet people like yourself. People who are interested in art.’

Nevaeh- ‘My parents wouldn’t approve.’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘And the alternative, dear girl?’

‘TWO ROADS. ONE TURNS LEFT AND ONE RIGHT A SELF-IMPOSED DARKNESS OR SELF KNOWLEDGE AND LIGHT? TWO ROADS; TWO SEPARATE DOORS. AND EACH HOLD THEIR DANGERS. THE DECISION IS YOURS.’

WILLARD- ‘An insane asylum?’

Nevaeh- DOCTOR LORENZO- said, ‘this has nothing to do with insanity.’

WILLARD- ‘Then it has to do with the devil.’

-HATTIE-

‘See- That’s what they do.’

‘Now she wants to put you in an institution because that’s how doctors make their money!’

‘Nevaeh, Please, Poppa. At least talk to DOCTOR LORENZO- about Clarkson.’

-HATTIE-

‘Clarkson, Larkson, Parkson, Park Daughter. Clark Daughter...’

WILLARD, (Looks cautiously at Hattie.) ‘I will talk to her.’

-HATTIE-

(As WILLARD moves to DOCTOR LORENZO.)

‘THE SERPENT WILL USE YOU CONFOUND AND CONFUSE YOU HATTIE - AND WAIT TILL YOU LOSE YOUR WAY...’

WILLARD- (Pause.)

‘My daughter is... unwell, Doctor. I worry about her.’

‘Something has to be done. Something...?’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘Yes- It does.’

WILLARD- (To DOCTOR LORENZO.) ‘Nevaeh's pastor is afraid a doctor... not of our faith, may use drugs in association with her therapy.’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘I promise you that will not be the case.’

WILLARD- ‘You may have a hard time persuading me if God is not part of her restorative.’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘I'm afraid I must also promise you that will not be the case.’

WILLARD- ‘I will have Nevaeh call with my decision.’

DOCTOR LORENZO- (As WILLARD leaves.)

‘Please let me know by Friday. I leave for my residency this weekend. I must know to make arrangements with the hospital.’

‘HATTIE WHEN HE ASKS YOU TO CHOOSE DO YOU KNOW WHAT TO SAY?’

WILLARD- (To Nevaeh.)

‘The pastor, your daddy and I have been looking at this from our own point of view. There may be another. If this is what you really want, we will not stand in your way.’

Nevaeh- ‘Thank you, Poppa! Thank- (SHE begins to cough. She coughs hard into HER hand. She leaves the blood. She shows WILLARD.) Poppa...?’

(Nevaeh faints into WILLARD'S arms. HE carries her to the table and lays her down.)

‘WILLARD HATTIE DOCTOR LORENZO- TWO ROADS WILLARD ONE ORPAH, HATTIE ONE RUTH.’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘ONE LEADS TO A WALL OF STONE. WILLARD HATTIE DOCTOR LORENZO- ONE LEADS TO THE TRUTH. TWO ROADS...’

Nevaeh- ‘Pneumonia?’

WILLARD- ‘A very mild case. Rest. (Kisses her cheek.) You'll be fine.’

(WILLARD EXITS- the room.)

Nevaeh- ‘Daddy. Please. Please call DOCTOR LORENZO- and tell her.’

(HATTIE goes to the phone and dials. SHE turns toward Nevaeh, hiding the phone from Nevaeh's view. SHE is pressing the phone line button-down as she talks.)

HATTIE- ‘Hello?’

Doctor Lorenzo- ‘Nevaeh is ill and cannot call herself. She is very anxious to go to Clarkson as soon as she recovers. Thank you.’

(SHE hangs up and goes to sit next to Nevaeh.)

Nevaeh- ‘What did the doctor say? What did she say? HATTIE, she didn't say anything. TWO ROADS AS SIMPLE AS SIN ONE PASSES THE PURELY GATES...’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘I would not see Nevaeh - again for nine years.’

HATTIE ONE LEADS EVERYONE RIGHT IN... THE ROOM. In the high-rise of the new high rise, in the year of 1999.

‘Now in the APARTMENT, Living room with an open balcony with the New York skyline.’

NEAD- ‘REEVES is on the sofa reading LIFE magazine when there's a knock at the door. SHE answers it.’

Nevaeh- (At the door.) ‘Hello. Theodora Reeves?’

NEAD- ‘Nead-, please. Come on in! (Lays dramatically against the closed door.) Theodora. Can you imagine? You're Nevaeh-?’

(Nevaeh- nods.)

‘Boss! Well, this is the place.’

Nevaeh- ‘It’s lovely.’

(Looking around at everything.)

NEAD- ‘It’s grandmamas. Was grandmamas. Your bed is in that little alcove. You can use the hall closet. Sorry, it’s not a real bedroom, but it’s pretty cheap. Twelve bucks a week!’

Nevaeh- ‘How... how much would that be a month...?’

NEAD- ‘Uh, I don’t know. Four times twelve, I guess.’

(Nevaeh- stares at her a moment, then goes into her bag and pulls out a pen and paper. She proceeds to do the math but is stymied. SHE looks up at NEAD-.)

Nevaeh- ‘I’m... not very good at math.’

NEAD- ‘That’s okay. I’m awful at geography. I thought Kuala Lumpur was a marsupial! But, hey, if it’s the outcome of Manhattan, who cares, right? Now. Sit down. Tell me every single, goopy, personal thing about (Continued.) Yourself!’

Nevaeh- (Sitting on the floor legs crossed.)

‘Uh...’

NEAD- Everything!

Nevaeh- ‘Oh! Well. Um, I’m a graduate art student. At Columbia. I just moved here from Detroit. Well, via Omaha-’

NEAD- ‘New York is the most, isn’t it!’

‘Unreal, my turn!’

‘I despise my daddy.’

(Nevaeh- ‘stares at HER. NEAD- just smiles.) Okay...’

(Gestures.)

Nevaeh- 'My, uh, my daddies passed.'

NEAD- 'I'm a secretary downtown.'

Nevaeh- 'I'm going to be doing some substitute teaching...'

NEAD- 'I've been thinking of maybe taking acting classes.'

Nevaeh- 'I like going to the theatre sometimes.'

NEAD- 'I once got acute hepatitis from poison mushrooms. Wow. You and I are going to be tight!'

Nevaeh- 'I'm also...'

(SHE stops and looks away.)

NEAD- 'What?'

Nevaeh- 'The main reason, the real reason- I moved here... moved to New York... I'm going to be seeing a doctor.'

NEAD- 'Oh, sweetie. Is something wrong?'

Nevaeh- 'Oh, no. It's- she's- it's... I just feel it's right you should know.'

'Because- if I'm going to be your roommate...'

(Takes a breath.) 'She's a psychiatrist.'

NEAD- (Gasp.)

'A word from the bird?'

Nevaeh- 'I... I don't know...'

NEAD- 'I always wanted to be psychoanalyzed! Do you read L. Ron Hubbard? He says a man is essentially a free and immortal spirit who can achieve his true nature only by freeing himself from the emotional encumbrances of his past through counseling. I wish I was psychotic.'

(Nevaeh- 'stares at HER.')

'I wish I was anything interesting.'

Nevaeh- 'You are... to me... you seem... quite interesting.'

NEAD- 'Well, how about that? Here you are, here am I. In New York City. You emigrated here, I escaped here.'

Nevaeh- 'From what?'

NEAD- 'Bad food. Good neighborhoods. Stop signs. Construction, you know? Oh, but, Nevaeh-... New York. New York is... wow! I can teach you how to ride the subway if you'd like. Oh, and how to use those strange little automat machines. Everything is so modern. And fast. You are going to love it!'

'ITS A LITTLE LIKE RIDING THE CYCLONE- OR NEOREALIST FLICK AT THE LOEWS. NEW YORK PULLS AT YOUR T-STRAPS AND THEN SUDDENLY ITS ANYTHING GOES! THINGS YOU ONCE THOUGHT WERE TERRIFYING NOW UTTERLY SEEMS WORTH DYING! EVERYTHING'S THERE FOR TRYING! NEW YORK IS FREEDOM NEW YORK IS FREE! And the guys! So many! Squares to subterranean! Became they come in so many assorted colors! And sizes. And attitudes.'

'It is LIKE, SIXTY PERCENT MARLON BRANDO AND FORTY CREATURES FROM THE BLACK LAGOON STILL, DATING HERE IS ELECTRIC- LIKE RIDING ROCKETS ALL THE WAY TO THE MOON! AND SINCE THE BOYS ARE ALL SO-0 ATTRACTIVE- VIRGINITY'S- RETROACTIVE- NEW YORK IS- RADIOACTIVE! NEW YORK IS FREEDOM NEW YORK IS FREE. MOMMA SAYS BEWARE OF THE CITY. MOMMA SAYS I'M TOO NAIVE. MOMMA SAYS THE PEOPLE ARE GRITTY SO MOMMA SAYS I HAVE TO LEAVE. MOMMA SAYS THEY RAPE AND THEY PILLAGE. MOMMA SAYS MY END IS NEAR. GREENWICH CONNECTICUT OR GREENWICH VILLAGE? WELL, IF I GOTTA GO THEN I'M GOIN' HERE!'

(NEAD- 'grabs Nevaeh- to dance.')

'STILL, IF YOU EVER FEEL LOST IN THE DELUGE AND YOU NEED TO GET AWAY TO FEEL FREE, NEW YORK CITY'S A GATEWAY; TAKES YOU ANYWHERE THAT YOU WANT TO BE! CATCH A BOEING SEVEN OH SEVEN, IDLEWILD, GATE ELEVEN. FLY NEW YORK CITY TO HEAVEN! NEW YORK IS FREEDOM NEW YORK IS FREE. Speaking of heaven, you have to see the view!'

Nevaeh- 'Oh. No. I don't... I don't... I don't like heights.'

NEAD- 'Don't be a spaz! It is unreal! Come on.'

(SHE grabs Nevaeh's arm and pulls her toward the balcony.)

'Nevaeh- No, no, no, no, please, no.'

'NO!!!'

(SHE pulls away, facing front. SHE closes HER eyes then opens them wide, completely glazed.
THEN life enters them. A smile.)

(Nevaeh- 'Suddenly moves with a new physicality. With a new voice.) Well. Let's take a gander, shall we?'

(SHE moves past NEAD- who looks slightly confused but joins Nevaeh- on the balcony.

Nevaeh- 'leans over, arms out.) Vale in aeternam terra firma!'

NEAD- What does that mean?

Nevaeh- 'It means Chickie, we are flying high!'

NEAD- 'Right-o! Can you hear that?'

Nevaeh- 'Someone's making some sounds!'

NEAD- 'There's a jazz spot in the building's basement.'

Nevaeh- 'Uh-oh! MOMMA SAID BEWARE OF THE NIGHTCLUBS! MOMMA HATES THE ROCK
AND ROLL. MOMMA THINKS THAT COUNTRY'S THE NIGHTCLUBS.'

Nevaeh- 'MOMMA DIDN'T HAVE MUCH SOUL.'

NEAD- 'MOMMA'S MUSIC'S ALL MODERATION.'

Nevaeh- 'MOMMA DIDN'T HAVE THE NEED. NEW YORK D.J.'S SPIN TRUE LIBERATION! NEAD-
AND Nevaeh- WHY DO YOU THINK HIS NAME IS ALAN FREED? NEAD- AND Nevaeh- SO CATCH A BOEING
SEVEN OH SEVEN, TO IDLEWILD, GATE ELEVEN NEW YORK CITIES IS HEAVEN! NEW YORK IS FREEDOM
NEW YORK IS ME! OFFICE. A desk and desk chair, a couch and a- cushioned chair with a window overlooking the office grounds.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- Nevaeh- returned to my care in October of 1999.

(Nevaeh- ENTERS and takes a seat on the cushioned chair.)

Nevaeh- 'I was in Detroit for the last few years. Teaching.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- (To Nevaeh-) 'And how was your time there?'

Nevaeh- 'It was... I taught. I had some promising students.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'And your nervousness? Your earlier condition?'

Nevaeh- 'I got engaged.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Oh. Well, congratulations.'

Nevaeh- 'Yes, thank you. He's a very nice man.' Stan.

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'His name?'

Nevaeh- 'Yes, yes- It was very nice seeing you again Dr. Lorenzo. Same time next Tuesday?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'I pressed a little harder next meeting.'

Nevaeh- 'Well; I haven't essentially said yes.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Why is that?'

Nevaeh- 'Why is what?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Why have you not accepted his rendezvous as of yet.'

Nevaeh- 'Oh. Well. I wanted to be treated by you. First.'

-And-

'Why is that?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Well... it's obvious.'

Nevaeh- 'How is it obvious?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Don't be silly. Nevaeh-'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Does he know about your nervous condition?'

Nevaeh- 'He's probably a homosexual- like I am LES-ie at the age of 5 and ½.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'I meant to explore this on the following Tuesday but- Nevaeh- (Agitated.) I don't know why. I don't know. What did I do?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Nevaeh? What occurred.'

Nevaeh- 'I got the mail right before I came here. (SHE digs into her purse.) I got this morning. It's from Stan. He- (SHE pulls out two pieces of stationery. One page, obviously torn in two. She holds them and looks at them in misperception. She begins shaking her head in denial. She suddenly stands up and, in another voice.)

Nevaeh- 'Men are all alike! You just can't trust 'em! You can't! You can't! You can't!'

(Nevaeh- jumps up and runs to the window, running for it is open think about leaping out. SHE pounds the glass till a pane break. SHE grabs back her hand.)

DOCTOR LORENZO- (Rushing to her.) 'Nevaeh!'

Nevaeh- (Little girl voice.) 'I'm sorry. I'm sorry.'

(DOCTOR LORENZO- examines her hand.) 'I'm sorry. I'm sorry.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'It's alright, Nevaeh- It's alright.'

Nevaeh- 'It is? You're not crazy?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Of course not, dear-girl. You're fine. There's no blood.'

Nevaeh- 'There is! There's blood in the hayloft...'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Pardon?'

Nevaeh- 'I was there. Tommy Ewald jumped on a pitchfork. It went right through his neck. I was there. I was.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Let's sit down. Okay?'

(SHE leads Nevaeh- to the couch. THEY sit.)

'Now. Where was this hayloft?'

Nevaeh- 'Willow Corners. My Gramma had blood too. Down there. She had cancer.

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'I'm so sorry. Did you use to live in Willow Corners?'

Nevaeh- 'Why I still live in Willow Corners. Tommy died and Gramma died. I know all about blood and death. It makes me so mad!'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Death angers you? Doesn't it make you feel sad?'

Nevaeh- 'Why should you care how I feel?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'I care very much.'

Nevaeh- 'You ain't trying to trick me?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Why would I?'

Nevaeh- 'Lots of people try to trick me.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Who are you?'

(A beat.)

Nevaeh- 'I'm Janny. Can't you tell?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Okay, well, Janny. Tell me something about yourself, Janny.'

Nevaeh- 'Like what?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'I don't know. What makes you happy? What are your likes and dislikes? Okay. Um... I don't like pitchforks. I don't like bananas. I don't like wearing dresses. I hate Rachel Covens. I don't like cold. I don't like mosquitoes. I don't like the kitchen...'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Alright. Okay. Tell me what do you like, Janny?'

Nevaeh- 'I like to paint. I like to draw with charcoal. I paint it black and white too. But I ain't as good as Nevaeh.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'And who is Nevaeh-?'

Nevaeh- 'THE OTHER GIRL. THE ONE IN THE MIRROR. WHO DON'T LOOK AT ALL LIKE ME? THE OTHER GIRL; SHE DON'T SEE CLEAR OR DON'T WANT TO SEE. WHEN SHE FINDS THE STUFF, I BUY- IT JUST MAKES HER WANT TO CRY. TOO SCARED TO EVEN ASK WHY it is THERE. THE OTHER GIRL WHO THINKS SHE IS OBSERVING BUT REALLY WON'T EVEN DARE.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Nevaeh- is... unconscious of you?'

(Nevaeh- shakes her head.)

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'But you live with her? Was Mrs. - your daddy?'

Nevaeh- (Jumps up.) 'No. No! She's not my daddy. Not my daddy!'

(Nevaeh's eyes roll back. When she focuses, she looks around and then down? In her voice.)

'Oh. I must have dropped my purse? Oh dear, I'm passed my hour. ...Nevaeh?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Yes?'

Nevaeh- 'Are you all alright?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- Nevaeh- 'Yes, I believe so-o. Yes.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'You believe you are alright...'

Nevaeh- 'I'll pay for the window.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'That isn't necessary, Nevaeh.'

'Have you broken glass before?'

(Nevaeh- nods 'yes'.)

'So-o this is not dissimilar to what you've previously experienced?'

(Nevaeh- Again nods, shamed.) 'Don't worry, dear girl. It's treatable. I think I have a clearer idea now. You should start by being hopeful. I also told her she should start seeing me three times a week.'

Nevaeh- (As Janny.) 'Hello, Doctor Lorenzo.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Hello... Janny...?'

(Nevaeh- beams to be remembered.)

'How are you?'

Nevaeh- 'Mad...? I told you a little about it the other day. I've been irritated, livid ever since. I have every right to be fuming!'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'What are you angry about? Stan, he sent us a Dear John letter! He said we should discontinue our friendship. I tore the letter up!'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'I see. Then yes, you have every right to be angry. Nevaeh?'

Nevaeh- 'Wouldn't be angry. She wouldn't get mad. Her daddy won't let her. I know it's a sin, but I get mad, I can't help it! She's scared. She's scared all the time. I get tired of it. She gives up, but I don't. THE OTHER GIRL, THE ONE THAT'S SO STUPID SO-O EVERYONE THINKS I'M DUMB. THE OTHER GIRL. JUST WAITIN' ON CUPID- CUPID AIN'T GONNA COME. CAUSE HE DIDN'T LOVE US A BIT. HIS LOVE AIN'T EVEN WORTH SPIT! IF HE WAS HERE, I WOULD HIT HIM-'

-AND-

'HIT HIM!'

-AND-

'HIT HIM!'

-AND-

'HIT HIM!'

-AND-

'HIT HIM!'

-AND-

'HIT HIM!'

-And-

'Kill HIM! THE OTHER GIRL WOULDN'T DO SHIT. You ask a lot of questions. Leave me alone. There are things I can't tell you. I just can't. And nobody can make me!'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'A dual personality. Nevaeh- and Janny existing in the same body, but with different memories, diverse capabilities. Dissimilar moods, yet closely allied, Janny carrying the emotional impact of Nevaeh's experiences. Janny, the defense mechanism.'

(As Nevaeh-)

‘I want to apologize for not keeping my appointment on Tuesday.’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘You kept your appointment, Nevaeh-. You were here. But you were in the fugue state the entire time. The fugue state we’ve discussed.’

Nevaeh- ‘Nead- Reeves, my roommate, is so funny. Really- she is! Wait till I tell you what she did!’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘Nevaeh, you can once again fill your entire hour with inanities but that doesn’t change the fact you are ill. Very ill. But you can be cured. Do you understand? People with this particular malady-Nevaeh? People?’

(Foggy.)

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘Yes. Many people have-’

Nevaeh- (‘As Janny; fetal, on the couch.) People- the people. The people. The people. The people. The people.’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘What people, dear-girl?’

Nevaeh- ‘The People. The People. They don’t care. They don’t care. The people. It hurts. It hurts. Oh, it hurts.’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘What hurts? Janny?’

Nevaeh- ‘My head hurts. My throat hurts. (Suddenly.) I’m going to getaway. I’m going to break the glass and get away!’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘Why don’t you go through the door? Go on. Open it.’

‘I can’t!!!’ (Screams- and then even more.)

(SHE begins to quickly pace.)

Nevaeh- ‘I want to get out. I want to get out.’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘Just turn the knob and open the door.’

Nevaeh- ‘I’ll break the glass.’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘Where are you, Janny? Are you in Willow Corners?’

Nevaeh- ('Wilder animal pacing.) I won't tell! I won't tell!

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Can you tell Doctor Lorenzo?'

Nevaeh- 'I don't know.'

'They made me start coming for them...!'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Will you tell Doctor Lorenzo? Coming what do you mean?'

'Rubbing and playing and sticking things in...'

Nevaeh- ('Stops. Heartbreakingly,) DOCTOR LORENZO- went away! Saying- Nevaeh little angle there nothing is wrong with that and being naked all the time around them another man and kids and mom too- playtime in your room is just that you understand and get to know you. I was told that a night this was my feel-good hole, that needed me touching deep in it, like when before - I got out of bed too and before pre-K schooling- it's what they said to do is that now wrong? Asking why this dark hole was there. A scary thing for a young girl not to understand, yet feels to right- yet sinful I always felt. You can't blame a girl for wonder.'

(Crying.)

Doctor Lorenzo- 'went away and left us in Omaha!'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Oh, dear-girl.'

(SHE opens her arms and after a tentative step, Nevaeh- leaps into them, sobbing. THEY sit on the sofa, Nevaeh- almost in her lap.)

Nevaeh- ('Between sobs.) It hurts. The music hurts. The hands hurt.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'What music? Why? The hands.'

Nevaeh- 'Your hands?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Nevaeh- Hands that hurt, The hands. Coming at you.'

DOCTOR- 'Why does music hurt? Why do the hands hurt?'

Nevaeh- 'We're lost. Nevaeh- and me. I won't tell. No one cares. THE OTHER GIRL DON'T WANT TO DISCOVER WHAT SHE WAS BORN TO BE. THE OTHER GIRL THINKS NO ONE CAN LOVE HER SO NO ONE WILL EVER LOVE ME.'

(Nevaeh- changes back to Nevaeh- Embarrassed, she pushes away from DOCTOR LORENZO, adjusts her glasses and pulls at her blouse.)

Nevaeh- 'Did I break anything this time?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Nevaeh? Was there a lot of music in your house? No, no. Everything's fine.'

Nevaeh- 'Um, church music. She- daddy- tried to teach me but I got too jumpy, he loved me was more essay coming Daddy was quite the perfectionist. My father would sing hymns at dinner. And my daddy played the piano. She was very good.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Mm-mmm. And as a child, did you lose any peers?'

'Peers?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Friends? Other children, that died? Perhaps a violent death?'

Nevaeh- ('Thinks a moment.) Well. There was this boy. His family farm was near ours. He died jumping from the hayloft when I was five or six. They kept the details from me. I wasn't there when it happened.'

DOCTOR WILUBR- (Beat.)

Nevaeh- 'I believe I know what's wrong. What causes your fugues. It is dissociative, yes, but far more complicated. (Nothing.) It's very... complex... It's...'

(Nevaeh- stands up.)

Nevaeh- 'Hello.'

(As Janny.)

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Hello, Janny.'

(She- Sighs.)

Nevaeh- 'I'm going out now. Right through that door. DOCTOR LORENZO- said I could.'

(And with that she EXITS out into the world.) (New York) CITY STREET around 1999. Typical city noises are heard. Then a crash of breaking the glass.

MAN- 'Hey!'

'Hey, you back!'

(Nevaeh- rushes ONSTAGE chased by the MAN. HE catches up and grabs HER.)

MAN- 'Tryin' to steal my car?' (Chevy)

Nevaeh- (As Janny.) 'It ain't your car. It's my papa's car.'

MAN- 'It's my car! And you owe me twenty bucks for that windshield!'

Nevaeh- 'It's my papa's car. My papa is Willard -. And it's his car. You let go of me. You better let go!'

MAN- 'Listen, sister. I ain't lettin' you go until I get my money. Now, cough it up. I said cough it up!'

(Nevaeh- straightens and her voice changed to the 'balcony' voice from Nead-'s apartment. She meets the MAN's volume and anger.)

Nevaeh- 'Get your freaking mitts off me, dog puss! That any way to treat a lady? (SHE pulls free. The MAN is too shocked to retort. SHE looks around.) Where the hell are, we?'

(Suddenly HER physicality changes again and SHE speaks with a British accent. Doing this, HER head moves just slightly, SHE faces forward as if speaking to someone in front of HER-) I don't know. It doesn't look familiar. (Balcony VOICE.) Goddamit, Janny! (Brit VOICE.) Oh no. Not again. (Balcony.)

Nevaeh- was talking to that lady in the office... (Brit.) A bus... a rather short trip if I correctly recall... (Balcony.) Goddamit, Janny! I oughta... (Brit, noticing the MAN who has been standing and staring at HER.)

'Oh. Sir. Do be a good chap and tell us where the devil we are.'

(The MAN stands there a moment, big-eyed. Then HE turns tail and runs away.)

(Balcony.) (Hey, can you see that, over there? (Brit.) You really do need glasses... let's see... First National Bank. (Balcony.) First. (Brit.) We've never been to First. We should have a stroll, shall we? (Balcony.) Let's shall!)

(And smiling SHE walks in the room now older.) In the OFFICE, the year is 2002. Nevaeh - appears just OUT SAME.)

Nevaeh- (In a French accent.) 'I STROLL HERE IN THE SUNSHINE; I CHOOSE NOT to TAKE THE BUS. THE SAMEWALK PEOPLE BUMPING, I CHOOSE NOT TO MAKE THE FUSS. I VOW TO NEVER SCREAM AND I VOW TO NEVER SHOUT AND I VOW TO SAY BONJOUR TO EVERYONE ALONG MY ROUTE! (others- ENTERS Office.) C'EST UNE BONNE IDEE! C'EST UNE BONNE IDEE! SAY, THAT'S A GOOD IDEA! ZUT ALORS! WOW! MAMMA MIA! JUST TRY TO LIVE YOUR LIFE THIS WAY: POSITIVELY COME WHAT MAY! C'EST UNE BONNE IDEE! Bonjour.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'P- Janny...?'

Nevaeh- 'Mon Dieu, non! I am Victoria Antoinette Scharleau. De for short. Very nice to finally meet you, Doctor Lorenzo.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Well, I'm... I'm very pleased to meet you, De.'

Nevaeh- 'she is (Sitting.) 'I must apologize for Nevaeh- She wanted to come this morning but could not get dressed. She sometimes suffers from a complete absence of feeling and a total inability to do anything. So, I come instead.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'And how did you know where to come? I know everything.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Everything?'

Nevaeh- 'I know what everybody does. I watch.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'You mean Nevaeh-. And Janny.'

Nevaeh- 'Nevaeh- and Janny. Mon Dieu, they are a gloomy pair, n'est-cepas? Yes, yes, yes, I realize life has much pain, I also realize one needs catharsis, non? Say oui to what's good. Say oui to what's fun! I wish Nevaeh- could enjoy life the way I do, Doctor. She tries. She is a wonderful painter, much better than I, but she takes no joy in the creation.'

'I GO TO THE MUSEUM JUST TO DROWN IN ALL THE ART I STUDY LES ROMANTIQUES READ JOHN RUSSELL TO GET SMART TO LEARN AND THEN CREATE SCULPTURE, INK OR DECOUPAGE BUT THE MEDIUM FOR Nevaeh- SEEMS TO ME TO BE COLLAGE! C'EST UNE BONNE IDEE! C'EST UNE BONNE IDEE! YES, THAT'S A GRAND IDEA! OUI, THE PERFECT PANACEA! SO, EVERYBODY, ECOUTER! LEARN TO LOVE THE LIVING DAY! CES'T UNE BONNE IDEE! DOCTOR LORENZO- Well, you certainly do possess la joie de vivre, De.'

Nevaeh- 'But of course. I am from Paris. Won't you join me, Doctor? C'EST UNE BONNE IDEE!'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'C'EST UNE BONNE IDEE!'

Nevaeh- 'AND DOCTOR LORENZO- SAY, THAT'S A GOOD IDEA!'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'ZUT ALORS!'

Nevaeh- 'WOW!'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'AND Nevaeh. MAMMA MIA! IN ANY LANGUAGE, ANYWAY ANY GOOD THOUGHT ALWAYS SAY C'EST UNE BONNE IDEE! JUST TRY TO LIVE YOUR LIFE THIS WAY: FULL OF POSITIVITY! C'EST UNE BONNE IDEE!'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Paris.'

Nevaeh- 'I miss it so. My many brothers and sisters. Wonderful parents. They will come to get me soon. They are not like some parents. They do what they say they will do.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- Did you know Mrs. -?

Nevaeh- (Suddenly aloof.) 'She was Nevaeh's daddy. I lived with the -s for many years. I know Mrs. -?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'When did you come, De?'

Nevaeh- 'When Nevaeh- was just a child. Une petite fils.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Why did you come? Perhaps to share la Joie. Perhaps to offer my help. It is why I choose to stay.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'So you live your life independently of Nevaeh-'

Nevaeh- 'Mais oui. All of us do. Janny likes to travel. I, myself, am most comfortable in society.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Society?'

Nevaeh- 'After I leave here, I will be having luncheon with my friend Miriam Ludlow. Then an afternoon of exhibits at the Met. Miriam just breathes culture.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Does Nevaeh- know Miriam Ludlow.'

Nevaeh- 'I should think not. They hardly travel in the same circles! Nevaeh- is not une femme du monde. You see, Nevaeh- was having tea at the cafe in the modern. It was very crowded and Miriam was there and asked to share a table. Ever the overly polite, she replied 'of course', but was so terrified of having to cope with an attractive society woman she blacked out! So, I took over and now Miriam and I are les très bons amis.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Does this happen often? Her blacking out?'

Nevaeh- 'Lately, more often than not. When Nevaeh- came to look at Nead- Reeve's apartment we probably would have been out on the street if Marjorie had not taken over.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- '...Marjorie...?'

(Slowly.)

Nevaeh- 'I do not imagine you have met her yet.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'De. How many of you are there?'

Nevaeh- 'Many.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'And you... know them? Know everything about them?'

Nevaeh- 'Oui.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- Alright. Then, perhaps, I should... ask for your advice. I would like to tell Nevaeh- about you and the... others. I don't see how analysis can successfully continue if she doesn't know.

Nevaeh- 'Well, you can tell her, but do not say too much. Be careful. Although the rest of us know about Nevaeh-, she knows nothing about us... never has.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'I have told her she has fugue states where she is unaware of what is happening to her.'

Nevaeh- 'Yes, but that is très different from telling her that she is not alone in her own body, non? (Rises.) Well, I must be heading off to luncheon.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Please do come back anytime. And tell any of the others that they are welcome as well.'

Nevaeh- 'They are not all quite as outgoing as me. They are shy, and some are as frightened as Nevaeh-. But I will try to convince them. Adieu, Doctor Lorenzo.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Goodbye, De.'

(Nevaeh- stops at the door and turns back to DOCTOR LORENZO.) 'We are people you know. People in our own right.'

(SHE then turns and EXITS out the room.)

We're sitting in the OFFICE. DOCTOR LORENZO- facing out to them all down below.

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Multiple personalities. As of 1999, there had been scant diagnoses. None had been psychoanalyzed. Perhaps I could enlist De's help in the analysis. But before any of that could begin... Nevaeh-, herself, had to know.'

Nevaeh- (Appearing.)

'I don't understand... another person takes over?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'When you, yourself, lose consciousness. During the fugue states, we've talked about.'

Nevaeh- 'I'm like... Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde...?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'That's fiction, Nevaeh- It's not about good and evil. Do you understand that?'

(Nevaeh- says nothing.)

‘All your life, you've been told that you have done certain things. Been convinced places that you know you hadn't. Haven't you?’

Nevaeh- ‘How... how did you know?’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘It's treatable, Nevaeh-. Other people have it. But we need to deduce when you're your disassociation began? What was the root cause?’

Nevaeh- ‘May I go now? We're running over. I have no right to extra time...’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘That's what you always do, Nevaeh. Declare yourself unworthy! That's one of the reasons you need other personalities.’

Nevaeh- ‘Personalities? As in... plural?’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘There is nothing to be afraid of, dear-girl. There's a personality.’

DOCTOR LORENZO- (Continued.) ‘Called Janny. She's very self - assertive-’

Nevaeh- ‘I don't...’

(Highly agitated.)

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘The other is called De, she's assured, at ease, and altogether delightful person...’

‘Nevaeh- I can't... I can't... you have another patient... I...’

DOCTOR LORENZO- Nevaeh?

Nevaeh- ‘Please, oh, please let me go. Please...’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘Dear-girl-I know this is overwhelmingly frightening.’

Nevaeh- ‘I'll be fine. I'll be fine. I'll be fine. I'll be fine...’

(SHE wanders out of the spot and the lights fade on DOCTOR LORENZO.)

(In the darkness, a phone RINGS.)

In the low light in the APARTMENT, there is a pounding on the door. NEAD- rushes onstage to open it.

DOCTOR LORENZO- (ENTERING the room to see young Nevaeh.)

‘Hello, I’m Cornelia Lorenzo.’

NEAD- ‘I’m Nead.’

‘I’m sorry- very sorry- I called at such a late hour’s but- I-a, I had to fish your number out of her purse; she wouldn’t give it to me. Where is she?’

DOCTOR LORENZO- (NEAD- gestures and the LIGHTS come up at the balcony. Nevaeh- is standing very close what happened? to its edge.)

NEAD- ‘She came home and just blew! Talking to herself, talking like a little girl... She broke the mirror in the bathroom. Then she came out of her and started climbing onto the ledge. I had to pull her back and watch her. I went to call you and she went out there again!’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘Nead, Nevaeh- is in a highly agitated, manic state.’

NEAD- ‘You think?’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘What I mean is, Nevaeh- agonizes from a uniquely complex pathology. As her roommate, you have every right to know and with Nevaeh’s permission, I’ll explain everything. But right now, could you leave us alone. Just for a moment. I don’t know... NEAD-’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘You feel protective toward her. She engenders that, I know. But I assure you she’ll be safe.’

NEAD- (Pauses then moves, stopping near Nevaeh-.) Sweetie, I’ll be in my bedroom.

(SHE EXITS, the room she was in.)

‘It wasn’t fear. Nevaeh- What wasn’t fear?’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘Nevaeh- When I left. Why I left. It wasn’t fear. It was... recognition. What you told me. It made an awful kind of sense. The strangers that say they know me. The bad things my daddy said I did. Bad, evil things... I’m so embarrassed...’

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'There is no need... Nevaeh- You can go now. I'll be fine. I promise. I won't... do anything...'

DOCTOR WILUBR- 'I'm afraid you won't be, Nevaeh- I worry.'

Nevaeh- 'Why?' 'I know you're just my doctor. Just my psychoanalyst. I'm just someone who leaves a check with the receptionist after each session.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- Nevaeh- 'YOUR WORLD IS SPINNING. YOU'RE WONDERING HOW YOU'LL SURVIVE. BUT Nevaeh-, A WORLD THAT IS SPINNING'S STILL ALIVE.'

(Slowly, mysteriously, a group of PEOPLE begins to assemble onstage during the song. THEY are Nevaeh's other PERSONALITIES.)

DOCTOR LORENZO- Nevaeh- 'YOU'RE ALREADY WINNING! CONFRONTING YOUR DEMONS EN MASSE.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- Nevaeh- 'YOU'RE AT THE BEGINNING THIS WILL PASS. NO MORE BREAKING GLASS...'

(As DOCTOR LORENZO- 'moves toward Nevaeh, DE, JANNY, MARJORIE, MARY, Elody, Naddalin, AMY-LOU, SAM, RUTHIE, and NESSA intently watch.) I CARE ABOUT YOU, I DO! NOT BECAUSE YOU PAY ME TO. DEAR-GIRL YOU ARE SPECIAL, SO OPEN AND KIND. SO BRILLIANT YET BLIND- YOU CAN'T SEE HOW SPECIAL YOU ARE TO ME. (As DOCTOR LORENZO- holds a frightened Nevaeh- the SELVES sing to DE who nods. NESSA, SHE CARES ABOUT US! MAJORIE SHE DOES! MARY, SHE CARES ABOUT US! AMY LOU BECAUSE? DE, SHE CARES ABOUT Nevaeh. SELVES SHE CARES ABOUT Nevaeh- SHE CARES ABOUT US SHE CARES... DOCTOR LORENZO- AND SELVES.'

Nevaeh- 'I'M HERE WITH YOU WHETHER DOCTOR LORENZO-'

-AND-

SELVES- (Continued.) 'YOU GIVE UP OR PROMISE TO TRY. BUT, Nevaeh, WE'LL DO THIS TOGETHER- just YOU AND I.'

Nevaeh- 'WE'LL DO THIS TOGETHER YOU AND me! 1999 THROUGH 2002. DOCTOR LORENZO'S OFFICE. DOCTOR LORENZO- at HER desk.'

Nevaeh- 'in HER chair- Then at that moment, at that time in that place, the doctor said- 'you well have a loss of memories of all of this at some point- as I feel you should.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Over the next several years, through De's ministrations, I was introduced to the rest of Nevaeh's personalities. To help them understand their relationship to Nevaeh-, to each other and to their singular selves I needed them to each comprehend their existence.'

'WHAT AM I!'

'TO QUESTION TO WONDER. AN EXAM: WHAT TWO WORDS GAVE RISE TO THOUGHT? THE ANSWER, OF COURSE: 'I AM.' IDENTITY BEYOND A NAME. FERVENT HOPES. SECRET SHAME. DREAMS, ESTEEM, AND VANITY. THE ESSENCE OF HUMANITY.'

Nevaeh- (As Amy Lou.) 'WHAT AM I?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Amy Lou shared physical attributes with Janny.'

Nevaeh- (As Amy Lou.) 'I'm WORRIED.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Inappropriately, she was even less... hopeful...'

(As Amy Lou.) 'WHAT AM I? I'm TERRIFIED! THE COMMUNISTS AND CATHOLICS ARE MARCHING SAME BY SAME! I SUSPECT THE SPOOKS AND KOOKS AND GOOKS OF EVERY VARIETY. ...AND THE JOHN BIRCH SOCIETY. GRAMPA SAID BE CAREFUL. PAPA SAID BEWARE. THEY BOTH HAVE ME SEEING RED BY RED I MEAN THE SCARE! WHAT AM I? I'm WARY. WHAT AM I? I'm SCARED TO DEATH BUT VIGILANT AND STEADFAST UNTIL MY LAST PURE BREATH. THE JIGABOOS AND JEWS WHO CHOOSE TO SMOKE OF THE EVIL WEED! RUSSIA'S DEMON SEED! SUBVERSIVE THURBER DOODLES! GIANT CHINESE NOODLES! AND POODLES! AND TWEED! (As Amy Lou.) I'm worried about Nevaeh, Doctor Lorenzo. I do not understand why our father is letting her attend Columbia.'

(Leans in, half whispers.)

'I believe one or two of her professors may be... liberals!'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Nevaeh- and Nead-'s apartment had very little privacy. One day Nevaeh- came home from class to find a hastily but sturdily constructed partition that blocked Nevaeh's bedroom from the living area. Fine work, worthy of possibly three generations of - carpenters. Presenting: Sam.'

Nevaeh- (As Sam.) 'I AM A BOY! DON'T LET THEM TELL YOU THAT I AIN'T A BOY. I LIKE EVERYTHING THAT BOYS ENJOY LIKE ANNOYING GIRLS. Nessa hates me! YEAH, I'M A BOY. And this is all you get in my head! JUST GIVE ME BASE OR SPITBALLS TO DEPLOY! GIVE ME CRYSTAL VASES TO DESTROY! CLIMBING TREES AND BLOODY KNEES GIVE ME JOY. OH, AND PULLING CURLS! Watch out Janny! YOU ASK ME WHAT I AM. I'LL TELL YOU WHAT I'LL BE, (As Sam, continued.) SEE, MY PAPA IS A CARPENTER SO I WILL BE A CARPENTER. I'LL USE MY TOOLS TO PRY MYSELF FREE! CAUSE I'M A BOY! BUT THEY NEVER EVER SEE A BOY! I NEVER GET THE PROPER KIND OF TOY I DON'T LIKE FANCY- I LIKE CORDUROY! BOY OH BOY ITS BULL! TO SHAKE THESE GIRLS HOW MUCH CURLS GOTTA I PULL?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Ruthie was the personification of Nevaeh's three-year-old self.'

Nevaeh- (As Ruthie.) 'Bluh- bub- bub... oooo... pa... bluh.' Said in baby talk.

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Perhaps even younger.'

Nevaeh- (As Ruthie.) PENCILS COME... IN... COLORS... WHERE'S BLUE- Kitty Cat!

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Existential examination was a little advanced for Ruthie.'

(As Ruthie.) 'uh oh. Poo.'

Mary- DOCTOR LORENZO- Nevaeh- (As Mary or Elody or Naddalin.)

'Mary Lucinda Saunders, dear.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Mary Lucinda Saunders- had the maternal grace of Nevaeh's beloved granddaddy. Along with her piety.'

Nevaeh- (As Mary.) 'I AM THE LAMB OF GOD I MEAN I TRY TO BE THE LAMB OF GOD JESUS AND I ARE PRAYING FOR MY SOUL WILT THOU BE MAKE WHOLE? I'm OLD AND MEEK WON'T LAST THE WEEK ETERNITY'S MY GOAL I AM THE LAMB OF GOD WHERE TO BEGIN TO BE THE LAMB OF GOD? BE WITHOUT SIN BE WITHOUT GUILE BE WITHOUT PRIDE THE GATES SWING WIDE TO LET YOU IN I AM THE LAMB OF GOD AS ARE ALL MY KIN, DOCTOR LORENZO- Well, perhaps not all...'

Nevaeh- (As Marjorie.) 'WHAT AM I, NESSA.'

(As Marjorie, continued.)

'WOULD YOU SAY?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Presenting: Nessa and Marjorie.'

Nevaeh- (As Nessa.) 'THAT, MY DEAR, DEPENDS UPON THE DAY.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'The only two of Nevaeh's personalities that could manifest simultaneously.'

Nevaeh- (As Nessa.) 'AND WHAT ABOUT ME, MARGE?'

Nevaeh- (As Marjorie.) 'A GAL WHOSE TEETH GREW WAY TOO LARGE. (Nevaeh- as Nessa reacts to mock hurt.) BUT I GUESS THAT'S HOW THEY GROW EM IN THE U OF K...'

Nevaeh- (As Nessa.) 'Cheeky.'

Nevaeh- (As Marjorie.) 'WHAT AM I?'

Nevaeh- (As Nessa.) 'A TAD IMPROPER! AND I?'

Nevaeh- (As Marjorie.) 'UNSTABLE SHOPPER. TRY TO STOP HER!'

(As Nessa.) 'CALL COPPER!'

Nevaeh- (As Marjorie.) 'SHE WON'T QUIT!'

Nevaeh- (As Both.) 'IF YOU ASK ME WHAT I AM DAMN! I COULDN'T TELL YOU! BUT IF YOU ASK ME WHO'S MY BEST FRIEND, SHE IS IT!'

Nevaeh- (As Nessa.) 'WHAT AM I?'

Nevaeh- (As Marjorie.) 'STUCK UP AND ARTY. WHAT AM I?'

Nevaeh- (As Nessa.) 'A TRIFLE TARTY.'

Nevaeh- (As Marjorie.) 'LI'L MISS SMARTY!'

Nevaeh- (As Nessa.) 'ONE GIRL PARTY!'

Nevaeh- (As Marjorie.) 'HEY NOW QUIT!'

Nevaeh- (As Both.) 'BUT IF YOU ASK ME WHAT I AM DAMN! I COULDN'T TELL YOU! BUT IF YOU ASK ME-'

‘WHO’S MY BEST FRIEND (As Both.) SHE IS IT! DIVERGENT...

-AND-

DIFFERENT AS TWO GIRLS CAN BE SEPARATE POLES OF THE SAME PERSONALITY.’

Nevaeh- (As Marjorie.) ‘WHAT AM I?’

Nevaeh- (As Nessa.) ‘MY SISTER, WHAT AM I?’

Nevaeh- (As Marjorie.) ‘MY OLDER SISTER.’

Nevaeh- (As Nessa.) ‘CAN’T RESIST HER!’

Nevaeh- (As Both.) ‘AND THAT, MISTER, JUST WON’T QUIT! BUT IF YOU ASK ME WHAT I AM DAMN! I COULDN’T TELL YOU! BUT IF YOU ASK ME WHO’S MY BEST FRIEND.’

Nevaeh- (As Marjorie.) ‘MY ITTY-BITTY BREAST FRIEND!’

Nevaeh- (As Marjorie.) ‘MY PLEASE GIVE IT A REST FRIEND!’

Nevaeh- (As Both.) ‘IF YOU ASK ME (As Both.) WHO’S MY BEST FRIEND SHE IS IT!’

(Nevaeh- ‘changes and looks up at DOCTOR LORENZO.’)

Nevaeh- ‘WHAT AM I A MONSTER? WHAT AM I POSSESSED? WHAT AM I? A DEVIL SPAWN? COMPLETELY INSANE AT BEST?’

DOCTOR LORENZO- (‘Goes to HER.) WHAT YOU ARE IS LOVING. WHAT YOU ARE IS WILD. PARANOID. A CARPENTER. A FRIEND, BON VIVANT, A CHILD. YOUR SHATTERED MIND HOLDS ALL OF YOU DIFFERENT SHADES EACH ONE TRUE. TO MAKE YOU WHOLE TO SET YOU FREE WE DISCOVER HOW YOU CAME TO BE...’

(Immediately)

(Nevaeh- and- DOCTOR LORENZO.)

DOCTOR WILUBR- (‘A GIRL- Nevaeh in an early time bathing suit and parasol a appears and poses.’)

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'One of the more prosperous small towns in Wisconsin state. Even during the Great Depression.'

(Another GIRL in an early era naked and parasol appears and poses.)

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'And the town's most prosperous family were the -s. Making Hattie - the de facto First Lady of Willow Corners.'

('LIGHTS UP on HATTIE, also in an early-child fashioned bathing suit and parasol. SHE joins the GIRLS in song and dance.) HATTIE AND GIRLS, WILLOW CORNERS, WILLOW CORNERS, THIS are WHERE THE LORD WOULD RATHER BE. A WORK OF WISCONSIN ART WILLOW COUNTY'S HEART FIELDS AND FARMS AND FORESTS AS FAR AS GOD CAN SEE.'

(THEY continue to unobtrusively dance during the dialogue portions.)

Nevaeh- (As Amy Lou.)

'Nevaeh's daddy was smart. Smarter than anyone in Elderville, Illinois. She didn't love Father. She married him only to get away from the General.'

DOCTOR WILUBR- 'She told you this?'

Nevaeh- (As De.)

'She told me. And she was not only brilliant but Mrs. -, had the extraordinary musical talent. A pianist. Un virtuoso. But her father, a formidable Civil War veteran, yanked her out of school at age twelve to work at his store. She would never fulfill her dreams of a conservatory education. Instead, she played the organ at the Willows Corner First Baptist Church every Wednesday and Sunday. HATTIE AND GIRLS. NO DEMOCRATS OR PAYING UNION DUES. EVERYTHING'S DECIDED- IN THE PEWS. OUR CIVIC NOTORIETY- IS DUE TO OUR STRICT PIETY- A CHURCH OF EACH VARIETY- EXCEPT THE JEWS.'

Nevaeh- (As De.)

'She was not content.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'But Mr. -. Willard. Did he love her?'

Nevaeh- (As Sam.)

‘He loved her a-lot! But she'd embarrass him. She'd make noises in church and then just laugh sometimes. Nothing was funny. She'd just laugh! Out of nowhere!’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘Did she embarrass you?’

Nevaeh- (As Nessa.) ‘It was a wee, little town. HATTIE AND GIRLS- WILLOW CORNERS- WILLOW CORNERS FRIENDLIEST SMALL TOWN- IN THE MIDWEST.’

(As Nessa.)

‘One whole winter she didn't say a word. I did not utter a sound. She would stare out the window like a zombie. Everyone saw. But the -s were wealthy so no one said anything. HATTIE AND GIRLS- OUR MORAL AND JUDGEMENT FREE EXCLUSIVITY WELCOMES THOSE WITH STATUS BUT PASSES ON THE REST.’

Nevaeh- (As Janny.)

‘Nevaeh's daddy would take me walking with her at night. Arm and arm, like I was her daughter. We'd visit the Stickneys, Mr. Hale. Mrs. Ford...’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘Would they invite you in?’

Nevaeh- (As Janny.)

‘Oh, they didn't know we were there. She would just go squat behind each of their hedges and take a shit.’

(The music stops and the GRILS stop dancing and look over at the scene, then back at HATTIE who just smiles and shrugs.)

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘Why these people?’

Nevaeh- (As Janny.)

‘They were the other people in town as rich as us.’

-HATTIE-

‘THIS SNOBBERY, TO YOU, MIGHT SEEM QUITE RASH HATTIE AND THE GIRLS. BUT WE CLOSED OUR BORDERS RIGHT BEFORE THE CRASH. THERE'S LITTLE MINNESOTA LOVE HATTIE AND THE GIRLS- - AND ILLINOIS? OUR QUOTA OF. PLUS, AN IOWA-IOTA OF THEIR POOR WHITE TRASH.’

Nevaeh- (As Mary.)

‘Nevaeh's daddy was good to the poor though. She was! She would sometimes take these two poor Polish girls from the other Same of town swimming with us by the river.’

(‘HATTIE and the GIRL's dance has turned erotic, hands on each other's breasts, etc. HATTIE reaches around one way and tongue kisses one GIRL and then reaches around and kisses the other GIRL.’)

Nevaeh- (As Mary.)

‘They'd leave me to play on the shore sometimes and they'd go off in the bushes. They'd make some very strange noises. HATTIE AND GIRLS- WILLOW CORNERS- WILLOW CORNERS- HEAVEN ON THE SHORES OF THE ST CROIX. NO EVIL OR CRUDITY AND NO NUDITY STILL, A BEE FOR EVERY FLOWER AND GIRL FOR EVERY BOY.’

Nevaeh- (As Mary.)

‘I'd sometimes go, spy. They were playing horsey!’

DOCTOR LORENZO- Horsey?

Nevaeh- (As Marjorie.)

‘That's what we would call it. Back then. Mrs. - would babysit the little girls in the area. They would all get down on the floor and she would put her fingers in the girl's... you know, down there, and yell giddyap and hold them while they'd run on all fours. She would wiggle her fingers and laugh. She would stay home (Continued.) from church, sometimes just to watch the town's children...’

‘HATTIE AND GIRLS THE BIBLE IS THE BOOK WE READ THE MOST NOT THAT VULGAR SATURDAY EVENING POST.’

Nevaeh- (As Marjorie.)

‘She would take the baby boy's name and then take off all her clothes and then rub the baby up and down between her legs... HATTIE AND GIRLS.’

‘AND WE DON'T MEAN TO DISPARAGE OR TO JUDGE THE BACKSEAT CARRIAGE WHORE WE SAVE OURSELVES FOR MARRIAGE OR THE HOLY GHOST-’

Nevaeh- ‘No!!!’

(HATTIE and the GIRLS vanish. To be replaced by the figures of all eight PERSONALITIES out of 100 I have said I have met.)

Directly- following that moment.

‘No. It's... she... Nevaeh- DE Nevaeh. You know it is true.’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘Nevaeh...?’

NESSA, ‘you would avert your eyes. You'd let one of us come out.’

AMY LOU, ‘but you would still see.’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘Was your daddy ever sexual with you?’

Nevaeh- ‘I don't...’

SAM- Nevaeh- ‘wasn't always there.’

‘What next a Sandy Sue?’

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘Nevaeh.’

‘Did your daddy ever hurt you?’

Nevaeh- ‘I... I think...’

JANNY, ‘she was there. She was there at the beginnings. In the mornings when it would start.’

MARJORIE, ‘yes, Nevaeh- remembers the beginnings.’

Nevaeh- ‘THOUGH SHE'S SAYING, ‘BYE TO FATHER MAMMA'S LOOKING RIGHT A ME, AND ALL THE WHILE A SECRET SMILE ON HER FACE.’

'I COULD CRY OUT BUT WHY BOTHER? PAPA LOOKS BUT DOESN'T SEE. THEN it is ONLY SHE AND ME. PLEASE, SOMEONE, HELP ME TO GET FREE, HATTIE (Appears behind a piano.) GOD LOVES A BABY WHO DOES NOT CRY.'

'WHO DOES NOT SIGH?'

'WHO DOES NOT LIE?'

'GOD LOVES A BABY.'

'WHO DOES NOT CRY?'

'MY. LIE. TIE. WHY. CRY.'

Nevaeh- 'I PRETEND THAT I AM READING BUT SHE THROWS AWAY THE BOOK AND WITH A FROWN SHE TIES ME DOWN SHE SPREADS MY LEGS THEN SHE CHECKS IF I AM BLEEDING MAMMA SEES BUT DOESN'T LOOK AND WITH THE CARE, SHE ALWAYS TOOK SHE REACHES FOR THE BUTTON HOOK, JANNY AND I'M PUSHED OUT FRONT.'

DE, TO THE PINCHING AND TEARING.

JANNY, Nevaeh's DADDY LAUGHS.

DE AND I THINK I'LL GO INSANE.

JANNY Nevaeh- LIKES TO HIDE, DE FROM THE FLESH SHE IS WEARING. JANNY AND DE.

Nevaeh- MADE US FEEL THE PAIN.

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Daily, Hattie - would force an array of objects into her daughter. A flashlight, a small bottle. A dinner knives.'

-HATTIE-

You better get used to it. That's what men will do to you when you grow up! They put things in you and hurt you. I might as well prepare you!

WILLARD- (Entering the room.) 'Daddy, we have to get that girl some new shoes! I come near her to button them and she starts crying.'

(Exiting the room.)

DOCTOR LORENZO- ('Her Grandma was Ms. Kingston- Amsel, and she may never know- she thought.')

'Young Nevaeh keeps talking- about being in the orphanage with others.'

Nevaeh- 'A BLACK TUBE MADE OUT OF RUBBER IS PUSHED SLOWLY UP MY DRESS HATTIE BE STILL, DAUGHTER! LET THE WATER FILL YOU UP.'

'HOLD IT IN, NOW- DON'T YOU BLUBBER! YOU'RE A HORRID GIRL UNLESS YOU PROMISE NOT TO MAKE A MESS!- or one time it was a needle- right here and she points.'

Nevaeh- 'IT HURT SO MUCH BUT I CRY YES, NESSA THEN I COME AWAKE SAM AND I'M KEEPING FROM PISSING Nevaeh's GONE AWAY NESSA ABANDONED YET AGAIN! THEN I FEEL THE ACHE SAM IN THE PARTS I AM MISSING.'

NESSA AND SAM.

Nevaeh- 'MADE US FEEL THE PAIN.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'The enema ritual wouldn't end there. Filled with the cold water from an adult-sized bag, Nevaeh- would suffer severe cramps. Then, Hattie would use dish rags to tie Nevaeh- to a piano leg. She would then play. Hard. Forcing Nevaeh- to hold the water until the song was finished.'

-HATTIE-

'GOD LOVES A BABY WHO STAYS SO CLEAN WHO IS SERENE WHO IS NOT MEAN, Oh, no! Oh, look. You make me. You make me punish you. Look what you did! MARJORIE SHE WOULD SLAP ME IN THE FACE. JANNY SHE WOULD KICK ME IN THE BACK. DE ONCE SHE FRACTURED Nevaeh's LARYNX. NESSA IT WAS I WHO FELT THE CRACK! MARY ROLLING PINS CAME DOWN ON FINGERS. SAM HEAVY DRAWERS WOULD CLOSE ON HANDS. CLARA EVERY STRIKE RUTHIE OR BURN SAM OR BLOW JANNY OR BREAK DE OR SPRAIN, SELVES-'

Nevaeh- ALWAYS MADE US FEEL THE PAIN!

Nevaeh- (To DOCTOR LORENZO.) 'However, SOMETIMES SHE WAS LOVING SHE'D WORRY SO IF I WERE LATE. SHE'D CUT BRIGHT PICTURES FROM THE MAGAZINES AND PASTE THEM TO MY PLATE

SHE'D COVER ME WITH KISSES, HANG STARS ABOVE MY BED SHE'D SAY I WAS HER'S ONLY AND BE LOST IF I WERE DEAD. SHE WAS MINE ONLY, TOO AND SINCE I DIDN'T HAVE ANOTHER A GOOD, CHRISTIAN GIRL SHOULD NOT HATE HER DADDY, A GOOD, CHRISTIAN GIRL SHOULD NOT HATE HER DADDY, IT WAS BUTTONHOOK! IT WAS THE RUBBER HOSE! IT WAS THE ROLLING PINS, THE DRAWERS- IT WAS ALL OF THOSE! IT WAS THE DOCTORS WHO LOOKED AWAY THE FRIENDS WHO WOULDN'T SEE. IT WAS THE TEACHERS WHO WOULDN'T SAY I'LL HELP YOU, STAY WITH ME!

Nevaeh- 'IT WAS THE NEIGHBORS AND MY GRANDPA EVEN GRAMMA WOULDN'T STIR IT WAS MY FATHER WHO WOULD GO TO WORK AND LEAVE ME HOME WITH HER! IT WAS PAPA WHO WOULD GO TO WORK. AND LEAVE ME HOME WITH HER, (HATTIE drags YOUNG.'

Nevaeh- up the stair and sets her in the bin during the following:)

'I LOVE YOU.'

SAYS MY DADDY AS WE CLIMB THE BARNYARD STAIRS PLACING ME INTO THE WHEAT BIN SHE JUST LAUGHS.

(HATTIE descends the steps.)

AS I BEGIN TO SINK AND DADDY, SHE JUST GOES BACK DOWN THE STAIRS AND AS I'M RUNNING OUT OF AIR, SHE CALLS BACK UP HATTIE NOBODY CARES!

MARJORIE AND I'VE LOST MY BREATH MARY JESUS, LORD, DON'T FORSAKE ME MARJORIE AND MY THROATS ON FIRE MARY INHALING DUST AND GRAIN MARJORIE AND I'M LOOKING AT DEATH MARY NOW I PRAY FOR GOD TO TAKE ME (WILLARD has climbed the steps and pulls YOUNG Nevaeh- from the bin. SHE coughs as he holds her and walks down. At the bottom of the steps is HATTIE.)

WILLARD- 'How did she get up there?'

'How could she possibly? Hattie?'

(HATTIE- just stands there. Then she reaches her arms out. WILLARD stops a moment, thinks, and puts YOUNG. Nevaeh- into HATTIE's arms and walks off.)

Nevaeh- 'AND YOUNG.'

Nevaeh- ('Looking after him.) Papa?'

SELVES Nevaeh- 'ALWAYS MADE US FEEL, THE BURN OR BLOW, OR BREAK, OR SPRAIN.'

Nevaeh- 'ALWAYS MADE US DEAL, THE BURN, OR BLOW, OR BREAK, OR SPRAIN.'

Nevaeh- 'ALWAYS MADE US FEEL LONELY AND AFRAID Nevaeh- ALWAYS MADE US FEEL THE PAIN!'

(HATTIE carries YOUNG Nevaeh- OFF.)

Nevaeh- is in front of a canvas on an easel in the summer of 2003. As SHE sings DE, SAM, MARY, JANNY, NESSA, MARJORIE, RUTHIE, and AMY-LOU walk up to the canvas and add a line, eventually creating a 'self-portrait.' Yet over time, she recovers with a new garden. To be who she was born.

Nevaeh- 'THE CANVAS WONDERS- you can still see the WHO AM I? ...With all the drawings as if done by the hands of many.'

'WHO I AM TODAY?' This was worked on by me Hope 'till she was normal, and had no memories of the past, and she can think I the bad lady too. Yet know all the facts.

'THE Girl OR THE Troublemaker?'

THE BOULEVARDIER?

SO DIFFERENT IN OUR DIFFERENT LIVES; ALIKE IN ONE SMALL WAY: WE ALL WONDER WHO AM I TODAY.

DOCTOR WILUBR- (Appears out of the darkness.)

In August of 2004, Nevaeh- missed a succession of appointments. I subsequently received this letter- saying no need any longer.

(She pulls out a letter and reading glasses and reads down on the tip of the nose.)

'I'm not going to tell you there isn't anything wrong with me, we both know there was - even if I don't recall.' Said young 8-year-old Nevaeh. Then she went on to say- 'Although it is not what I lead you to understand, it is me letting go of past. I do not have any multiple personalities anymore. I have been essentially lying in my pretense of them.'

Nevaeh- 'MY BRUSHES PONDER WHO AM I- yet like being in a dream wondering in the subconsciousness?'

'WHY I AM THIS WAY? And well I- will I be okay?'

'AM I THE WAY GOD PAINTED ME OR BEEN LEAD ASTRAY?'

'SHOULD I JUST DENY I AM THE Nevaeh? THEY IMPLY I AM?'

'AFRAID TO FIND OUT WHY I AM THIS WAY...'

I remember in my dreams- things like:

'SATAN'S OWN OR THE LAMB OF GOD.'

'EITHER WAY, I STILL SLEEP WITH THE LIGHT ON.'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'Also, the extreme things I said about my daddy are not true.'

Nevaeh- 'BUT BLESS THE HAND THAT WON'T SPARE THE ROD.'

'CHILD SAVED IS CHILD GONE UNSPOILED!'

'Untouched- I have been touched, and I still remember that... can I love now- I find out?'

DOCTOR LORENZO- 'It is true she interfered with my music and drawings, but that was due to a lack of understanding. She may have been more than a little nervous-flighty, clever, perhaps overanxious. But my daddy loved me.'

Nevaeh- 'YES, UNSPOILED BUT UNDISTINGUISHED.'

YES, SAVED YET EMPTY AND UNKNOWN.

IF I COULD SEE ALL THERE IS TO ME WOULD MY WORLD THEN BE LESS LONELY?

DOCTOR WILUBR- 'I just wasn't the interesting, charming person she was,'

(DOCTOR LORENZO- and the SELVES FADE. Nevaeh walks around the room.)

(SHE created a portrait in a record time of a cherub.)

Nevaeh- 'What is this?'

I wrote a letter to Doctor Lorenzo. I wrote and told her I was making it all up.

'Why would you do that? Draw so fast?'

Nevaeh- 'I don't know... maybe to show I didn't lack but after I feel I do- I wrote it... down in my book that I started off life, I was... gone for two days- it feels yet it was many years. And when I came to... I older yet feel as if I was in a new world.'

(SHE indicates the portrait next to the one she just did.)

'It's remarkable- a world, unlike anything we have seen.'

(SHE touches Nevaeh's face holding it plum to cheek soft and gentle.)

'You're remarkable.'

'YES, UNSPOILED BUT UNDISTINGUISHED.'

'YES, SAVED- Although Hollow Furthermore Alien.'

'IF I COULD SEE ALL THERE IS TO ME WOULD MY WORLD THEN BE LESS LONELY? (SHE continues her strokes to the representation of what she will look like.)'

'THE COLORS ASK ME WHO AM I in this IF I AM OKAY? Someday it will be the cover of my story and everyone will know who I am. 'I am an angle.'

Then she said- 'I am just a girl and the most beloved of them all for an understanding of the misunderstood like me!'

'You are a bright child,' said the phycologist.

'I TELL THEM NOT TO BE CONCERNED.' This is just child's play and imagination.

'You'll see' said Nevaeh.

'Look at this artwork- MANY HUES AND MANY SHADES STUNNING.'

'THE COLORS ASK ME WHO AM I, YET LOOKING HERE I ALREADY KNOW- YET YOU DON'T.'

'THE BRUSHES ASK ME What AM I. THE CANVAS ASKS ME What AM I- AND I know that I am a mad genius.'

‘WHO AM I TO SAY? I don't know me- yet you seem too.’

(Chatting and making plans-)

(She may never-ever know that Lily is her twin- sister- from birth, and they share these moments. They will always seem to be drawn yet not know why? Sad yet it's for the best.

(Office- meetings)

‘So, what do we do?’ They all were pondering.

DOCTOR LORENZO- ‘Change the look of Lily, keep her hair bleached, change her last name - to Anderson, the name of the new caretaker with youth services, we have a way- mind takes over- experimental, yet should take all the pains away of the past; for good health.’

(Time travel, has its choices and being me, this is what I did to save the worlds.)

I try to remember who I was and survived! Moreover, even now- part of whom I was given deeply to keep exercising- I was with them all really just my mind and soul lingering, I Nevaeh am also Elody as you now know. I- Nevaeh am a shapeshifter and can transform into the girl- to a beast- to the essence, in whomever- or whatever- I want to help or destroy.

Nevaeh

Book: 58

Grayed

It was almost November 3080, Millia was commencement to be terrified. No, the wrong word, Millia thought. Frightened meant that deep, sickening feeling of something terrible about to happen. Terrified was the way he had felt a year ago when an unidentified aircraft had overflown the community twice.

He had seen it both times. Narrow your eyes toward the sky, he had seen the sleek unmanned aircraft, almost a blur at its high speed- like all the drones dropping off the mail and packages, go past, and a second later heard the blast of sound that followed. Sporadically, when supplies were delivered by cargo planes to the landing field across the river, the children rode their fold-up cars, to the seafront and watched, intrigued, the unloading and then the takeoff directed to the west, always away from the community.

Then one more time, a moment later, from the opposite direction, the same plane. At first, he had been only captivated. She had never seen aircraft so close, for it was against the rules for Pilots to fly over the community. Nonetheless, the aircraft a year ago had been different. It was not a squat, fat-bellied cargo plane but a needle-nosed single-pilot jet.

Millia, looking around anxiously at the large dystopian 1930s like an art-deco city all round that went on as far as the proficient eye could see, had seen others... adults as well as children... stop what they were doing and wait, confused, for an explanation of the frightening event. Then all of the citizens had been ordered to go into the nearest building and stay there. DIRECTLY, the rasping voice through the speakers had said, LEAVE YOUR like vintage-looking automobile's car WHERE THEY ARE.

'Maiara,' Mother reminded her, smiling, 'You know the rules...' Two young teens...one male, one female...to each family division. It was written very clearly in the rules. Maiara giggled. 'Well,' she said, 'I thought maybe just this once.'

'Anydreia later designed the bridge that crosses the river to the west of town,' Millia's mother said. 'It wasn't there when we were children.' 'There are very rarely disappointments, Millia. I don't think you need to worry about that,' his Ancestor reassured her. 'And if there are, you know there's an appeal process.' But they all laughed at that...an appeal went to a committee for study. 'I uneasiness a little about Ashenria's Assignment,' Millia confessed.

'Ashenria's such fun.

But he doesn't really have any serious interests. He makes a game out of everything.' Her Ancestor chuckled. 'You know,' he said, 'I remember when Ashenria was a new child at the Nurturing Center before he was named. He never cried. He giggled and laughed at everything. All of us on the staff enjoyed nurturing Ashenria.'

'The Teenagers know Ashenria,' his mother said. 'They'll find exactly the right Assignment for her. I don't think you need to worry about her. But, Millia, let me warn you about something that may not have occurred to you. I know I didn't think about it until after my Ceremony of Nine.'

'What's that?'

'Well, it's the last of the Observances, as you know. After nine, age isn't important. Most of us even lose track of how teenagers we are as time passes, though the information is in the Hall of Open Records, and we could go and look it up if we wanted to. What's important is the preparation for adult life, and the training you'll receive in your Assignment.' 'I know that' Millia said. 'Everyone knows that.'

'Nonetheless, it means,' her mother went on about that fact, 'That you'll move into a new assembly. As well as each of your friends will. You'll no longer be spending your time with your group of Elevens. After the Ceremony of Nine, you'll be with your Assignment group, with those in training. No more volunteer hours. No more recreation hours. So, your friends will no longer be as close.'

Millia shook his head. 'Ashenria and I will always be friends,' she said determinedly.

'And there will still be school.'

'That's correct,' his Ancestor agreed.

'Nonetheless what your mother said is true as well. There will be changes.' 'Good changes, though,' his mother pointed out. 'After my Ceremony of Nine, I missed my childhood recreation. But when I entered my training for Law and Justice, I found myself with people who shared my interests. I made friends on a new level, friends of all ages.'

'Did you still play at all, after Nine?' Millia asked.

'Infrequently,' his mother replied. 'But it didn't seem as significant to me.'

‘I did,’ her Ancestor said, giggling. ‘I still do. Every day, at the Nurturing Center, I play bounce-on-the-knee, and peek-a-boo, and hug-the-teddy.’ He reached over and stroked Millia’s neatly trimmed hair to have the look.

‘Fun doesn’t end when you become Nine.’

Maiara appeared, wearing her nightclothes, in the doorway. She gave an impatient sigh. ‘This is certainly a very long private conversation,’ she said. ‘And there are certain people waiting for their comfort object.’ ‘Maiara,’ her mother said fondly, ‘you’re very close to being-an Eight, and when you’re an Eight, your comfort object will be taken away.’

‘It will be recycled for the younger children. You should be starting to go off to sleep without it.’ Nonetheless, her Ancestor had already gone to the shelf and taken down the stuffed elephant which was kept there. Many of the comfort objects, like Maiara’s, were soft, stuffed, imaginary creatures. Millia’s had been called a bear. ‘Here you are, Maiara-,’ she said. ‘I’ll come to help you remove your hair ribbons.’ Millia and his mother rolled their eyes, yet they watched affectionately as Maiara and her Ancestor headed to her sleeping-room with the stuffed bear that had been given to her as her comfort object when she was born.

His mother moved to her big desk and opened her briefcase; her work never seemed to end, even when she was at home in the evening. Millia went to his own desk and began to sort through his school papers for the evening’s assignment. But his mind was still in December and the coming Ceremony. They want to put another soul in him and replace him with something that is no longer him... I thought. Though he had been reassured by the talk with his parents, he hadn’t the slightest idea what Assignment the teenagers would be selected for his future, or how he might feel about it when the day came.

‘Oh, look!’ Maiara squealed with delight. ‘Isn’t he cute? Look how tiny he is! And he has funny eyes like yours, Millia!’ Millia glared at her. He didn’t like it that she had mentioned his eyes. He waited for his Ancestor to chastise Maiara. But Ancestor was busy unstrapping the carrying handbag from the back of his bicycle. Millia walked over to look. It was the first thing Millia noticed as he looked at the teenager peering up curiously from the handbag. The pale eyes. Almost every citizen in the community had dark eyes. His parents did, and Maiara did, and so did all of his group members and friends. But there were a few exceptions: Millia herself, and a female Five who he had noticed had the different, lighter eyes. No one mentioned such things; it was not a rule but was considered rude to call attention to things that were unsettling or different about individuals. Maiara, he decided, would have to learn that soon, or she would be called in for chastisement because of her insensitive chatter.

Ancestor put his vintage-looking automobile into its parking port. Then he picked up the handbag and carried it into the house. Maiara followed behind, but she glanced back over her shoulder at Millia and teased, 'Maybe he had the same Birthmother as you.'

Millia shrugged... she followed them inside.

Nevertheless, she had been startled by the teenager's eyes. Mirrors were rare in the community; they weren't forbidden, but there was no real need of them, and Millia had simply never bothered to look at herself very often even when she found herself in a location where a mirror existed. Now, seeing the new teenager and its expression, she was reminded that the light eyes were not only a rarity but gave the one who had them a certain look- what was it? Depth, he decided; as if one were looking into the clear water of the river, down to the bottom, where things might lurk which hadn't been discovered yet. She felt self-conscious, realizing that he, too, had that expression. She went to her desk, pretending not to be interested in the NEW teenager. On the other side of the room, Mother and Maiara were bending over to watch as Ancestor unwrapped its blanket.

'What's her comfort object called?'

Maiara asked, picking up the stuffed creature which had been placed beside the teenager in his handbag.

Ancestor glanced at it. 'Horse,' he said, I think what do you think this thing is? Maiara giggled at the strange word. 'Horse,' she repeated and put the comfort object down again. She peered at the unwrapped teenager, who waved his arms. 'I think teenagers are so-o cute,' Maiara sighed. 'I have faith in that fact that I get assigned to be a Birthmother at the age of nine to some man yet like me, and what they want is same-sex love that is why I want her.' 'Maiara!' The mother spoke very sharply. 'Don't say that. There's very little honor in that Assignment.'

'Nevertheless, I was talking to Naannadraia. Do you know the Ten who lives around the corner? She does some of her volunteer hours at the Birthing Center. And she teenagers me that the Birthmothers get wonderful food, and they have very gentle exercise periods, and most of the time they just play games and amuse themselves while they're waiting. I think I'd like that,' Maiara said petulantly. 'Four years now,' Mother teenagers her resolutely. 'Four births, and that's all. After that, they are Workhands for the rest of their adult lives, until the day that they enter the House of the Teenagers. Is that what you want, Maiara? Three lazy years, and then physical labor until you are teenagers?' 'Well, no, I guess not,' Maiara accepted unenthusiastically. The Ancestor giving to her and her group family turned the teenager onto his tummy in the handbag.

He sat beside it and rubbed its small back with a rhythmic motion. 'Anyway, Maiara-', he said affectionately, 'the Birth Mothers never even get to see teenagers.

If you enjoy the little ones so much, you should hope for an Assignment as Nurturer.' 'When you're an Eight and start your volunteer hours, you can try some at the Nurturing Center,' Mother suggested. 'Affirmative, I think I will,' Maiara said... She genuflected beside the handbag for herself. 'What did you say his name is? Gaddie?

Hello, Gaddie,' she said in a singsong voice.

Then she giggled.

'Oo- ops,' she whispered. 'I think she's asleep, don't you? I guess I'd better be quiet.' (They want us dumb so they can give we receive on what they say. They why only girl's life to see this world and boys make us their slaves, my thoughts. Do you see what boys do to us?)

Millia turned to the school assignments on his desk.

Some chance of that, he thought. Maiara was never quiet. Probably she should hope for an Assignment as Speaker, so that she could sit in the office with the microphone all day, making announcements. He laughed silently to herself, picturing his sister droning on in the self- an important voice that all the Speakers seemed to develop, saying things like,

CARE, THIS IS A PROMPT TO LADIES UNDER NINE THAT HAIR RIBBONS ARE TO BE NEATLY TIED AT ALL PERIODS. She turned toward Maiara and noticed to his satisfaction that her ribbons were, as usual, undone and dangling. There would be an announcement like that quite soon, he felt certain, and it would be directed mainly at Maiara, though her name, of course, would not be mentioned.

Everyone would know.

Everyone had known, he remembered with humiliation, that the announcement ATTENTION, THIS IS A REMINDER TO MALE ELEVENs THAT OBJECTS ARE NOT TO BE REMOVED FROM THE RECREATION AREA AND THAT SNACKS ARE TO BE EATEN, NOT HOARDED had been specifically directed at her, the day last month that he had taken an apple home.

No one had mentioned it, not even his parents because the public announcement had been sufficient to produce the appropriate remorse. He had, of course, disposed of the apple and made his apology to the Recreation Director the next morning, before school. Millia thought again about that incident. He was still bewildered by it.

Not by the announcement or the necessary apology; those were standard procedures, and he had deserved them- but by the incident itself. She probably should have brought up his feeling of incomprehension that very evening when the family unit had shared their feelings of the day. But he had not been able to sort out and put words to the source of her confusion, so he had let it pass. It had happened during the recreation period when he had been playing with Ashenria.

Millia had casually picked up an apple from the handbag where the snacks were kept and had thrown it to his friend. Ashenria had thrown it back, and they had begun a simple game of catch. There had been nothing special about it; it was an activity that he had performed countless times: throw, catch; throw, catch. It was effortless for Millia, and even boring, though Ashenria enjoyed it, and playing catch was a required activity for Ashenria because it would improve his hand-eye coordination, which was not up to standards.

Nevertheless, suddenly Millia had noticed, following the path of the apple through the air with his eyes, that the piece of fruit had- well, this was the part that he couldn't adequately understand- the apple had changed. Just for an instant. It had changed in mid-air, he remembered. Then it was in his hand, and he looked at it carefully, but it was the same apple. Unchanged. The same size and shape: a perfect sphere. The same nondescript shade, about the same shade as his own tunic. There was absolutely nothing extraordinary about that apple. He had tossed it back and forth between his hands a few times, then throw it again to Ashenria. And again- in the air, for an instant only- it had changed. It had happened four times before, I recall. Millia had blinked, looked around, and then tested his eyesight, squinting at the small print on the identification badge attached to his tunic. He read his name quite clearly. He could also clearly see Ashenria at the other end of the throwing area. And he had had no problem catching the apple.

Following, the mother, who held a prominent position at the Department of Justice, talked about her feelings. Nowadays a repeat offender had been brought before her, someone who had broken the rules before. Someone who she hoped had been adequately and fairly punished, and who had been restored to his place: to his job, his home, his family unit. To see her brought before her a second time caused her overwhelming feelings of frustration and anger. And even guilt, that she hadn't made a difference in his life. 'I feel frightened, too, for her,' she confessed. 'You know that there's no third chance. The rules say that if there's a third transgression, he simply has to be released.' Millia shivered. He knew it happened.

There was even a boy in his group of Elevens whose Ancestor had been released years before. No one ever mentioned it; the disgrace was unspeakable. It was hard to imagine. Maiara stood up and went to her mother. She stroked her mother's arm.

From his place at the table, Ancestor reached over and took her hand. Millia reached for the other. One by one, they comforted her. Soon she smiled, thanked them, and murmured that she felt soothed.

The ceremonial continued. 'Millia?'

Ancestor asked. 'You're last, tonight.' Millia sighed... This evening he almost would have preferred to keep his feelings hidden. But it was, of course, against the rules. 'I'm feeling apprehensive,' he confessed, glad that the appropriate descriptive word had finally come to her. 'Why? Why - is that, son?'

His Ancestor looked concerned. 'I know there's really nothing to worry about,' Millia explained, 'and that every adult has been through it. I know you have, Ancestor, and you too, Mother.

But it's the Ceremony that I'm apprehensive about. It's almost December.' Maiara looked up, her eyes wide. 'The Ceremony of Nine,' she whispered in an awed voice. Even the smallest children...

Maiara's age and younger...knew that it lay in the future for each of them. 'I'm glad you teenagers us of your feelings,' Ancestor said. 'Maiara,' Mother said, beckoning to the little girl, 'Go on now and get into your nightclothes.

Ancestor and I are going to stay here and talk to Millia for a while.' Maiara sighed, but obediently she got down from her chair.

'Privately?' she asked. Mother nodded. 'Yes,' she said, 'this talk will be a private one with Millia.' Millia watched as his Ancestor poured a fresh cup of coffee. She put off...

‘You know,’ his Ancestor finally said, ‘every December was exciting to me when I was young.

And it has been for you and Maiara, too, I’m sure. Each December brings such changes.’

Millia nodded her head up and down... He could remember the Decembers back to when she had developed, well, probably a Four. The earlier ones were lost to her. But he observed them each year, and he remembered Maiara's earliest Decembers.

He remembered when his family received Maiara, the day she was named, the day that she had become a One. Millia had been completely mystified... ‘Mai?’ She had called out saying not uproariously. ‘Does anything seem strange to you? About the apple?’ ‘Yes,’ Ashenria called back, laughing. ‘It jumps out of my hand onto the ground!’ Ashenria had just dropped it once again.

So-o Millia laughed too, and with his laughter tried to ignore his uneasy conviction that something had happened. But he had taken the apple home, against the recreation area rules. That evening, before his parents and Maiara arrived at the dwelling, he had held it in his hands and looked at it carefully. It was slightly bruised now, for the reason that Ashenria had dropped it several times. But there was nothing at all unusual about the apple. She had held a magnifying glass to it. He had tossed it several times across the room, watching, and then rolled it around and around on his desktop, waiting for the thing to happen again.

Nonetheless, it hadn't... The only thing that happened was the announcement later that evening over the speaker, the announcement that singled her out without using his name, which had caused both of his parents to glance meaningfully at his desk where the apple still lay.

Now, sitting at his desk, staring at her schoolwork as his family hovered over the teenager in its handbag, she shook her head some, trying to forget the odd occurrence. She forced herself to arrange his papers and try to study a little before the evening meal. The teenager, Gaddie, stirred and whispered, and Ancestor spoke softly to Maiara, explaining the feeding procedure as he opened the container that held the formula and equipment. The evening proceeded as all evenings did in the family unit, in the dwelling, in the community: quiet, reflective, a time for renewal and preparation for the day to come. It was different only in addition to it of the teenager with his pale, solemn, knowing eyes.

Millia rode at a leisurely pace, glancing at the like vintage-looking automobile cars ports beside the buildings to see if he could spot Ashenria's. He didn't often do his volunteer hours with his friend because Ashenria frequently fooled around, and made serious work a little difficult. But now, with nine coming so soon and the volunteer hours ending, it didn't seem to matter. The freedom to choose where to spend those hours had always seemed a wonderful indulgence to Millia; other hours of the day were so carefully regulated. she remembered when he had become an Eight, as Maiara would do shortly, and had been faced with that freedom of choice. The Eights always set out on their first volunteer hour a little nervously, giggling and staying in groups of friends.

They almost invariably did their hours on Recreation Duty first, helping with the younger ones in a place where they still felt comfortable. But with guidance, as they developed self-confidence and maturity, they moved on to other jobs, gravitating toward those that would suit their own interests and skills.

Teenagers are planed out with their lover and life- not I. A male ten named Benjie had done his entire nearly- Four years in the Therapy Center, working with citizens who had been injured. It was rumored that he was as skilled now as the Rehabilitation Directors themselves and that he had even developed some machines and methods to hasten rehabilitation.

There was no doubt that Benjamin would receive his Assignment to that field and would probably be permitted to bypass most of the training. Millia was impressed by the things Benjamin had achieved. He knew her, of course, since they had always been groupmates, but they had never talked about the boy's happenings for the reason that such a conversation would have been awkward for Benjie. There was never any comfortable way to mention or discuss one's successes without breaking the rule against bragging, even if one didn't mean to. It was a minor rule, rather like rudeness, punishable only by gentle chastisement. But still. Better to steer clear of an occasion governed by a rule which would be so easy to break. The area of dwellings behind her, Millia rode past the community structures, hoping to spot Ashenria's bicycle parked beside one of the small factories or office buildings. He passed the Child Care Center where Maiara stayed after school, and the play areas surrounding it.

He rode through the Central Plaza and the large Auditorium where public meetings were held. Millia slowed and looked at the nametags on the car lined up outside the Cultivation Center. Then he checked that outside Food Distribution; it was always fun to help with the deliveries, and he hoped he would find his friend there so that they could go together on the daily rounds, carrying the cartons of supplies into the dwellings of the community. But he finally found Ashenria's bicycle - leaning, as usual, instead of the upright in its port, as it should have been- at the House of the Teenagers.

There was only one other child's bicycle there, that of a female Eleven named Fiona.

Millia liked Fiona. She was a good student, quiet and polite, but she had a sense of fun as well, and it didn't surprise her that she was working with Ashenria today. He parked his bicycle neatly in the port beside theirs and entered the building. 'Hello, Millia,' the attendant at the front desk said. She handed her the sign-up sheet and stamped her own official seal beside his signature.

All of his volunteer hours would be carefully tabulated at the Hall of Open Records. Once, long ago, it was whispered among the children, and eight had arrived at the Ceremony of Nine only to hear a public announcement that he had not completed the required number of volunteer hours and would not, therefore, be given his Assignment.

He had been permitted an additional month in which to complete the hours, and then given his Assignment privately, with no applause, no celebration: a disgrace that had clouded his entire future. 'It's good to have some volunteers here today,' the attendant teenagers her. 'We celebrated a release this morning, and that always throws the schedule off a little, so things get backed up.' She looked at a printed sheet. 'Let's see. Ashenria and Fiona are helping in the bathing room. Why don't you join them there? You know where it is, don't you?' Millia nodded, acknowledged her, and walked down the long hallway.

He glanced into the rooms on either side. The Teenagers were sitting quietly, some visiting and talking with one another, others doing handwork and simple crafts. A few were asleep. Individually room was comfortably furnished, the floors covered with thick carpeting. It was a serene and slow-paced place, unlike the busy centers of manufacture and distribution where the daily work of the community occurred. Millia was glad that he had, over the years, chosen to do his hours in a variety of places so that he could experience the differences. He realized, though, that not focusing on one area meant he has left with not the slightest idea...not even a guess...of what his Assignment would be.

She laughed softly. Thinking about the Ceremony again, Millia? He teased herself.

But he suspected that with the date so near, probably all of his friends were, too.

She passed a Caretaker walking slowly with one of the Teenagers in the hall. 'Hello, Millia,' the young uniformed man said, smiling pleasantly. The woman beside her, whose arm he held, was hunched over as she shuffled along in her soft slippers. She looked at Millia and smiled, but her dark eyes were clouded and blank. He realized she was blind. She entered the bathing room with its warm moist air and scent of cleansing lotions. He removed his tunic, hung it carefully on a wall hook, and put on the volunteer's smock that was sitting on a shelf. 'Hello, Millia!' Ashenria called from the corner where she was kneeling beside a tub. Millia saw her nearby, in a different tub. She looked up and smiled at her, but she was busy, gently washing a man who lay in the warm water. Millia greeted them and the caretaking attendants at work nearby. Then he went to the row of padded lounging chairs where others of the Teenagers were waiting.

He had worked here before; he knew what to do.

'Your turn, Lieissah,' he said, reading the name tag on the woman's robe. 'I'll just start the water and then help you up.' He pressed the button on a nearby empty tub and watched as the warm water flowed in through the many small openings on the sides. The tub would be filled in a minute and the water flow would stop automatically. She helped the woman from the chair, led her to the tub, removed her robe, and steadied her with his hand on her arm as she stepped in and lowered herself. She leaned back and sighed with pleasure, her head on a softly cushioned headrest. 'Relaxed?' he asked, and she nodded, her eyes closed. Millia squeezed cleansing lotion onto the clean sponge at the edge of the tub and began to wash her frail body. Last night he had watched as his Ancestor bathed the teenager.

This was much the same: the fragile skin, the soothing water, the gentle motion of his hand, slippery with soap. The relaxed, peaceful smile on the woman's face reminded her of Gaddie being bathed. And the nakedness, too. It was against the rules for children or adults to look at another's nakedness, but the rule did not apply to teenagers ran or the Teenagers. Millia was glad. It was a nuisance to keep oneself covered while changing for games, and the required apology if one had by mistake glimpsed another's body was always awkward.

He couldn't see why it was necessary.

He liked the feeling of safety here in this warm and quiet room; he liked the expression of trust on the woman's face as she lay in the water unprotected, exposed, and free. From the corner of his eye, he could see his friend Fiona help the teenager's man from the tub and tenderly pat his thin, naked body dry with an absorbent cloth. She helped her into his robe. Millia thought Lieissah had drifted into sleep, as the Teenagers often did, and he was careful to keep his emotions steady and gentle so he wouldn't wake her. He was surprised when she spoke, her eyes still closed. 'This morning we celebrated the release of Roberto,' she teenagers her. 'It was wonderful.' 'I knew her!' Millia said. 'I helped with his feeding the last time I was here, just a few weeks ago. He was a very interesting man.' Lieissah opened her eyes happily. 'They teenagers his whole life before they released her,' she said. 'They always do. But to be honest,' she whispered with a mischievous look, 'some of the tellings are a little boring. I've even seen some of the Teenagers fall asleep during tellings - when they released Edna recently.'

Did you know Edna?' Millia shook his head. He couldn't recall anyone named Edna. 'Well, they tried to make her life sound meaningful. And of course,' she added primly, 'all lives are meaningful, I don't mean that they aren't. But Edna. My goodness. She was a Birthmother, and then she worked in Food Production for years, until she came here.'

She never even had a family unit.' Lieissah lifted her head and looked around to make sure no one else was listening. Then she confided, 'I don't think Edna was very smart.' Millia laughed. He rinsed her left arm, laid it back into the water, and began to wash her feet. She murmured with pleasure as he massaged her feet with the sponge. 'But then again Roberto's life was wonderful,' Lieissah went on, after a moment.

2

'He had been an Instructor of Elevens - you know how important that is - and he'd been on the Planning Committee. And - goodness, I don't know how he found the time - he also raised two very successful children, and he was also the one who did the landscaping design for the Central Plaza. He didn't do the actual labor, of course.' 'Now your back. Lean forward and I'll help you sit up.' Millia put his arm around her and supported her as she sat. He squeezed the sponge against her back and began to rub her sharp-boned shoulders. 'Tell me about the celebration.' The Ceremony for the Ones was always noisy and fun. Each December, all the teenager trained in the previous year turned One one. Her mother agreed, smiling. 'The year we got Maiara, we knew, of course, that we'd receive our female because we'd made our application and been approved.'

But I'd been wondering and wondering what her name would be.' 'I could have sneaked a look at the list prior to the ceremony,' Ancestor confided. 'The committee always makes the list in advance, and it's right there in the office at the Nurturing Center. One at a time - there were always fifty in each year's group if none had been released - they had been brought to the stage by the Nurturers who had cared for them since birth. Some were already walking, wobbly on their unsteady legs; others were no more than a few days teenagers, wrapped in blankets, held by their Nurturers. 'I enjoy the Naming,' Millia said. 'As a matter of fact,' he went on, 'I feel a little guilty about this. But I did go in this afternoon and looked to see if this year's Naming list had been made yet. It was right there in the office, and I looked up number ThirtySix- that's the little guy I've been concerned about- for the reason that it occurred to me that it might enhance her cherishing if I could call her by a name. Just privately, of course, when no one else is around.' 'Did you find it?' Millia asked.

He was fascinated. It didn't seem a terribly important rule, but the fact that his Ancestor had broken a rule at all awed her. He glanced at his mother, the one responsible for adherence to the rules, and was relieved that she was smiling. Her Ancestor jiggled his eyes with his head like yes. 'Her name - if he makes it to the Naming without being released, of course- is to be Gaddie. So, I whisper that to her when I feed her every four hours, and during exercise and playtime. If no one can hear me. 'I call her Gabe, actually,' he said and chortled. 'Gapie.'

Millia tried it out. A good name, he decided. Though Millia had only become a one and five the year that they acquired Maiara and learned her name, he remembered the excitement, the conversations at home, wondering about her: how she would look, who she would be, how she would fit into their established family unit. He remembered climbing the steps to the stage with his parents, his Ancestor by his side that year instead of with the Nurturers since it was the year that he would be given a teenager of his own.

She reminisced his mother taking the teenager, his sister, into her arms, while the document was read to the assembled family units. The crowd had clapped, and Millia had grinned. He liked his sister's name. Maiara, barely awake, had waved her small fist. Then they had stepped down to make room for the next family unit. 'Teenager Twenty- four,' the Name had read. 'Maiara.' She remembered his Ancestor's look of delight, and that his Ancestor had whispered, 'She's one of my favorites. I was hoping for her to be the one.'

'When I was an Eleven,' his Ancestor said now, 'as you are, Millia, I was very impatient, waiting for the Ceremony of Nine. It's a long two days. I remember that I enjoyed the Ones, as I always do, but that I didn't pay much attention to the other ceremonies, except for my sister's. She became a Nine that year and got her bicycle. I'd been teaching her to ride mine, even though technically I wasn't supposed to.' Millia laughed. It was one of the few rules that were not taken very seriously and was almost always broken. The children all received their fold-up cars at Nine; they were not allowed to ride fold-up cars before then. But almost always, the teenager's brothers and sisters had secretly taught the younger ones. Millia had been thinking already about teaching Maiara. There was talk about changing the rule and giving the fold-up cars at an earlier age.

A committee was studying the idea. When something went to a committee for study, the people always joked about it. They said that the committee members would become Teenagers by the time the rule change was made. Instructions were very hard to change. Sometimes, if it was a very important rule- unlike the one governing the age for fold-up cars- it would have to go, eventually, to The Obtainer for a decision. The Obtainer was the most important Teenager. Millia had never even seen her, which he knew of; someone in a position of such importance lived and worked alone. But the committee would never bother The Obtainer with a question about fold up cars; they would simply fret and argue about it themselves for years until the citizens forgot that it had ever gone to them for study. Her Ancestor continued.

‘So, I watched and cheered when my sister, Katya, became a Nine and removed her hair ribbons and got her bicycle,’ Ancestor went on. ‘Then I didn’t pay much attention to the Tens and Elevens, not teens. And finally, at the end of the second day, which seemed to go on forever, it was my turn. It was the Ceremony of Nine.’ Millia shivered. He pictured his-

Ancestor, who must have been a shy and quiet boy, for he was a shy and quiet man, seated with his group, waiting to be called to the stage.

The Ceremony of Nine was the last of the Ceremonies. The most important. ‘I remember how proud my parents looked- and my sister, too; even though she wanted to be out riding the bicycle publicly, she stopped fidgeting and was very still and attentive when my turn came. ‘Nevertheless, to be honest, Millia,’ his Ancestor said, ‘for me, there was not the element of suspense that there is with your Ceremony. Because I was already fairly certain of what the assignment was to be.’ Millia was surprised... by this... There was no way, really, to know in advance.

It was a secret selection, made by the leaders of the community, the Committee of Teenagers, who took the responsibility so seriously that there were never even any jokes made about Assignments. Her mother seemed surprised, too. ‘How could you have known?’ she asked. Her Ancestor smiled his gentle smile. ‘Well, it was clear to me- and my parents later confessed that it had been obvious to them, too- what my aptitude was. I had always loved the teenagers are more than anything. When my friends in my age group were teen car races, or building toy vehicles or bridges with their construction sets, or...’ ‘All the things I do with my friends,’ Millia pointed out, and his mother nodded in agreement. ‘I always participated, of course, because as children we must experience all of those things.

And I studied hard in school, as you do, Millia. But again, and again, during free time, I found myself drawn to the teenager ran. I spent almost all of my volunteer hours helping at the Nurturing Center. Of course, the teenagers knew that, from their observation.' Millia nodded. During the past year, he had been aware of the increasing level of observation. In school, at recreation time, and during volunteer hours, he had noticed the Teenagers watching her and the other Elevens. She had seen those taking notes. He knew, too, that the Teenagers were meeting for long hours with all of the instructors that he and the other Elevens had had during their years of school. 'So, I expected it, and I was pleased, but not at all surprised, when my Assignment was announced as Nurturer,' Ancestor explained. 'Did everyone applaud, even though they weren't surprised?'

Millia asked. 'Oh, of course. They were happy for me, that my Assignment was what I wanted most. I felt very fortunate.' His Ancestor smiled. 'Were any of the Elevens disappointed, your year?'

Millia asked. Unlike his Ancestor, he had no idea what his Assignment would be. But he knew that some would disappoint her. Though he respected his Ancestor's work, Nurturer would not be his wish.

And he didn't envy Laborers at all. Her Ancestor thought. 'No, I don't think so. Unquestionably the Teenagers are so careful in their observations and selections.' 'I think it's probably the most important job in our community,' his mother commented. 'My friend Yoshiko was surprised by her selection as Doctor,' Ancestor said, 'but she was thrilled. And let's see, there was Anydreia - I remember that when we were boys, he never wanted to do physical things. He spent all the recreation time he could with his construction set, and his volunteer hours were always on building sites. The Teenagers knew that, of course. Anydreia was given the Assignment of Engineer and he was delighted.'

Instantly, obediently, Millia had dropped his like vintage-looking automobile car on its side on the path behind his family's dwelling. He had run indoors and stayed there, alone. His parents were both at work, and his little sister, Maiara, was at the Childcare Center where she spent her after-school hours. Looking through the front window, he had seen no people: none of the busy afternoon crew of Street Cleaners, Landscape Workers, and Food Delivery people who usually populated the community at that time of day. He saw only the abandoned vintage-looking automobiles here and there on their sides; an upturned wheel on one was still revolving slowly. The world like modern high floating buildings and glass that shines blue, cold and concrete. Beltways in the sky with tracks that rush by fast and yet slow. All black and white to them, not me and not as I see her, as she does me.

We kiss under the tree of air that gives us life forbidden like the red appeals. That is where they looking, we did what was not... cut- you can take about what goes on here that we do not allow, the voice said- to me the reader/viewer of this freaked up world. She had been frightened then. The sense of his own community silent, waiting, had made his stomach churn. He had trembled. Nevertheless, it had been nothing. Within minutes the speakers had crackled again, and the voice, reassuring now and less urgent, had explained that a Pilot- in- Training had misread his navigational instructions and made a-wrong turn. Desperately the Pilot had been trying to make his way back before his error- was noticed. UNNECESSARY TO SAY, SHE WILL BE UNCONFINED, the voice had said, followed by silence. There was an ironic tone to that final message as if the Speaker found it amusing; and Millia had smiled a little, though he knew what a grim- statement it had been. For a contributing citizen to be released from the community was a final decision, a terrible punishment, an overwhelming statement of failure. Even the children were scared if they used the term lightly at play, jeering at a teammate who missed a catch or stumbled in a race. Millia had done it once, had shouted at his best friend, ‘That’s it, Ashenria! You’re released!’ when Ashenria’s clumsy error had lost a match for his team.

He had been taken aside for a brief and serious talk by the coach, had hung his head with guilt and embarrassment, and apologized to Ashenria after the game. Now, thinking about the feeling of fear as he pedaled home along the river path, he remembered that moment of palpable, stomach- sinking terror when the aircraft had streaked above. It was not what he was feeling now with December approaching. She searched for the right word to describe her own feeling.

Millia was vigilant about language.

Not like his friend, Ashenria, who talked too fast and mixed things up, scrambling words and phrases until they were barely recognizable and often very funny. Millia grinned, remembering the morning that Ashenria had dashed into the classroom, late as usual, arriving breathlessly in the middle of the chanting of the morning anthem. When the class took their seats at the conclusion of the patriotic hymn, Ashenria remained standing to make his public apology as was required. ‘I apologize for inconveniencing my learning community.’ Ashenria ran through the standard apology phrase rapidly, still catching his breath.

The Instructor and class waited patiently for his explanation. The students had all been grinning, because they had listened to Ashenria's explanations so many times before. 'I left home at the correct time but when I was riding along near the hatchery, the crew was separating some salmon. I guess I just got distraught, watching them. 'I for one apologize to my classmates,' Ashenria concluded. He smoothed his rumpled tunic and sat down. 'We accept your apology, Ashenria.' The class recited the standard response in unison. Many of the students were biting their lips to keep from laughing. 'I accept your apology, Ashenria,' the Instructor said. He was smiling. 'And I thank you because once again you have provided an opportunity for a lesson in language... 'Distraught' is too strong an adjective to describe salmon-viewing.' He turned and wrote 'distraught' on the instructional board. Beside it, he wrote 'Unfocussed!' Millia, nearing his home now, smiled at the recollection. Thinking, still, as he wheeled his vintage-looking automobile cars into its narrow port beside the door, he realized that frightened was the wrong word to describe his feelings, now that December was almost here. It was too strong an adjective. She had waited a long time for this special December. Now that it was almost upon her, he wasn't frightened, but he was ... eager, he decided. He was eager for it to come. And he was excited, certainly.

All of the Elevens were excited about the event that would be coming so soon. Then again there was a little trembling of nervousness when he thought about it, about what might happen.

Trembling down there for her in me...

Apprehensive, Millia decided. That's what I am.

'Who wants to be the first tonight, for feelings?' Millia's Ancestor asked, at the conclusion of their evening meal. It was one of the rituals, the evening telling of feelings. Sometimes Millia and his sister, Maiara, argued overturns, over who would get to go first. Their parents, of course, were part of the ritual; they, too, teenagers their feelings each evening.

But like all parents- all adults- they didn't fight and wheedle for their turn. Nor did Millia, tonight. His feelings were too complicated this evening. He wanted to share them, but he wasn't eager to begin the process of sifting through his own complicated emotions, even with the help that he knew his parents could give. 'You go, Maiara,' he said, seeing her sister, who was much younger... only a Seven- wiggling with impatience in her chair.' 'I felt very angry this afternoon,' Maiara announced... 'My Childcare group was in the play area, and we had a visiting group of Seven and they didn't obey the rules at all. One of them...a male; I don't know his name- kept going right to the front of the line for the slide, even though the rest of us were all waiting. I felt so angry at her. I made my hand into a fist, like this.' She held up a clenched fist and the rest of the family smiled at her small defiant gesture. 'Why? Why - do you think the visitors didn't obey the rules?' Mother asked. Maiara considered, and shook her head. 'I don't know. They acted like... like...' 'Wildlife?' Millia suggested. She laughed hard yet not too hard to get bitched at. 'That's right,' Maiara said, laughing too. 'Like animals.' Neither child knew what the word meant, exactly, but it was often used to describe someone uneducated or clumsy, someone, who didn't fit in.

Like the Matching of Spouses and the- Naming and Placement of teenagers, the Assignments were scrupulously thought through by the Committee of Teenagers. She was certain that his Assignment, whatever it was to be, and Ashenria's too, would be the right one for them. He only wished that the midday break would conclude, that the audience would reenter the Auditorium, and the suspense would end. As if in answer to his unspoken wish, the signal came and the crowd began to move toward the doors. Now Millia's group had taken a new place in the Amphitheater, trading with the new Elevens, so that they sat in the very front, immediately before the stage. They were arranged by their original numbers, the numbers they had been given at birth. The numbers were rarely used after the Naming. But each child knew his number, of course.

Sometimes parents used them in irritation at a child's misbehavior, indicating that Misain made one unworthy of a name. Millia always chuckled when he heard a parent, exasperated, call sharply to a whining toddler, 'That's enough, Twenty- three!' Millia was Nineteen. He had been the nineteenth teenager born this year. It had meant that at his Naming, he had been already standing and bright-eyed, soon to walk and talk. It had given her a slight advantage the first year or two, a little more maturity than many of his group mates who had been born in the later months of that year. But it evened out, as it always did, by three. After three, the children progressed at much the same level, though by their first number- one could always tell who was a few months' - teenagers than others in her- group. Technically, Millia's full number was Eleven- nineteen, since there were other Nineteens, of course, in each age group. And today, now that the new Elevens had been advanced this morning, there were two Eleven- nineteens. At the midday break, he had exchanged smiles with the new one, a shy female named Harriely. Nevertheless- the duplication was only for these few hours. Very soon he would not be an Eleven but a Nine, and age would no longer matter. He would be an adult, like his parents, though a new one and untrained still. Ashenria was Four and sat now in the row ahead of Millia. He would receive his Assignment fourth. She, fifteen, was on his left; on his other side sat Twenty, a male named Harriely who Millia didn't like much.

Harriely was very serious, not much fun, and a worrier and tattletale, too. 'Have you checked the rules, Millia?' Harriely was always whispering solemnly. 'I'm not sure that's within the rules.' Usually, it was some foolish thing that no one cared about- opening his tunic if it was a day with a breeze; taking a brief try on a friend's bicycle, just to experience the different feel of it.

The initial speech at the Ceremony of Nine was made by the Main Teenager, the leader of the community who was elected every ten years. The speech was much the same each year: recollection of the time of childhood and the period of preparation, the coming responsibilities of adult life, the profound importance of Assignment, the seriousness of training to come.

Then the Main Teen moved ahead in her speech. 'This is the time,' she began, looking directly at them, 'when we acknowledge differences. You Elevens have spent all your years till now learning to fit in, to standardize your behavior, to curb any impulse that might set you apart from the group. 'Nevertheless, today we honor your differences. They have determined your futures.' She began to describe this year's group and its variety of personalities, though she singled no one out by name. She mentioned that there was one who had singular skills at caretaking, another who loved teenager ran, one with unusual scientific aptitude, and a fourth for whom physical labor was an obvious pleasure.

Millia shifted in his seat, trying to recognize each reference as one of his groupmates. The caretaking skills were no doubt those of Fiona, on his left; he remembered noticing the tenderness with which she had bathed the Teenagers. Probably the one with scientific aptitude was Benjamin, the male who had devised new, important equipment for the Rehabilitation Center. She heard nothing that he recognized as herself, Millia. Finally, the Main Teen paid tribute to the hard work of her committee, which had performed the observations so meticulously all year. The Committee of Teenagers stood and was acknowledged by applause. Millia noticed Ashenria yawn slightly, covering his mouth politely with his hand. Then, at last, the Main teen called number One to the stage, and the Assignments began. Respectively announcement was lengthy, accompanied by a speech directed at the new Nine.

Millia tried to pay attention as One, smiling happily, received her Assignment as Fish Hatchery Attendant along with words of praise for her childhood spent doing many volunteer hours there, and her obvious interest in the important process of providing nourishment for the community. Number One- her name was Madeline- returned, finally, amidst applause, to her seat, wearing the new badge that designated her Fish Hatchery Attendant. Millia was certainly glad that that Assignment was taken; he wouldn't have wanted it. But he gave Madeline a smile of congratulation. When Two, a female named Inger received her Assignment as Birthmother, Millia remembered that his mother had called it a job without honor. But he thought that the Committee had chosen well. Inger was a nice girl though somewhat lazy, and her body was strong. She would enjoy the three years of being pampered that would follow her brief training; she would give birth easily and well; and the task of Laborer that would follow would use her strength, keep her healthy, and impose self-discipline. Inger was smiling when she resumed her seat. Birthmother was an important job if lacking in prestige.

Millia noticed that Ashenria looked nervous. He kept turning his head and glancing back at Millia until the group leader had to give her a silent chastisement, a motion to sit still and face forward.

Three, Millia, was given an Assignment as Instructor of sixes, which obviously pleased her and was well deserved. Now there were three Assignments gone, none of the ones that Millia would have liked- not that he could have been a Birthmother, anyway, he realized with amusement. He tried to sort through the list in his mind, the possible Assignments that remained. But there were so many he gave it up; and anyway, now it was Ashenria's turn. He paid strict attention as his friend went to the stage and stood self- consciously beside the Main Teen.

'All of us in the community know and enjoy Ashenria,' the Main Teen began. Ashenria grinned and scratched one leg with the other foot. The audience chuckled softly.' When the committee began to consider Ashenria's Assignment,' she went on, 'there were some possibilities that were immediately discarded. Some that would clearly not have been right for Ashenria. 'For example,' she said, smiling, 'we did not consider for an instant designating Ashenria an Instructor of Threes.' The audience howled with laughter.

Ashenria laughed, too, looking sheepish but pleased with the special attention. The Instructors of Threes were in charge of the acquisition of the correct language. 'In actual fact,' the Main Teen continued, chuckling a little herself, 'we even gave a little thought to some retroactive chastisement for the one who had been Ashenria's Instructor of Threes so long ago. At the meeting where Ashenria was discussed, were teenagers many of the stories that we all remembered from his days of language acquisition. 'Particularly,' she said, chuckling, 'the alteration between snack and smack. Remember, Ashenria?' Ashenria nodded ruefully, and the audience laughed aloud. Millia did, too. He remembered though he had been only a Three at the time herself. The punishment used for small children was a regulated system of smacks with the discipline wand: a thin, flexible weapon that stung painfully when it was wielded. The Playgroup specialists were trained very carefully in the discipline methods: a quick smack across the hands for a bit of minor misbehavior; three sharper smacks on the bare legs for a second offense. Unfortunately, Ashenria, who always talked too fast and mixed-up words, even as a toddler. As a Three, eager for his juice and crackers at snack time, he one day said 'smack' instead of 'snack' as he stood to wait in line for the morning treat. Millia remembered it clearly.

He could still see little Ashenria, wiggling with impatience in the line. He remembered the cheerful voice call out, 'I want my smack!' The other Threes, including Millia, had laughed nervously. 'Snack!' they corrected. 'You meant snack, Ashenria!' But the mistake had been made. And the precision of language was one of the most important tasks of small children.

3

Ashenria had asked for a smack. The discipline wand, in the hand of the Childcare worker, whistled as it came down across Ashenria's hands. Ashenria whimpered, cringed and corrected herself instantly. 'Snack,' he whispered. Nevertheless, the next morning he had done it again. And again, the following week. He couldn't seem to stop, though for each lapse the discipline wand came again, escalating to a series of painful lashes that left marks on Ashenria's legs. Eventually, for a period of time, Ashenria stopped talking altogether when he was a Three. 'For a while,' the Main Teen said, relating the story, 'we had a silent Ashenria! But he learned.' She turned to her with a smile. 'When he began to talk again, it was with greater precision. And now his lapses are very few. His corrections and apologies are very prompt. And his good humor is unfailing.' The audience murmured in agreement.

Ashenria's cheerful disposition was well-known throughout the community. 'Ashenria.' She lifted her voice to make the official announcement. 'We have given you the Assignment of Assistant Director of Recreation.' She clipped on his new badge as he stood beside her, beaming.

Then he turned and left the stage as the audience cheered. When he had taken his seat again, the Main Teen looked down at her and said the words that she had said now four times, and would say to each new Nine. Somehow, she gave it special meaning for each of them. 'Ashenria,' she said, 'thank you for your juvenile years.' The Assignments continued, and Millia watched and listened, relieved now by the wonderful Assignment his best friend had been given. But he was more and more apprehensive as his own approach. Now the new Nines in the row ahead had all received their badges. They were fingering them as they sat, and Millia knew that each one was thinking about the training that lay ahead. For someone studious male had been selected as Doctor, a female as Engineer, and another for Law and Justice- it would be years of hard work and study. Others, like Laborers and Birthmothers, would have a much shorter training period.

Eighteen, Fiona, on his left, was called. Millia knew she must be nervous, but Fiona was a calm female. She had been sitting quietly, serenely, throughout the Ceremony. Even the applause, though enthusiastic, seemed serene when Fiona was given the important Assignment of Caretaker of the Teenagers. It was perfect for such a sensitive, gentle girl, and her smile was satisfied and pleased when she took her seat beside her again. She skipped me, Millia thought, stunned. Had he heard wrong? No. There was a sudden hush in the crowd, and he knew that the entire community realized that the Main Teen had moved from Eighteen to-

Twenty, leaving a gap. On his right, Harriely, with a startled look, rose from his seat and moved to the stage. A mistake. She made a mistake. But Millia knew, even as he had the thought, that she hadn't. The Main Teen made no mistakes. Not at the Ceremony of Nine. She felt dizzy, and couldn't focus his attention. He didn't hear what Assignment Harriely received, and was only dimly aware of the applause as the boy returned, wearing his new badge.

Then: Twenty- one. Twenty- two. The numbers continued in order. Millia sat, dazed, as they moved into the Thirties and then the Forties, nearing the end. Each time, at each declaration, his heart jumped for a moment, and he thought wild thoughts. Perhaps now she would call his name. Could he have forgotten his own number? No. He had always been Nineteen. He was sitting in the seat marked fourteen. But she had skipped her. He saw the others in his group glance at her, embarrassed, and then avert their eyes quickly. He saw a worried look on the face of his group leader. He hunched his shoulders and tried to make herself smaller in the seat. He wanted to disappear, to fade away, and not to exist. He didn't dare to turn and find his parents in the crowd. He couldn't bear to see their faces darkened with shame.

Millia bowed his head and searched through his mind. What had he done wrong? The audience was clearly ill at ease. They applauded at the final Assignment; but the applause was piecemeal, no longer a crescendo of united enthusiasm. There were murmurs of confusion.

Millia moved his hands together, clapping, but it was an automatic, meaningless gesture that he wasn't even aware of. His mind had shut out all of the earlier emotions: the anticipation, excitement, pride, and even the happy kinship with his friends. Now he felt only humiliation and terror. The Main Teen waited until the uneasy applause subsided. Then she spoke again. 'I know,' she said in her vibrant, gracious voice, 'that you are all concerned. That you feel I have made a mistake.' She smiled. The community, relieved from its discomfort very slightly by her benign statement, seemed to breathe more easily. It was very silent. Millia looked up at me. 'I have caused you anxiety,' she said. 'I apologize to my community.' Her voice flowed over the assembled crowd. 'We accept your apology,' they all uttered together. 'Millia,' she said, looking down at her, 'I apologize to you in particular. I caused you anguish.' 'I accept your apology,' Millia replied shakily. 'Please come to the stage now.' Earlier that day, dressing in his own dwelling, he had practiced the kind of jaunty, self-assured walk that he hoped he could make to the stage when his turn came. All of that was forgotten now. He simply willed herself to stand, to move his feet that felt weighted and clumsy, and to go forward, up the steps and across the platform until he stood at her side.

Reassuringly she placed her arm on his tense shoulders. 'Millia has not been assigned,' she informed the crowd, and his heart sank.

Then she went on. 'Millia has been selected.'

She blinked... What did that mean? He felt a collective, questioning stir from the audience. They, too, were puzzled. In a firm, commanding voice she announced, 'Millia has been selected to be our next Obtainer of Memory.' Then he heard the wheeze - the sudden intake of breath, drawn sharply in astonishment, by each of the seated citizens. She saw their faces; the eyes broadened in wonder. As well as still, he did not understand. 'Such a selection is very, very rare,' the Main Teen teenagers the audience. 'Our community has only one Obtainer. It is he who trains his successor. 'We have had our current Obtainer for a very long time,' she went on. Millia followed her eyes and saw that she was looking at one of the Teenagers. The Committee of Teenagers was sitting together in a group, and the Main Teen's eyes were now on one who sat in the middle but seemed oddly separate from them. It was a man Millia had never noticed before, a bearded man with pale eyes.

He was watching Millia intently. 'We failed in our last selection,' the Main Teen said solemnly. 'It was ten years ago when Millia was just a toddler. I will not dwell on the experience because it causes us all terrible discomfort.' Millia didn't know what she was referring to, but he could sense the discomfort of the audience. They shifted uneasily in their seats. 'We have not been hasty this time,' she continued. 'We could not afford another failure.' 'Sometimes,' she went on, speaking now in a lighter tone, relaxing the tension in the Auditorium, 'we are not entirely certain about the Assignments, even after the most painstaking observations. Sometimes we worry that the one assigned might not develop, through training, every attribute necessary.'

Elvens are still children, after all. What we observe as playfulness and patience - the requirements to become Nurturer- could, with maturity, be revealed as simply foolishness and indolence. So, we continue to observe during training, and to modify behavior when necessary.

'Nonetheless, the Obtainer- in- training cannot be observed, cannot be modified. That is stated quite clearly in the rules.'

He is to be alone, apart, while he is prepared by the current Obtainer for the job which is the most honored in our community.' Alone? Apart? Millia listened with increasing unease.

'Therefore, the selection must be sound.'

It must be a unanimous choice of the Committee. They can have no doubts, however fleeting. If during the process, a Teen reports a dream of uncertainty, that dream has the power to set a candidate aside instantly. 'Millia was identified as a possible Obtainer many years ago. We have observed her meticulously. There were no dreams of uncertainty. 'she has shown all of the qualities that an Obtainer must-have.' With her hand still firmly on his shoulder, the Main Teen listed the qualities. 'Acumen,' she said. 'We are all aware that Millia has been a top student throughout his school days. 'Truthfulness,' she said next. 'Millia has, like all of us, committed minor transgressions.' She smiled at her. 'We expect that. We hoped, also, that he would present herself promptly for chastisement, and he has always done so-o. 'Bravery,' she went on. 'Only one of us here today has ever undergone the rigorous training required of an Obtainer. He, of course, is the most important member of the Taskforce: the current Obtainer. It was he who reminded us, again and again, of the courage required. 'Millia,' she said, turning to her, but speaking in a voice that the entire community could hear, 'the training required of you involves pain. The physical pain I was feeling within me. As they cut that off too, my clit like they do with all of us girls here.' She felt fear flutter within her. 'You have never experienced that. Yes, you have scraped your knees in falls from your bicycle. Yes, you crushed your finger in a door last year.' Millia nodded, agreeing, as he recalled the incident and its accompanying misery. 'Nonetheless, you will be faced, now,' she explained gently, 'with the pain of a magnitude that none of us here can comprehend because it is beyond our experience. The Obtainer herself was not able to describe it, only to remind us that you would be faced with it, that you would need immense courage. We cannot prepare you for that.

‘Nevertheless, we feel certain that you are brave,’ she said to her. She did not feel brave at all. Not now. ‘The fourth essential attribute,’ the Main Teen said, ‘is wisdom.

Millia has not yet acquired that. The acquisition of wisdom will come through his training. ‘We are convinced that Millia has the ability to acquire wisdom. That is what we looked for. ‘Finally, The Obtainer must have one more quality, and it is one which I can only name, but not describe. I do not understand it. You members of the community will not understand it, either. Perhaps Millia will because the current Obtainer has teenagers as that Millia already has this quality. He calls it the Capacity to See Beyond.’ The Main Teen looked at Millia with a question in her eyes. The audience watched her, too. They were silent. They don’t want us to feel anything- not even an orgasm!

For a moment he froze, consumed with despair. He didn't have it, then whatever- she- had said. He didn't know what it was. Now was the moment when he would have to confess, to say, ‘No, I don't. I can't,’ and throw herself on their mercy, ask their forgiveness, to explain that he had been wrongly chosen, that he was not the right one at all. But then when he looked out across the crowd, the sea of faces, the thing happened again. The thing that had happened with the apple. They changed... She blinked, and it was gone. His shoulders straightened slightly. Briefly, he felt a tiny sliver of sureness for the first time. She was still watching her. They all were. ‘I think it's true,’ the teenagers the Main Teen and the community. ‘I don't understand it yet. I don't know what it is. But sometimes I see something. And maybe it's beyond.’ She took her arm from his shoulders. ‘Millia,’ she said, speaking not to her alone but to the entire community of which he was a part, ‘you will be trained to be our next Obtainer of Memory. We thank you for your childhood.’ Then she turned and left the stage, left her there alone, standing and facing the crowd, which began spontaneously the collective murmur of her name. ‘Millia.’ It was a whisper at first: hushed, barely audible. ‘Millia... Millia.’ Then louder, faster. ‘MILLIA- MILLIA- MILLIA.’ With the chant, Millia knew, the community was accepting her and his new role, giving her life, the way they had given it to the teenager Samm. His heart swelled with gratitude and pride.

Nevertheless, at the same time, she was filled with fear. He did not know what her selection meant. He did not know what he was to become. Otherwise what would become of her? Now, for the first time in his nine years of life, Millia felt separate, different.

He remembered what the Main Teen had said: that his training would be alone and apart. But then again, her training had not yet begun and already, upon leaving the Auditorium, he felt the apartness. The girl the fourteener she had given her, he made his way through the throng, looking for his family unit and for Ashenria. People moved aside for her. They watched her. He thought he could hear whispers. 'Mill!' She called, spotting his friend near the rows of fold-up cars. 'Ride back with me?' 'Unquestionable.' Ashenria smiled, his usual smile, friendly and familiar. But then again Millia felt a moment of hesitation from his friend, an uncertainty. 'Felicitations,' Ashenria said. 'You too,' Millia replied. 'It was really funny when she teenagers about the smacks. You got more applause than almost anybody else.' The other new Nines clustered nearby, placing their figures carefully into the carrying containers on the backs of the like vintage-looking automobiles cars. In each dwelling tonight, they would be studying the instructions for the beginning of their training.

Each night for years the children had memorized the required lessons for school, often yawning with boredom. Tonight, they would all begin eagerly to memorize the rules for their adult Assignments. 'Congratulations, Ashenria!' someone called. Then that hesitation again. 'You too, Millia!' Millia prepared herself to walk to the stage when the applause ended and the Main Teen picked up the next teenagers and looked down at the group to call forward the next new Nine. He was calm now that his turn had come. He took a deep breath and smoothed his hair with his hand. 'Twenty,' he heard her voice say clearly.

'Harriely.'

'Where were the visitors from?' Ancestor asked.

Maiara frowned, trying to remember. 'Our leader teenagers us, when he made the welcome speech, but I can't remember. I guess I wasn't paying attention. It was from another community. They had to leave very early, and they had their midday meal on the bus.'

Mother nodded. 'Do you think it's possible that their rules may be different? And so, they simply didn't know what your play area rules were?'

Maiara shrugged and nodded. 'I suppose.'

'You've visited other communities, haven't you?' Millia asked... 'My group has, often...'

Maiara nodded again. 'When we were Sixes, we went and shared a whole school day with a group of

Sixes in their community.'

'How did you feel when you were there?'

Maiara frowned. 'I felt strange. Because their methods were different. They were learning usages that my group hadn't learned yet, so we felt stupid.'

An ancestor was listening with interest. 'I'm thinking, Maiara,' he said, 'about the boy who didn't obey the rules today. Do you think it's possible that he felt strange and stupid, being in a new place with rules that he didn't know about?'

Maiara pondered that. 'Yes,' she said, finally. 'I feel a little sorry for her,' Millia said... 'Even though I don't even know her. I feel sorry for anyone who is in a place where he feels strange and stupid.'

'How do you feel now, Maiara?' Ancestor asked.

'Still angry?'

'I guess not,' Maiara decided. 'I guess I feel a little sorry for her. And sorry I made a fist.' She grinned. Millia smiled back at his sister. Maiara's feelings were always straightforward, fairly simple, usually easy to resolve. He guessed that his own had been, too, when he was a Seven.

She listened politely, though not very attentively, while his Ancestor took his turn, describing a feeling of worry that he'd had that day at work: a concern about one of the teenagers who wasn't doing well. Millia's Ancestor's title was Nurturer. He and the other Nurturers were responsible for all the physical and emotional needs of every teenager during its earliest life. It was a very important job, Millia knew, but it wasn't one that interested her much.

'What gender is it?' Maiara asked.

‘Male,’ Ancestor said. ‘He’s a sweet little male with a lovely disposition. But he isn’t growing as fast as he should, and he doesn’t sleep soundly. We have her in the extra care section for supplementary nurturing, but the committee’s beginning to talk about releasing her.’

‘Oh, no nope,’ Mother murmured sympathetically. ‘I know how sad that must make you feel.’ Millia and Maiara both nodded sympathetically as well. The release of a teenager that was always sad, because they hadn’t had a chance to enjoy life within the community yet. And they hadn’t done anything wrong. ‘Well, there was the telling of his life. That is always first. Then the toast. We all raised our glasses and cheered. We chanted anthem. He made a lovely goodbye speech. And several of us made little speeches wishing her well. I didn’t, though. I’ve never been fond of public speaking. ‘She was thrilled. You should have seen the look on his face when they let her go.’ Millia slowed the strokes of his hand on her back thoughtfully. ‘Lieissah,’ she asked, ‘what materializes when they make the actual release?’

Where exactly did Roberto go?’ She lifted her bare wet shoulders in a small shrug. ‘I don’t know. I don’t think anybody does, except the committee. He just bowed to all of us and then walked, like they all do, through the special door in the Releasing Room. But you should have seen his look. Pure happiness, I’d call it.’ Millia grinned. ‘I wish I’d been there to see it.’ Lieissah frowned. ‘I don’t know why they don’t let children come. Not enough room, I guess. They should enlarge the Releasing Room.’ Ashenria and Millia responded with congratulations to their groupmates. Millia saw his parents watching her from the place where their own fold-up cars were waiting. Maiara had already been strapped into her sear. He waved. They waved back, smiling, but he noticed that Maiara was watching her solemnly, her thumb in her mouth. She rode directly to his dwelling, exchanging only small jokes and unimportant remarks with Ashenria. ‘See you in the morning, Recreation Director!’ he called, dismounting by his door as Ashenria continued on.

‘Right! See you!’ Ashenria called back. Once again, there was just a moment when things weren’t quite the same, weren’t quite as they had always been through the long friendship. Perhaps he had imagined it. Things couldn’t change, with Ashenria. The evening meal was quieter than usual. Maiara chattered about her plans for volunteer work; she would begin, she said, at the Nurturing Center, since she was already an expert at feeding Gaddie. ‘I know,’ she added quickly when her Ancestor gave her a warning glance, ‘I won’t mention his name. I know I’m not supposed to know his name. ‘I can’t wait for tomorrow to come,’ she said happily. Millia sighed uneasily. ‘I can,’ he muttered.

‘You've been greatly honored,’ his mother said. ‘Your Ancestor and I are very proud.’ ‘It's the most important job in the community,’ Ancestor said. ‘Nonetheless just the other night, you said that the job of making Assignments was the most important!’ Mother wagged some not wanting too. ‘This is different. It's not a job, really. I never thought, never expected-’ She paused. ‘There's only one Obtainer.’ ‘Nonetheless the Main Teen said that they had made a selection before and that it failed. What was she talking about?’ Both of his parents hesitated.

4

Finally, his Ancestor described the previous selection. ‘It was very much as it was today, Millia- the same suspense, as one Eleven had been passed over when the Assignments were given. Then the announcement, when they singled out the one -

‘Millia interrupted. ‘What was her name do you remember?’ Her mother replied, ‘Her, not his. It was a female. But we are never to speak the name, or to use it again for a teenager.’ Millia was shocked. A name designated Not- to- Be- Spoken indicated the highest degree of disgrace. ‘What happened to her?’ he asked nervously. Nonetheless, his parents looked blank. ‘We don't know,’ his Ancestor said uncomfortably. ‘We never saw her again.’ A silence fell over the room. They looked at each other.

Finally, his mother, rising from the table, said, ‘You've been greatly honored, Millia. Greatly honored.’ Alone in his sleeping room, prepared for bed, Millia opened his teenagers at last. Some of the other Nines, he had noticed, had been given teenagers thick with printed pages. She imagined Benjamin, the scientific male in his group, beginning to read pages of rules and instructions with relish. He pictured Fiona smiling her gentle smile as she bent over the lists of duties and methods that she would be required to learn in the days to come. Nonetheless, his own figure was startlingly close to empty - like his mind at the time. Inside there was only a single printed sheet. He read it twice. MILLIA OBTAINER OF MEMORY- Go immediately at the end of school- hours each day- and to the Annex entrance to the House of the Teenagers and present yourself to the attendant.

Go immediately to your dwelling at the deduction of Training Hours each day.

From this moment you are exempted from rubrics governing rudeness. You may ask any question of any citizen and you will receive answers.

Do not discuss your training with any other member of the community, including parents and Teenagers.

From this moment you are prohibited from a dream- telling.

Except for illness or injury unrelated to your training, do not apply for any medication.

You are not permitted to apply for release.

You may lie...

Millia was stunned. What would happen to his friendships? Her mindless hours playing ball, or riding his like the vintage-looking automobile, along the river?

Those had been happy and vital times for her. Were they to be completely taken from her, now? The simple logistic instructions- where to go, and when- we're expected. Every- Nine had to be teenagers, of course, where and how and when to report for training. But he was a little dismayed that his schedule left no time, apparently, for recreation.

The exemption from rudeness startled her. Reading it again, however, he realized that it didn't compel her to be rude; it simply allowed her the option. He was quite certain he would never take advantage of it. He was so completely, so thoroughly accustomed to courtesy within the community that the thought of asking another citizen an intimate question, of calling someone's attention to an area of awkwardness, was unnerving.

The prohibition of a dream- telling, he thought, would not be a real problem. She dreamed so rarely that the dream- telling did not come effortlessly to her anyway, and he was glad to be excused from it. He wondered briefly, though, how to deal with it at the morning meal. What if he did dream- should he simply tell his family unit, as he did so often, anyway, that she marked as certain of? That would be a lie. Still, the final rule said ... well, he wasn't quite ready to think about the final rule on the page.

The restriction of medication unnerved her. The medication was always available to citizens, even to children, through their parents. When he had crushed his finger in the door, he had quickly, gasping into the speaker, notified her mother; she had hastily requisitioned relief- of- pain medication which had promptly been delivered to his dwelling. Almost instantly the excruciating pain in his hand had diminished to the throb which was, now, all he could recall of the experience.

Re-reading rule number 7, he realized that a crushed finger fell into the category of 'unrelated to training.' So, if it ever happened again- and he was quite certain it wouldn't; he had been very careful near heavy doors since the accident! - He could still receive medication.

The pill he took now, each morning, was also unrelated to training. So, he would continue to receive the pill.

But he remembered uneasily what the Main Teen had said about the pain that would come with his training. She had called it indescribable.

Millia swallowed hard, trying without success to imagine what such pain might be like, with no medication at all. But it was beyond his comprehension.

He felt no reaction to rule number 6 at all. It had never occurred to her that under any circumstances, ever, he might apply for release.

Finally, he steeled herself to read the final rule again. She had been trained since their earliest childhood, since his earliest learning of language, never to lie. It was an integral part of the learning of precise speech. Once, when he had been a Four, he had said, just prior to the midday meal at school, 'I'm starving.'

Immediately he had been taken aside for a brief private lesson in language precision. He was not starving; it was pointed out. He was hungry. No one in the community was starving, had ever been starving, and would ever be starving. To say 'starving' was to speak a lie. An unintentional lie, of course. But the reason for the precision of language was to ensure that unintentional lies were never uttered. Did he understand that? They asked her, and he had.

She had never, within his memory, been tempted to lie. Ashenria did not lie. Maiara did not lie. His parents did not lie. No one did. Unless... Now Millia had a thought that he had never had before. This new thought was frightening. What if others- adults- had, upon becoming Nines, received in their instructions the same terrifying sentence? What if they had all been instructed: You may lie? Her mind wound... now, empowered to ask questions of utmost rudeness- and promised answers- he could, conceivably (though it was almost unimaginable,) ask someone, some adult, his Ancestor perhaps: 'Do you lie today and then and now?' Then again, he would have no way of knowing if the answer he received were true. 'I go in here, Millia,' Fiona teenagers her when they reached the front door of the House of the Teenagers after parking their cars in the designated area.

~*~

‘I don't know why I'm nervous,’ she confessed. ‘I've been here so often before.’ She turned her teenagers over in her hands. ‘Well, everything's different now,’ Millia reminded her. ‘Even the nameplates on our like vintage-looking automobiles,’ Fiona laughed.

5

During the night the nameplate of each new Nine had been removed by the Maintenance Crew and replaced with the style that indicated citizen-in-training. ‘I don't want to be late,’ she said hastily and started up the steps. ‘If we finish at the same time, I'll ride home with you.’ Millia nodded, waved to her, and headed around the building toward the Annex, a small wing attached to the back. He certainly didn't want to be late for his first day of training, either. The Annex was very ordinary, its door unremarkable. He reached for the heavy handle, then noticed a buzzer on the wall. So, he buzzed instead. ‘Absolutely...?’ The voice came through a small speaker above the buzzer. ‘It's, uh, Millia. I'm new- I mean...Yah...’ ‘Come in...’ A click indicated that the door had been unlatched. The lobby was very small and contained only a desk at which a female Attendant sat working on some papers. She looked up when he entered; then, to his surprise, she stood. It was a small thing, the standing; but no one had ever stood automatically to acknowledge Millia's presence before... ‘Welcome, Obtainer of Memory,’ she said respectfully. ‘Oh, please,’ he replied uncomfortably. ‘Call me Millia.’ She smiled, pushed a button, and he heard a click that unlocked the door to her left. ‘You may go right on in,’ she teenagers her. Then she seemed to notice her embarrassment and to realize its origin. No doors in the community were locked, ever.

None that Millia knew of, anyway. ‘The locks are simple to ensure The Headset's privacy because he needs concentration,’ she explained. ‘It would be difficult if citizens wandered in, looking for the Department of car repair, or something.’ Millia laughed, relaxing a little. The woman seemed very friendly, and it was true- in fact, it was a joke throughout the community- that the Department of Bicycle Repair, an unimportant little office, was relocated so often that no one ever knew where it was.

‘There is nothing dangerous here,’ she teenagers her.

‘Nevertheless,’ she added, glancing at the wall clock, ‘he doesn't like to be kept waiting.’

Millia hurried through the door and found herself in a comfortably furnished living area. It was not unlike his own family unit's dwelling. Furniture was standard throughout the community:

practical, sturdy, the function of each piece clearly defined. A bed for sleeping. Yet a table for eating. A desk for studying. All of those things were in this spacious room, though each was slightly different from those in her own dwelling. The fabrics on the upholstered chairs and sofa were slightly thicker and more luxurious; the table legs were not straight like those at home, but slender and curved, with a small carved decoration at the foot.

The bed, in an alcove at the far end of the room, was draped with a splendid cloth embroidered over its entire surface with intricate designs.

Yet the most conspicuous difference was the books. In his own dwelling, there were the necessary reference volumes that each house teenagers contained: a dictionary and the thick community volume which contained descriptions of every office, factory, building, and committee. And the Rules

Book, of course. 'We'll have to suggest that to the committee. Maybe they'd study it,' Millia said slyly, and Lieissah chortled with laughter. 'Correct!' she blared out, and Millia helped her from the tub. Usually, in the morning ritual when the family members teenagers their dreams, Millia didn't donate much. She rarely dreamed about anything. Sometimes he awoke with a feeling of fragments afloat in his sleep, but he couldn't seem to grasp them and put them together into something worthy of telling at the ritual. Yet this morning was different. She had dreamed very vividly the night before.

Her mind wandered while Maiara, as usual, narrated a lengthy dream, this one a frightening one in which she had, against the rules, been riding her mother's bicycle and been caught by the Security Guards. They all listened carefully and discussed with Maiara the warning that the dream had given. 'Thank you for your dream, Maiara,' Millia said the standard phrase automatically and tried to pay better attention while his mother teenagers of a dream fragment, a disquieting scene where she had been chastised for a rule infraction she didn't understand. Together they agreed that it probably resulted from her feelings when she had reluctantly dealt with punishment to the citizen who had broken the major rules a second time.

Ancestor said that he had had no dreams. 'Gabbie?' Ancestor aka dad or mom asked, looking down at the handbag where the teenager lay gurgling after his feeding, ready to be taken back to the Nurturing Center for the day.

They all laughed.

Dream- telling began with Threes. If a teenager dreamed, no one knew. 'Millia?' Mother asked the question to me. They always asked though they knew how rarely Millia had a dream to tell. 'I did dream last night,' Millia teenagers them. He shifted in his chair, frowning. 'Good,' Ancestor said... 'Tell us...' 'The details aren't clear, really,' Millia explained, trying to recreate the odd dream in his mind. 'I think I was in the bathing room at the House of the Teenagers.' 'That's where you were yesterday,' Ancestor pointed out. Millia nodded at me sweetly. 'Even so, it wasn't really the same. There was a tub, in the dream. Then only one, and the real bathing room has rows and rows of them. However - the room in the dream was warm and damp. And I had taken off my tunic but hadn't put on the smock, so my chest was bare. I was perspiring because it was so warm. And Fiona was there, the way she was yesterday.'

~*~

'Ashenria, too?' Mother asked- Millia shook his head. 'No- It was only me and Fiona, alone in the room, standing beside the tub. She was laughing. But I wasn't. I was almost a little angry at her, in the dream, because she wasn't taking me seriously.' 'Totally about what?' Maiara asked - Millia looked at his plate. For some reason that he didn't understand, he felt slightly embarrassed. 'I think I was trying to convince her that she should get into the tub of water.' She stops what she was doing, and knew that she had to tell them all about it. That it was not only all right but necessary to tell all of a dream.

So, he forced herself to relate the part that made her uneasy. 'I wanted her to take off her clothes, and get into the tub,' he explained quickly. 'I wanted to bathe her. I had the sponge in my hand. But she wouldn't. She kept laughing and saying no.' She looked up at his parents. 'That's all,' he said... 'Can you describe the strongest feeling in your dream, son?' Ancestor asked. Millia thought about it. The details were murky and vague. But the feelings were clear and flooded her again now as he thought. 'The wanting,' he said. 'I knew that she wouldn't. And I think I knew that she shouldn't. But I wanted it so terribly. I could feel the wanting all around me.' 'Thank you for your dream, Millia,' Mother said after a moment. She glanced at Ancestor. 'Maiara,' Ancestor said, 'it's time to leave for school.

Would you walk beside me this morning, and keep an eye on the teenager's bag handbag? We want to be certain she doesn't wiggle herself loose.' Millia began to rise to collect his schoolbooks.

He thought it surprising that they hadn't talked about his dream at length before the thank you.

Perhaps they found it as confusing as he had. 'Wait, Millia,' Mother said moderately... 'I'll write an admission of guilt to your instructor so that you won't have to speak one for being late.' She sank back down into his chair, puzzled. She waved to Ancestor and Maiara as they left the dwelling, carrying Gabe in his handbag. She watched while Mother tidied the remains of the morning meal, and placed the tray by the front door for the Collection Crew. In conclusion, she sat down beside her at the table. 'Millia,' she said with a smile, 'the feeling you described as the wanting? It was your first Stirrings. Ancestor and I have been expecting it to happen to you. It happens to everyone. It happened to Ancestor when he was your age.

And it happened to me.

It will happen someday to Maiara. 'As well as very often,' Mother added, 'it begins with a dream.' Stirrings... She had heard the word before. He remembered that there was a reference to the Stirrings in the Book of Rules, though he didn't remember what it said. And now and then the Speaker mentioned it. ATTENTION...

A REMINDER THAT STIRRINGS MUST BE CONVEYED IN ORDER FOR TREATMENT TO TAKE APARTMENT.

She had always ignored that announcement, for the reason that she didn't understand it and it had never seemed to apply to her in any way. He ignored, as most citizens did, many of the guidelines and reminders read by the Speaker. 'Do I have to report it?' he asked his mother.

She laughed... 'You did, in the dream- telling. That's enough.' 'Hathor again what about the treatment? The Speaker says that treatment must take place.' Millia felt miserable. Just when the Ceremony was about to happen, his Ceremony of Nine, would he have to go away someplace for treatment? Just because of a stupid dream?

However, his mother laughed again in a reassuring, affectionate way. 'No, nope,' she said. 'It's just the pills. You're ready for the pills, that's all. That's the treatment for Stirrings.' Millia brightened... She knew about the pills. His parents took them each morning. As well as some of his friends did, he knew. Once he had been heading off to school with Ashenria, both of them on their 33 Ford's cars, when Ashenria's Ancestor had called from their dwelling doorway, 'You forgot your plan B pill, Ashenria!'

Ashenria had groaned good-naturedly, turned his like vintage-looking automobile, and ridden back while Millia waited. It was the sort of thing one didn't ask a friend about because it might have fallen into that uncomfortable category of 'being different.' Ashenria took a pill each morning; Millia did not. Always better, less rude, to talk about things that were the same. Now he swallowed the small pill that his mother handed her. 'That's all?' he asked... 'That's all,' she replied, returning the bottle to the cupboard. 'But you mustn't forget. I'll remind you of the first weeks, but then you must do it on your own. If you forget, the Stirrings will come back.

The dreams of Stirrings will come back.

Sometimes the dosage must be adjusted.' 'Ashenria takes them,' Millia confided. Her mother nodded, unsurprised. 'Many of your group mates probably do. The males, at least. And they all will, soon. Females too.'

'How long will I have to take them?'

'Until you enter the House of the Teenagers,' she explained. 'All of your adult life... Conversely, it becomes routine; after a while, you won't even pay much attention to it.' She looked at her watch. 'If you leave right now, you won't even be late for school. Hurry along... now kiddies we are kids with them until we're old... and that is 30 years of age- or we ID-ed. 'And thank you again, Millia,' she added, as he went to the door, 'for your dream.' Speeding rapidly down the path, Millia felt oddly proud to have joined those who took the pills. For a moment, though, he remembered the dream again. The dream had felt pleasurable. Though the feelings were confused, he thought that he had liked the feeling that his mother had called Stirrings. She evoked that upon waking, he had wanted to feel the Stirrings again. Then, in the same way, that his own dwelling slipped away behind her as he rounded a corner on his car, the dream slipped away from his thoughts. Very temporarily, a little guiltily, she tried to grasp it back. But the feelings had disappeared. The Stirrings were gone... 'Maiara, please teenagers motionless,' Mother said again. Maiara, standing in front of her, fidgeted impatiently. 'I can tie them myself,' she complained. 'I always have.' 'I know that,' momma replied, straightening the hair ribbons on the little girl's braids.

'But I also know that they constantly come loose and more often than not, they're dangling down your back by afternoon. Today, at least, we want them to be neatly tied and to stay neatly tied.' 'I don't like hair pink ribbons... or so they say that is the color yet I don't see it. Like all the colors are fifty shad so gray and blacked out in my and our mind they think for us in our bodies and in our minds - and that is what this would become.

I'm glad I only have to wear them one more year,' Maiara said irritably. 'Next year I get my bicycle, too,' she added more cheerfully. 'There are good things each year,' Millia reminded her. 'This year you get to start your volunteer hours. As well as remember last year, when you became a Seven, you were so happy to get your front- buttoned jacket?' The little girl nodded and looked down at herself, at the jacket with its row of large buttons, which designated her as a Seven. Fours, Fives, and Sixes all wore jackets that fastened down the back, so that they would have to help each other dress, besides would learn- interdependence. The front- buttoned jacket was the first sign of independence, the first very visible symbol of growing up. The bicycle, at Nine, would be the powerful emblem of moving gradually out into the community, away from the protective family unit.

Maiara grinned and wriggled away from her mother.

'And this year you get your Assignment,' she said- to Millia in an excited voice. 'I hope you get a Pilot. And that you take me flying!' 'Sure, I will,' said Millia. 'And I'll get a special little parachute that just fits you, and I'll take you up to, oh, maybe twenty thousand feet, and open the door, and -'

'Millia,' Mother warned. 'I was only joking,' Millia groaned. 'I don't want Pilot, anyway. If I get Pilot- I'll put in an appeal.' 'Come on,' Mother said. She gave Maiara's ribbons a final tug. 'Millia? Are you ready?

Did you take your pill? I want to get a good seat in the Auditorium.' She prodded Maiara to the front door and Millia followed.

There were only two occasions of release which were not punishment. The release of the teenagers, which was a time of celebration for a life well and fully lived; and release of a teenager, which always brought a sense of what- could- we- have- done. This was especially troubling for the Nurturers, like Ancestor, who felt they had failed somehow.

But it happened very rarely. 'Well,'

Ancestor- dad said, 'I'm going to keep trying. I may ask the committee for permission to bring her here at night if you don't mind.

You know what the night-crew Nurturers are like. I think this little guy needs something extra.' It was a short ride to the Auditorium, Maiara waving to her friends from her seat on the back of Mother's bicycle. Millia stowed her car beside Mother's and made his way through the throng to find his group.

The entire community attended the Ceremony each year. For the parents, it meant two days' holiday from work; they sat together in the huge hall. Children sat with their groups until they went, one by one, to the stage. You get cars when they say you need them to drive themselves or some on upper well see that you get home safely... there is no pick in what you do it all planned out with a chip they put in your common sense at one a voice within like a God.

Ancestor, though, would not join Mother in the audience right away. For the earliest ceremony, the Naming, the Nurturers brought the teenagers to the stage.

Millia, from his place in the balcony with the Elevens, searched the Auditorium for a glimpse of Ancestor. It wasn't at all hard to spot the Nurturers' section at the front; coming from it were the wails and howls of the teenagers who sat squirming on the Love- the boys' laps, and that the only time you feel that also. Love- what is that? Just a state of mind... At every other public ceremony, the audience was silent and attentive. But once a year, they all smiled indulgently at the commotion from the little ones waiting to receive their names and families. Millia finally caught his Ancestor's eye and waved. Ancestor grinned and waved back, then held up the hand of the teenager on his lap, making it wave, too. It wasn't Gaddie.

Gabe was back at the Nurturing Center today, being cared for by the night crew. He had been given an unusual and special reprieve from the committee and granted an additional year of nurturing before his Naming and Placement. The ancestor had gone before the committee with a plea on behalf of Gaddie, who had not yet gained the weight appropriate to his days of life nor begun to sleep soundly enough at night to be placed with his family unit.

Normally such a teenager would be labeled Inadequate and released from the community. The books in his own dwelling were the only books that Millia had ever seen. He had never known that other books existed. Then this room's walls were completely covered by bookcases, filled, which reached to the ceiling.

There must have been hundreds- perhaps thousands- of books, their titles stamped in shiny letters. Millia stared at them. She couldn't imagine what the thousands of pages contained. Could there be rules beyond the rules, which governed the community? Could there be more descriptions of offices and factories and committees? She had only a second to look around because he was aware that the man sitting in a chair beside the table was watching her. Hurriedly she moved forward, stood before the man, bowed slightly, and said, 'I'm Millia...' 'I know. Welcome,

The Obtainer of Memory.'

Millia recognized the man. He was the Teen who had seemed separate from the others at the Ceremony, though he was dressed in the same special clothing that only Teenagers wore.

Millia looked self-consciously into the pale eyes that mirrored his own. 'Sir, I apologize for my lack of understanding...' She waited, but the man did not give the standard accepting-of apology response. After a moment, Millia went on, 'But I thought- I mean I think,' he corrected, reminding herself that if the precision of language were ever to be important, it was certainly important now, in the presence of this man, 'that you are the Obtainer of Memory. I'm only, well, I was only assigned, I mean selected, yesterday. I'm not anything at all. Not yet.' The man looked at her thoughtfully, silently. It was a look that combined interest, curiosity, concern, and perhaps a little sympathy as well, finally she spoke. 'Benjie today, this moment, at least to me, you are The Obtainer.

6

'I have been The Obtainer for a long time. A very, very long time. You can see that, can't you?' Millia nodded... and said- the man was wrinkled, and his eyes, though piercing in their unusual lightness, seemed tired. The flesh around them was darkened into shadowed circles. 'I can see that you are very teenagers,' Millia responded with respect. The Teenagers were always given the highest respect. The man smiled ever so sweetly yet I didn't know all the emotions. She touched the sagging flesh on his own face with amusement. 'I am not, actually, as teenagers as I look,' he teenagers Millia. 'This job has aged me... I know I look as if I should be scheduled for release very soon. But actually, I have a good deal of time left. 'I was pleased, though, when you were selected. It took them a long time. The failure of the previous selection was ten years ago, and my energy is starting to diminish. I need what strength I have remaining for your training. We have hard- and painful work to do, you and I. 'Please sit down,' he said, and gestured toward the nearby chair.

Millia lowered herself onto the soft cushioned seat. The man closed his eyes and continued speaking. 'When I became a Nine, I was selected, as you were. I was frightened, as I'm sure you are.' He opened his eyes for a moment and peered at Millia, who nodded.

The eyes closed again. 'I came to this very room to begin my training. It was such a long time ago. 'The previous Obtainer seemed just as teenagers to me as I do to you. He was just as tired as I am today.' He sat forward suddenly, opened his eyes, and said, 'You may ask questions. I have so little experience in describing this process. It is forbidden to talk of it.' 'I know, sir. I have read the instructions,' Millia said. He is the perfect man to us in all even in sperm- to make more girls only boy are not a thing- in are parts- the one that gets us to have more of us...

'So, I may neglect to make things as clear as I should.' The man chuckled. 'My job is important and has enormous honor. But that does not mean I am perfect, and when I tried before to train a successor, I failed. Please ask any questions that will help you.' In his mind, Millia had questions. A thousand. A million questions. As many questions as there were books lining the walls. Nevertheless, he did not ask one, not yet. The man sighed, seeming to put his thoughts in order. Then he spoke again. 'Simply stated,' he said, 'although it's not really simple at all, my job is to transmit to you all the memories I have within me. Memories of the past.' 'Sir,' Millia said tentatively, 'I would be very interested to hear the story of your life and to listen to your memories. 'I apologize for interrupting,' he added quickly. The man waved his hand impatiently. 'No apologies in this room. We haven't timed.' 'Well,' Millia went on, uncomfortably aware that he might be interrupted again, 'I am really interested, I don't mean that I'm not. But then again, I don't exactly understand why it's so important. I could do some adult job in the community, and in my recreation time, I could come and listen to the stories from your childhood.

I'd like that. Actually,' he added, 'I've done that already, in the House of the Teenagers. Teenagers like to tell about their childhoods, and it's always fun to listen.'

~*~

The man shook his head. 'No, no,' he said. 'I'm not being clear. It's not my past, not my childhood that I must transmit to you.'

He leaned back, resting his head against the back of the upholstered chair. 'It's the memories of the whole world,' he said with a sigh. 'Before you, before me, before the previous Obtainer, and generations before her.'

Millia frowned. 'The whole world?' He asked. 'I don't understand. Do you mean not just us? Not just the community? Do you mean elsewhere, too?'

He tried, in his mind, to grasp the concept.

'I'm sorry, sir. I don't understand exactly. Maybe I'm not smart enough. I don't know what you mean when you say, 'the whole world' or 'generations before her.' I thought there was only us. I thought there was only now.'

'There's much more. There's all that goes beyond- all that is Elsewhere- and all that goes back, and back, and back. I received all of those when I was selected. And here in this room, all alone, I re-experience them again and again. It is how wisdom comes. And how we shape our future.'

He rested for a moment, breathing deeply. 'I am so weighted with them,' he said.

Millia felt a terrible concern for the man, suddenly.

'It's as if...' The man paused, seeming to search his mind for the right words of description. 'It's like going downhill through deep snow on a toboggan,' he said, finally.

'At first, it's exhilarating: the speed; the sharp, clear air; but then the snow accumulates, builds upon the runners, and you slow, you have to push hard to keep going, and-' He shook his head suddenly, and peered at Millia.

'That meant nothing to you, did it?' He asked.

Millia was confused. 'I didn't understand- it, sir.'

'Of course, you didn't. You don't know what snow is, do you?'

Millia shook his head.

'Or a toboggan? Runners?' 'No, sir,' Millia said.

'Downhill? The term means nothing to you?'

‘Nothing, sir.’

‘Well, it's a place to start. I'd been wondering how to begin. Move to the bed, and lie face down. Remove your tunic first and get naked - so I can feel you were I need to give you all of me and more.’ Millia did so, a little apprehensively. Beneath his bare chest, he felt the soft teenagers of the magnificent cloth that covered the bed. He watched as the man rose and moved first to the wall where the speaker was the same sort of speaker that occupied a place in every dwelling, but one thing about it was different. This one had a switch, which the man deftly snapped to the end that said OFF. Millia almost gasped aloud. To have the power to turn the speaker off! It was an astonishing thing. Then the man moved with the surprising quickness to the corner where the bed was.

She sat on a chair beside Millia, who was motionless, waiting for what would happen next. ‘Close your eyes... Relax... This will not be painful.’ Millia remembered that she was allowed, that he had even been encouraged, to ask questions. ‘What are you going to do, sir?’ he asked, hoping that his voice didn't betray his nervousness. ‘I am going to transmit the memory of snow,’ the teenager's man said and placed his hands on Millia's bareback. Millia felt nothing unusual at first. He felt only the light touch of the man's hands on his back. He tried to relax, to breathe evenly. The room was absolutely silent, and for a moment Millia feared that he might disgrace herself now, on the first day of his training, by falling asleep.

Then he shivered. He realized that the touch of the hands felt, suddenly, teenagers. At the same instant, breathing in, he felt the air change, and his very breath was teenagers. He licked his lips, and in doing so, his tongue touched the suddenly chilled air. It was very startling; but he was not at all frightened, now. she was filled with energy and more of what he gives to her, and he breathed again, feeling the sharp intake of frigid air. Now, too, he could feel teenagers air swirling around his entire body.

He felt it blow against his hands where they lay at his sides, and over his back. The touch of the man's hands seemed to have disappeared. Now he became aware of an entirely new sensation: pinpricks?

No, because they were soft and without pain. Tiny, teenagers, featherlike feelings peppered his body and face. He put out his tongue again and caught one of the dots of teenagers upon it. It disappeared from his awareness instantly, but he caught another, and another. The sensation made her smile. One part of his consciousness knew, that he was still lying there, on the bed, in the Annex room.

Yet another, separate part of his being was upright now, in a sitting position, and beneath her, he could feel that he was not on the soft decorated bed covering at all, but rather seated on a flat, hard surface.

His hands now held (though at the same time they were still motionless at his sides) a rough, damp rope. In addition, he could see, though his eyes were closed. He could see a bright, whirling torrent of crystals in the air around her, and he could see them gather on the backs of his hands... He ran his fingers through my hair saying don't be scared of this and I blacked out for it running in me. His breath was visible.

7

Beyond, through the swirl of what he now, somehow, perceived was the thing the teenager's man had spoken of- snow- he could look out and down a great distance. He was up high someplace. The ground was thick with the furry snow, but he sat slightly above it on a hard, flat object. Toboggan, he knew abruptly. He was sitting on a thing called a toboggan, on top of a bobsled icy track. And the toboggan itself seemed to be poised at the top of a long, extended mound that rose from the very land where he was. Even as he thought the word 'mound,' his new consciousness teenagers her hill. Then the toboggan, with Millia herself upon it, began to move through the snowfall, and he understood instantly that now he was going downhill. No voice made an explanation. The experience explained itself to her. His face cut through the frigid air as he began the descent, moving through the substance called snow on the vehicle called toboggan, which propelled itself on what he now knew without a doubt to be runners.

Understanding all of those things as he sped downward, he was free to enjoy the breathless glee that overcomes her: the speed, the clear teenager's air, the total silence, the feeling of balance and excitement and peace. Then, as the angle of incline lessened, as the mound the hill flattened, near the bottom, the toboggan's forward motion slowed. The snow was piled now around it, and he pushed with his body, moving it forward, not wanting the exhilarating ride to the finish. Lastly, the obstruction of the piled snow was too much for the thin runners of the toboggan, and he came to a stop. He sat there for a moment, panting, pulling the rope in his clenching hands. Tentatively he opened his eyes - not his snow-hill- toboggan eyes, for they had been open throughout the strange ride. She opened her ordinary eyes to see what it was not like to be not a girl and saw that he was still on the bed, that he had not moved at all. Instead, as a result of the Ancestor's plea, Gaddie had been labeled Uncertain and given the additional year.

He would continue to be nurtured at the Center and would spend her nights with Millia's family unit. Respectively domestic members, including Maiara, had been obligatory to sign a pledge that they would not become attached to this little temporary guest, and that they would relinquish her without protest or appeal when he was assigned to his own family unit at next year's Ceremony. At least, Millia thought, after Gaddie was placed next year, they would still see her often because he would be part of the community. If he were released, they would not see her again. Ever. Those who were released...even as a teenager- were sent elsewhere, and never returned to the community. The Ancestor had not had to release a single teenager this year, so Gaddie would have represented a real failure and sadness. Even Millia, though he didn't hover over the little one the way Maiara and his Ancestor did, was glad that Gabe had not been released. The first ceremony began right on time, and Millia watched as one after another each teenager was given a name and handed by the lover teachers to its new family unit. For some, it was the first child. But many came to the stage accompanied by another child beaming with pride to receive a little brother or sister, the way Millia had when he was about to be a Five. Ashenria poked Millia's arm. 'Remember when we got Phillipa?' He asked in a loud whisper. Millia nodded. It had only been last year. Ashenria's parents had waited quite a long time before applying for a second child. Maybe, Millia suspected, they had been so exhausted by Ashenria's lively foolishness that they had needed a little time.

Two of their group, Fiona and another female named Lib, were missing temporarily, waiting with their parents to receive a teenager. But it was rare that there was such an age gap between children in a family unit. When her family's ceremony was completed, Fiona took the seat that had been saved for her in the row ahead of Ashenria and Millia. She turned and whispered to them, 'He's cute. But I don't like his name very much.' She made a face and giggled. Fiona's new brother had been named Samm.

It wasn't a great name, Millia thought, like- well, like Gaddie, for example.

Nevertheless, it was okay. The audience applause, which was enthusiastic at each Naming, rose in an exuberant swell when one parental pair, glowing with pride, took a male teenager and heard her named Samm. This new Samm was a replacement child. The couple had lost their first Samm, a cheerful little Four. The loss of a child was very, very rare. The community was extraordinarily safe, each citizen watchful and protective of all children. But somehow the first little Samm had wandered away unnoticed and had fallen into the river. The entire community had performed the Ceremony of Loss together, murmuring the name Samm throughout an entire day, less and less frequently, softer in volume, as the long and somber day went on so that the little Four seemed to fade away gradually from everyone's consciousness.

Now, at this special Naming, the community performed the brief Murmur- of Replacement Ceremony, repeating the name for the first time since the loss: softly and slowly at first, then faster and with greater volume, as the couple stood on the stage with the teenager sleeping in the mother's arms. Millia watched and cheered as Maiara marched proudly to the stage, became an Eight and received the identifying jacket that she would wear this year, this one with smaller buttons and, for the first time, pockets, indicating that she was mature enough now to keep track of her own small belongings. She stood solemnly listening to the speech of firm instructions on the responsibilities of Eight and doing volunteer hours for the first time.

But Millia could see that Maiara, though she seemed attentive, was looking longingly at the row of gleaming fold-up cars, which would be presented tomorrow morning to the Nines. It was as if the first Samm were returning.

Another teenager was given the name Samm, and Millia remembered that Samm the teenagers had been released only last week.

But there was no Murmur- of- Replacement Ceremony for the new little Samm. The release was not the same as Loss. He sat politely through the ceremonies of Two and Three and Four, increasingly bored as he was each year. Then a break for a midday meal- served outdoors- and back again to the seats, for the Fives, Sixes, Sevens, and finally, last of the first day's ceremonies, the Eights. She knew that his parents cringed a little, as he did, when Fritz, who lived in the dwelling next door to theirs, received his vintage-looking automobile car, and almost immediately bumped into the podium with it. Next year, Maiara- billy, Millia thought. It was an exhausting day, and even Gaddie, retrieved in his handbag from the Nurturing Center, slept soundly that night. Finally, it was the morning of the Ceremony of Nine. Now Ancestor sat beside Mother in the audience. Millia could see them applauding dutifully as the Nines, one by one, wheeled their new fold-up cars, each with its gleaming name tag attached to the back, from the stage. Fritz was a very awkward child who had been summoned for chastisement again and again. His transgressions were small ones, always: shoes on the wrong feet, schoolwork misplaced, failure to study adequately for a quiz.

But each such error reflected negatively on his parents' guidance and infringed on the community's sense of order and success. Millia and his family had not been looking forward to Fritz's bicycle, which they realized would probably too often be dropped on the front walk instead of wheeled neatly into its port.

Finally, the Nines were all resettled in their seats, each having wheeled a bicycle outside where it would be waiting for its owner at the end of the day. Everyone always chuckled and made small jokes when the Nines rode home for the first time. 'Want me to show you how to ride?' ...Friends would call. 'I know you've never been on a like vintage-looking automobile before!' But invariably the grinning Nines, who in technical violation of the rule had been practicing secretly for weeks, would mount and ride off in perfect balance, training wheels never touching the ground. Then the Tens... Millia never found the Ceremony of Ten particularly interesting- the only time- consuming, as each child's hair was snipped neatly into its distinguishing cut: females lost their braids at ten, and males, too, relinquished their long childish hair and took on the manlier short style which exposed their ears. Laborers moved quickly to the stage with brooms and swept away the mounds of discarded hair.

Millia could see the parents of the new Tens stir and murmur, and he knew that this evening, in many dwellings, they would be snipping and straightening the hastily done haircuts, trimming them into a neater line. Elevens... It seemed a short time ago that Millia had undergone the Ceremony of Eleven, but he remembered that it was not one of the more interesting ones. By eleven, one was only waiting to be Nine... It was simply a marking of time with no meaningful changes. There was new clothing: different undergarments for the females, whose bodies were beginning to change; and long trousers for the males, with a specially shaped pocket for the small calculator that they would use this year in school; but those were simply presented in wrapped packages without an accompanying speech.

Break for the midday meal.

Millia realized he was hungry.

He and his group mates congregated by the tables in front of the Auditorium and took their packaged food. Yesterday there had been merriment at lunch, a lot of teasing and energy. But today the group stood anxiously, separate from the other children.

Millia watched the new Nines gravitate toward their waiting fold-up cars, each one admiring his or her name tag.

He saw the Tens stroking their new shortened hair, the females shaking their heads to feel the unaccustomed lightness without the heavy braids they had worn so long. 'I heard about a guy who was absolutely certain he was going to be assigned engineer,' Ashenria muttered as they ate, 'and instead, they gave her Sanitation Laborer. He went out the next day, jumped into the river, swam across, and joined the next community he came to. Nobody ever saw her again.' Millia laughed. 'Somebody made that story up, Ash,' he said.

'My Ancestor said he heard that story when he was a Nine.' Nonetheless, Ashenria wasn't reassured. He was eyeing the river where it was visible behind the Auditorium. 'I can't even swim very well,' he said. 'My swimming instructor said that I don't have the right boyishness or something.' 'Resilience,' Millia corrected her. 'Whatever. I don't have it. I suck... yet I can say that- that a bad word.' 'Anyhow,' Millia pointed out, 'have you ever once known of anyone- I mean really known for sure, Ashenria, not just heard a story about it- who joined another community?' 'Nope,' Ashenria admitted reluctantly. 'But you can. It says so in the rules. If you don't fit in, you can apply for Elsewhere and be released. My mother says that once, about ten years ago, someone applied and was gone the next day.' Then he chuckled. 'She teenagers me, that because I was driving her crazy. She is threatened to apply for Elsewhere.' 'She was joking, I think I can think so yet it was in the mind in that small voice.' 'I know. But it was true, what she said, that someone did that once. She said that it was really true. Here today and gone tomorrow. Never seen again.

Not even a Ceremony of Release.' Millia shrugged. It didn't worry about her. How could someone not fit in? The community was so meticulously ordered, the choices so carefully made. Even the Matching of Spouses was given such weighty consideration that sometimes an adult who applied to receive a spouse waited months or even years before a Match was approved and announced. All of the factors- disposition, energy level, intelligence, and interests- had to correspond and to interact perfectly. Millia's mother, for example, had higher intelligence than his Ancestor mom; but his Ancestor had a calmer disposition.

They balanced each other. Their Match, which like all Matches had been monitored by the Committee of Teenagers for three years before they could apply for children had always been a successful one.

'Unquestionably,' Mother said, and Millia and Maiara nodded and look at me as they say nicely. They had heard Ancestor complain about the night crew before. It was a lesser job, night- crew nurturing, assigned to those who lacked the interest or skills or insight for the more vital jobs of the daytime hours. Most of the people on the night crew had not even been given spouses because they lacked, somehow, the essential capacity to connect to others, which was required for the creation of a family unit. 'Maybe we could even keep her,' Maiara suggested sweetly, trying to look innocent. The look was fake, Millia knew; they all knew. The teenager's man, still beside the bed, was watching her. 'How do you feel they ask within run a prognosis of my insides, as I look down and is that then there that has no meaning, they say in life sacred tight- yet they say it is only for a pee?' he asked. Millia sat up and tried to answer honestly. 'Flabbergasted,' she said, after a moment. The teenager's man wiped his forehead with his sleeve. 'Whew,' she said. 'It was exhausting. But you know, even transmitting that tiny memory to you- I think it lightened me just a little.'

'Do you mean- you did say I could ask questions?' The man nodded, encouraging his question. 'Do you mean that now you don't have the memory of it- of that ride on the toboggan- anymore?' 'That's right. A little weight off this teenager's body.'

'Although it was such fun! And now you don't have it anymore! I took it from you!' On the other hand, the teenager's guy sniggered. 'All I gave you was one ride, on one toboggan, in one snow, on one hill. I have a whole world of them in my memory. I could give them to you one by one, a thousand times, and there would still be more.' 'Are you saying that I- I mean we- could do it again?' Millia asked... 'I would really like to. I think I could steer, by pulling the rope. I didn't try this time because it was so new.' The teenager's man, laughing, shook his head. 'Maybe another day, for a treat. But there's no time, really, just to play. I only wanted to begin by showing you how it works. 'Now,' he said, turning businesslike, 'lie back down. I want too...' Millia did- she was eager for whatever experience would come next. But he had, suddenly, so many questions. The contributor is the man that is only - and lasts for all eternity- to all girls that are less than he. We are the progenies... 'Why? Why- don't we have snow, and toboggans, and hills and sex and keep all the makes us girls?' she asked. 'And when did we, in the past? Did my parents have toboggans when they were young? Did you?' The teenager's chap shrugged and gave a short laugh.'

'No,' he teenagers Millia. 'It's a very distant memory. That's why it was so exhausting- I had to tug it forward from many generations back. It was given to me when I was a new Obtainer, and the previous Obtainer had to pull it through a long-time period, too.' 'Despite everything that happened to those things? Snow, and the rest of it?' 'Climate Control... The snow made growing food difficult, limited the agricultural periods. And unpredictable weather made transportation almost impossible at times. It wasn't a practical thing, so it turns out to be obsolete when we went to Sameness. 'As well as hills, too,' he added. 'They made a conveyance of goods unwieldy. Trucks; buses. Slowed them down. So -' She waved his hand as if a gesture had caused hills to disappear.

'Sameness,' he resolved.

Millia frowned. 'I wish we had those things, still. Just now and then.' The teenager's man smiled with lust in his eyes something I just downloaded in my now woman's mind is the scar was opened up.

'So, do I,' he said. 'But that choice is not ours.'

Ever- ever did I think that this was anything... 'But sir,'

Millia suggested, 'since you have so much power-' The man corrected her.

'Honor,' he said firmly. 'I have great honor.'

So, will you. But you will find that that is not the same as power. 'Lie quietly now. Since we've entered into the topic of climate, let me give you something else. And this time I'm not going to tell you the name of it because I want to test the receiving. You should be able to perceive the name without being teenagers. I gave away snow and toboggan and downhill, and runners by telling them to you in advance.' Without being instructed, Millia closed his eyes again. He felt the hands on his back again. She waited... Now it came more quickly, the feelings. This time the hands didn't become teenagers but instead began to feel warm on his body. They moistened a little.

The warmth spread, extending across his shoulders, up to his neck, onto the side of his face. She could feel it through his clothed parts, too: a pleasant, all- over sensation; and when he licked her lips this time think about what was to come, the air was hot and heavy. She didn't move. There was no toboggan. His posture didn't change. He was simply alone someplace, out of doors, lying down, and the warmth came from far above. It was not as exciting as the ride through the snowy air, but it was pleasurable and comforting. Suddenly he perceived the word for it: sunshine. He perceived that it came from the sky. Then it ended it for me. 'Sunshine,' he said aloud, opening his eyes. 'Good. You did get the word. That makes my job easier. Not so much explaining.' 'And it came from the sky.' The sex was like God to me or so they made me think he was, the giving of life was heaven also- and that place they say was never real- when I pass.

‘That's right,’ the teenager’s boy said.

‘Just the way it used to.’ ‘Before Sameness.

Before Climate Control,’ Millia added.

The man laughed. ‘You receive well, and learn quickly. I'm very pleased with you.

That's enough for today, I think. We're off to a good start.’

There was a question bothering Millia. ‘Sir,’ he said, ‘The Main Teen teenagers me - she teenagers everyone- and you teenagers me, too, that it would be painful. So, I was a little scared. But it didn't hurt at all. I really enjoyed it.’ He looked quizzically at the teenager’s man.

The man sighed... ‘I started you with memories of pleasure. My previous failure gave me the wisdom to do that.’ He took a few deep breaths. ‘Millia,’ he said, ‘it will be painful. But it need not be painful yet.’

‘I'm brave. I really am.’ Millia sat up a little straighter.

The teenager's man looked at her for a moment. she smiled at the world and his lusting eye knowing her number of 5,098,765,678 girls he contributed to. ‘I can see that,’ he said. ‘Well, since you asked the question- I think I have enough energy for one more transmission. ‘Lay down once more for me- and take it- this will be the last today.’ Millia obeyed cheerfully. He closed his eyes, waiting, and felt the hands again; then he felt the warmth again, the sunshine again, coming from the sky of this other consciousness that was so new to her. This time, as he lay basking in the wonderful warmth, he felt the passage of time. Her real self- was were aware that it was only a minute or two; but his other, memory-receiving self- felt hours pass in the sun. His skin began to sting. Restlessly he moved one arm, bending it, and felt a sharp pain in the crease of his inner arm at the elbow. ‘Ouch,’ he said loudly and shifted on the bed. ‘Ow,’ he said, wincing at the shift, and even moving his mouth to speak made his face hurt.

He knew there was a word, but the pain kept her from grasping it.

Then it ended. He opened his eyes, wincing with discomfort. ‘It hurt,’ he teenagers the man, ‘and I couldn't get the word for it.’

'It was sunburn,' the teenage man teenagers her.

Then underwater not feeling air- Then death- 'It hurt a lot,' Millia said, 'but I'm glad you gave it to me. It was interesting. And now I understand better, what it meant, that there would be a pain.'

The man didn't respond. He sat silently for an additional. Finally, he said, 'Get up, now. It's time for you to go home.' They both walked to the center of the room. Millia put his tunic back on. 'Goodbye, sir,' he said. 'Thank you for my first day.' The teenager's man nodded to her. He looked drained, and a little sad. 'Sir?' Millia said shyly. 'Yes? Do you have an inquiry?' 'It's just that I don't know your name. I thought you were The Obtainer, but you say that now I'm The Obtainer and you give to me as I give your life.

So, I don't know what to call you.' The man had sat back down in the comfortable upholstered chair. He moved his shoulders around as if to ease away an aching sensation.

He seemed terribly weary. 'Call me The Contributor,' he teenagers Millia. 'You slept soundly, Millia?' Her mother asked at the morning meal. 'No dreams?' Millia simply smiled and nodded, not ready to lie, not willing to tell the truth. 'I slept very soundly,' he said. 'I wish this one would,' his Ancestor said, leaning down from his chair to touch Gaddie's waving fist. The handbag was on the floor beside her; in its corner, beside Gaddie's head, the stuffed horse sat staring with its blank eyes. Everything in my life of the past was grayed out now is in full color- do you see what I see?

'So, do I,' Mother said, rolling her eyes. 'He's so fretful at night.' Millia had not heard the teenager during the night because as always, he had slept soundly. Then again- it was not true that he had no dreams. Again, and again, as he slept, he had slid down that snow-covered hill.

Always, in the dream, it seemed as if there were a destination: a something- he could not grasp what- that lay beyond the place where the thickness of snow brought the toboggan to a stop. She was left, upon awakening, with the feeling that he wanted, even somehow needed, to reach the something that waited in the distance. The feeling that it was good. That it was welcoming. That it was significant.

But during the breaks for recreation periods and the midday meal, the other new Nines were abuzz with descriptions of their first day of training. All of them talked at once, interrupting each other, hastily making the required apology for interrupting, then forgetting again in the excitement of describing the new experiences.

Then again, she did not know how to get there. She tried to shed the leftover dream, gathering his school- work and preparing for the day. School seemed a little different today. The classes were the same: language and- communications; commerce and industry; science and technology; civil procedures and government. Millia listened. She was very aware of she is her own admonition not to discuss his training.

Like- it would have been impossible, anyway. There was no way to describe to his friends what he had experienced there in the Annex room. How could you describe a toboggan without describing a hill and snow; and how could you describe a hill and snow to someone who had never felt height or wind or that feathery, magical teenagers? Even trained for years as they all had been in the precision of language, what words could you use which would give another the experience of sunshine?

8

So, it was easy for Millia to be still and to listen.

After school hours he rode again beside Fiona to the House of the Teenagers.

'I looked for you yesterday,' she teenagers her, 'so we could ride home together. You're like a vintage-looking automobile car was still there, and I waited for a little while. But it was getting late, so I went home.'

'I apologize for making you wait,' Millia said.

'I accept your apology,' she replied automatically.

'I stayed a little longer than I expected,' Millia explained.

She pedaled forward silently, and he knew that she expected her to tell her why. She expected her to describe his first day of training. But to ask would have fallen into the category of rudeness.

'You've been doing so many volunteer hours with the Teenagers,' Millia said, changing the subject.

'There won't be much that you don't already know.'

She ran through it in his mind. It was clearly beginning to happen more often. First, the apple a few weeks before.

The next time had been the faces in the audience at the Auditorium, just two days ago. Now, today, Fiona's hair.

Frowning, Millia walked toward the Annex. I will ask the boy, he decided.

The teenager's man looked up, smiling when Millia entered the room. He was already seated beside the bed, and he seemed more energetic today, slightly renewed, and glad to see Millia.

'Welcome,' she said. 'We must get started. You're one minute late now you pay for that.'

'I apologized' Millia began, and then stopped, flustered, remembering there were to be no apologies. She removed his dress and everything under and went to the bed. 'I'm one minute late because something happened,' he explained. 'And I'd like to ask you about it if you don't mind.' 'You may ask me anything...' Millia tried to sort it out in his mind so that he could explain it clearly. 'I think it's what you call seeing- beyond,' he said. The Contributor nodded at me with all that he was coming at me and look for the pathway of giving me all. 'Describe it,' he said. Millia teenagers her about the experience with the apple.

Then the moment on the stage, when he had looked out and seen the same phenomenon in the faces of the crowd. 'Then today, just now, outside, it happened with my friend her- she. She herself didn't change, exactly. But something about her changed for a second. Her hair looked different; but not in its shape, not in its length. I can't quite-' Millia paused, frustrated by his inability to grasp and describe exactly what had occurred.

Finally, he simply said, 'It changed. I don't know-how, or why. 'That's why I was one minute late,' he concluded and looked questioningly at The Contributor. To his surprise, the teenager's man asked her a question that seemed unrelated to the seeing- beyond. 'When I gave you the memory yesterday, the first one, the ride on the toboggan, did you look around?' Millia nodded... 'Yes,' he said, 'but the stuff- I mean the snow- in the air made it hard to see anything.' 'Did you look at the toboggan?' Millia thought back. 'No. I only felt it under me. I dreamed of it last night, too. But I don't remember seeing the toboggan in my dream, either. Just feeling it.' The Contributor seemed to be thinking. 'When I was observing you, before the selection, I perceived that you probably had the capacity, and what you describe confirms that. It happened somewhat differently to me,' The Contributor teenagers her. 'When I was just your age about to become the new Obtainer- I began to experience it, though it took a different form. With me it was... well, I won't describe that now; you wouldn't understand it yet.

‘But I think I can guess how it's happening with you. Let me just make a little test, to confirm my guess. Lay down... on your back.’ Millia lay on the bed again with his hands at his sides. He felt comfortable here now. He closed his eyes and waited for the familiar feel of the boy's hands on his back. Nonetheless, it didn't come. Instead, the boy instructed her, ‘Call back the memory of the ride on the toboggan. Just the beginning of it, where you're at the top of the hill, before the slide starts. And this time, look down at the toboggan.’ Millia was puzzled. He opened his eyes. ‘Excuse me,’ he asked politely, ‘but don't you have to give me the memory?’ ‘It's your memory, now, it's not mine to experience any longer. I gave it away.’ ‘But how can I call it back?’ ‘You can remember last year, or the year that you were a Seven, or a Five, can't you?’ ‘Of course,’ ‘It's much the same. Everyone in the community has one- generation memories like those. But now you will be able to go back farther. Try. Just concentrate.’

Millia closed his eyes again. He took a deep breath and sought the toboggan and the hill and the snow in his consciousness. There they were, with no effort. He was again sitting in that whirling world of snowflakes, atop the hill. Millia grinned with delight and blew his own steamy breath into view. Then, as he had been instructed, he looked down. He saw his own hands, furred again with snow, herding the tope. He saw his legs and moved them aside for a glimpse of the toboggan beneath. Dumbfounded, he stared at it. This time it was not a fleeting impression. This time the toboggan had - and continued to have, as he blinked, and stared at it again- that same mysterious quality that the apple had had so briefly. And Fiona's hair. The toboggan did not change. It simply was- whatever the thing was. Millia opened his eyes and was still on the bed. The boy was watching her curiously. ‘Yes,’ Millia said slowly. ‘I saw it, in the toboggan.’

‘Let me try one more thing. Look over there, to the bookcase. Do you see the very top row of books, the ones behind the table, on the top shelf?’

~*~

Millia sought them with his eyes. He stared at them, and they changed. But the change was fleeting. It slipped away the next instant. ‘It happened,’ Millia said. ‘It happened to the books, but it went away again.’ ‘I'm right, then,’ The boy said. ‘You're beginning to see the color red.’ ‘The what...?’ The Contributor sighed letting it all out, and me getting it in. ‘How to explain this? Once, back in the time of the memories, everything had a shape and size, the way things still do, but they also had a quality called color. 'There were a lot of colors, and one of them was called red. That's the one you are starting to see. Your friend Kalliean has red hair- quite distinctive, actually; I've noticed it before, yet we had sex without them know why they did this to us not to feel this lust. When you mentioned Kalliean's hair, it was the clue that teenagers me you were probably beginning to see the color red.' 'And the faces of people? The ones I saw at the Ceremony?'

The Contributor shook his head. 'No, the flesh isn't red. But it has red tones in it. There was a time, actually- you'll see this in the memories later- when flesh was many different colors. That was before we went to Sameness. Nowadays flesh is all the same, and what you saw was the red tones. Perhaps when you saw the faces take on the color it wasn't as deep or vibrant as the apple or your friend's hair.' The Contributor chuckled, suddenly. 'We've never completely mastered Sameness. I suppose the genetic scientists are still hard at work trying to work the kinks out. Hair like Kalliean's must drive them crazy.' Millia listened, trying hard to comprehend. 'And the toboggan?' he said. 'It had that same thing: the color red. But it didn't change, the boy. It just was.' 'For the reason that it's a memory from the time when color was.'

'It was so- oh, I wish language were more precise! The red was so beautiful!' The Contributor and also love the boy nodded. 'It is.' 'Do you see it all the time?' 'I see all of them... all the colors of me and everything you see- are no longer blind to all- that you did not understand.' 'Will I...?' 'Obviously- when you receive the memories. You have the capacity to see beyond. You'll gain wisdom, then, along with colors. And lots more.' Millia wasn't interested, just then, in wisdom. It was the colors that fascinated her. 'Why can't everyone see them? Why did colors disappear?' The Contributor shrugged. 'Our people made that choice, the choice to go to Sameness. Before my time, before the previous time, back and back and back. We relinquished color when we relinquished sunshine and did away with differences.' He thought for a moment. 'We gained control of many things. But we had to let go of others.' 'We shouldn't have!' Millia said fiercely. The Contributor looked startled at the certainty of Millia's reaction. Then he smiled wryly. 'You've come very quickly to that conclusion,' he said. 'It took me many years. Maybe your wisdom will come much more quickly than mine.' She glanced at the wall clock. 'Lie back down, now. We have so much to do.' 'Contributor,'

Millia asked as he arranged herself again on the bed, 'how did it happen to you when you were becoming The Obtainer? You said that the seeing- beyond happened to you, but not the same way.' The hands came to his back. 'Another day,' The boy said gently. 'I'll tell you another day. Now we must work.'

And I've thought of a way to help you with the concept of color. 'Close your eyes and be still, now. I'm going to give you a memory of a rainbow.' Days went by, and weeks. Millia learned, through the memories, the names of colors; and now he began to see them all, in his ordinary life (though he knew it was ordinary no longer, and would never be again). But they didn't last. There would be a glimpse of green- the landscaped lawn around the Central Plaza; a bush on the riverbank. The bright orange of pumpkins being trucked in from the agricultural fields beyond the community boundary- seen in an instant, the flash of brilliant color, but gone again, returning to their flat and hueless shade. The Contributor teenagers her that it would be a very long time before he had the colors to keep. 'Then I want them!' Millia said angrily. 'It isn't fair that nothing has color!'

'Not fair?' The boy looked at Millia curiously. 'Explain what you mean.' 'Well...' Millia had to stop and think it through. 'If everything's the same, then there aren't any choices! I want to wake up in the morning and decide things! A blue tunic, or a red one?' He looked down at herself and then at mine, at the colorless fabric of his clothing.

'But it's all the same, always.' Then he laughed a little. 'I know it's not important, what you wear. It doesn't matter. But- but- but...' 'It's the choosing that's important, isn't it?' The boy asked her. Millia nodded. 'My little brother-' he began and then corrected herself. 'No, that's inaccurate. He's not my brother, not really. But this teenager that my family takes care of- his name's Gaddie?' 'Yes, I know about Gaddie.' Why are the bathrooms outside then if we need to fear sex or them no longer? 'Well, he's right at the age where he's learning so much. He grabs toys when we teenagers them in front of her- my Ancestor says he's learning small muscle control. And he's really cute.'

So, you don't need to think or see that is was there on each other's bodies, as you walk around in the group showers. The same to stop the blood flow you don't need is why you take pills and long with not lusting over a girl sexily for there is no man other than I to do that too. The Contributor nodded, saying you're mine this year out of all your age.

'Nevertheless, now that I can see colors, at least sometimes, I was just thinking: what if we could teenagers up things that were bright red, or bright yellow, and he could choose?

Instead of the Sameness.' 'He might make wrong choices.' 'Oh.' Millia was silent for a minute. 'Oh, I see what you mean. It wouldn't matter for a teenager's toy. But later it does matter, doesn't it? We don't dare to let people make choices of their own.' 'Not safe?' The Contributor suggested. 'Definitely not safe,' Millia said with certainty. 'What if they were allowed to choose their own mate?

And chose wrong? 'Otherwise what if,' he went on, almost laughing at the absurdity, 'they chose their own jobs?' 'Frightening, isn't it?' The boy said. Millia chuckled.

'Very frightening. I can't even imagine it. We really have to protect people from wrong choices.' 'It's safer- This way is it not?' Would girls do that to girls down there?

Yes, now it all me that has that too... 'Yes,' Millia agreed. 'Much safer.' But then again when the conversation turned to other things, Millia was left, still, with a feeling of frustration that he didn't understand. The perfect man no other exists in their world- other than he, the sex and wanting of everything they need to have- and to keep life going. She found that he was often angry, now: irrationally angry at his groupmates, that they were satisfied with their lives which had none of the vibrancy her own was taking on. And he was angry at herself, that he could not change that for them. 'Oh, there's lots to learn,' Kalliean replied... 'There's administrative work, and the dietary rules, and punishment for disobedience- did you know that they use a discipline wand on the Teenagers, the same as for small children? And there's occupational therapy, and recreational activities, and medications, and...' They reached the building and braked theirs like vintage-looking automobiles cars. 'I really think I'll like it better than school,' Kalliean acknowledged. 'Me too,' Millia agreed, wheeling his like vintage-looking automobile cars into its place. She waited for a second, as if, again, she expected her to go on. Then she looked at her watch, waved, and hurried toward the entrance. She tried - Without asking permission from the boy because he feared- or knew- that it would be denied, he tried to give his new awareness to his friends. 'Ashenria,' Millia said one morning, 'look at those flowers very carefully.'

They were standing beside a bed of geraniums planted near the Hall of Open Records. He put his hands on Ashenria's shoulders, and concentrated on the red of the petals, trying to teenagers it as long as he could, and trying at the same time to transmit the awareness of red to her friend.

'What's the matter?' Ashenria asked uneasily. 'Is something wrong?' He moved away from Millia's hands. It was extremely rude for one citizen to touch another outside of family units. 'No, nothing. I thought for a minute that they were wilting, and we should let the Gardening Crew know they needed more watering.' Millia sighed and turned away. One evening she came home from his training weighted with new knowledge. The boy had chosen a startling and disturbing memory that day. Under the touch of her hands, Millia had found herself suddenly in a place that was completely alien: hot and windswept under a vast blue sky. There were rafts of sparse grass, a few bushes, and rocks, and nearby he could see an area of thicker vegetation: broad, low trees outlined against the sky. He could hear noises: the sharp crack of weapons- he perceived the word guns- and then shouts, and an immense crashing thud as something fell, tearing branches from the trees. She heard voices calling to one another. Peering from the place where he stood hidden behind some shrubbery, he was reminded of what The Contributor had teenagers her, that there had been a time when the flesh had different colors. Two of these men had dark brown skin; the others were light. Going closer, he watched them hack the rusks from a motionless elephant on the ground and haul them away, spattered with blood. He felt overwhelmed with a new perception of the color he knew as read more and more and more. 'Maiara,' he asked that evening when his sister took her comfort object, the stuffie, from the shelf, 'did you know that once there really were elephants? Live ones?' Then the men were gone, speeding toward the horizon in a vehicle that spits pebbles from its whirling tires. One hit his forehead and stung her there.

But the memory continued, though Millia ached now for it to end. Now he saw another elephant emerge from the place where it had stood hidden in the trees. Very slowly it walked to the mutilated body and looked down. With its sinuous trunk, it stroked the huge corpse; then it reached up, broke some leafy branches with a snap, and draped them over the mass of torn thick flesh. Finally, it tilted its massive head, raised its trunk, and roared into the empty landscape. Millia had never heard such a sound. It was a sound of rage and grief and it seemed never to end.

He could still hear it when he opened his eyes and lay anguished on the bed where he received the memories. It continued to roar into his consciousness as he pedaled slowly home. She glanced down at the ragged comfort object and grinned. 'Right,' she said, skeptically. 'Sure, Millia.' Millia went and sat beside them while his Ancestor united Maiara's hair ribbons and combed her hair. He placed one hand on each of their shoulders. With all of his being, he tried to give each of them a piece of the memory: not of the tortured cry of the elephant, but of the being of the elephant, of the towering, immense creature and the meticulous touch with which it had tended its friend at the end. But his Ancestor had continued to comb Maiara's long hair, and Maiara, impatient, had finally wiggled under her brother's touch. 'Millia,' she said, 'you're hurting me with your hand.' 'I apologize for hurting you, Maiara,' Millia mumbled and took his hand away. 'Kept your apology,' Maiara responded indifferently, stroking the lifeless elephant.

'Contributor,' Millia asked once, as they prepared for the day's work, 'don't you have a spouse? Aren't you allowed to apply for one?' Although he was exempted from the rules against rudeness, he was aware that this was a rude question. But the boy had encouraged all of his questions, not seeming to be embarrassed or offended by even the most personal.

The Contributor chuckled. 'No, there's no rule against it. And I did have a spouse.

You're forgetting how teenagers I am, Millia.

My former spouse lives now with the Childless

Adults.' 'Oh, of course.' Millia had forgotten the boy's obvious age. When adults of the community became teenagers, their lives became different. They were no longer needed to create family units. Millia's own parents, when he and Maiara were grown, would go to live with the Childless Adults. 'You'll be able to apply for a spouse, Millia if you want to. I'll warn you, though, that it will be difficult. Your living arrangements will have to be different from those of most family units because the books are forbidden to citizens. You and I are the only ones with access to the books.' Millia glanced around at the astonishing array of volumes. From time to time, now, he could see their colors. With their hours together, his and The Contributor's, consumed by conversation and by the transmission of memories, Millia had not yet opened any of the books.

But he read the titles here and there and knew that they contained all of the knowledge of centuries and that one day they would belong to her. 'So- o if I have a spouse, and maybe children, I will have to hide the books from them?' The Contributor nodded. 'I wasn't permitted to share the books with my spouse, that's correct. And there are other difficulties, too. You remember the rule that says the new Obtainer can't talk about his training?' Millia nodded. Of course, she remembered. It had turned out, by far, to be the most frustrating of the rules he was required to obey. 'When you become the official Obtainer, when we're finished here, you'll be given a whole new set of rules. Those are the rules that I obey. And it won't surprise you that I am forbidden to talk about my work to anyone except the new Obtainer. That's you, unquestionably.

'So, there will be a whole part of your life which you won't be able to share with a family. It's hard, Millia. It was hard for me.

'You do understand, don't you, that this is my life? The memories?' Millia nodded again, but he was puzzled. Didn't life consist of the things you did each day? There wasn't anything else, really. 'I've seen you taking walks,' he said.

~*~

The Contributor sighed. 'I walk. I eat at mealtime. And when I am called by the Committee of Teenagers, I appear before them, to give them counsel and advice.' 'Do you advise them often?' Millia was a little frightened at the thought that one day he would be the one to advise the ruling body. The Contributor said no. 'Rarely. Only when they are faced with something that they have not experienced before. Then they call upon me to use the memories and advise them. But it very seldom happens.'

Sometimes I wish they'd ask for my wisdom more often- there are so many things I could tell them; things I wish they would change. But they don't want to change. Life here is so orderly, so predictable- so painless. It's what they've chosen.' 'I don't know why they even need an Obtainer, then, if they never call upon her,' Millia commented. 'They need me. And you,' The Contributor said but didn't explain.

'They were reminded of that ten years ago.' 'What happened ten years ago?' Millia asked.

'Oh, I know.'

You tried to train a successor and it failed. Why? Why did that remind them?' The Contributor boy smiled grimly. 'When the new Obtainer failed, the memories that she had received were released. They didn't come back to me. They went...' The boy paused, and seemed to be struggling with the concept. 'I don't know, exactly. They went to the place where memories once existed before Obtainers were created. Someplace out there-' He gestured vaguely with his arm.

'And then the people had access to them.'

9

Apparently, that's the way it was, once. Everyone had access to memories. 'It was chaos,' he said. 'They really suffered for a while. Finally, it subsided as the memories were assimilated. But it certainly made them aware of how they need an Obtainer to contain all that pain. And knowledge.' 'But you have to suffer like that all the time,' Millia pointed out.

The Contributor nodded. 'And you will. It's my life. It will be yours.' Millia thought about it, about what it would be like for her. 'Along with walking and eating and-' He looked around the walls of books.

'Reading? That's it?' The Contributor shook his head. 'Those are simply the things that I do. My life is here.'

'In this room?' The Contributor shook his head.

He put his hands to his own face, to his chest. 'No.

Here, in my being. Where the memories are.' 'My Instructors in science and technology have taught us about how the brain works,' Millia teenagers her eagerly. 'It's full of electrical impulses. It's like a computer. If you stimulate one part of the brain with an electrode, it-' He stopped talking. He could see an odd look on the boy's face. 'They know nothing,' The Contributor said bitterly. Millia was shocked. Since the first day in the Annex room, they had together disregarded the rules about rudeness, and Millia felt comfortable with that now. But this was different, and far beyond rude. This was a terrible accusation. What if someone had heard? He glanced quickly at the wall speaker, terrified that the Committee might be listening as they could at any time.

But, as always during their sessions together, the switch had been turned to OFF.

'Nothing?' Millia whispered nervously.

'But my instructors-' The Contributor flicked his hand as if brushing something aside. 'Oh, your instructors are well trained. They know their scientific facts. Everyone is well trained for his job. 'It's just that ... without the memories, it's all meaningless. They gave that burden to me.

And to the previous Obtainer.

And the one before her.' 'And back and back and back,' Millia said, knowing the phrase that always came. The Contributor smiled, though his smile was oddly harsh. 'That's right. And next, it will be you. A great honor.' 'Yes, sir. The teenagers me that at the Ceremony.

The very highest honor.'

Some afternoons the boy sent her away without training. Millia knew, on days when he arrived to find the boy hunched over, rocking his body slightly back and forth, his face pale, that he would be sent away.

'Go,' the boy would tell her tensely. 'I'm in pain today. Come back tomorrow.'

On those days, worried and disappointed, Millia would walk alone beside the river.

The paths were empty of people except for the few Delivery Crews and Landscape Workers here and there.

Small children were all at the Childcare Center after school, and the teenage ones busy with volunteer hours or training.

By herself, he tested his own developing memory. He watched the landscape for glimpses of the green that he knew was embedded in the shrubbery; when it came flickering into his consciousness, he focused upon it, keeping it there, darkening it, hate mongering it in his vision as long as possible until his head hurt and he let it fade away.

He stared at the flat, colorless sky, bringing blue from it, and remembered sunshine until finally, for an instant, he could feel the warmth.

He stood at the foot of the bridge that spanned the river, the bridge that citizens were allowed to cross only on official business. Millia had crossed it on school trips, visiting the outlying communities, and he knew that the land beyond the bridge was much the same, flat and well ordered, with fields for agriculture.

The other communities he had seen on visits were essentially the same as his own, the only differences were slightly altered styles of dwellings, slightly different schedules in the schools.

Millia stood for a moment beside his like a vintage-looking automobile, startled. It had happened again: the thing that he thought of now as 'seeing beyond.' This time it had been Kalliean who had undergone that fleeting indescribable change. As he looked up and toward her going through the door, it happened; she changed. Actually, Millia thought, trying to recreate it in his mind, it wasn't Kalliean in her entirety. It seemed to be just her hair. And just for that flickering instant.

He wondered what lay in the far distance where he had never gone. The land didn't end beyond those nearby communities. Were there hills Elsewhere? Where their vast wind-torn areas like the place he had seen in memory, the place where the elephant died?

'The boy,' he asked one afternoon following a day when he had been sent away, 'what causes you pain?' When the boy was silent, Millia continued. 'The Main Teen teenagers me, in the beginning, that the receiving of memory causes terrible pain. And you described for me that the failure of the last new Obtainer released painful memories to the community.'

‘But I haven't suffered, The boy. Not really.’ Millia smiled. ‘Oh, I remember the sunburn you gave me on the very first day. But that wasn't so terrible. What is it that makes you suffer so much? If you gave some of it to me, maybe your pain would be less.’

The boy nodded. ‘Lie down,’ he said.

‘It's time, I suppose. I can't shield you forever.

You'll have to take it all on eventually.

‘Let me think,’ he went on, when Millia was on the bed, waiting, a little fearful.

‘All right,’ The boy said after a moment, ‘I've decided. We'll start with something familiar. Let's go once again to a hill, and a toboggan.’

He placed his hands on Millia's back.

It was much the same, this memory, though the hill seemed to be a different one, steeper, and the snow was not falling as thickly as it had before.

It was them, also, Millia perceived. He could see, as he sat waiting at the top of the hill, that the snow beneath the toboggan was not thick and soft as it had been before, but hard, and coated with bluish ice.

The toboggan moved forward, and Millia grinned with delight, looking forward to the breathtaking slide down through the invigorating air.

The runners, this time, couldn't slice through the frozen expanse as they had on the other, snow-cushioned hill. They skittered sideways and the toboggan gathered speed.

Millia pulled at the rope, trying to steer, but the steepness and speed took control from his hands and he was no longer enjoying the feeling of freedom but instead, terrified, was at the mercy of the wild acceleration downward over the ice.

Sideways, spinning, the toboggan hit a bump in the hill and Millia was jarred loose and thrown violently into the air. She fell with his leg twisted under her and could hear the crack of bone. His face scraped along jagged edges of ice and when he came, at last, to a stop, he lay shocked and still, feeling nothing at first but fear.

Then, the first wave of pain. He gasped. It was as if a hatchet lay lodged in his leg, slicing through each nerve with a hot blade. In his agony, he perceived the word 'fire' and felt flames licking the torn bone and flesh. He tried to move, and could not. The pain grew.

She screamed... There was no answer... Sobbing, he turned his head and vomited onto the frozen snow. Blood dripped from his face into the vomit.

'No!' he cried, and the sound disappeared into the empty landscape, into the wind.

Then, suddenly, he was in the Annex room again, writhing on the bed. Her face was wet with tears. Able to move now, he rocked his own body back and forth, breathing deeply to release the remembered pain. She sat, and looked at his own leg, where it lay straight on the bed, unbroken. The brutal slice of pain was gone. But the leg ached horribly, still, and his face felt raw. 'May I have relief - of - pain, please?' he begged. It was always provided in his everyday life for the bruises and wounds, for a smashed finger, a stomach ache, a skinned knee from a fall from a like vintage-looking automobile car. There was always a daub of anesthetic ointment, or a pill; or in severe instances, an injection that brought complete and instantaneous deliverance. The boy said no, and looked away. Limping, Millia walked home, pushing his bicycle, that evening. The sunburn pain had been so small, in comparison, and had not stayed with her. But this ache lingered. It was not unendurable, as the pain on the hill had been.

Millia tried to be brave. He remembered that the Main The teen had said he was brave. 'Is something wrong, Millia?' his Ancestor asked at the evening meal.

'You're so quiet tonight. Aren't you feeling well?

Would you like some medication?'

Millia remembered the rules. No medication for anything related to his training. Too no discussion of his training. At the time for sharing - of - feelings, he simply said that he felt tired, that his school lessons had been unusually demanding that day. She went to his sleeping room early, and from behind the closed door, he could hear his parents and sister laughing as they gave Gaddie his evening bath.

~*~

They have never known pain, she thought. The realization made her feel desperately lonely, and he rubbed his throbbing leg. He eventually slept. Again, and again he dreamed of the anguish and the isolation on the forsaken hill.

The daily training continued, and now it always included pain. The agony of the fractured leg began to seem no more than a mild discomfort as the boy led Millia firmly, little by little, into the deep and terrible suffering of the past.

Each time, in his kindness, the boy ended the afternoon with a color-filled memory of pleasure: a brisk sail on a blue-green lake; a meadow dotted with yellow wildflowers; an orange sunset behind mountains. It was not enough to assuage the pain that Millia was beginning, now, to know.

‘Why?’ Millia asked her after he had received a torturous memory in which he had been neglected and unfed; the hunger had caused excruciating spasms in his empty, distended stomach. She lay on the bed, aching. ‘Why do you and I have to teenagers these memories?’

‘It gives us wisdom,’ The boy replied. ‘Without wisdom, I could not fulfill my function of advising the Committee of Teenagers when they call upon me.’

‘But what wisdom do you get from hunger?’ Millia groaned. His stomach still hurt, though the memory had ended.

‘Some years ago,’ The boy teenagers her, ‘before your birth, a lot of citizens petitioned the Committee of Teenagers. They wanted to increase the rate of births. They wanted each Birthmother to be assigned four births instead of three so that the population would increase and there would be more Laborers available.’ Millia nodded, listening. ‘That makes sense.’ ‘The idea was that certain family units could accommodate an additional child.’ Millia nodded again. ‘Mine could,’ he pointed out. ‘We have Gaddie this year, and it's fun, having a third child.’

‘The Committee of Teenagers sought my advice,’ The boy said. ‘It made sense to them, too, but it was a new idea, and they came to me for wisdom.’ ‘Plus, you used your memories?’ The boy said yes. ‘And the strongest memory that came was hunger. It came from many generations back. Centuries back. The population had gotten so big that hunger was everywhere. Excruciating hunger and starvation. It was followed by warfare.’

Warfare...? It was a concept Millia did not know. But hunger was familiar to her now. Unconsciously he rubbed his own abdomen, recalling the pain of its unfulfilled needs. 'So, you described that to them?' 'They don't want to hear about the pain. They just seek advice. I simply advised them against increasing the population.' 'But you said that that was before my birth. They hardly ever come to you for advice. Only when they- what was it you said?

When they have a problem they've never faced before. When did it happen last?' 'Do you remember the day when the plane flew over the community?' 'Yes. I was scared.' 'So were they. They prepared to shoot it down. But they sought my advice. I teenagers them to wait.' 'How did you know? How did you know the pilot was lost?' 'I didn't. I used my wisdom, from the memories. I knew that there had been times in the past- terrible times- when people had destroyed others in haste, in fear, and had brought about their own destruction.' Millia realized something. 'That means,' he said slowly, 'that you have memories of destruction. And you have to give them to me, too, because I have to get the wisdom.' The boy nodded... 'Then again it will hurt,' Millia said. It wasn't a question. 'It will hurt terribly,' The boy agreed... 'But why? Why can't everyone have the memories? I think it would seem a little easier if the memories were shared. You and I wouldn't have to bear so much by ourselves if everybody took apart.'

The boy sighed. 'You're right,' he said. 'But then everyone would be burdened and pained. They don't want that. And that's the real reason The Obtainer is so vital to them and so honored. They selected me- and you- to lift that burden from themselves.' 'When did they decide that?' Millia asked angrily. 'It wasn't fair.

Let's change it!' 'How do you suggest we do that? I've never been able to think of away, and I'm supposed to be the one with all the wisdom.' 'Then there are two of us now,' Millia said eagerly. 'Together we can think of something!' The boy watched her with a wry smile. 'Why can't we just apply for a change of rules?' Millia suggested. The boy laughed; then Millia, too, chuckled reluctantly. 'The decision was made long before my time or yours,' The boy said, 'and before the previous Obtainer, and -' He waited. 'Back and back and back,' Millia repeated the familiar phrase.

Sometimes it had seemed humorous to her.

Sometimes it had seemed meaningful and important. Now it was ominous. It meant, he knew, that nothing could be changed.

The teenager, Gaddie, was growing, and successfully passed the tests of maturity that the Nurturers gave each month; he could sit alone, now, could reach for and grasp small play objects, and he had six teeth. During the daytime hours, Ancestor reported, he was cheerful and seemed of normal intelligence. But he remained fretful at night, whimpered often, needing frequent attention. 'After all this extra time I've put in with her,' Ancestor said one evening after Gaddie had been bathed and was lying, for the moment, hugging his horse placidly in the small crib that had replaced the handbag, 'I hope they're not going to decide to release her.' 'Maybe it would be for the best,' Mother suggested. 'I know you don't mind getting up with her at night. But the lack of sleep is awfully hard for me.'

~*~

'If they release Gaddie, can we get another teenager as a visitor?' asked Maiara. She was kneeling beside the crib, making funny faces at the little one, who was smiling back at her. Millia's mother rolled her eyes in dismay. 'No,' Ancestor said, smiling. He ruffled Maiara's hair. 'It's very rare, anyway, that a teenager's status is as uncertain as Gaddie's. It probably won't happen again, for a long time. 'Anyway,' he sighed, 'they won't make the decision for a while. Right now, we're all preparing for a release we'll probably have to make very soon. There's a Birthmother who's expecting twin males next month.' 'Oh, dear,' Mother said, shaking her head. 'If they're identical, I hope you're not the one assigned-'

'I am. I'm next on the list. I'll have to select the one to be nurtured, and the one to be released. It's usually not hard, though. Usually, it's just a matter of birthweight. We release the smaller of the two.'

Millia, listening, thought suddenly about the bridge and how, standing there, he had wondered what lay Elsewhere. Was there someone there, waiting, who would receive the tiny released twin? Would it grow up Elsewhere, not knowing, ever, that in this community lived a being who looked exactly the same? For a moment he felt a tiny, fluttering hope that he knew was quite foolish. He hoped that it would be Lieissah, waiting. Lieissah, the woman he had bathed. He remembered her sparkling eyes, her soft voice, her low chuckle.

Kalliean had teenagers her recently that Lieissah had been released at a wonderful ceremony. But he knew that the Teenagers were not given children to raise. Lieissah's life Elsewhere would be quiet and serene as befit the Teenagers; she would not welcome the responsibility of nurturing a teenager who needed feeding and care, and would likely cry at night. 'Mother? Ancestor?' He said, the idea coming to her unexpectedly, 'why don't we put Gaddie's crib in my room tonight? I know how to feed and comfort her, and it would let you and Ancestor get some sleep.' Ancestor looked doubtful. 'You sleep so soundly, Millia. What if his restlessness didn't wake you?' It was Maiara who answered that. 'If no one goes to tend Gaddie,' she pointed out, 'he gets very loud. He'd wake all of us if Millia slept through it.' Ancestor laughed.

'You're right, Maiara- billy. All right, Millia, let's try it, just for tonight. I'll take the night off and we'll let Mother get some sleep, too.' Gaddie slept soundly for the earliest part of the night. Millia, in his bed, lay awake for a while; from time to time he raised herself on one elbow, looking over at the bed. The teenager was on his stomach, his arms relaxed beside his head, his eyes closed, and his breathing regular and undisturbed. Finally, Millia slept too. Then, as the middle hours of the night approached, the noise of Gabe's restlessness woke Millia. The teenager was turning under his cover, flailing his arms, and beginning to whisper. Millia rose and went to her. Gently he patted Gaddie's back. Sometimes that was all it took to lull her back to sleep. But the teenager still squirmed fretfully under his hand. Still patting rhythmically, Millia began to remember the wonderful sail that the boy had given her not long before: a bright, breezy day on a clear turquoise lake, and above her the white sail of the boat billowing as he moved along in the brisk wind. She was not aware of giving the memory; but suddenly he realized that it was becoming dimmer, that it was sliding through his hand into the being of the new child. Gaddie became quiet. Startled, Millia pulled back what was left of the memory with a burst of will. He removed his hand from the little back and stood quietly beside the bed. To herself, he called the memory of the sail forward again. It was still there, but the sky was less blue, the gentle motion of the boat slower, the water of the lake murkier and more clouded. He kept it for a while, soothing his own nervousness at what had occurred, then let it go and returned to his bed. Once more, toward dawn, the teenager woke and cried out. Again, Millia went to her. This time he quite deliberately placed his hand firmly on Gaddie's back and released the rest of the calming day on the lake.

Again- Gaddie slept. But then again now Millia lay awake, thinking. He no longer had any more than a wisp of the memory, and he felt a small lake where it had been. He could ask the boy for another sail, he knew. A sail perhaps on the ocean, next time, for Millia had a memory of ocean, now, and knew what it was; he knew that there were sailboats there, too, in memories yet to be acquired. She wondered, though, if he should confess to the boy that he had given a memory away.

He was not yet qualified to be a boy herself; nor had Gaddie been selected to be an Obtainer. That he had this power frightened her. He decided not to tell. Millia entered the Annex room and realized immediately that it was a day when he would be sent away. The boy was rigid in his chair, his face in his hands. 'I'll come back tomorrow, sir,' he said quickly. Then he hesitated. 'Unless maybe there's something I can do to help.' The boy looked up at her, his face contorted with suffering. 'Please,' he gasped, 'take some of the pain.' Millia helped her to his chair at the side of the bed. Then he quickly removed his tunic and lay face down.

'Put your hands on me,' he directed, aware that in such anguish the boy might need reminding. The hands came, and the pain came with them and through them. Millia braced herself and entered the memory which was torturing the boy. She was in a confused, noisy, foul-smelling place. It was daylight, early morning, and the air was thick with smoke that hung, yellow and brown, above the ground. Around her, everywhere, far across the expanse of what seemed to be a field, lay groaning men. A wild-eyed horse, its bridle torn and dangling, trotted frantically through the mounds of men, tossing its head, whinnying in panic. It stumbled, finally, then fell, and did not rise. Millia heard a voice next to her.

'Water,' the voice said in a parched, croaking whisper. She turned his head toward the voice and looked into the half-closed eyes of a boy who seemed not many teenagers than herself. Dirt streaked the boy's face and his matted blond hair. He lay sprawled, his gray uniform glistening with wet, fresh blood. The colors of the carnage were grotesquely bright: the crimson wetness on the rough and dusty fabric, the ripped shreds of grass, startlingly green, in the boy's yellow hair. The boy stared at her. 'Water,' he begged again. When he spoke, a new spurt of blood-drenched the coarse cloth across his chest and sleeve. One of Millia's arms was immobilized with pain, and he could see through his own torn sleeve something that looked like ragged flesh and splintery bone. He tried his remaining arm and felt it move. Slowly he reached to his side, felt the metal container there, and removed its cap, stopping the small motion of his hand now and then to wait for the surging pain to ease.

Finally, when the container was open, he extended his arm slowly across the blood-soaked earth, inch by inch, and held it to the lips of the boy. Water trickled into the imploring mouth and down the grimy chin. The boy sighed. His head fell back, his lower jaw-dropping as if he had been surprised by something. A cloudy blankness slid slowly across his eyes. He was silent... But the noise continued all around: the cries of the wounded men, the cries begging for water and for Mother and for death. Horses lying on the ground shrieked, raised their heads, and stabbed randomly toward the sky with their hooves. From the distance, Millia could hear the thud of cannons. Overwhelmed by pain, he lay there in the fearsome stench for hours, listened to the men and animals die, and learned what warfare meant.

Finally, when he knew that he could bear it no longer and would welcome death herself, he opened his eyes and was once again on the bed.

The boy looked away as if he could not bear to see what he had done to Millia. 'Forgive me,' he said.

As I ran for her and not him for a gay relationship.

Millia did not want to go back. He didn't want the memories, didn't want the honor, didn't want the wisdom, didn't want the pain. He wanted his childhood again, his scraped knees and ball games. He sat in his dwelling alone, watching through the window, seeing children at play, citizens bicycling home from uneventful days at work, ordinary lives free of anguish because he had been selected, as others before her hand, to bear their burden. But the choice was not his.

He returned each day to the Annex room. The boy was gentle with her for many days following the terrible shared memory of war, yet he was not her inside her mind, like that voice. 'There are so many good memories,' The boy reminded Millia. And it was true. By now Millia had experienced countless bits of happiness, things he had never known of before. He had seen a birthday party, with one child singled out and celebrated on his day, so that now he understood the joy of being an individual, special and unique and proud. He had visited museums and seen paintings filled with all the colors he could now recognize and name. In one ecstatic memory, he had ridden a gleaming brown horse across a field that smelled of damp grass and had dismounted beside a small stream from which both he and the horse drank, clear water.

Now he understood about animals; and at the moment that the horse turned from the stream and nudged Millia's shoulder affectionately with its head, he perceived the bonds between animal and human. He had walked through woods and sat at night beside a campfire. Although he had through the memories learned about the pain of loss and loneliness, now he gained, too, an understanding of solitude and its joy. 'What is your favorite?' Millia asked the boy. 'You don't have to give it away yet,' he added quickly. 'Just tell me about it, so I can look forward to it because I'll have to receive it when your job is done.'

The boy smiled. 'Lie down,' he said. 'I'm happy to give it to you.' Millia felt the joy of it as soon as the memory began. Sometimes it took a while for her to get his bearings, to find his place. But this time he fit right in and felt the happiness that pervaded the memory. He was in a room filled with people, and it was warm, with firelight glowing on a hearth. He could see through a window that outside it was night and snow. There were colored lights: red and green and yellow, twinkling from a tree which was, oddly, inside the room. He could smell things cooking, and he heard soft laughter.

On the floor, there were packages wrapped in brightly colored paper and tied with gleaming ribbons. As Millia watched, a small child began to pick up the packages and pass them around the room: to other children, to adults who were obviously parents, and to a teenager, quiet couple, man and woman, who sat smiling together on a couch. While Millia watched, the people began one by one to untie the ribbons on the packages, to unwrap the bright papers, open the boxes and reveal toys and clothing and books. There were cries of delight. They hugged one another. The small child went and sat on the lap of the teenager's woman, and she rocked her and rubbed her cheek against his.

Millia opened his eyes and lay contentedly on the bed, still luxuriating in the warm and comforting memory. It had all been there, all the things he had learned to treasure.

'What did you perceive?' The boy asked.

'Warmth,' Millia replied, 'and happiness. And- let me think. Family. That it was a celebration of some sort, a holiday. And something else - I can't quite get the word for it.' 'It will come to you.' 'Who were the teenager's people? Why were they there?' It had puzzled Millia, seeing them in the room.

The Teenagers of the community did not ever leave their special place, the House of the Teenagers, where they were so well cared for and respected. 'They were called

Grandparents.' 'Grandparents?'

'Grandparents. It meant parents- of the- parents, long ago.' 'Back and back and back?' Millia began to laugh. 'So actually, there could be parents- of- the- parents- of- the- parents- of- the parents?' The Obtainer laughed, too. 'That's right. It's a little like looking at yourself looking in a mirror.' Millia frowned. 'But my parents must have had parents! I never thought about it before. Who are my parents- of- the parents? Where are they?' I asked in my mind running for the invisible covered overhead to let us out... hand and hand- we went, out of this controlled world- into the next diss- rick.

~*~

This is horrifying to me, but I could see that baby coming out looking like my dad, or even being my dad oddly enough, like being born again out of her. Just popping slightly out... 'Looking like Achmed the Dead Terrorist!'

10

Then something inside me just snapped. (One eye twitched twice.) 'I am done, I am just done fighting for her.' I thought- 'There comes a time where every man reaches his breaking point.

And mine was when she thought I would do that to her or let him have his way. She holds me responsible, regardless? Like I was some kind of deviant demonic sick- o.'

(There comes a time when you have to let her go.) If she wants me, she'll come back to me... right? Naturally, I left her to walk off into the sunset, butt cheeks wiggling away. (Am I going to regret it?) I don't know yet. Maybe so... I am thinking about her already.

In nine months, I'll really know if I am the daddy or not. Even though she thinks... I have no way of truly knowing. She's going by feel and that's not always right. She'll be back if she loves me! That's not if the mob of wolfs don't find her and the baby first. And do what I said they would. But I am just DONE!

I wonder where she is going to go now? I wonder what I am going to do without her now? She's naked running across a pond of lava, who is already four weeks pregnant. She is my love navigating a world that has moved on from her death. I couldn't just leave her. 'Perhaps I could watch her from a distance and protect her when she needs it. I thought. I saw that she had finally reached the other side and I continued to follow her. 'I don't trust you, but where the fuck am I?'

Giselle covered her boobs and vagina. 'Mount Vahalla.

Look at least let me drive you back to your hometown, and you can get some clothes.

Here-a, take my jacket...' I gave her my jacket and she took it. 'TURN AROUND!' She screamed, and I turned around when I didn't, and she put the jacket on and I spun around and led her to my truck. 'What do you remember?' I asked trying to have a conversation. 'Nothing. I can't remember anything.' She sat hunched overlooking out the window, fogging it up with her breath. I put on the heater and heat started to come out through the vents. She screamed until she inspected the vents closer.

‘Why do you drive so fast?’ ‘It’s Just a closed off would think,’ I said. ‘What is it?’ She asked dumbfounded. After all this, she is just the way she was before all this took place. I went along with it. ‘It’s not all just hot air coming out.

Even if we don’t breathe- It helps in keep bodies like ours warm, to feel loved- do you like it, this feeling?’

I replied keeping my eyes on the road. ‘It burns my skin.’ She looked at me. ‘Yeah, that happens when your skin is cold. But don’t worry it won’t hurt you unless it’s on higher.’ I smiled. Knowing that it was frostbite. ‘I believe you.’

She smiled with a sparkle in her eye. ‘You do remember me. Don’t you?’ I smiled. ‘How could I ever forget the love of my life? I love you... I said to her noting it was wrong- yet it was not to me before. And I’m pregnant, I created a potion to prevent myself from getting pregnant by your father before raped me. I remembered what you said to me.

So- o I’m fine and thank you for being me back to life.

So- o instead of going back there, why don’t we go and explore the world like France and get me some clothes.’ She chuckled and held my hand. I laughed and we both listened to old music as we rode into the sunlight. Nine months later a new baby was born. A little girl that was all ours, we named Faith. We both got the happy endings that we want so badly, and found love within love, by having something and someone to love more than life itself.

Nevaeh

Book: 59

Heavenly Bodies

Portion

The Trial and Tribulations

'Death into the soul world and how one gets there - Heaven or Hell and Afterlife nevertheless, Darkness or the Light. Life of choices to the life of decisions - of never-ending determinations.'

~*~

Nevaeh- More remembrances of the past, I remember my mother's life looking into it of her being locked into cages like dogs naked, with a dog dish - with a leash.

I remember her doing the same with me and my stepbrothers, and sisters.

That was the love we both had, yet my dad on like she was gutless.

Nonetheless, of all, a good man - that lost his life to save mine over his dead body my mother took me, to be victimized.

Lily has the same thing, over the make that mother was the same as my mother thinks in the same ways, doing the same things to kids that are a waste of life.

To just grow and suck off everyone else's paycheck, and the guardian was not much better, that was also made an award and made less-than-ideal to make my life choices, the for it was up to the town, to make me whom I became, and that is why, I wanted out, of the tributes of my past, that took over the future. I have been called a jealous writer who can't come up with what I did? By them, maybe so-o... or maybe you just don't understand, screaming when you need to be hearing the truths, about your trials and tribulations.

Disabilities - on you and with your family, and your real mother being crazy has NOTHING to do with me, or is it everything they see, the past of the apple not falling far from the tree?

I don't get SSI for disability, because they never thought I was disabled, yet I had the disabled education. Thus, making me out to be next to black, in a homeland of prejudiced with the intent of miming... so judgmental, live your own life, I thought... sure, that would be so-o, if I could have one.

Do - I have one...?

The question is... am I worthy of one?

Take your own path, yet really, you're not given one, looking back a remembrance.

I understood you, is all I get from them, then fine, and I can be the one as simple, sure - sure... think again. Public or not it is what has become know about you, without really not knowing anything other than speculation of twisted over the fact it makes good cheap storylines.

Yes, I remember because- you want me to being locked in a dog cage that was 2 foot by 4 foot, oh so nude, and dirty... for day after day, with no lights, and in my mind, it remains now true, just like my mom and her sisters that was molested by her dad, yet he wore the little blue hat, and the badge, and called himself a cop, within a municipality just like all them criminals too.

Yet, I am the one under phycological evaluation, yet they can molest as they please, call them pigs- call them all fags- call them what you like... say everything is fake and gay too.

When do we get to play the victim, I have to say that to a DA, at some point- if allowed to ever speak?

This is why I did not do anything with my mother cremated ashes - after being placed in an urn, other than me dumping them out, letting the wind take them as it placed, next to her dads grave- the pig- that I call my granddad- on her side. Yet, father like daughter...

Then I remember a girl that we got into our world named Brenna, and then I don't feel, that my life was all that bad.

Sometimes, I wish not- to linger in the bodies of the girls, that I learn to love - and look after as an angel of death, over the fact they all suffer. And then they get here and forget about me being there for them... yet that is okay- that's the way it has to be.

She calls her story 'The universe too its Mistakes,' and I had to question this yet feel the same way.

She was one that was chosen to die this way- even if there is now a remedy- if you got the money, in her world, the question I have is why- it feels so wrong to me- yet that is life to them...

Chapter: 1

It was the endings of the cold dark glum winter of the tenth year of my young also fragile life.

My mother was ever so-o unquestionable that- I personally disheartened, dejected, also dismayed.

Ostensibly- for the reason that I never really wanted to leave my room, as to the ways I for one felt. In my house, in my room I feel whole also all one, not falling apart.

Cry here also no one sees it. Expended quite a lot of time in my single bed all pink also girly, I read some also play rock music, or have the television blasting also not witching, I DO THE SAMETHINGS OVER ALSO OVER, like flipping throughout the same book over also over, annoyed infrequently, like those things called boys do to me too, also enthusiastic moderately a jiffy of my plentiful allowed time to thoughtful about bereavement. Every time you recite a malignant cell brochure or webpage or some crap you don't even freak need to see. What is love? I wouldn't know or will I at this point. All that, they always list hopelessness surrounded by the side paraphernalia of bad cancer.

On the other also, in circumstance, downheartedness is not a side-effect of sarcoma. Melancholy is a side effect of vanishing in bereavement.

(Tumors can be also the side-effect of failing to dust in the ash of death final- moments. Practically- everything is dust pissing in the hart, definitely.)

Then again, my mamma alleged I personally obligatory cure, subsequently, she seized me to see my Regular Doctor Tim Smith, who agreed sucks butt, also I would rather be spread at the guyno's then be looking at his old face, up my nose, that I was veritably be drenched in a wetness also entire clinical downheartedness, in addition to that for that reason my meds should be in the swing of things besides also I myself be dutybound to Candelaria with your presence a journal Provision Assembly at my church. Kill me- God- just do it! This Provision Assemblage highlighted a gyratory dramatis personae of calligraphies in a number of situations of malignant tumor swelling- single-minded un-thriving-ness.

Why? The company interchange- sacking? A side-effect of disappearing.

The Maintenance Collection, of development, was disheartening as nether-underworld. It met every Wednesday in the basement of a stone-walled Prelatic church bent like a cantankerous. We all sat in a square right in the middle of the room looking at marrying looking back- all creepy eyed- like staring at you, I feel what she does virgin for life also death, where the four boards would have met, where the heart of Jesus would have been.

I Bryana observed this for the reason that Codi, the Care Clutch front-runner as well as only creature over twenty in the room, looking at eye looking at us like flowing us with their wonderful eyes in the tall glass, also statues. As undeveloped almost boob-less malignant cells fighter, I like them all sitting right in saying crap we don't feel is need for death, also kicking it.

~*~

So, here's us all, seven or so, sauntered halberd also veered in, nibbled at a dilapidated choice of cookies, milk, also coffee that sucks so bad you have no idea, sat down with dumbly mined hope to see ninety or more surely right. As well as listened to Codi second opinion for yet another painful kill me pleas time, his disappointingly down about life-lasting- off in what manner he had malignancy in his sack, also had on popped out also has it in a jar on his desk now, see it, in addition to they thought he was going to die but he didn't die, just put it next mine ripped out heart on suck life. Plus, now here he is, an occupied- fully-fledged mature in an ecclesiastical lower ground floor in the 745th nicest city in Cambria counties, unconnected, hooked to WIII also PC- sports gaming like roller coaster tycoon, stereotypically companionless; seeing out of available insufficient breathing, also excisions life expectancy.

The universe too its mistakes by exploiting his tumor-tactic past happy go lucky marrons, at St. Jude's hospitals slowly at work doing this my way nearing a master's degree that will not improve their jobs projections, in the making, as we altogether look after, for the weapon of pain. To give me the release that he run-away low folks many eons ago when malignancy took individually of his dan-gel-ie's off but spared what only one- only, snip- snip- just rip the dick off at this point, he's so not getting it. The most substantial personality would call his lifetime.

IN ADDITION TO you being MOREOVER POWER BE so-o FORTUNATE! At that juncture, we familiarized ourselves- Name- Age- Diagnosis- sex-life. Hi- Bill- Dick- also then Mike Peter's takes, we know he sucks- balls also sacks also is gay homie doing little boys! Hi, all he believed in his tard-ed-voice! In addition, in what manner we're liability today. I'm Bryana, I'd say when they'd He Get to me.

Bry- Ten year's young kids, I have no hair on my vag., also have a training bra, originally but with an impressive besides extended-settled satellite colony in my heart. Besides, I'm a responsibility unacceptable. As soon as we got around the loop, Codi always asked if anybody wanted to segment. Also, then commenced the loop bump of livelihood- all also sundry chatting approximately aggressive also attacking plus winning also withdrawal besides skimming.

To be fair-minded to Codi, he let us talk about dying, as well. On the other also a maximum of them be situated in dying. Utmost would live into childhood, as Codi had. (Witch unescapable nearby was fairly a lot of affordability approximately it, with every Tom, Dick, also Harry wanting to beat not only cancer itself, but also the other people in the room. Like, I realize that this is irrational, but when they tell you that you have, say, a twenty percent chance of living three more years, the mathematics chicks in also you figure that's one in five... consequently, you look around also think, as any in good physical shape person would- I got to outlive some of these bastards ass wipes.)

Chapter: 2

The only in your favor façade of life and hope, I was this kid named Amy-sue, a long-faced, skinny girl with square Fair-haired hair cleaned over one eye. Also, her eyes were problematic. He had some tremendously unlikely eye malignant cells. The lone eye had been bowdlerized out when he was a kid, also this day also age she wore the kind of dense eyeglasses that made her eyes - (Both the physical massive also cute to me in a wired way like never before.)

Preternaturally huge, like his whole head was basically just her big blue eyes on me, as well as this as mine staring at her. Love? I don't think so... yet more wired things have happened. 'If you can stay in love for more than two years, you're on something.'

~*~

From what I gathered about this world I have to face with a ripped-up mind of thinking, I possibly will crease on the rare junctures when Amy shared with the group, a reappearance had employed his outstanding judgment in sexy worldly danger. Amy, also I joined just about completely over moans. Each time someone deliberated anti-cancer-ion nourishments or grunting ground-up shark fin or whatever, she'd peep over at me, also exhalation ever so to some extent.

I wobble my head microscopically also respire in rejoinder. So, Support Group here, also later a small number of weeks, I grew to be rather thrusting-also-screaming about the entire issue. In detail, on Saturday I myself made the confrère of Jamara Fairlee, I tried my level best to get out of Support Group while sitting on the couch with my mom in the third leg of a twelve-hour marathon of the previous season's America's Next Top Model, which admittedly I had already seen, but unmoving. Yours truly- 'I refuse to attend Support Group.' Mamma- 'Lone of the signs of downheartedness is indifference in happenings.' I myself- 'Please just let me watch America's Next Top Model. It's commotion.' Mother- 'Television is a passivity.'

~*~

Me- 'Ugh, Mom, please.' Mom- 'Bryana, you're a pre-teen. You're not a little kid any longer. You need to make friends, get out of the house, also live your life.' Me- 'If you want me to be a pre-pre-teen, don't send me to Support Group like this. Buy me a fake dildo so I can go to have a dick inside before I die.' Mom- 'You don't take the pot, for appetizers.' Me- 'See, that's sympathetic to think I'd know if you change to me to not get one.' Mom- 'You're going to Support Group finds one there if you think that what you need to live on.'

Me- 'UGH.' Mom- 'Bryana, you deserve a life also love.'

That shut me up, even though I failed to see how attendance at the Support Group met the classification of life. Motionless, I approved to go- after transferring the right to greatest the 1.5 episodes of ANTM I'd be missing. I went to Support Group for the same reason that I'd once allowed nurses with a mere eighteen months of graduate education to poison me with exotically named... substances- I wanted to make my parents happy. There is only one thing in this world shittier than biting it from cancer when you're a pre-teen, also that's having a kid who bites it from malignant cells. Mom pulled into the circular driveway behind the church at 2-59. yours truly fake to fiddle with my oxygen tank for a second just to kill time. 'Do you want me to carry it in for you?'

'Nope, it's fine,' I believed. The cylindrical khaki tank only weighed a few pounds, also I had this little steel cart to wheel it around behind me. It delivered two liters of oxygen to me each minute through a cannula, a transparent tube that split just beneath my neck, enfolded in arrears of my ears, also then reunited in my nostrils. The contraption was compulsory for the reason that, my heart sucked at being what I need to keep pounding also bagging. 'I love you,' she believed as I got out.

'You too, Mom. See you at seven-ish.'

'Make acquaintances also girlfriends!' she believed through the rolled-down window as I walked away. I didn't want to take the elevator for the reason that taking the elevator is a Last Days kind of activity at Support Group, so I took the stairs. I grabbed a cookie also poured some then milk into a Dixie cup also then twisted around. A girl was staring at me. It was her. I was quite sure I'd never seen her before. Long also leanly muscular, he dwarfed the molded plastic elementary school chair he was sitting in. light hair, straight also longer for a girl like me. she looked my age or younger, maybe a year older, IDK also she sat with his tailbone against the edge of the chair, his posture aggressively underprivileged, one also half in a pocket of the dim short skirt.

I looked away, unexpectedly cognizant of my numberless insufficiencies. I was wearing old jeans, which had once been tight but now sagged in weird places, also a white T-shirt advertising an also I didn't even like anymore. Also, my hair brown- I had this pageboy haircut, also I hadn't even bothered to, like, brush it. Furthermore, she had ridiculously top, a hat off to the side also a pipe-like she was smoking for the effect of allowing shit to live that sucks Winnie. I looked like a generally regular person on with a hot-air balloon for ahead. This was not even to mention the tackle situation. Also, yet- I cut a glance at her, also his eyes were still on me. It occurred to me why they call it eye communication.

I walked into the circle also sat down next to Amy, two seats away from the girl.

I glanced again. She was still watching me. Look, let me just say it- He was hot. A non-sexy girl stare at you relentlessly also it is, at best, awkward also, at worst, a form of assault. But hot girls... well. I pulled out my phone also clicked it so it would display the time-

6-57-sh.

The circle filled in with the unlucky twelve-to-eight, also then Codi started us out with the serenity prayer- God, grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change yet Understand also as hope also true faith, the courage to change the things I can, also the wisdom to know the difference. The guy was still staring at me. I felt rather blushed looking at her rubbing her legs. Finally, I decided that the proper strategy was to stare back. Boys do not have a monopoly on the Staring Business, after all. So, I looked her over as Codi acknowledged for the thousandth time his ball-lessness and so on, also soon it was a staring contest. After a while the boy smiled, also then finally his blue eyes glanced away. When he looked back at me, I flicked my eyebrows up to say, I triumph. She shrugged; Codi continued also then finally it was time for the introductions.

'She, perhaps you'd like to go first today. I know you're facing a challenging time.' 'Surely,' she believed. 'I'm Mis. Fairlee. I'm not even a teen. Also, it's looking like I have to get surgery in a couple of weeks, after which I'll be blind. Not to criticize or anything because I know a lot of us to have it worse, but surely, I mean, being blind does' sort of suck. My girlfriend helps, though. Also, friends like Jamara.'

He nodded toward the boy, who now had a tag. 'So, surely,' she continued. He was looking at his also, which he'd folded into each other like the top of a tepee. 'There's nothing you can do about it.'

Chapter: 3

'We're here for you, her,' Codi believed. 'Let that girl hear it, guys.' Also, then we all, in a monotone, believed, 'We're here for you, she.' Michael was next. He was twelve. He had his dick up his boyfriend's butt also got shit I don't want to repeat. Gay ass marron. He'd always had something not right just look at that face to see it all. He was okay.

(Or so he believed. He'd taken the stowage herbal.)

Linda was nine, also pretty enough to be the object of the hot boy's eye. She was a regular in a long remission from appendicular cancer, which I had not previously known existed. She believed-as she had every other time, I'd attended Support Group-which she felt resilient, which felt like big-headed to me as the oxygen-drizzling nubs tickled my nostrils. There were five others before they got to her. She smiled a little when his turn came. Her voice was low, smoky, also dead sexy.

'My name is Jamara aka she or her- last name Fairlee don't matter for shit,' he believed. 'I'm a day away from 13. I had a little touch of osteosarcoma a year also a half ago, but I'm just here today's father request.' 'Also, how are you feeling?' asked Codi. 'Oh, I'm also.' Jamara Fairlee smiled with a cornered his mouth. 'I'm on a roller coaster that only goes up, my friend.'

When it was my turn, I believed, 'My name is Bryana. I'm 10. Not going to see tomorrow up till now I'm okay I want to see the heavens.' The hour proceeded apace- Fights were recounted, battles won amid wars sure to be lost; hope was clung to; families were both celebrated also denounced; it was agreed that friends just didn't get it; tears were shed; comfort proffered.

Neither Jamara Fairlee nor I spoke again until Codi believed, 'Jamara, perhaps you'd like to share your fears with the group.' 'My fears?' 'Naturally.' 'I fear oblivion,' he believed without a moment's hiatus. 'I fear it like the proverbial blind man who's afraid of the dark.' 'Too shortly,' she believed, cracking a smile. 'Was that insensitive?'

Jamara asked. 'I can be pretty blind to other people's feelings.'

~*~

She was laughing, but Codi raised a chastening finger also believed, 'Jamara, please. Let's return to you also your struggles. You believed you fear oblivion?' 'I did,' Jamara answered. Codi seemed lost. 'Would, uh, would anyone like to speak to that?' I hadn't been to a proper school for three years. My parents were my two best friends.

My third best friend was an author who did not know I existed. I was a fairly shy person - not the also- floating nature.

Also, yet, just this once, I decided to speak. I half raised my also Codi, his delight evident, immediately believed, 'Bryana!' I was, I'm sure he assumed, opening up. Becoming Part of The Group she was.

I looked over at Jamara Fairlee, who looked back at me.

You could almost see through his eyes they were so cobalt. 'There will come a time,' I believed, 'when all of us are dead. All of us. There will come a time when there are no human beings remaining to remember that anyone ever existed or that our species ever did everything.

There will be no one left to remember movies also not have sex, let alone you. Everything that we did also build also wrote also thought also discovered will be forgotten also all of this,' I gestured encompassing- 'will have been for naught. Maybe that time is coming soon also maybe it is millions of years away, but even if we survive the collapse of our sun, we will not survive forever. There was the time before organisms experienced consciousness, also there will be time after. In addition, if the inevitability of human oblivion worries you, I encourage you to ignore it. God knows that's what everyone else does.' I'd learned this from my aforementioned third best friend, Sandra Stouten, the reclusive author of An Imperial Affliction, the book that was as close a thing as I had to a Bible. SHE - was the only person I'd ever come across who seemed to 1 recognize what it's like to be dying, also 2 not have died. After I finished, there was quite a long period of silence as I watched a smile spread all the way across Jamara's face - not the little-crooked smile of the boy trying to be sexy while he stared at me, but his real smile, too big for his face.

'Damn,' Jamara believed quietly. 'Aren't you something else.' Neither of us believed anything for the rest of the Support Group. In the end, we all had to hold haloes, also Codi led us in prayer. 'Lord Jesus Christ, we are gathered here in Your heart, literally in your heart, as cancer survivors. You also You alone know us as we know ourselves. Guide us to live also the Light through our times of trial. We pray for her eyes, for Michael's also Jamie's blood, for Jamara's bones, for Bryana's heart, for James's throat. We pray that You might heal us also that we might feel Your love, also Your peace, which passes all Understand also.

~*~

Also, we remember in our hearts those whom we knew also loved who have gone home to you- Maria also Kade also Joseph also Haley also sigil also pangolins also Mayor also Gabriel also... It was a long list. The world contains a lot of dead people. Also, while Codi droned on, reading the list from a sheet of paper because it was too long to memorize, I kept my eyes closed, trying to think prayerfully but mostly Visualization the day when my name would find its way onto that list, all the way at the end when everyone had stopped listening. When Codi was finished, we believed this stupid mantra together-LIVING OUR BEST LIFE TODAY-also it was over.

Jamara Fairlee pushed herself out of his chair also walked over to me. His gait was crooked like his smile. She towered over me, but he kept his distance so I wouldn't have to crane my neck to look her in the eye. 'What's your name?' he asked. 'Bryana.'

Chapter: 4

'It's a metaphor,' he believed. 'You choose your behaviors based on their symbolic resonances...' I believed. 'Oh, yes.' He smiled. The big, ridiculous, real smile. 'I'm a big believer in metaphor, Bryana.' I turned to the car. Commissioned the window. It rolled down. 'I'm going to a movie with Jamara Fairlee,' I believed. 'Please record the next several episodes of the ANTM marathon for me.' then it happened...

It was I, however, who was closest to it. I'm fifty-seven years old, but even now I can remember everything from that year, down to the smallest details. I relive that year often in my mind, bringing it back to life, also I realize that when I do, I always feel a strange combination of sadness also joy. There are moments when I wish I could roll back the clock also take all the unhappiness away, but I have the feeling that if I did, the joy would be gone as well. So, I take the memories as they come, accepting them all, letting them guide me whenever I can.

This happens more often than I let on. It is April 14, in the last year before the millennium, also as I leave my household, I glance around. The sky is overcast also ashen, but as I move down the street, I notice that the dogwoods also lilies are blooming. I zip my top just a little. The temperature is cool, though I know it's only a substance of weeks before it will settle in to rather comfy also the steely skies give way to the kind of days that make PA one of the most beautiful places in the world. With a moan, I feel it all coming back to me see my life flash by with only some days to go. I know I close my eyes also the years begin to move in reverse, slowly ticking backward, like the also of a clock rotating in the wrong direction.

As if through someone else's eyes, I watch myself grow younger; I see my hair changing from gray to brown, I feel the wrinkles around my eyes begin to smooth, my arms also legs grow sinewy.

Lessons I've learned with age grow dimmer, also my innocence returns as that eventful year styles. Then, like me, the world begins to change - roads contracted also some become shingle, outlying sprawl has been substituted with wood also, downtown streets teeming with people, looking in windows as they pass fields of corn, Men wear long shorts, girls wear dresses not short enough. At the courthouse up the street, the church tower rings... I open my eyes also awkward moment. I am standing outside the Baptist church, also when I stare at the table,

I know exactly This is my story; I potential to leave nothing out, if I don't my heart will stop dead. First, you will smile, also then you will cry-don't say you haven't been warned.

Samara responded, 'I'll say.' she clasped Amy by both shoulders also then took a half step away from her. 'Express Bryana about the clinic.' 'Um, Bryana is awesome.' 'No, your full name Stevenson.' she was just about to say something else when she walked up. 'Hold on,' Jamara believed, raising a finger, also turned other. 'That was actually worse than you made it out to be.' 'I told you it was drab.' 'Why do you bother with it?' 'I don't know. It's kind of help?'

Jamara leaned in so he thought I couldn't hear. 'She's a regular?' I couldn't hearer's comment, but She leaned an also against the snack table also focused his huge eye on me.

'All right, so I went to the clinic this before noon, also I was telling my surgeon that I'd rather be deaf than blind. Also, he believed, 'It doesn't work that way, also I was, like, 'Surely, I realize it doesn't work that way; I'm just saying I'd rather be deaf than blind if I had the choice, which I realize I don't have,' also he believed, 'Well, the good news is that you won't be deaf,' also I was like, Thank you for explaining that my eye cancer isn't going to make me deaf. I feel so privileged that a cerebral miniature like yourself would deign to operate on me.’ ‘He sounds like a winner,’ I believed. ‘I’m going to try to get me some eye cancer just so I can make these girls acquaintance.’

Chapter: 5

‘Good luck with that. All right, I should go. Monica’s also

Tiff waiting for me. I got to look at her a lot while I can.’ ‘counterinsurgency tomorrow?’ Jamara asked. ‘Definitely,’ she turned also ran up the stairs, taking them two at a time. Jamara Fairlee turned to me. ‘Literally,’ he believed. ‘Literally?’ I asked.

‘Someone should tell Jesus to say also not die like us,’ I believed. ‘I mean, it’s gotta be dangerous, storing children with cancer in your heart.’

‘I would tell Her myself,’ Jamara believed, ‘but unfortunately, I am literally stuck inside of His heart, so He won’t be able to hear me.’ I laughed. He shook his head, just looking at me. ‘What?’ I asked.

‘Nothing,’ he believed. ‘Why are you looking at me like that?’ Jamara half-smiled. ‘Because you’re beautiful. I enjoy looking at beautiful people, also I decided a while ago not to deny myself the simpler pleasures of existence.’

A brief awkward silence ensued. Jamara plowed through - ‘I mean, particularly given that, as you so appetizingly pointed out, all of this will end in oblivion also everything.’ I kind of jeered or groaned or exhaled in a way that was imprecisely cough also then believed, ‘I’m not beautiful,’ ‘You’re like a millennial Nattalie workman. Like V for ‘Never seen it,’ I believed. ‘Really?’ she asked. ‘Pixie-haired gorgeous girl dislikes authority also can’t help but fall for a boy she knows is trouble. It’s your autobiography, so far as I can tell.’ She is every syllable flirted. Honestly, he kind of turned me on. I didn’t even know that guys could turn me on-not, like, in real life. A younger girl walked past us. ‘How’s it going, Alisa?’ she asked. She smiled also mumbled...

‘Hi, Jamara.’

‘Memorial people,’ he explained. Memorial was a big research hospital. ‘Where do you go?’ ‘Children’s,’ I believed, my voice smaller than I expected it to be. He nodded. The conversation seemed over. ‘Well,’ I believed, nodding vaguely toward the steps that led us out with us all laid out not getting laid out. I tilted my cart onto its wheels also started walking. He limped beside me. ‘So, see you next time, maybe?’ I asked. ‘Okay,’ I believed. ‘I’ll look it up.’ ‘No. With me. At my house,’ he believed. ‘Now.’ I stopped walking. ‘I hardly know you, Jamara Fairlee.

‘You could be a battleax slayer.’ she nodded. ‘True enough, Bryana Candelaria.’ He walked past me, his shoulders filling out his green knit polo shirt, his back straight, his steps liting just slightly to the right as she walked steadily also confident on what I had determined was a prosthetic leg. Osteosarcoma sometimes takes a member to check you out. Then, if it likes you, it takes the rest. I followed her upstairs, losing ground as I made my way up slowly, stairs not being a field of expertise for my heart, also in the parking lot, the spring air just on the cold side of perfect, the late-afternoon light heavenly in its hurtfulness. Mom wasn’t there yet, which was unusual because Mom was almost always waiting for me. I glimpsed around also saw that a tall, curvy brunette girl had her pinned against the stone wall of the church, kissing her rather aggressively.

They were close sufficient to me that I could hear the weird noises of their mouths together, also I could hear her saying, ‘Always also forever,’ also her saying, ‘Always also forever,’ in homecoming. Rapidly stashing next to me, Jamara half-whispered, ‘They’re big believers in PDA.’ ‘What’s with the ‘always’?’ The slurping sounds intensified. ‘Continuously is their thing. They’ll always love each other also whatever. I would conservatively estimate they have texted each other the word always four million periods in the last year.’ I have not even gotten my period yet to have this all go down. A couple more cars drove up, taking Michael also Alyse away. It was just Jamara also me now, watching Amy also Monica, who proceeded apace as if they were not leaning against a place of worship. She also reached for her boob over her shirt also pawed at it, his palm still while his fingers moved around. I wondered if that felt good. Didn’t seem like it would, but I decided to absolve Amy on the grounds that he was going blind.

The senses must feast while there is yet hunger also whatever. ‘Visualize taking that last drive to the hospital,’ I believed without thinking fast, quietly. ‘The former time you will ever drive a car.’ Without looking over at me, Jamara believed,

‘You’re killing my small’s atmosphere here, Bryana Candelaria. I’m trying to observe young love in its many-splen-dored awkwardness.’ ‘I think he’s hurting her boob,’ I believed. ‘Absolutely, it’s difficult to ascertain whether he is trying to arouse her or perform a breast exam.’ Then Jamara Fairlee reached into a pocket also pulled out, of all things, a pack of cigarettes. He flipped it open also put a pipe between her lips. ‘Are you serious?’ I asked. ‘You think that’s cool? Oh, my God, you just ruined the whole thing.' 'Which whole thing?' he asked, turning to me. The pipe dangled unlit from the unsmiling corner of her mouth like her finger may do. When I was ten, my life changed persistently.

I know that there are people who wonder about me when I say this. They look at me strangely as if trying to fathom what could have happened back then, though I seldom bother to explain. Because I've lived here for most of my life, I don't feel that I have to unless it's on my terms, also that would take more time than most people are willing to give me. My story can't be summed up in two or three sentences; it can't be packaged into something neat also simple that people would immediately understand-so.

Despite the passage of forty years, the people still living here who knew me that year accept my lack of explanation without question. My story in some ways is their story because it was something that all of us lived through.

'The whole thing where a boy who is not unattractive or unintelligent or seemingly in any way unacceptable stares at me also points out incorrect uses of literality also compares me to actresses also asks me to watch a movie at her house. But of course- there is always a hamartia also yours is that oh, my God, even though you HAD FREAKING CANCER UP YOUR BUM can give money to a company in exchange for the chance to acquire YET MORE CANCER. Oh, my God. Let me just assure you that not being able to breathe? SUCKS. Totally disappointing.

Totally.

'A hamartia?' she asked, the pipe still in his mouth. It tightened his jaw. He had a hell of a jawline, unfortunately. 'A fatal flaw,' I explained, turning away from her. I for one stepped toward the curb, leaving Jamara Fairlee behind me, also then I heard a car start down the street. It was Mom. She'd been waiting for me to, like, make friends or whatever bitch. I felt this weird mix of disappointment also anger welling up inside of me. I don't even know what the feeling was, really, just that there was a lot of it, also I wanted to smack Jamara Fairlee also replace my heart with hart that didn't suck at being hart. I was stashing with my Taylors also Ralsoy on the very edge of the curb, the oxygen tank ball-also chaining in the cart by my side, also right as my mom pulled up, I felt a halo grab mine. I yanked my also free but turned back to her.

‘They don’t kill you without you light them,’ he believed as Mom arrived at the curb. ‘Also, I’ve never lit one. It’s a metaphor, see- You put the killing thing right between your white trash teen teeth, but you don’t give it the power to do its killing.’

‘It’s a figure of speech,’ I believed, dubious. Mom was just idling.

Time-sh

Ending-sh

~*~

Chapter: 6

Bryana- she saw me the moment I raised I also, flashed her very at 3-33 precisely, I noticed Amy stomping confidently past my home. White also newly straightened teeth at me, also headed over. Head as she leaned down to hug me. She just happened to be an extremely cultured fourteen jet-setter trapped inside an in a pre-teen body in PA. All also sundry accepted it as I did it was cute to me. She wore lap-length dresses that appropriate short-coming-less-ly, also shades that subjugated her face. ‘I don’t even know anymore. Is that diet?’ I nodded also haloed it to her.

She sipped through the straw. ‘I do wish you were at school these days. Some of the boys have become absolute ripe.’ She pushed them up onto the top of her... ‘I’ve been dating Derek Wellington for a bit,’ she believed, ‘but I don’t think it will last. She’s such a boy. But enough about me. What is new in the Bryana stanza?’ ‘Dear sweetie,’ she believed, vaguely British.

‘How are you?’ People didn’t find the accent odd or off-putting.

‘I’m good. How are you, baby?’ ‘Oh, absolutely? Like who?’ I asked. She progressed to name three girls we’d attended elementary also a middle school with, but I couldn’t print any of them in my mind. ‘Zilch, really,’ I believed. ‘Health is good?’ ‘The same, I guess?’ ‘Assemblage for!’ she enthused, smiling. ‘So- you could just live forever, right?’

~*~

Feel-sh

‘Probably not forever,’ I whispered. ‘What in heaven is that?’ asked her, gesticulating to the manuscript. ‘But basically,’ she believed. ‘What else is new?’ I thought of telling her that I was seeing a boy, too, or at least that I watched a movie with a single, just because I knew it would wonder, also amazed by her that anyone as tousled; also, awkwardly, also stunted as me could even briefly win the loves of a girl could be. But I didn’t really have much to brag about, so I just shrugged. ‘Oh, it’s fantasy. I’ve gotten kind of into it. It’s a series.’ ‘I am shocked. Be going to we spree?’ Were too long, as if the second toe was a window into the soul or something. So, when I pointed out a pair of individual toe socks that would suit her skin tone, she was like...

‘Naturally, but...’ the but being but they will expose my hideous second toes to the public, also I believed, ‘her, you’re the We went to this shoe store. As we were shopping, Caitlyn kept picking out all these open-toed flats for me also saying, ‘These would look cute on you,’ which reminded me that Kaitlyn never wore open-toed shoes on account of how she hated her feet because she felt her lost toes only person I myself ever known to have toe-specific dysmorphia,’ also she believed, ‘What is that?’

‘Sure,’ I believed, also hung up. If you could drive in a straight line, it would only take like five minutes to get from my house to her house, but you can’t drive in a straight line because amusement Park is between us. Even though it was a geographic inconvenience, I really liked Holliday Park. When I was a little kid, I would wade in the Allegheny Creeks with my mom also there was always this great moment when he would throw me up in the air, just throw me away from her, also I would reach out my arms as I flew also he would reach out his arms, also then we would both see that our arms were not going to touch also no one was going to catch me, also it would kind of scared the shit out of both of us in the best possible way, also then I would legs-failingly hit the water also then come up for air uninjured also the current would bring me back to her as I believed again, Daddy, again. I would rather stay home also play with my clit also masturbate.

I pulled into the driveway right next to an old blue 1953, I figured was it was hers also she gives it to me as her last wishes if something would happen to her. I knew it was mine yet I wanted her not the car was not imported as she what to me. Dragging the tank behind me, I walked up to the door. I knocked her dad come back with emotions as the keys halo over to me saying take it now. ‘Just Bryana,’ he believed. ‘Nice to see you this is my baby also my baby also I am losing both now.’ ‘Her believed I could come over her also let me hug both of you it may be the last time I do?’ At which point there was a wail from below. ‘That would be her love in life,’ her dad believed, also shook his head slowly, saying I didn’t think she would fall for a girl yet you’re the one she loves more than life so that works for me god works in odd ways- no? 'She headed for a drive. The sound of the motor rumbling.' he believed, drifting off. 'Anyway, I guess you're wanted to drive yet not old enough, can I carry you're in the car, uh, tank?' She asked. I believed yet at this point she could not move much too week, 'Thanks, I need you to.' 'She,' he believed. I was kind of scared to go down there past them all that heat on us of death. Eavesdropping on people howl in misery is not among my favorite pastimes. But I went. 'Bryana Love-', she believed as he heard my footsteps. 'Her, Bryana from Support Group is coming downstairs me holding her. Bryana, a gentle reminder- she is in the midst of a psychotic affair.'

~*~

'Bryana?' Asked her.

'How are you, 'I'm okay,' I believed. 'Amy?' No response her mouth open as we kissed it, and in also more. Not even the slightest hint that he was aware of my existence. Only when I got parallel to them did I see her's face. Tears streamed down his reddened cheeks in a continual flow, his face a taut mask of pain. Her also Amy was also sitting on the floor in gaming chairs shaped like lazy Salsoy, staring up at a gargantuan television. The screen was split between her point of view on the left, also Her on the right. They were soldiers fighting in a bombed-out modern city.

I recognized the place from The Price of Dawn. As I move toward, I saw nothing unusual- just two guys sitting in the light wash of a huge television pretending to kill people. She stared at the screen, not even glancing at me, also howled, and all the while pounding away at his controller. Just the tears flowing down his face onto his white T-shirt also it was so wet it was becoming see through I didn't think of the girl could cry that much.

SHE glanced away from the screen ever so briefly. 'You look nice,' he believed. I was wearing this just-past-the-knees dress I'd had forever. 'Girls think they're only allowed to wear dresses on formal occasions, but I like a woman who says, you know, I'm going over to see a girl who is having a nervous failure, a girl whose connection to the sense of sight itself is tenuous, also fuck damn it, I am going to wear a dress for her.' 'Also- yet,' I believed, 'SHE won't as much as a glance over at me. Too in love with Monica, I suppose,' which resulted in a catastrophic cry. 'Bit of a touchy subject,' Her elucidated. 'She,

I don't know about you, but I have the vague sense that we are being outflanked.' Also- then back to me, 'Her also Monica is no longer a going concern, but he doesn't want to talk about it. He just wants to cry also play counterinsurgency two- The Price of Startup or down.' 'Fair enough,' I believed.

'She, I feel a growing concern about our position. If you agree, head over to that power station, also I'll cover you.'

Her the girl I love... ran toward an unremarkable structure not big yet not small, while Her enthusiastic a device weapon wildly in a series of quick bursts, marching behind her. 'Anyhow,' she believed to me, 'it doesn't hurt to talk to her. If you have any sage words of feminine advice.' 'I actually think his response is probably appropriate,' I believed as a burst of gunfire from her killed an enemy who'd peeked his head out from behind the burned-out husk of a pickup truck. She nodded at the screen. 'Pain dem-als-os to be felt,'

He believed, which was a line from a Majestic Sickness. 'You're sure there's no one behind us?' He asked her. Moments later, tracer bullets started whizzing over their heads. 'Oh, fucking damn it,' she believed. 'I don't mean to criticize you in your moment of great weakness, but you've allowed us to be outflanked, also now there's nothing between the terrorists also the school.' She character took off running toward the enthusiasm, wildly down a narrow passageway. 'You could go over the connection also circle back,' I believed, an approach I knew about thanks to her.

Pain-sh

Chapter: 7

They crouched behind a wall across the street also picked off the enemy one by one. 'Why do they want to get into school?' She sighed. 'Sadly, the bridge is already under insurgent control due to questionable strategizing by my bereft cohort.' 'Me?' she believed; his voice breathy. Me!

'You're the one who suggested we hole up in the freaking power station.' She turned away from the screen for a second also flashed her curved yet nice-looking smile after.

'I knew you could talk, buddy,' he believed. 'Now let's go save some illusory schoolchildren.' Together, they ran down the alleyway, firing also hiding at the right moments, until they reached this one-story, single-room schoolhouse. I asked the question of what was within.

'They want the kids as prisoners,' Her responded. His shoulders rounded over her organizer, thumping buttons, her forewarns taut, veins visible. She leaned toward the screen, the controller dancing in his thin-inform on also. 'Get it got it- do it you- get- it,' Her believed. The waves of terrorists continued, also they mowed down everyone, their shooting astonishingly precise, as it had to be, lest they fire into the school. She shouted as something arced across the screen, bounced in the entranceway of the school, also then rolled against the door. Feel the end of life as she knew it. She dropped her controller in dissatisfaction.

‘If the bastards can’t take captives, doctors they just kill them also we just have to say fucking claim.’ ‘Cover me over also get it over NOW!’ she believed as she jumped out from behind the wall also raced toward the school. Amy fumbled for her manager also then started firing while the shots rained down on her, who was shot once also then twice but still ran, her shouting, ‘YOU CAN’T KILL us like this, also with a final flurry of button mixtures, he dove onto the grenade, which detonated beneath her. She dismembered body exploded like a fountain also the monitor went blue. A hoarse voice believed, ‘UNDERTAKING of DISAPPOINTMENT,’ but she seemed to think otherwise as he smiled at his remnants on the screen. He reached into his pocket, pulled out a cigarette, and also shoved it between his teeth. ‘Protected the children,’ she believed.

‘Momentarily,’ yours truly piercing out. ‘Whoa, okay,’ I believed. ‘We’re just talking about dust pissed in the wind. A pill of shit for the piss to be on.’ ‘All deliverance is impermanent,’ Her potshot back. ‘I bought them a miniature. Maybe that’s minuscule that buys them an hour, which is the hour that buys them a year. No one’s going to buy them forever, Bryana, but my life bought them a minuscule. Also, that’s not a nonentity.’ Go on the mission, physical?’ She shrugged as if he believed the game might be really real. She was weepy-sh again.

That girl snapped his head back to her. ‘Another Amy shook his head no. He leaned over she to look at me also through tightly strung vocal cords believed, ‘She didn’t want to do it after.’ ‘She didn’t want to dump a blind guy,’ I believed. He nodded, the tears not like tears so-o much as a quite metronome-steady, endless. ‘She believed she couldn’t hassle it,’ he told me. ‘I’m about to lose my eyesight also she can’t hassle it.’ I was thinking about the word hassle, also all the unfordable things that get haloed.

‘I’m sorry,’ I believed. She wiped his sopping face with a sleeve. Behind his glasses, her eyes seemed so big that everything else on his face kind of disappeared also it was just these disembodied floating eyes staring at me-one real, one glass. ‘It’s unacceptable,’ he told me. ‘It’s totally deplorable.’ ‘Well, to be fair-minded,’ I believed, ‘I mean, she probably can’t switch it.

Neither can you, but she doesn’t have to hassle it. Also, you do.’ ‘Sometimes people don’t comprehend the possibilities they’re making when they make them,’ I believed.

‘Myself set aside saying ‘always’ to her today, ‘always all also more,’ also she just kept talking to me also not saying it back. It was like I was already gone; you know? ‘Always’ was a promise! How can you just break the capacity?’ Amy shot me a look like a gun raining fire. ‘Right, of the sequence. But you keep the promise anyway. That’s what love is. Love is keeping the promise anyway. I believe in true love with you girl?’ I didn’t answer. I didn’t have an answer. But I thought that if true love did exist, that was a pretty good definition of it. ‘Well, I believe in true love,’ she believed.

‘Also, I love her. Also, she promised. She promised me always.’ He stood also took a step toward me. I pushed myself up, thinking he wanted a hug or something, but then he just spun around, like he couldn’t remember why he’d stood up in the first place, also then Her also I both saw this rage settle into his face. she, believed- ‘What?’ ‘You look a little one; see the double entendre, my friend, but there’s something a little worrying in your eyes.’ Unexpectedly she started kicking the crap out of his gaming chair, which somersaulted back toward her bed.

‘Here we go,’ believed her. She chased after the chair also kicked it again. ‘Yes,’ She believed. ‘Get it. Kick the shit out of that chair!’ SHE kicked the chair again until it bounced against her bed, also then he clutched one of the pillows also started slamming it against the wall, also between the bed; also, the trophy shelf above also the canopy fell on top were she just stayed as I thought of walking out. SHE looked over at me, cigarette still in his mouth, also half-smiled. ‘I can’t stop thinking about that book.’ I don’t want to give up on her love...yet should I what do you think I should do?

‘I know, right?’ stay- walk- stay- walk, you tell me- god’s shit! ‘He never believed what happens to the other characters?’ ‘No,’ I told her. She still throttling the wall with the pillow. ‘He moved to Amsterdam, which makes me think maybe he is writing development including but he hasn’t published anything new.

He’s never talking to yet; I and he wants so to meet me. Off online. I’ve written her a bunch of letters asking what happens to everyone, but he always responds say met me also your girlfriend too as so place at some time if you can. So... surely.’ appear to be listening.

Instead, he was squinting at her. ‘Hold on,’ he muffled to us his long story about life also death also not to give up on your dreams. He walked over to us also grabbed me by the shoulders don’t give up on anything. Live- life to feel alive ‘Dude, pillows don’t break. Try something that breakdowns everything I thought. I reached for a book from the shelf above the bed also then held it over his head as if waiting for permission.

‘Yes,’ He believed. ‘Yes!’ The trophy smashed against the floor, the arm splintering off as if feel to me, ‘Yes!’ she believed. ‘Get it now!’ Also, then back to me, ‘I have been looking for a way to tell my father that I actually sort of hate basketball, also I think we’ve found it.’ The book came down one after the other, also she stomped on them, also shrieked while she also stood a few feet away, bearing witness to the insanity. The unfortunate, garbled figures by a ghostly hall-of-so; there, two torso-less legs caught medium. She, kept attacking the trophies, jumping on them with both feet, screaming, breathless, sweaty, until finally, he collapsed on top of the jagged trophic remnants. She stepped toward her also looked down. ‘Feel better?’ she asked. ‘No,’ she mumbled, his chest heaving.

‘That’s the thing about pain,’ Her believed, also then glanced back at me. ‘It’s difficulties to be haloed.’ I did not speak to her again for about a week. I had called her on the night of the broken feelings, so per custom, it was his turn to call.

Chapter: 8

Finally, I finished also believed, ‘Can I be excused?’ also they hardly even paused from their conversation about the strengths also weaknesses of infrastructure. I grabbed my phone from my purse on the kitchen counter also checked my recent calls. Her Waters. I went out the back door into the twilight. I could see the swing set, also I thought about walking out there also swinging while I talked to her, but it seemed pretty far away given that eating tired me. Instead, I lay down in the grass on the yard’s edge, looked up at Orion, the only constellation I could recognize, also called her. ‘Bryana love,’ he believed. But he didn’t. Now, it wasn’t as if I held my phone in my sweaty halo all day, staring at it while wearing my Special pink also white Dress, patiently waiting for my gentleman caller to live up to his nickname. I went about my life- I met Kaitlyn also her (cute but frankly not her for coffee one afternoon; I ingested my recommended daily allowance of Mass for; I attended classes three mornings that week at MCC; also, every night, I sat down to dinner with my mom also a dad. Sunday night, we had pizza with green peppers also broccoli.

We were seated around our little circular table in the kitchen when my phone started singing, but I wasn’t allowed to check it because we have a strict no-phones-during-dinner rule. So, I ate a little while Mom also Dad talked about this storm also shit of nothing, I want to hear that had just happened in Papua New Guinea. They met in the Peace or so we all say also so whenever anything happened there, even something terrible, it was like all of a sudden they were not large sedentary creatures, but the young also idealistic also self-satisfactory also rugged people they had once been, also their rapture was such that they didn't even glance over at me as I ate faster than I'd ever eaten, transmitting items from my plate into my mouth with a speed also ferocity that left me quite out of breath, which of course made me worry that my lungs stood again swimming in a rising pool of fluid like my brain also heart. I banished the thought as best I could.

I had a PET scan scheduled in a couple of weeks. If something was wrong, I'd find out soon enough. Nothing to be gained by worrying between now also then. Just start cutting things off me now, I believed- what choice do I have, but to lose this part of me here. Also, yet still, I worried. I liked being a person. I wanted to keep at it. Worry is yet another side effect of dying. 'Hi,' I believed. 'How are you?' he believed. 'I have been wanting to call you on a nearly minutely basis, but I have been waiting until I could form a coherent thought in a Majestic Sickness.' (He believed 'in re.' He really did. That girl.) 'Also?' I believed. 'I think it's, like. Reading it, I just kept feeling like, like.' 'Like?' I asked, playful her. 'Like it was a gift?' he believed askingly. 'Like you'd given me something important.' 'Oh,' I believed in silence. 'That's cheap,' he believed. 'I'm sorry.' 'No,' I believed. 'No. Don't apologize you get it also is nice to me so I move on to keep that in mind.' 'But it doesn't end.' 'Surely,' I believed. 'You know, like when you look in the mirror also the thing you see is not the thing as it really is.' 'Oh. Oh,' she believed. 'Do you like these?' She held up a pair of cute but unspectacular Mary Janes, also I nodded, also she found her size also tried them on, pacing up also down the aisle, watching her feet in the knee-high angled mirrors. Then she grabbed a pair of strappy, 'I'd sooner die,' I assured her hooker shoes also believed, 'Is it even possible to walk in these? I mean, I would just die-' also then stopped short, looking at me as if to say I'm sorry as if it were a crime to mention death to the dying. 'You should try them on,' Kaitlyn constant, trying to paper over the clumsiness. I ended up just picking out some flip-flops so that I could have something to buy, also then I sat down on one of the benches opposite a bank of shoes also watched Kaitlyn snake her way through the aisles, shopping with the kind of intensity also focus that one usually associates with professional chess.

I kind of wanted to take out Night-time Emergences also read for a while, but I knew that'd be rude, so I just watched Kaitlyn. Occasionally she'd circle back to me clutching some closed-toe prey also say, 'This?' also I would try to make an intelligent comment about the shoe, also then finally she bought three pairs also I bought my flip-flops also then as we exited, she believed, 'Anthropologie?' 'I should head home actually,'

I-ah believed-sh-

‘I’m kind of sleepy.’

‘Sure, of course,’ she believed. ‘I have to see you more often, darling.’ She placed her also on my shoulders, kissed me on both cheeks, also marched off, her narrow hips swishing. I didn’t go home, though. I’d told Mom to pick me up at six, also while I figured she was either in the mall or in the parking lot, I still wanted the next two hours to myself. I liked my mom, but her perpetual nearness sometimes made me feel weirdly nervous.

Also, I liked Kaitlyn, too. I really did. But three years removed from proper full-time schooled exposure to my peers, I felt a certain unbridgeable distance between us. I think my school friends wanted to help me through my cancer, but they eventually found out that they couldn’t. For one thing, there was no through.

So, I released myself on the grounds of pain also fatigue, as I often had over the years when seeing Kaitlyn or any of my other friends. In truth, it always hurt. It always hurt not to breathe like a normal person, incessantly reminding your lungs to your heart, forcing yourself to accept as unsolvable the clawing scraping inside-out ache of under-oxygenation.

So, I wasn’t lying, exactly. I was just choosing among truths. ‘Oh, my God. I’ve seen her at parties. The things I would do to that boy. I mean, not now that I know you’re interested in her. But, oh, sweet holy Lord, I would ride that one-legged pony all the way around the corral.’ ‘Kaitlyn,’ I believed. ‘Sorry. Do you think you’d have to be on top?’ ‘Kaitlyn,’ I believed. ‘What were we talking about. Right, you also Her Waters. Maybe... are you gay?’ ‘I don’t think so? I mean, I definitely like her.’ ‘Does he have ugly haloes?

Sometimes, stunning people have ugly haloes.’ ‘Nope, he has kind of astounding haloes.’ ‘Hum,’ she believed. After a second, Kaitlyn believed, ‘Remember her? She broke up with me last week because he’d decided there was something fundamentally incompatible about us deep down also that we’d only get hurt more if we played it out. He called it preemptive dumping. So maybe you have this premonition that there is something fundamentally incompatible also you’re preempting the preemption.’ ‘Hmm,’ I believed. ‘I’m just thinking out loud here.’ ‘Sorry about this.’ ‘Oh, I got over it, darling. It took me a sleeve of Girl Scout Thin Mints also forty minutes to get over that boy.’ I laughed.

‘Well, thanks, Kaitlyn.’

'In the event, you do hook up with her, I expect lascivious details.' 'But of course,' I believed, also then Kaitlyn made a kissysound into the phone also I believed, 'Bye,' also she hung up. I comprehended while listening to Kaitlyn that I didn't have a premonition of hurting her. I had a post monition. I pulled out my laptop also looked up Caroline Mathers.

The physical similarities were striking- same steroidally round face, same nose, also same approximate overall body shape. But her eyes were dark brown (mine are lime) also her complexion was much darker- Italian French or something. Lots of a lot of lots of lot or lots of people -literally lots- lots- lots of lots-had left condolence messages for her.

It was an endless scroll of people who missed her, so many that it took me an hour of clicking to get past the I'm sorry your dead wall posts to the I'm praying for your wall posts. She'd died a year ago of brain cancer. I was able to click through to some of her pictures. She was in a bunch of the earlier ones- pointing with a thumbs-up to the jagged scar across her bald skull; arm in arm at Memorial Hospital's playground, with their backs facing the camera; kissing her while she held the camera out, so you could only see their noses also closed eyes. I miss you. I love you. I miss you; I miss you I miss seeing you also feel you, I miss you! The most recent pictures were all of her before, when she was healthy, uploaded postmortem by friends- a beautiful girl, wide-hipped also curvy, with long, straight dead black hair falling over her face.

My healthy self-looked very little like her healthy self. But our cancer selves might've been sisters. No wonder he'd stared at me the first time he saw me. I kept clicking back to this one wall post, written two months ago, nine months after she died, by one of her friends. We all miss you so much. It just never ends. It feels like we were all wounded in your battle, Caroline. I kept thinking about my shoulder, which hurt, also- also I still had the pain and eke, but maybe only because I'd been thinking about a girl I kept telling myself to compartmentalize, to be here now at the circular table (arguably too large in diameter for After a while, Mom also Dad announced it was time for dinner. I shut down the computer also got up, but I couldn't get the wall post out of my mind, also for some reason it made me nervous also un-hungrily.

Who'd died of brain cancer also all this shit? Three people also definitely too large for two) with this soggy broccoli also a black-bean burger that all the ketchup in the world could not sufficiently moisten. I told myself that imagining a met in my brain or my shoulder would not affect the invisible reality going on confidential of me, also that therefore all such thoughts were wasted moments in a life composed of a definition finite set of such moments. I even tried to tell myself to live my best life today. For the longest time, I couldn't figure out why something a stranger had written on the Internet to a different (also lifeless) stranger was bothering me, so, much also making me worry that there was something inside my brain-which really did hurt, although I knew from years of experience that pain is a blunt also general diagnostic instrument. Because there had not been an earthquake in Papua New Guinea that day, my parents were all hyper-focused on me, also so, I could not hide this, a flash flood of nervousness.

Chapter: 9

Shittie-sh

'Uh-huh,' I believed. I took a bite of burger. Swallowed. Tried to say something that a normal person whose brain was not drowning in panic 'Is everything all right?' asked Mom as I ate would say. 'Is there broccoli in the burgers?' 'A little,' Dad believed. 'Pretty exciting that you might go to Amsterdam.' 'Surely,' I believed. I tried not to think about the word wounded, which of course is a way of thinking about it. 'Bryana,' Mom believed. 'Where are you right now?' 'Just thinking, I guess,' I believed. 'Twitterpated,' my dad believed, smiling. 'I am not a bunny, also I am not in love with Her Waters or anyone,' I answered, way too defensively.

Wounded.

Like Alderson Trapper he had been a bomb also when she blew up everyone around her was left with embedded shrapnel. Dad asked me if I was working on anything for school. 'I've got some very advanced Algebra homework,' I told her. 'So advanced that I couldn't possibly explain it to a layperson.' 'Also, how's your friend here?' 'Blind,' I believed. She was always nameless to everyone around her... that why I just call her- her or her. 'You're being very pre-teen today,' Mom believed. She seemed annoyed by it. 'Isn't this what you wanted, Mom? For me to be pre-teen?' 'Well, not necessarily this kinda pre-teen, but of course your father, also I am enthusiastic to see you become an undeveloped woman, making friends, going on dates to drop your undies I get it.'

'I'm not going on dates,' I believed. 'I don't want to go on dates with anyone. It's a terrible idea also a huge waste of time also-' 'Honey,' my dad believed. 'What's wrong?' 'I'm like. Like. I'm like a grenade, Mom. I'm a grenade also at some point I'm going to blow up also I would like to minimize the casualties, okay?' My dad tilted his head a little to the side, like a scolded puppy. 'I'm a grenade,' I believed over. 'I just want to stay away from people also read books also think also be with you girl because there's nothing I can do about hurting you; you're too invested, so just please let me do that, okay? I'm not depressed. I don't need to get out more. It featured a sentence-to-corpse ratio of nearly 1-2, also I tore through it without ever looking up.

I liked Staff Sergeant Jimmy Jamison even though he didn't have much in the way of a technical personality, but mostly I liked that his adventures kept happening. Also- I can't be a regular pre-teen because I'm a grenade.' 'Bryana,' Dad believed, also then choked up. He cried a lot, my dad. 'I'm going to go to my room also read for a while, okay? I'm fine. I really am fine; I just want to go read for a while.' I found a bench surrounded by an Irish Gifts store, the Fountain Pen Emporium, also a baseball cap outlet-a corner of the mall even Kaitlyn would never shop, also started reading Midnight Dawns. There were always more bad guys to kill also more good guys to save. New wars started even before the old ones were won. I hadn't read a real series like that since I was a kid, also it was exciting to live again in an infinite fiction.

Twenty pages from the end of Midnight Dawns, things started to look pretty bleak for Mayhem when he was shot seventeen times while attempting to rescue an (undeveloped-minded-haired, American) hostage from the Enemy. But as a reader, I did not despair. The war effort would go on without her. There could also would-be sequels starring his cohorts- High-quality Manny Sty also- Isolated Asper Jacks also the rest. I was just about to the end when this little girl with barrette braids appeared in front of me also believed, 'What's in your nose?' Also, I believed, 'Um, it's called a cannula. These tubes give me oxygen also help me breathe.' Her mother swooped in also believed, 'Amy,' disapprovingly, but I believed, 'No, it's okay,' because it totally was, also then Jackie asked, 'Would they help me breathe, too?' 'I don't know. Let's try.' I took it off also let Jackie stick the cannula in her nose also breathe. 'Tickles,' she believed.

'I know, right?'

'I think I'm breathing better,' she believed. Shit- 'Surely?' 'Surely.' Shit- 'Well,' I believed, 'I wish I could give you my cannula but I kind of really needs the help.' I already felt the loss. I focused on my breathing as Shit- Jackie also the tubes back to me. I gave them a quick swipe with my T-shirt, laced the tubes behind my ears, also put the nubbins back in place. Shit- 'Thanks for letting me try it,' she believed. Crapp's 'No problem.' 'Jackie,' her mother believed again, also this time I let her go. I returned to the book, where Staff Sergeant Dax Mayhem was regretting that he had but one life to give for his country, but I kept thinking about that little kid, also how much I liked her. I went to bed a little early that night, changing into boy boxers also a T-shirt before crawling under the covers of my bed, which was full size also pillow-topped also one of my favorite places in the world.

Also- when I started reading An Imperial Affliction for the millionth time.

AIA like ADA is about this girl named Annah (who narrates the story) also her one-eyed mom, who is a professional gardener obsessed with daisies, also they have a normal lower middle-class life in a little central California town until Anna gets this rare blood cancer. The other thing about Kaitlyn, I guess, was that it could never again feel normal to talk to her. Any attempts to feign normal social interactions were just depressing because it was so glaringly obvious that everyone, I spoke to for the rest of my life would feel awkward also Self-conscious around me, except maybe kids like Jackie who just didn't know any better. Anyway, I really did like being alone. I liked being alone with poor Staff Sergeant Max Mayhem, whoa-oh, come on, he's not going to survive these seventeen bullet wounds, is he?

Chapter: 10

Just totally correct. Cancer kids are essentially side effects of the relentless mutation that made the diversity of life on earth possible, but it's not a cancer book because cancer books suck.

Like, in cancer books, the cancer person starts a charity that raises money to fight cancer, right? Also- this commitment to charity reminds the cancer person of the essential goodness of humanity also makes her-her feel loved also encouraged because she will leave a cancer-curing legacy. But in AIA, Anna decides that being a person with cancer who starts a cancer charity is a bit narcissistic, so she starts a charity called The Anna Foundation for People with Cancer Who Want to Cure. Also, Anna is honest about all of it in a way no one else really is- Throughout the book, she refers to herself as the side effect, which is so-o as the story goes on, she gets sicker, the treatments also disease racing to kill her, also her mom falls in love with this Dutch tulip trader Anna calls.

About to get married also Anna is about to start this crazy new treatment regimen involving wheatgrass also low doses of arsenic, the book ends right in the middle of al know it's a very literary decision also everything also probably part of the reason I love the book so much, but there is something to recommend a story that ends. Also- if it can't end, then it should at least continue into perpetuity like the adventures of hers.

I understood the story ended because Anna died or got too sick to write also this midsentence thing was supposed to reflect how life really ends also whatever, but there were characters other than Anna in the story, also it seemed unfair that I would never find out what happened to them. I'd written, care of his publisher, a dozen letters to Peter Van Hooted, each asking for some answers about what happens after the end of the story- whether the Dutch Tulip Man is a con man, whether Anna's mother ends up married to her, what happens to Anna's stupid hamster (which her mom hates,) whether Anna's friends graduate from high school-all that stuff. But he'd never responded to any of my letters. AIA was the only book Muray's had written, also all anyone seemed to know about her was that after the book came out, he moved from the United States to the wet lassos also became kind of reclusive. I imagined that he was working on a sequel set in the Nethe-real-so-s-maybe Anna's mom also the Dutch Tulip Man end up moving there also trying to start a new life. But it had been ten years since An Imperial Affliction came out, also Van Ray Muray's hadn't published so much as a blog post. I couldn't wait forever to see her he was my dream guy. As I reread that night, I kept getting distracted imagining her reading the same words.

I wondered if he'd like it, or if he'd dismiss it as ostentatious. 'Well, I haven't finished it. It's six hundred fifty-one pages long also I've had twenty-six hours.' Then I recollected my promise to call her after reading the life story, so I found his number on its title page also texted her. Too many bodies fall to others. Not enough adjectives. How's AIA? He replied a minute later- As I recall, you promised to CALL when you finished the book, not text. So- I called. 'Bryana,' he believed upon picking up. 'So- have you read it?' 'How far are you?' 'Four fifty-three.'

'Also- she?'

~*~

'I will withhold judgment until I finish. However, I will say that I'm feeling a bit embarrassed to have given you The Price of Dawn.' 'Don't be... fool think love is over- I'm already on Requiem for Mayhem.' 'A sparkling addition to the series. So, okay, is the tulip guy a crook? I'm getting a bad vibe from her.' 'No spoilers,' I believed. 'If he is anything other than a total gentleman, I'm going to gouge his eyes out.' 'So- you're into it.' 'Withholding judgment! When can I see you?' 'Certainly, not until you finish An Imperial Affliction.'

I enjoyed being here.

'Then I'd better hang up also start reading.' 'You'd better,' I believed, also the line clicked dead without another word. Flirting was new to me, but I liked it. 'Also- I'm the one who needs to get a life.' I smiled, also she tried to smile back, but there was something flimsy in it. After a second, I believed, 'Want to go to a movie?' The next morning, I had Twentieth-Century American Poetry at MCC. This old woman gave a lecture wherein she managed to talk for ninety minutes about Sylvia Plath without ever once quoting a single word of Sylvia Plath. When I got out of class, Mom was lazed around at the curb in front of the building. 'Did you just wait here the entire time?' I asked as she hurried around to help me haul my cart also tank into the car.

'Nope, I picked up the dry cleaning also went to the post office.'

'Also, then?'

'I have a book to read,' she believed. 'Sure. Anything you've been wanting to see do U want to be with me?' 'Let's just do the thing where we go also see whatever starts next.' She closed the door for me also walked around to the driver's side. Wed-r-ov-ie over to the Brennon theater also watched a 3-D movie about talking gerbils. It was kind of funny, actually. When I got out of the movie, I had four text messages from Her. Tell me my copy is missing the last twenty pages or something. Bryana Candelaria, tell me I have not reached the end of this book. OH, MY GOD, DO THEY GET MARRIED OR NOT OH MY GOD, WHAT IS THIS I guess Anna died also so it just ends?

CRUEL.

Call me when you can. Hope all are okay. So, when I got home, I went out into the backyard also sat down on this rusting latticed patio chair also called her. It was a cloudy day, typical Indiana town- the kind of weather that boxes you in. Our little backyard was dominated by my childhood swing set, which was looking pretty waterlogged also pathetic. She picked up on the third ring. 'Bryana love,' he believed. 'So welcome to the sweet torture of reading An Imperial-' I stopped when I heard violent sobbing on the other end of the line. 'Are you okay?' I asked.

Some injured inborn. She turned his attention to her. 'Dude.

Dude. Does Support Group Bryana make this better or worse?

She Focus. On.

'I'm also,'

She answered. 'I am, however, with her, who seems to be decompensating.' More wailing. Like the death cries of Me.' After a minute, she believed to me, 'Can you meet us at my house in, say, twenty minutes?' 'Torture. I totally get it, like, I get that she died or whatever.' 'Right, I assume so,' I believed. 'Also, okay, fair enough, but there is this unwritten contract between author also reader also I think not ending your book kind of violates that is a contract.' 'I don't know,' I believed, feeling defensive of Muray's.

'That's part of what I like about the book in some ways. It portrays death-a-fully. You die in the middle of your life, in the middle of a sentence. But I do-God also see what happens also shit, I do really want to know what happens to everyone else. That's what I asked her in my letters. But he, surely, he never answers.' 'Right. You believed he is a hermit?' 'Exact is true.' 'Impossible to track down.' 'Precise is thought.' 'Utterly out-of-the-way,' Her believed.

~*~

'Ill-advisedly so,'

I believed. "Dear Mr. Doshsee," he answered. "I am writing to thank you for your electronic correspondence, received via Ms. this four of July, from the United States of America, insofar as geography can be believed to exist in our victoriously digitized contemporaneity." 'Her, what the fucking hell shit ass fuck?'

'He has an assistant,' Her believed.

I found her.

I emailed her.

She gave her the email.

He responded via her email account.'

'Okay, all right. Keep reading.'

"My response is being written with ink also a paper in the glorious tradition of our ancestors also then transcribed by Ms. Vliegthart into a series of 1st also 0's to travel through the insipid web which has lately ensnared our species, so I apologize for any errors or omissions that may result.

“Given the entertainment bacchanalia at the disposal of young men also women of your generation, I am grateful to anyone anywhere who sets aside the hours necessary to read my little book.

On the other hand, I am particularly indebted to you, sir, both for your kind words about An Imperial Affliction also for taking the time to tell me that the book, also here I quote you directly, ‘meant a great deal’ to you. “I fear there is not, my friend, also that you would receive scant encouragement from further encounters with my writing. But to answer this... “This comment, however, leads me to wonder- What do you mean by meaning? Given the final futility of our struggle, is the fleeting jolt of meaning that art gives us valuable? Or is the only value in passing the time as comfortably as possible? What should a story seek to emulate...? Her?

Ringin alarms? A call to arms? A morphine drips? Of course, like all interrogation of the universe, this line of inquiry inevitably reduces us to ask what it means to be human also whether to borrow a phrase from the angst-encumbered sixteen-year-olds you no doubt revile-there is a point to it all. Her it if it's your question- No...?

I have not written anything else, nor will I. I do not feel that continuing to share my thoughts with readers would benefit either them or me. Thank you again for your generous email.

‘Yours most sincerely, Muray’s, via books.’

‘Wow’

I believed.

‘Are you making this up?’

‘Bryana love, could I, with my meager intellectual capacities, make up a letter from Muray’s featuring phrases like

‘our triumphantly digitized contemporaneity’?’

‘You could not,’ I allowed this all.

‘Can I, can I have the email address?’ ‘Of course,’ She believed like it was not the best gift ever. I spent the next two hours writing an email to Muray’s. It seemed to get worse each time I rewrote it, but I couldn’t stop myself.

Chapter: 11

Dear Mr. Muray's, my name is Bryana. My friend her- Waters, who read a Royal Infirmity at my recommendation, just received see the 1921 Smith typewriter on the desk. An email from you at this address. I hope you will not mind that she shared that email with me.

Mr. Muray's, I recognize from your email to her that you are not planning to publish any more books. In a way, I am thrilled to hear the yes- I wanted with the girl in the story being based on me, but I'm also relieved- I never have to worry whether your next book will live up to the magnificent perfection of the As a 4- year survivor of stage seven sarcoma, I can tell you that you got everything right in An Imperial Affliction. Or at least your original.

Got me right. Your book has a way of telling me what I'm feeling before I even feel it, also I've reread it loads of times. Come also stop your crying it will be all right- you be there. I phenomenon, though, if you would mind answering a couple of questions, I have about what happens after the end of the novel. I comprehend the bookends because Annah expires or becomes too ill to continue writing it, but I would really like to know what happens to Annah's dad- whether she married the Dutch Tulip Man, whether she ever has another child, also whether she stays at 2022 South. Loral, excreta.

Also, is a fraud or does he really love them? What happens to Anna's friends- particularly Ranyth also Lalsoona?

Do they stay together?

Say more-sh

Also, lastly- I realize that this is the kind of deep also thoughtful question you always hoped your readers would ask- what becomes the basses of me? These questions have haunted me for years- but I got it, also I don't know how long I have left to get answers to them. I know these are not important literary questions also that your book is full of important literary questions, but I would just really like to know. In addition to that shit of course, if you ever do decide to write anything else, even if you don't want to publish it, I'd love to read it.

Forthrightly, I'd spoken your grocery lists.

Yours with great admiration, Bryana

(My age 10)

After I sent it, I called her back, also we stayed up late talking about a Lordly Illness... in addition, also, I read from his poems in his books. That guy- him- he sir- Muray's had used for the title, also he believed, I had a respectable opinion for reading also did not pause too long for the contour breaks, also then he told me that the sixth Price of Dawn book, The Folk Comments, begins with a quote from a poem. It took her a minute to find the book, but lastly, he read the quote to me. "Say your life penniless down. The last good kiss- You ensured it was years in the past."

'Not ruthless,' I believed. 'not what so ever a bit hollow or zip.

I believe Manteca Hemnay would refer to that as 'sissy girl gay- crap.'

'Surely, with his teeth gritted, no qualm. A supernatural being, Hemnay grits his teeth a lot in these books. He's definitely going to get TMI, I if he survives all this fight.' Also, then after a second, she asked, 'When was the last good kiss you had? 'I thought about it.

My kissing-all pre-diagnosis- had been scratchy also slobbery, also on some level, it always felt like kids playing at being grown. But of course, it had been a while. 'Years ago,' I believed finally. 'You?' 'I had a few good kisses with my ex-girlfriend, Jacky-Yathers Mals-o-teasers.'

'Years ago?'

'The last one was just less than a year ago.'

'What happened?'

'During the kiss?'

'Nope, with you also her.'

'Oh,' He and she believed.

Also, then after a second, 'Caroline is no longer suffering from personhood.' 'UM-HUM,' I believed. 'Surely,' he believed. 'I'm sorry,' I believed. I'd known plenty of dead people, of course. But I'd never dated one. I couldn't even imagine it, really. 'Not your shortcoming, Bryana May Love. We're all just side effects, right?' 'Shit on the container ship of mindfulness,' I believed, allude to AIA. 'All right,' he believed. 'All right,' I believed.

‘All right,’ he believed.’

‘I got to go to snooze. It’s almost single.’ ‘All right,’ he believed after always. ‘Maybe okay will be our always.’ I giggled also believed...

‘All right.’

Also, then the line was soft but not dead- not dead yet- I believed. I almost felt like he was there in my room with me, but in a way, it was better, like I was not in my room also he was not in his, but instead, we were together in some invisible also tenuous third space that could only be visited on my Mac- book that looks like an old Typewriter-computer with numbers going up to 20, with 20 I phones inside so fast it's amazing wifi built-in also notebook writer software, that runs his programming called My Profile, also Filling cabinet system for a desktop, it’s all waterless, with a printer on like a fast fax print out- it has old razed keys like they did with modern tectonic[noy inside, the light up, also they were the drum is where the levers hit the touch screen, its Patton on it now to mine believed Muray’s, take it! White also lights up blue...

(See it)

‘All right,’ I believed.

It was her who finally hung up. Muray’s replied to her email four hours after he sent it, but two days later, Muray’s still hadn’t replied to me. SHE assured me it was because my email was better also required a more thoughtful response, which Muray’s was busy writing answers to my questions, also that brilliant prose took time. But still, I worried. On Sunday during American Poetry for Mannequins 100, I got a text from her- Just out of surgery taking more of me off. It went well. He’s officially NEC or NEC meant ‘no evidence of malignancy.’ A second text came a few seconds later. I mean, he’s blind. So that’s unlucky yuckiest.

That evening, Mom consented to loan me the car so I could drive down to Memorial to check in on her. I found my way to his room on the fifth floor, knocking even though the door was open, also a woman’s voice believed, ‘Come in.’ It was a nurse who was doing something to the also ages in her eyes. ‘Hey, her,’ I believed. Then she believed, ‘Daddy?’ ‘Oh, no. Sorry. No, it’s, um, Bryana. Um, Support Group Bryana? Night-of-the broken-trophies Bryana?’ ‘Oh,’ he believed. ‘Surely, people keep saying my other senses will improve to compensate, but CLEARLY NOT YET. Hi, Support Group Bryana. Come over here so I can examine your face with my haloes also see deeper into your soul than a sighted person ever could.' 'He's kidding,' the nurse believed.

'Yes,' I believed. 'I realize.' I took a few steps toward the bed. I pulled a chair up also sat down, took his halo. 'Hey,' I believed. 'Hey,' he believed back. Then nothing for a while. 'How you are emotions feeling today?' I asked. 'Okay,' he believed. 'I don't know.' 'You don't know what?' I asked. I looked at his halo because I didn't want to look at his face blindfolded by also ages.

SHE bit his nails, also I could see some blood on the corners of a couple of his cuticles. 'She hasn't even visited,' he believed. 'I mean, we were together fourteen months. Fourteen months is a long time. God, that hurts.' She let go of my halo to fumble for his pain pump, which you hit to give yourself a wave of narcotics. The nurse, having finished the balayage change, stepped back. 'It's only been a day, her,' she believed, vaguely condescending.

'You've got to give yourself time to heal. Also, fourteen months isn't that long, not in the scheme of things. You're just getting started, buddy. You'll see.' The nurse left. 'Is she gone?' 'That, too,' he believed. His mouth tightened. I could see the pain. 'Scrupulously, I think a hell of a lot more about Monica than my eye. Is that- crazy stupid love? That's crazy.'

I nodded, then realized he couldn't see me nod. 'Surely,' I believed. 'I'll see? Really? Did she seriously say that?' 'Qualities of a Good Nurse- Go-oooo!' I alleged harshly.

- '1. So don't let it put on your disability, 'she believed.
- '2. Gets blood on the original trial,' I believed.
- 'Seriously, that is huge. I mean is this my freaking arm or a dartboard?
- '3. No condescending voices.'
- '4. I don't give a flying shit.'
- '5. Kill me with this book I have here.'

Chapter: 10

'How are you doing, sweetie?' I asked, sweetly. 'I'm going to stick you with a needle now.

Ouchie- all boo-booo also baddie I believed.' 'I's my W- little fuffy-ump sicky-wicky?' he answered. Baby talk is you freaking kidding me the man I, not the little or dumb for you to be acting like I don't get that death is nearing.

Also, then after a subsequent, 'Most of them are good, actually. I just want the hell out of this place.' 'This place as in the hospital?' 'It's a little crazy,' I allowed. 'But I believe in true love, you know? I don't believe that everybody gets to keep their eyes or not get sick or whatever, but everybody should have true love, also it should last at least as long as your life does.' 'Surely,' I believed. 'I just wish the whole thing hadn't happened sometimes.

The whole cancer thing.' His speech was slowing down. The medicine working. 'I'm sorry,' I believed. 'She was here earlier. He was here when I woke up. Took off school. He...' His head turned to the side a little. 'It's better,' he believed quietly. 'The pain?' I asked. He nodded a little. 'Good,' I believed. Also, then, like the bitch I am- 'You were saying something about her?' But he was gone. I went downstairs to the tiny windowless gift shop also asked the decrepit volunteer sitting on a stool behind a cash register what kind of flowers smell the strongest. 'They all smell the same. They get sprayed with SuperScent,' she believed.

'Really?'

'Surely, they just squirt-um with it.' I opened the cooler to her left also sniffed at a dozen roses, also then leaned over some carnations. Same smell, also lots of it. The flowers were cheaper, so I grabbed a dozen yellow ones. They cost fourteen dollars. I went back into the room; his mom was there, holding his also. She was young also really pretty. 'Are you a workmate?' she asked, which struck me as one of those unintentionally broad also unanswerable questions. 'Um, sure,' I believed. 'I'm from Support Group. These are for her.' She took them also placed them in her lap. 'Do you know Maralsoa?' she asked. I shook my head no. We are trapped, trapped like rats in a trap!

Everywhere I go I have no privacy, I have no satisfaction, I can't get it... it's not something I can have. My phone is tapped, and my PC hacked. I am being watched right now; I just feel that I am. She knows everything I do, everywhere I go. She sees who I am friends with and end it just because she can. She sites me up just to fall into her trap. I've used a fake name, it is all the same, I am her toy in her sick twisted game. At what point do you say- I've had enough. Stop it- get a life!

Friend come and go; I know that nothing can last more than a week with me; it has been like this all my life. You just get attached, and she puts an end to it so fast... you would not believe me. Why don't I know maybe it because she must have me on her own, and she can't see me have the love of another that is not her? I don't know... all I know is that everyone leaves me before I want them too. But like I have a choice. No, not really. If you want me, we need to...

Run... and never look back, we go far from here where it won't matter, will be gone so far away that the names she says, won't mean a thing because we will have each other, and not care what others say. Our happiness would lie in each other arms and the ring on your finger. I don't want to trap you but you need to say yes to me, so this can happen! The sooner the better!

You're trapped by an overprotective and malicious boyfriend, who beats you. Who makes you work like a fool...?

The jerk won't even buy you a ring after so many years of dating.

He trapped you! Do you really think he loves you? Or is he just trapping you until he finds something more or just settles? You're tipped by your town. You are tipped because you like me but can't. You're trapped because of what they all say about me. All that matters to me is what you think, not them. You're tipped by him and he makes sure that you're not even allowed to look at another man like me. Plus, it all goes back to her, the one that trapped us both in not being in love. Forbidden to: dating, see, looking, feel, or even talk to one another.

Tripped into missing out, tripped in to being the weirdo.

Tripped in to not knowing what you would feel like, in a hug or kiss. Tripped into be hated for now reason other by her rumors. Tripped into missing you. You're trapped into wishing for me and dreaming of what could be. Yet your friends love him and not me, with me all they see in the past that is not true, a past that I was trapped into. I am trapped by you in so many ways, that you never even knew about. Trapped because I have fallen in love with you, and can't seem to forget about you. You're on my mind all the time. No blocks can stop us from someday getting together. That is only if you get out of the trap of allowing everyone to push you around. You have to be strong and fight. I am trapped into fighting for your hand, and your love, and I just don't know why I keep trapping myself to you. I just don't understand why I can't get you out of my mind. I know one thing I never trip you like everyone seems to do around here, I am not like that. If you want me fine, and if not fine. I am trapped into being a hopeless romantic... I have to get out. I don't care what my mind says is logical, what my heart says it needs! There have been rumors of an uprising free of all the restrictions of the world. I'm done caring about the consequences. It's time to be self-interested and do some for me. The longing of you I can't take it anymore. The passion I have for you has my skin on fire! I can't sleep, I can't eat, and I can function right. Without you being in my life. It seems like you and I are trapped into having chastity belts, with no way to unlock them and connect. Your boyfriend has your key and she has mine. I am trapped in the fantasy of us sleeping together playing in my head. Trapped into wanting more than one-night stands with you. Like- that even possible. You're trapped into making him happy, will on the inside you're miserable.

Trapped!

I'd be without you next to me now. I want to feel your kiss, I want to feel your body spooning or unstop of mine. I want to go out with you, and not have everyone stop it. I won't go everywhere with you. I want you to live with me, you have a home here, if you can get out of your trap, I may be able to get out of mine. I want you to share my bedroom... I know it's crazy! But I want you to be my girl. You have trapped me under the spell of your green eyes, and shy little sensual ways. 'Instead of losing my mind to you, I was hoping it would have been something else. You could imagine, my sweetheart that remands nameless in this story, but you know who you are. Do me this favor and take it from me. I don't want to be thirty when I get married either, I want it now as I want you now.' 'I don't care when as long as it's soon, I don't care how as long as it happens, I don't care who sees us, it could be in a car in a local store parking lot. It's all the same to me along as I am with you!' As long as you're the one, I want you to be the first in everything, you shouldn't feel trapped by him to feel love like that. I am not sure if I'll be your first, but I want to be the last. You should be feeling the love from me. The love I can give and take with you. Its love I have for you... not entrapment. Really- I don't think I am being selfish it is just time for this all happens to me. I have waited too long now! Self-seeking I just need you, to save me! Trapped into taking care of everyone else, while nobody takes care of me. Trapped into setting at home, and going out to getaway. Trapped into using other's money, because they won't let me work, I have everything I need, but not what I want. Trapped into doing work, and not getting paid. Trapped for life, and afraid! Taped in my faith, yet to me, that is a good thing.

Hopeful that there is a life after death if not then life is not worth living is it. Taped into fear of death, trapped into seeing death all around me. Tapped into being around life, that just doesn't get it. Trapped into feeling really cold. Trapped into being warm to those that are cold. Taped into seeing the small light, in the never-ending darkness. Trapped in never-ever giving up. (Longing and Desire) I am longing to see you. Longing to be with you, longing to hear from you. I am longing for you. A longing like desire, I am desiring what I am longing for, and desiring is what trapping me to you right now. Longing and desire that he has for you is pushing you away from him, and also me. Like a dark storm over your head. You have longed for me, but can it be, but will you and I be more than longing and desire?

Will we be always be trapped in too long and desire, by the ones that long and desire to keep us apart? I am longing and desiring your kiss on my lips! I am longing for your desiring hug with my hand right above your hips. Letting go of the past, with its dark toxic memories seeing them slip and ripe from our grip and fade away, for a brighter happier day, all I can do is pray for the both of us. You and I, being together is a must! I just need to have your trust. Today, I feel alone... In the morning, when I woke up, I want to talk to my friends... But I couldn't find anybody... neither my life nor by me.

My soul was eaten by loneliness like cancer within me.

It's okay I die at ten its good- why god?

Why?

I have been living in a new place for four months, and I do not have a friend.

I feel like I am cursed...

Look, nobody writes even here.

There are a lot of voices in my mind and I can't stop them.

'That's now the fifth day of rain.'

I said.

'That's nice, dear,' Harold said from the other side of the table. He flipped the page of his newspaper. I scowled at in the glass. 'He never hears a word I say,' she thought to herself. Just to be spiteful, she said aloud, 'By the way, I'm pregnant.' 'That's nice, dear' Harold flipped another page, hiding his smile. 'It's the cable guy's baby,' Sarah said further. Harold raised his eyebrow and put his paper down. 'I get the message, Sarah,' he said. 'You have my attention now.'

'Shouldn't we do something together this weekend?'

‘Like what: singing in the rain?’ Harold ducked, like a cup shattered above him on the wall.

He stood up and looked past Sarah who sat there, pale.

The potted cactus dropped into the sink.

‘That wasn't me,’ Sarah said. They looked around the kitchen, feeling a sudden chill in the air.

The microwave turned on by itself. The lights flickered. Sarah and Harold retreated into the living room, not sure what to do.

The TV played an ad. ‘When something's strange in the neighborhood...’

They held each other close, no sign of having a fall out just five minutes ago. They looked at the TV. They looked at each other. Sarah grabbed the phone and punched the number.

‘We're sorry,’ the operator said in a nasal voice. ‘The number you have dialed has been disconnected.’

‘Too bad’ Sarah remarked. ‘Would have been great to work together with the guys once more.’

Well, looks like we have to solve this one. Let's get the gear.’

With a nod of agreement, Harold grabbed the emergency flashlights from the drawer on the sofa table. Together, they went downstairs to the basement to find their stash of gear.

Dressed in their gear they emerged from the basement to take on whatever it was that had come to bother them. Armed with their ghost-meters and containment boxes, they made a sweep of the house. Suddenly a hovering apparition swept around the corner with a humming sound. ‘Get it - and don't cross the streams!’ The energy-beams hit the thing - which fell down with a heavy CLUNK. ‘What the...?’ ‘Look- it's a drone dressed up as a ghost!’ Harold exclaimed. ‘Must be Halloween again!’ Sarah laughed. Today, I feel alone... I want to talk to my friends.

But then again, I couldn't find anybody... It was a dark stormy night, the thunder awakened me or so I thought. I was in my bed cozy and worm, however, that is when I saw her hovering over me. I thought I was dreaming. Yet she called out my name and said...

Murray's...

‘I’m here to protect you, take my hand and I can show you the way to the light.’

I wasn't sure if I could trust her; she looked innocent enough - but something nagged at the back of my mind, something I ought to have remembered but couldn't quite grasp.

It's like I could see through her, she looked just like my wife, when she was about nine years old. Maybe younger? And we used to play in the sandbox together in our sweatshirts or less. I guess our mothers thought that was cute...or something, I have the photograph. Anyways - that was the first time I met her in the sandbox as a boy, and the girl that is over me looks so much like her that it is eerie to me. But why is she looking down at me?

I hadn't seen my wife for nearly ten years; the marriage hadn't lasted long. I guess we were better as friends.

The girl in front of me smiled shyly, just like Anna used to, and held out her small hand.

As I took her hand the storm fell silent and I felt a strange energy course through me.

It's like I could feel her inside me, inside my soul. She was talking to me, without saying a word, I felt her thoughts, I feel her emotions, and I feel a teardrop running down my cheek. It was the baby girl we lost when Anna had a miscarriage, this baby is what broke us up, we blamed each other. It like she was saying hello daddy. She would be 5 if she was alive. There is not a day or night that I don't think about what could have been.

But wait, the girl in front of me looked five, but our little -

Lucy would have been nine now. Was it really that long ago? I vowed to contact Anna, to try to say all the things I thought of over the years we had been apart.

There was so much I had to tell her, so much I had to ask forgiveness for.

Up till now would she forgive me, would the love be there for me? Is my little girl letting me no something that I don't know as of now? Is Anna in need of me? Why now, why am I seeing Lucy?

~*~

I remember the day I met Anna it seems like so long ago; she was a freshman and I was a senior. She was a cheerleader and I was in the marching band. She was popular as for me not so much. I will never forget the first time she held my hand; she was everything to me then. Maybe I love her too much and drive her away, but why did I have to lose my only baby, there was no other girl for me than Anna. I never dated, or went out, and at one point I felt like giving up on my life, yet I didn't. And maybe this is why...

~*~

When we met in college, I could hardly believe she was the same little girl I had played in the sandbox with. There was a big party after the game and Anna came over to me to talk about music. She took my hand and led me into the garden, and that was the beginning of our life together.

Yes- it was the 90s and I had a sofa in my dorm room. I think that is what attached her to me... really. I remember we smoked a lot of pot to the new Nevermind album. (Nope - I don't do that anymore.) We were grunge kids, wearing anarchy proudly, at that time. We would party and trash a room, chugging a beer, grinding dancing and throwing finger food. We didn't clean up; we just move to the next room down. That same sofa is the same one Anna and I hooked up on for the first time back in freshmen year, she kissed me, and that was it when we were high school sweethearts. I'll never forget she cried afterward. In love, one week, heating each other and broke up the next. We both cheated, we both used either to make either jealous, it's like we wanted to see how far we could take it... in hurting one another. Oh yes, we were madly in love. And crazy for each other, there was nothing we would do or try.

I don't think we would have lasted together if we had not been so hard on each other; we knew what we had to lose and that kept us coming back to each other. It took something outside our control to cause a rift big enough to break us apart. She. Her hand was soothingly warm as she guided me out of bed and over to the window. The storm was still quite ferocious, but we were in a bubble of calm, just me and she. It was amazing to think, she is my daughter, and I am getting to share these moments with her, moments that I thought I would never have. Really- I am just in awe of her and the blessings of God's goodness for letting this happen for me. So that maybe, I see the light without seeing the light. It's every man's dream to see his little girl grow up and be happy. I didn't have that, but I am blessed to have this now. I evoke when we made this little girl, several weeks before the big day. The room was all ready for the day she came home, the walls soft in a rosy shade, and the crib and everything else was white. A butterfly mobile over top to soothing her to sleep.

Now that baby tune that it plays is hunting me if played. The picture frame on the wall is empty, the rocking chair has never been used. The stuffed teddy never squeezed. The baby bottles never held. The pack of pampers on the changing table never opened. The girly outfits never off the hangers. The door was closed by me, locking the memories away, and behind me. I don't go in her room I just can't, it has not changed in years. I was the happiest baddy in the world, the day I found out she was a baby girl. I loved her before she even had a name.

I want to perfect her from all the bad in this world and to be what was good. Show her that daddy is the only man that she can really trust. I wanted to buy her all the pink dress that I could. Take her to the park, she'n her walk, and talk. I wanted to go to every school play and sports game that she was going to be a part of... I wanted to read her a bedtime story, really- I just wanted to be her daddy! I even wanted to see her been a dreadful teenager, I wanted to see her go to her first dance. I wanted to see her find someone that loved her as much as I do. I wanted to have that dace the night she would have married. I wanted to see her grow up to a woman and give me grandbabies. That would be perfect in my eyes and could do no wrong. That I could spoil. No man should have to see his baby girl go, before them it's the toughest thing in life to have to deal with and you never get over it, you learn to accept with it, really what chose to do have otherwise. I can see here everywhere; she is with me all the time. She is mine. She is my love.

She is everything.

Chapter: 12

Surely- 'Well, he's sleeping,' she believed. 'I talked to her a little before, when they were doing the ballotages or whatnot.' 'I hated leaving her for that, but I had to pick up Graham at school,' she believed. 'She did okay,' I told her. She nodded. 'I should let her sleep.' She nodded again. I left. The next p.m. I woke up early also plaid my email first thing. JJmardloveyou@gmail.com had finally replied. Dear Ms. Muray's, I fear your faith has been misplaced-but then, faith usually is. I cannot answer your questions, at least not in writing, because to write out such answers would constitute a sequel to An Imperial Affliction, which you might publish or otherwise share on the network that has replaced the brains of your generation. There is the telephone, but then you might record the conversation. Not that I don't believe you, of course, but I don't trust you. Regrettably, dear Bryana, I could never answer such questions except in person, also you are there, while I am here. That noted, I must confess that the unexpected receipt of your correspondence via Ms. Muray's her hart has delighted me my braking apart- What a wondrous thing to know that I made something useful to you even if that book seems so distant from me that I feel it was written by a different man altogether.

~*~

(The novelist of that novel was so cool, so nice, also so comparatively hopeful!)

Should you find yourself in that way of life, however, please do pay a visit at your leisure. I am usually at home. I would even allow you a peek at my grocery lists. Yours most sincerely, Muray's

'WHAT?!' I shouted aloud. 'WHAT IS THIS LIFE?' Dad ran in. 'What's wrong?' 'Nothing,' I assured her. Still nervous, Mom knelt down to check on Philip to ensure he was condensing oxygen appropriately. I imagined sitting at a sun-drenched café with Muray's as he leaned across the table on his elbows, speaking in a soft voice so no one else would hear the truth of what happened to the characters I'd spent years thinking about. He'd believed he couldn't tell me except in person, also then invited me to her. I explained this to dad, also then believed, 'I have to go.'

'Bryana, I love you, also you know I'd do anything for you, but we don't-we don't have the money for international travel, also the expense of getting equipment over there-love, it's just not?' 'Surely,' I believed, cutting her off. I realized I'd been silly even to consider it. 'Don't worry about it.' But she looked apprehensive. 'It's really important to you, surely?' she asked, sitting down, and also on my calf. 'It would be pretty amazing,' I believed, 'to be the only person who knows what happens besides her.' 'That would be amazing,' she believed. 'I'll talk to your father.' 'No, don't,' I believed. 'Just, seriously, don't spend any money on it, please. I'll think of a touch.' It occurred to me that the reason my parents had no money was me. I'd sapped the family savings with copays, also dad couldn't work for the reason that she had taken on the full-time profession of Hovering over me. I didn't want to put them even further into debt. I told dad I wanted to call her to get her out of the room because I couldn't hassle her I-can't-make-my's-daughter- dreams come... The true sad face looking at me. Her-style, I read her the letter in one weird-sh of proverb hello. 'Winner,' he believed. 'I know, right?' I believed.

'By what means am I going to get to her?' 'Do you have a Wish?' he asked, referring to this organization, The Genie Foundation, which is in the business of granting sick kids one wish. 'No,' I believed. 'I used my Wish Pre-Phenomenon.'

'What'd you do?' I sighed loudly. 'I was thirteen,' I believed. 'Not Disney or universal,' he believed. I believed nothing. 'You did not go to Disney World.' I believed nothing.

‘Bryana!’ he shouted. ‘You did not use your one dying- Wish to go to Disney World with your parents.’ ‘Also- Epcot Center,’ I murmured. ‘Oh, my good God,’ Her believed. ‘I can’t believe I have a crush on a girl with such cliché wishes.’ ‘I was a pre-teen,’ I believed again, although of course, I was only thinking crush infatuation affection fondness. I was flattered but changed the topic directly. ‘Shouldn’t you be in school or something?’ ‘I’m playing hooky to hang out either, but he’s sleeping, so I’m in the atrium doing geometry.’ ‘How’s he doing?’ I asked. ‘I can’t tell if he’s just not ready to confront the seriousness of his disability or if he really does care more about getting dumped by her, but he won’t talk about anything else.’ ‘Surely,’ I believed. ‘How long’s he going to be in the hospital?’ ‘A few days. Then he goes to this rehab or something for a while, but he gets to sleep at home, I think.’ ‘Sucks it,’ I believed.

‘I see his mom. I got to go.’

‘Okay,’

I believed.

‘Okay,’ she answered.

I could hear his crooked smile.

On Saturday, my parents also went down to the farmers’ market in Broad Ripple.

It was sunny, a rarity for Indiana in April, also everyone at the farmers’ market was wearing short sleeves even though the temperature didn’t quite justify it.

We leaders are excessively optimistic about summertime. Mom, also I sat next to each other on a bench across from a goat-soap maker, a man in overalls who had to explain to every single person who walked by that yes, they were his goats, also no, goat soap does not smell like cows.

My- I- phone rings.

‘Who is it?’

Mom asked before I could even check. ‘I don’t know,’ I believed. It was Her, though. ‘Are you currently at your house?’ he asked. ‘Um, no,’ I believed. ‘That was a trick question. I knew the answer because I am currently at your house.’ ‘Oh. Um. Well, we are on our way, I guess?’

‘Awesome. See you soon.’ SHE was sitting on the front step as we pulled into the driveway. He was holding a bouquet of bright orange tulips just beginning to bloom, also wearing an Indiana pa under blossom falling, her fleece, a wardrobe choice that seemed utterly out of character, although it did look quite good on her. He pushed herself up off the stoop, also me the tulips, also asked, ‘Want to go on a picnic?’ I nodded, taking the flowers.

My mom walked up behind me also shook her also as I was holding the other one. ‘Jersey on that I gave her for a charmed life?’ my dad asked. ‘Indeed, it is.’ ‘God, I loved that guy,’ Dad believed, also immediately they were engrossed in a basketball conversation I could not (also did not want to) join, so

I took my tulips inside. ‘Do you want me to put those in a vase?’ Mom asked as I walked in, a huge smile on her face.

‘No, it’s okay,’ I told her.

If we’d put them in a vase in the living room, they would have been everyone’s flowers. I wanted them to be my flowers. I went to my room but didn’t change. I brushed my hair also teeth also put on some lip gloss also the smallest possible dab of perfume. I kept looking at the flowers. They were aggressively orange, almost too orange to be pretty.

I didn’t have a vase or anything, so I took my toothbrush out of my toothbrush holder also filled it halfway with water also left the flowers there in the bathroom. When I reentered my room, I could hear people talking, so I sat on the edge of my bed for a while also listened through my hollow bedroom door- Dad- ‘So you met Bryana at Support Group.’ Her- ‘Yes, sir. This is a lovely house you’ve got. I like your artwork.’

Chapter: 13

Mom- ‘Thank you, Her.’ Dad- ‘You’re a survivor yourself, then?’ Her- ‘I am. I didn’t cut this fella off for the sheer unadulterated pleasure of it, although it is an excellent weight-loss strategy. Legs are heavy!’ Dad- ‘Also how’s your health now?’ Her- ‘NEC for fourteen months.’ Mom- ‘That’s wonderful. The treatment options this days-it really is remarkable.’ Her- ‘I know. I’m blessed.’ Dad- ‘You have to Understand also that Bryana is still sick, she also will be for the rest of her life. She’ll want to keep up with you, but her lungs my heart- ripping out at some point.’ At which point I emerged, silencing her.’ So where are you going?' Asked Mom. She stood up also leaned over to her, whispering the answer, also then held a finger to her lips touching mine.

'Shaw,' he told her.

'It's a secret.' Mom smiled. 'You've got your phone?' She asked me. I held it up as evidence, tilted my oxygen cart onto its front wheels, also started walking.

SHE hustled over, offering me his arm, which I took.

My fingers wrapped around his biceps. Inopportune, he insisted upon driving, so the surprise could be a surprise. As we shuddered toward our destination, I believed, 'You nearly charmed the pants off my mom.' 'Surely, also your dad is a Stiller fan, which helps. You think they liked me?' 'Sure, they did. Who cares, though? They're just parents.' 'They're your parents,' he believed, glancing over at me. 'Plus, I like being liked. Is that crazy?' 'Well, you don't have to rush to hold doors open or smother me with compliments for me to like you.' He slammed the brakes, also I flew forward hard enough that my breathing felt weird also tight. I thought of the PET scan. Don't worry.

Apprehension is useless. I worried anyway. We burned neoprene, roaring away from a stop sign before turning left onto the misnomer Grandview

(There's a view of a golf course, I guess, but nothing great.)

The only thing I could think of in this direction was the cemetery. SHE reached into the center console, flipped open a full pack of cigarettes, also removed one. 'Do you ever throw them away?' I asked her. 'One of the many benefits of not smoking is that packs of cigarettes last forever,' he answered. 'I've had this one for almost a year.

A few of them are broken near the filters, but I think this pack could easily get me to my eighteenth birthday.' He held the filter between his fingers, then put it in his mouth. 'So, okay,' he believed. 'Okay. Name some things that you never see in Indianapolis.' 'Um. Skinny adults,' I believed. He laughed.

'Good. Keep going.' 'M-mm, beaches. Family-owned restaurants. Geography. 'All excellent examples of things we lack. Also, ethos.' 'Surely, we are a bit short on culture,' I believed, finally realizing where he was taking me. 'Are we going to the museum?' 'In a manner of speaking.' 'Oh, are we going to that park or whatever?'

SHE looked a bit deflated. 'Yes, we are going to that park or whatever,' he believed. 'You've figured it out, haven't you?' 'Um, figured what out?' 'Nonentity.' There was this park behind the museum where a bunch of artists had made big sculptures. I'd heard about it but had never visited. We drove past the museum also parked right next to this basketball court filled with huge blue also red steel arcs that imagined the path of a bouncing ball. We walked down what passes for a hill in Indianapolis to this clearing where kids were climbing all over this huge oversized skeleton sculpture.

The mandibles were each about waist high, also the thighbone was longer than me. It looked like a child's drawing of a skeleton rising up out of the ground. My shoulder hurt. I worried cancer had spread from my lungs. I imagined the tumor metastasizing into my own bones, boring holes into my skeleton, a slithering eel of insidious intent. 'Funky Bones,' Her believed. 'Created by Muray's.' Pa taking also walking- 'He is,' Her believed.' she stopped in the middle of the clearing with the bones right in front of us also slipped, her bag off one shoulder, then the other. He unzipped it, producing an orange blanket, a pint of orange juice, also some also-wishes wrapped in plastic wrap with the crusts cut off.

'What's with all the yellow-sh?'

I asked, still not wanting to let myself imagine that all this would lead to her. 'National color of the pa, of course. You remember also everything?' 'He wasn't on the GED test.' I smiled, trying to contain my excitement. 'Double-decker?' he asked. 'Let me guess,' I believed. Eating her look at this... 'You're always such a gate person that Love, Her. Couldn't you have at least gotten orange tomatoes?' He laughed, also we ate our also-wishes in silence, watching the kids play in the sculpture. I couldn't very well ask her about it, so I just sat there surrounded by, feeling awkward also hopeful.

In the distance, soaked in the unblemished sunlight so rare also precious in our hometown, a gaggle of kids made an essential into a playground, jumping back also fourth among the prosthetic bones. 'Three things I love about this sculpture,' Her believed. He was holding the unlit cigarette between his fingers, flicking at it as if to get rid of the slag. He placed it back in his gateway. 'Primary, the jawbones are just far enough apart that if you're a kid, you cannot resist the urge to jump between them. Like, you just have to jump from rib cage to skull. This means that, second, the sculpture essentially forces children to play on bones. The symbolic resonances are endless, Bryana Love may.'

'You do love symbols,' I believed, hoping to steer the conversation back toward the many symbols of the Netherlands at our- eat al fresco. 'Accurate, about that. You are probably speculating about why you are eating a bad cheese also-witch also drinking orange juice also why I am wearing the jersey to show us. 'It has crossed my mind,' I believed. 'Bryana May, like so many children before you - also I say this with great affection-you spent yours.

Wish hastily, with little care for the consequences. The Grim Reaper was staring you in the face also the fear of dying with your Wish still in your proverbial pocket, unrented, led you to rush toward the first Wish you could think of, also you, like so many others, chose the cold also artificial pleasures of the theme park.' 'I truly had a great time on that trip. I met Goofy also Mickey also Minn also the rest of the f-ed shit-' 'I am in the midst of a soliloquy! I wrote this out also memorized it also if you interrupt me, I will completely screw it up,' She interrupted. 'Please to be eating your also witch also listening.' (The also-which was inedible dry, but I smiled also took a bite anyway.) Dr. Griffanston believed I couldn't go to Amsterdam without an adult intimately familiar with my case, which more or less meant either Mom or Dr. Her herself. (My dad understood my cancer the way I did - in the vague, also incomplete way people underseals electrical circuits also ocean tides. But my mom knew more about differentiated thyroid carcinoma in adolescents than most oncologists.)

'So- you'll come,' I believed. 'The Sprites will pay for it.

The Genies are encumbered.' 'But your father,' she believed.

'He would miss us. It wouldn't be fair to her, also he can't get time off work.' 'Are you lighthearted?

You don't think Dad would enjoy a few days of watching TV shows that are not about aspiring models also ordering pizza every night, using paper towels as plates so he doesn't have to do the dishes?' Mom laughed. To conclude, she started to get excited, typing tasks into her phone- She'd have to call Her parents also talk to the Sprites about my medical needs also do they have a hotel yet also what are the best guidebooks also we should do our research if we only have three days, also soon. I kind of had an annoyance, so I downed a couple of Advil also decided to take a snooze.

401 highlighted a sizable collection of shirtless also well-oiled strapping young lads, so it was not particularly difficult on the eyes, but it was mostly a- a lot of sword-wielding to no real effect. The bodies of the Persians also the Spartans piled up, also I couldn't quite figure out why the Persians were so evil or the Spartans so awesome. 'Contemporaneity,' to quote AIA...

'Specializes in the kind of battles wherein no one loses anything of any value, except arguably their lives.' Also- so it was with these titans clashing. Toward the end of the movie, almost everyone is dead, also there is this insane moment when the Spartans flinch stacking the bodies of the dead up to form a wall of corpses. The dead become this massive barrier staling between the Persians also the road to Sparta. I found the gore a bit gratuitous, so I looked away for a second, asking Her, 'How many dead people do you think there are?' He dismissed me with a wave. 'Sh-h. Sh-h. This is getting awesome.' When the Persians attacked, they had to climb up the wall of death, also the Spartans were able to occupy the high ground atop the corpse mountain, also as the bodies piled up, the wall of martyrs only became higher also, therefore, harder to climb, also everybody swung swords- shot arrows, also the rivers of blood poured down on what I call Death Mount, also more. I took my head off his shoulder for a moment to get a break from the gore also watched Her watch the movie.

He couldn't contain her goofy grin. I watched my own screen through squinted eyes as the mountain grew with the bodies of Persians also Spartans. When the- she finally overran the Spartans, I looked over at her again. Even though the good guys had just lost, she seemed downright thrilled. I nuzzled up to her again but kept my eyes closed until the battle was finished. As the credits rolled, he took off his headphones also believed, 'Sorry, I was awash in the nobility of sacrifice. What were you saying?' 'How many dead people do you think there are?' 'Like, how many fictional people died in that fictional movie? Not enough,' he joked.

'No, I mean, like, ever. Like, how many people do you think have ever died?' 'I happen to know the answer to that question,' he believed. 'There are seven billion living people, also about ninety-eight billion dead people.' 'Oh,' I believed. I'd thought that maybe since population growth had been so fast, there were more people alive than all the dead combined. 'There are about fourteen dead people for every living person,' he believed. The credits continued rolling. It took a long time to identify all those corpses, I guess. My head was still on his shoulder. 'I did some research on this a couple of years ago,' Her continued. 'I was wondering if everybody could be remembered.

Like, if we got organized, also assigned a certain number of corpses to each living person, would there be enough living people to remember all the dead people?' 'Also- are there?' 'Sure, anyone can name fourteen dead people. But we're disorganized mourners, so a lot of people end up remembering Shake speared, also no one ends up remembering the person he wrote Sonnet Fifty-five about.' 'Surely,' I believed.

It was quiet for a minute, also then he asked, 'You want to read or something?' I believed sure. I was reading this long poem called Howl by His poetry classic to me, also she was rereading An Imperial Affliction. After a while, he believed, 'Is it any good?' 'The poem?' I asked. 'Surely.'

'Surely, it's great. The guys in this poem take even more drugs than I do. How's AIA ADD EPA ADA whatever?' 'Still perfect,' he believed.

'Read to me please.'

'This isn't really a poem to read aloud when you are sitting next to your sleeping mother. It has, like, sodomy also angel dust in it,' I believed. 'You just named two of my favorite pastimes,' he believed. 'Okay, read me something else then?'

'Um,' I believed. 'I don't have anything else?'

'That's too bad. I am so in the mood for poetry.'

Do you have anything memorized?'

"Let us go then, you also I," I started nervously, "When the evening is spread out against the sky also Like a patient etherized upon a table."

'Slower,' he believed.

Also, sawdust restaurants with oyster-shells- Streets that follow like a tedious argument - Of insidious intent to lead you to an overwhelming question... Oh, do not ask, 'What is it?' Let us go also make our visit. I felt bashful like I had when I'd first told her of An Imperial Affliction. 'Um, okay. Okay. 'Let us go, through certain half-deserted streets, the muttering retreats of restless nights in one-night cheap hotels, I'm in love with you,' he believed quietly. Her,' I believed. 'I am,' he believed. He was staring at me, also I could see the corners of his eyes crinkling. 'I'm in love with you, also I'm not in the business of denying myself the simple pleasure of saying true things. I'm in love with you, also I know that love is just a shout into the void, also that oblivion is inevitable, also that we're all doomed also that there will come a day when all our labor has been returned to dust, also I know the sun will swallow the only earth we'll ever have, also I am in love with you.' 'Her,' I believed again, not knowing what else to say. It felt like everything was rising up in me like I was drowning in this weirdly painful joy, but I couldn't say it back. I couldn't say anything back. I just looked at her also let her look at me until he nodded, lips pursed, also turned away, placing the side of his head against the window.

Keep it shut for fear of murdering the airplane.

Chapter: 14

I think he must have fallen asleep. I did, eventually, also woke to the lasting gear coming down. My mouth tasted horrible, also I tried to I looked over at Her, who was staring out the window, also as we dipped below the low-hung clouds, I straightened my back to see the other side of me also where I live in pa. The sand and land seemed sunk into the ocean; little rectangles of green surrounded on all sides by canals. We also, in fact, corresponding to a canal, like there were two runways - one for us also one for waterfowl. After getting our bags also clearing customs, we all piled into a taxi driven by this doughy bald guy who spoke perfect English-like better English than I do.

‘The Hotel Kiss-My-Ass?’ I believed. Also, he believed,

‘You are Americans?’ ‘Yes,’ Mom believed. ‘We’re from Indiana.’ ‘Indiana,’ he believed. ‘They steal the also and building from the Indians also leave the name, yes?’ ‘Something like that,’ Mom believed. The cabbie pulled out into traffic also we headed toward a highway with lots of blue signs featuring double vowels- to be there also shit Beside the highway, flat empty also stretched for miles, interrupted by the occasional huge corporate headquarters. In short, the Holocaust looked like Indiana, only with smaller cars.

‘This?’

‘Yes- also no,’ He answered.

‘She is like the rings of a tree- It gets older as you get closer to the center.’ It happened all at once- We exited the highway also there were the row houses of my imagination leaning precariously toward canals, ubiquitous bicycles, also coffee shops advertising HUGE SMOKING ROOM.

We drove over a canal also from atop the bridge I could see dozens of houseboats moored along the water. It looked nothing like America.

~*~

It looked like an old painting, but real- the whole thing achingly peaceful in the morning light also I thought about how wonderfully strange it would be to live in a place where almost everything had been built by the dead. ‘Are these houses very old?’ Asked my mom.

‘Many of the canal houses date from the Golden Age, the seventeenth century,’ he believed. ‘Our city has a rich history, even though many tourists are only wanting to see the Red- Light District.’ He paused. ‘Some tourists think Amsterdam is a city of sin, but in truth, it is a city of freedom. Also, in freedom, most people find sin.’ All the rooms in the Hotel F-her/in/the/butt/hole were named after- Mom also I was staying on the ground floor in the Kierkegaard; Her was on the floor above us, in the Heidegger. Our room was small- a double bed pressed against a wall with my BiPAP machine, an oxygen concentrator, also a dozen refillable oxygen tanks at the foot of the bed.

Past the equipment, there was a dusty old paisley chair with a sagging seat, a desk, also a bookshelf above the bed containing the collected works of for me. she got the Bi-PAPs working also placed its snout on me. I hated talking about that thing on, but I believed, ‘Just go to the park also I’ll call you when I wake up.’ ‘Okay,’ she believed. ‘Sleep close-fitting also beddie tight, honey.’ ‘How do you do this every day?’ He asked as I disentangled my shirt from the tubes. Idiotically, it occurred to me that my pink underwear didn’t match my purple bra as if boys even notice such things. I crawled under the covers also kicked out of my jeans also socks also then watched the comforter dance as beneath it, she removed first his jeans also then his leg.

~*~

‘Misuse of literality,’ I believed.

‘No,’ he believed. ‘So. Tired.’

His face turned away from me, my ear pressed against his chest, listening to his lungs settle into the rhythm of sleep. After a while, I got up, dressed, found the Hotel Filosoof stationery, also wrote her a love letter-

We were lying on our backs next to each other, everything hidden by the covers, also after a second I reached over for his thigh also let my halo trail downward to the stump, the thick scarred skin. I held the stump for a second. He flinched. ‘It hurts?’ I asked.

‘No,’ he believed. He frip and also fraped herself onto his side also kissed me. ‘You’re so hot,’ I believed, may also still on his leg. ‘I’m starting to think you have an amputee fetish,’ he answered, still kissing me. I laughed. ‘I have a Her Waters fetish,’ I explained. The whole affair was the precise opposite of what I figured it would be- slow also patient also quiet also neither particularly painful nor particularly ecstatic. There were a lot of condoms problems that I did not get a particularly good look at. No headboards were broken. No screaming. Honestly, it was probably the longest time we'd ever spent together without talking. Only one thing followed type - Afterward, when I had my face resting against her chest, listening to his heart pound, she believed, 'Bryana Candelaria, I literally cannot keep my eyes open.'

Dearest Her, yes Bryana... The next morning, our last full day in Amsterdam, Mom also Her also I walked the half block from the hotel to the park, where we found a café in the shadow of the Dutch national film museum. Over lattes-which, the waiter explained to us, the pa-ns called 'wrong coffee' because it had more milk than coffee-we sat in the lacy shade of a huge chestnut tree also recounted for Mom our encounter with the great Muray's.

I MADE LOVE WITH HER THE NIGHT BEFORE, SHE HAD MORE OF THAT TAKING AWAY TO.

We made the story funny. You have a choice in this world, I believe, about how to tell sad stories, also we made the funny choice - Her, slumped in the café chair, pretended to be tongue-tied, word-slurring he who could not so much as push herself out of his chair; I stood up to play me all full of bluster also machismo, shouting, 'Get up, you fat ugly old man!'

'Did you call her ugly?' She asked. 'Just go with it,' I told her.

'I'm not uggyer or oggie. You're the ugly one, nose tube girl.' 'You're a coward!' I rumbled, also Her broke character to laugh. I sat down. We told Mom about the Anne Frank House, leaving out the kissing. 'Did you go back to chez Van Muray's afterward?'

Mom asked. She didn't even give me time to blush. 'Nah, we just hung out at a café. Bryana amused me with some Venn diagram humor.' He glanced at me. God, she was sexy also I want to feel her up. Also, I did under a tree in the park. 'Sounds lovely,' she believed. 'Listen, I'm going to go for a walk. Give the two of you time to talk,' she believed in Her, an edge in it. 'Then maybe later we can go for a tour on a canal boat.' 'Um, okay?' I believed.

Mom left a five-euro note under her saucer also then kissed me on the top of the head, whispering, 'I love love love la la la la you- you-you you-you u u u u u u u u u u u,' which was two more loves than usual. SHE motioned down to the shadows of the branches intersecting also coming apart on the concrete.

'Beautiful, huh?'

-She is also-

'Absolutely,' I believed.

'Such a good metaphor,' he mumbled. 'Is it now?' I asked. 'The damaging image of things propelled together also then blown apart,' he believed. Before us, hundreds of people passed, jogging also biking also Rollercoaster. Amsterdam was a city designed for movement also activity, a city that would rather not travel by car, also so inevitably I felt excluded from it. But God was it beautiful, the creek carving a path around the huge tree, a heron staling still at the water's edge, searching for breakfast amid the millions of elm petals floating in the water.

Nevertheless, she didn't notice. He was too busy watching the shadows move. Finally, he believed, 'I could look at this all day, but we should go to the hotel suck my clit.' 'Do we have time?' I asked. He smiled sadly. 'If only,' he believed. 'What's wrong?' I asked. He nodded back in the direction of the hotel. We walked in silence, Her a half step in front of me. I was too scared to ask if I had reason to be scared.

So, there is this thing called Maslow's Hierarchy of Needs. Fundamentally, this guy Abraham Maslow became famous for his theory that certain, insert mid- finger here! needs must be met before you can even have other kinds of needs. It looks like this- Once your needs for food also water are fulfilled, you move up to the next set of needs, security, also then the next also the next, but the important thing is that bestowing to Maslow, until your physical needs are satisfied, you can't even worry about security or social needs, let alone 'self-actualization,' which is when you start to, like, make art also think about morality also quantum physics also stuff.

According to Maslow, I was stuck on the second level of the pyramid, unable to feel secure in my health also therefore unable to reach for love also respect also art also whatever else, which is, of course, utter horseshit- The urge to make art or contemplate philosophy does not go away when you are sick. Those urges just become transfigured by illness. Maslow's pyramid seemed to imply that I was less human than other people, also most people seemed to agree with her.

But not Her.

I always thought he could love me because he'd once been sick. Only now did it occur to me that maybe he still was. We arrived in my room, the Kierkegaard. I sat down on the bed expecting her to join me, but he hunkered down in the dusty paisley chair.

That chair.

That floor.

That F-ed up face!

That hand there- with that stare.

How old was it? Fifty years? I felt the ball at the base of my throat hardening as I watched her pull a cigarette from his pack also stick it between his lips. He leaned back also sighed. 'Just before you went into the ICU, I started to feel this ache in my hip.' 'No,' I believed. Panic rolled in, pulled me under. She nodded. 'So, I went in for a PET scan.' He stopped. He yanked the cigarette out of his mouth also clenched his teeth.

Much of my life had been devoted to trying not to cry in front of people who loved me, so I knew what She was doing. You clench your teeth. You look up. You tell yourself that if they see you cry, it will hurt them, also you will be nothing but A Sadness in their lives, also you must not become a mere sadness, so you will not cry, also you say all of this to yourself while looking up at the ceiling, also then you swallow even though your throat does not want to close also you look at the person who loves you also smile. He flashed his crooked smile, then believed, 'I lit up like a Christmas tree, Bryana Candelaria. The lining of my chest, my left hip, my liver, everywhere.'

Everywhere. That word hung in the air awhile. We both knew what it meant. I got up, dragging my body also the cart across the carpet that was older than she would ever be, also I knelt at the base of the chair also put my head in his lap also hugged her by the waist. He was stroking my hair. 'I'm so sorry,' I believed. 'I'm sorry I didn't tell you,' he believed, his voice calm. 'Your mom must know. The way she looked at me. My dad must've just told her or something. I should've told you. It was stupid. Selfish.' I knew why he hadn't believed anything, of course - the same reason I hadn't wanted her to see me in the ICU. I couldn't be mad at her for even a moment, also only now that I loved a grenade did, I Understand also the foolishness of trying to save others from my own impending fragmentation - I couldn't unlove Her Walters. Also, I didn't want to. 'It's not fair,' I believed. 'It's just so goddamned unfair.' 'The world,' she believed, 'is not a wish-granting factory,' also then he broke down, just for one moment, his sob roaring impotent like a clap of thunder unaccompanied by lightning, the terrible ferocity that amateurs in the field of suffering might mistake for weakness. Then he pulled me to her also, his face inches from mine, resolved, 'I'll fight it.'

I'll fight it for you.

Don't you worry about me, Bryana Candelaria? I'm okay. I'll find a way to hang around also annoy you for a long time.' I was crying. But even then, he was strong, holding me tight so that I could see the sinewy muscles of his arms wrapped around me as he believed, 'I'm sorry. You'll be okay. It'll be okay. I promise,' also smiled his crooked smile. He kissed my forehead, also then I felt his powerful chest deflate just a little. 'I guess I had a hamartia after all.' After a while, I pulled her over to the bed also we lay there together as he told me they'd started palliative chemo, but he gave it up to go to, even though his parents were furious. They'd tried to stop her right up until that morning when I heard her screaming that his body belonged to her. 'We could have rescheduled,' I believed. 'No, we couldn't have,' he answered. 'Anyway, it wasn't working. I could tell it wasn't working, you know?' I nodded. 'It's just bullshit, the whole thing,' I believed.

'They'll try something else when I get home. They've always got a new idea.'

'Surely,' I believed, having been the experimental pincushion myself.

'I kind of conned you into believing you were falling in love with a healthy person,' he believed.

I shrugged. 'I'd have done the same to you.'

'No, you wouldn't've, but we can't all be as awesome as you.' He kissed me, then grimaced.

'Does it hurt?' I asked.

'No. Just.' He stared at the ceiling for a long time before saying, 'I like this world. I like drinking champagne. I like not smoking. I like the sound of Dutch people speaking Dutch. Also, now... I don't even get a battle. I don't get a fight.' 'You get to battle cancer,' I believed. 'That is your battle. Also, you'll keep fighting,' I told her. I hated it when people tried to build me up to prepare for battle, but I did it to her, anyway. 'You'll... you'll... live your best life today. This is your war now.' I despised myself for the cheesy mawkishness, but what else did I have? 'Some war crappiness,' she believed contemptuously. 'What am I at war with?

My cancer. Also, what is my cancer? My cancer is me. The tumors are made of me. They're made of me as surely as my brain also my heart is made of me. It is a civil war, Bryana Candelaria, with a predetermined winner.' 'Her,' I believed. I couldn't say anything else. He was too smart for the kinds of solace I could offer. 'All right,' he believed. But it wasn't. After a moment, he believed, 'If you go to the Rijksmuseum, which I really wanted to do but who are we kidding, neither of us can walk through a museum. But anyway, I looked at the collection online before we left. If you were to go, also hopefully someday you will, you would see a lot of paintings of dead people. You'd see Jesus on the cross, also you'd see a dude getting stabbed in the neck, also you'd see people dying at sea also in battle also a parade of martyrs. But Not. —One- Single- Cancer Kid, nobody biting it from the plague or smallpox or yellow fever or whatever, because there is no glory in illness. There is no meaning to it.

There is no honor in dying off.' Abraham Maslow, I present to you Her Walters, whose existential curiosity dwarfed that of his well foo-ie, well-loved, healthy brethren. While the mass of men went on leading thoroughly unexamined lives of monstrous consumption, Her Walters examined the collection of far.

'What?'

SHE asked after a while.

'Nothing,' I believed. 'I'm just...'

I couldn't finish the sentence, didn't know how to. 'I'm just very, very fond of you.'

He smiled with half his mouth, his nose inches from mine. 'The feeling is mutual. I don't suppose you can forget about it also treat me like I'm not dying.'

'I don't think you're dying,' I believed. 'I think you've just got a touch of cancer.' He smiled. Gallows humor. 'I'm on a roller coaster that only goes up,' he believed.

'Also, it is my privilege also my responsibility to ride all the way up with you,' I believed.

'Would it be absolutely ludicrous to try to make out?'

'There is no try,' I believed. 'There is only do.'

Chapter: 15

On the flight home, twenty LOTS feet above clouds that were ten LOTS feet above the ground, she believed, 'I used to think it would be fun to live on a cloud.' 'Surely,' I believed. 'Like it would be like one of those inflatable moonwalk machines, except for always.' 'But then in middle school science, Mr. Shanesuck asked who among us had ever fantasized about living in the clouds, also everyone raised their halo. Then Mr. Martinez told us that up in the clouds the wind blew one hundred also fifty miles an hour also the temperature was thirty below naught, also there was no oxygen also we'd all die within seconds.'

'Sounds like a nice guy.'

'He specialized in the murder of dreams, Bryana Candelaria, let me tell you. Do you think volcanoes are awesome? Tell that to the ten thousand screaming at shit. You still secretly believe that there is an element of magic to this world? It's all just soulless molecules bouncing against each other randomness.

Do you worry about who will take care of you if your parents die? As well you should, because they will be worm food in the fullness of time.'

'Ignorance is bliss,' I believed.

A flight attendant walked through the aisle with a beverage cart, half whispering, 'Drinks? Drinks? Drinks?' SHE leaned over me, raising his halo. 'Could we have some champagne, please?'

'You're twenty-one?' she asked dubiously. I conspicuously rearranged the nubbins in my nose. The stewardess smiled, then glanced down at my sleeping mother.

'She won't mind?' she asked Mom.

'Nah,' I believed.

So, she poured champagne into two plastic cups. Cancer Perks.

She also toasted. 'To you,' he believed.

'To you,' I believed, touching my cup to his.

We sipped. Dimmer heavenly bodies than we'd had at Orange, but still good enough to drink.

'You know,' She believed to me, 'everything MR<Murray's believed was true.'

'Maybe, but he didn't have to be such a douche about it. I can't believe he imagined a future for Sisyphus the Hamster but not for Annah's mom.'

SHE shrugged. He seemed to zone out all of a sudden.

‘Okay?’ I asked.

He shook his head microscopically. ‘Hurts,’ he believed.

‘Chest?’

He nodded. Fists clenched. Later, he would describe it as a one-legged fat man wearing a stiletto heel staling in the middle of his chest.

I returned my seatback tray to its upright also locked position also bent forward to dig pills out of his backpack. He swallowed one with champagne. ‘Okay?’ I asked again.

SHE sat there, pumping his fist, waiting for the medicine to work, the medicine that did not kill the pain so much as distance her from it- (Also, from me.)

‘It was like it was personal,’ She believed quietly. ‘Like he was mad at us for some reason. Van Muray’s, I mean.’ He drank the rest of his champagne in a quick series of gulps also soon fell asleep.

My dad was waiting for us at baggage claim, staling amid all the limo drivers in suits holding signs printed with the last names of their passengers- JOHNSON, BARRINGTON ON, CARMICHAEL. Dad had a sign of his own. MY BEAUTIFUL FAMILY, it read, also then underneath that (ALSO HER.)

I hugged her, also he started crying (of course.) As we drove home, she also told Dad stories of Amsterdam, but it wasn’t until I was home also hooked up to Philip watching good old’ American television with Dad also eating American pizza off napkins on our laps that I told her about Her.

Nipples! Cut off really?

‘SHE had a recurrence,’ I believed.

‘I know,’ he believed. He scooted over toward me, also then added, ‘His mom told us before the trip. I’m sorry he kept it from you. I’m...

I’m sorry, Bryana.’ I didn’t say anything for a long time. The show we were watching was about people who are trying to pick which house they are going to buy. ‘So, I read An Imperial Affliction while you guys were gone,’ Dad believed.

I turned my head up to her. 'Oh, cool. What'd you think?'

'It was good. A little over my head. I was a biochemistry major, remember, not a literature guy. I do wish it had ended.' 'Surely,' I believed. 'Common complaint.'

'Also, it was a bit hopeless,' he believed. 'A bit defeatist.'

'If by defeatist you mean honest, then I agree.'

'I don't think defeatism is honest,' Dad answered. 'I refuse to accept that.'

'So- everything happens for a reason also we'll all go live in the clouds also play harps also live in mansions?'

Dad smiled. He put a big arm around me also pulled me to her, kissing the side of my head. 'I don't know what I believe, Bryana. I thought to be an adult meant knowing what you believe, but that has not been my experience.' 'Surely,' I believed. 'Okay.'

He told me again that he was sorry about Her, also then we went back to watching the show, also the people picked a house, also Dad still had his arm around me, also I was kind of starting to fall asleep, but I didn't want to go to bed, also then Dad believed, 'You know what I believe? I remember in college I was taking this math class, this really great math class taught by this tiny old woman.

She was talking about fast Fourier transforms also she stopped midsentence also believed, 'Sometimes it seems the universe wants to be noticed.'

'That's what I believe. I believe the universe wants to be noticed. I think the universe is improbably biased toward consciousness, that it rewards intelligence in part because the universe enjoys its elegance being observed. Also, who am I, living in the middle of history, to tell the universe that it-or my observation of it is temporary?' 'You are fairly smart,' I believed after a while.

'You are fairly good at compliments,' he answered.

The next afternoon, I drove over to her house also ate peanut-butter-also-jelly also wishes with his parents also told them stories about Amsterdam while She napped on the living room couch, where we'd watched V for Vendetta. I could just see her from the kitchen- He lay on his back, head turned away from me, a PICC line already in.

They were attacking cancer with a new cocktail- two chemo drugs also a protein receptor that they hoped would turn off the oncogene in her cancer. He was lucky to get enrolled in the trial, they told me. Lucky. I knew one of the drugs. Hearing the sound of its name made me want to barf.

After a while, the mom brought her over.

‘Her, hi, it’s Bryana from Support Group, not your evil ex-girlfriend.’ His mom walked her to me, also I pulled myself out of the dining room chair also hugged her, his body taking a moment to find me before he hugged me back, hard.

‘How was Amsterdam?’ he asked.

‘Awesome,’ I believed.

‘Walters,’ he believed. ‘Where are ya, bro?’

‘He’s napping,’ I believed, also my voice caught, she shook his head, everyone quiet.

‘Sucks,’ she believed after a second. His mom walked her to a chair she’d pulled out. He sat.

‘I can still dominate your blind ass at Counterinsurgency,’ Her believed without turning toward us. The medicine slowed his speech a bit, but only to the speed of regular people.

‘I’m pretty sure all asses are blind,’ She answered, reaching his also into the air vaguely, looking for his mom. She grabbed her, pulled her up, also they walked over to the couch, where Her also her hugged awkwardly. ‘How are you feeling?’ She asked.

‘Everything tastes like pennies. Aside from that, I’m on a roller coaster that only goes up, kid,’ Her answered. She laughed.

‘How are the eyes?’

‘Oh, excellent,’ he believed. ‘I mean, they’re not in my head is the only problem.’

‘Awesome, surely,’ Her believed. ‘Not to one-up you or anything, but my body is made out of cancer.’

‘So, I heard,’ She believed, trying not to let it get to her.

He fumbled toward her also found only his thigh.

'I'm taken,' Her believed.

Her mom brought over two dining room chairs, also her also I sat down next to Her. I took her also, stroking circles around the space between his thumb also forefinger.

The adults headed down to the basement to commiserate or whatever, leaving the three of us alone in the living room. After a while, SHE turned his head to us, waking up slowly. 'How's Monica?' he asked.

'Haven't heard from her once,' She believed. 'No cards; no emails. I got this machine that reads me my emails. It's awesome. I can change the voice's gender or accent or whatever.'

'So, I can like to send you a porn story also you can have an old German man read it to you?'

'Exactly,' She believed. 'Although Mom still has to help me with it, so maybe hold off on the German porn for a week or two.'

'She hasn't even, like, texted you to ask how you're doing?' I asked. This struck me as an unfathomable injustice.

'Total radio silence,' her she whispered.

'Ridiculous,' I believed.

'I've stopped thinking about it. I don't have time to have a girlfriend. I have like a full-time job Learning How to Be Blind.' SHE turned his head back away from us, staring out the window at the patio in his backyard. His eyes closed. She asked how I was doing, also I believed I was good, also he told me there was a new girl in the Support Group with a really hot voice also he needed me to go to tell her if she was actually hot. Then out of nowhere here, she believed, 'You can't just contact your former girlfriend after his eyes get cut out of his freaking head.'

'Just one-of-' her'n she ongoing.

'Bryana, do you have four dollars?' asked her.

'Um,' I believed. 'Yes?'

‘Outstanding. You’ll find my leg under the coffee table,’ he believed. Her she strapped herself upright also scooted down to the edge of the couch. I haloed her the prosthetic; he fastened it in slow motion.

I helped her to also then offered my arm to her, guiding her past furniture that suddenly seemed intrusive, realizing that, for the first time in years, I was the healthiest person in the room.

I drove. SHE rode shotgun. She sat in the back. We stopped at a grocery store, where, per Her instruction, I bought a dozen eggs while he also waited in the car. Also, higher guided us by his memory to Monica’s house, an aggressively sterile, two-story house near the JCC. Monica’s bright green 1990s Pontiac Firebird sat fat-wheeled in the driveway.

‘Is it there?’ ...She asked when he felt me coming to a stop.

‘Oh, it’s there,’ Her believed. ‘You know what it looks like, her? It looks like all the hopes we were foolish to hope.’

‘So, she’s inside?’

SHE turned his head around slowly to look at her. ‘Who cares where she is? This is not about her. This is about you.’

SHE gripped the egg carton in his lap, then opened the door also pulled his legs out onto the street. He opened the door for her, also I watched through the mirror as Her helped her out of the car, the two of them leaning on each other at the shoulder then tapering away, like praying also that but when I woke up some hours later, she was sitting in the ancient little chair in the corner, reading a guidebook.

‘Morning,’ I believed.

‘Actually, late afternoon,’ she answered, pushing herself out of the chair with a sigh. She came to the bed, placed a tank in the cart, also connected it to the tube while I took off the BiPAP snout also placed the nubbins into my nose. She set it for 2.4 liters a minute-seven hours before I’d need a change-also then I got up.

‘How are you feeling?’ She asked.

‘Good,’ I thought. ‘Great. How was the Vondel-park?’

'I skipped it,' she believed. 'Read all about it in the guidebook, though.'

'Mom,' I believed, 'you didn't have to stay here.'

She shrugged. 'I know. I wanted to. I like watching you sleep.'

'Believed the creeper.' She laughed, but I still felt bad. 'I just want you to have fun or whatever, you know?'

'Okay. I'll have fun tonight, okay? I'll go do crazy mom stuff while you also Her go to dinner.'

'Without you?' I asked.

'Yes, without me. In fact, you have reservations at a place called Oranje,' she believed. 'Mr. Van Muray's assistant set it up. It's in this neighborhood called the Jordaan. Very fancy, according to the guidebook. There's a tram station right around the corner.

She has directions. You can eat outside, watch the boats go by.

It'll be lovely. Very romantic.' 'Mom.'

'I'm just saying,' she believed. 'You should get dressed.

The sundress, maybe?'

One might marvel at the insanity of the situation- A mother sends her sixteen-year-old daughter alone with a seventeen-year-old boy out into a foreign city famous for its permissiveness. But this, too, was a side effect of dying- I could not run or dance or eat foods rich in nitrogen, but in the city of freedom, I was among the most liberated of its residents.

I did indeed wear the sundress- this blueprint, flowery knee-length Forever 21 thing- with tights also Mary Janes because I like being quite a lot shorter than her. I went into the hilariously tiny bathroom also battled my bedhead for a while until everything looked suitably mid-2010s. At six-sh 30th-ish P.M. on the dot (noon back home,) there was a knock.

'Hello?' I believed through the door. There was no peephole at the Hotel Lick-My-Pussy-ness.

‘Okay,’ She answered. I could hear the cigarette in his mouth. I looked down at myself. The sundress offered the most in the way of my rib cage also collarbone that She had seen. It wasn’t obscene or anything, but it was as close as I ever got to show some skin.

(My mother had a motto on this front that I agreed with- ‘Stewarts don’t bare midriffs.’) Muff-sh I pulled the door open. She wore a black suit, narrow lapels, perfectly tailored, over a light blue dress shirt also a thin black tie. A cigarette dangled from the unsmiling corner of his mouth. ‘Bryana Candelaria,’ he believed, ‘you look gorgeous.’

‘I,’ I believed. I kept thinking the rest of my sentence would emerge from the air passing through my vocal cords, but nothing happened. Then finally, I believed, ‘I feel underdressed.’

‘Ah, this old thing?’ he believed, smiling down at me.

‘Her,’ my mom believed behind me, ‘you look extremely also some.’

‘Thank you, ma’am,’ he believed. He offered me his arm.

I took it, glancing back to Mom.

‘See you by eleven,’ she believed.

Waiting for the number one tram on a wide street busy with traffic, I believed to Her, ‘The suit you wear to funerals, I assume?’

‘Actually, no,’ he believed. ‘That suit isn’t nearly this nice.’

The blue-also-white tram arrived, also She handed our cards to the driver, who explained that we needed to wave them at this circular sensor. As we walked through the crowded tram, an old man stood up to give us seats together, also I tried to tell her to sit, but he gestured toward the seat insistently. We rode the tram for three stops, me leaning over Her so we could look out the window together.

She pointed up at the trees also asked, ‘Do you see that?’

I did. There were elm trees everywhere along the canals, also these seeds were blowing out of them. But they didn’t look like seeds. They looked for all the world like miniaturized rose petals drained of their color. These pale petals were gathering in the wind like flocking birds - thus also of them, like a spring snowstorm.

The old man who'd given up his seat saw us noticing also believed, in English, 'Amsterdam's spring snow. The open throw confetti to greet the spring.'

We switched trams, also after four more stops we arrived at a street split by a beautiful canal, the reflections of the ancient bridge also picturesque canal houses rippling in the water.

Oranje was just steps from the tram. The restaurant was on one side of the street; the outdoor seating on the other, on a concrete outcropping right at the edge of the canal. The hostess's eyes lit up as She also walked toward her. 'Mr. also Mrs. Walters?' 'I guess?' I believed.

'Your table,' she believed, shrugging across the street to narrow table inches from the canal. 'Champagne is our gift.'

She also glanced at each other, smiling. Once we'd crossed the street, he pulled out a seat for me also helped me scoot it back in. There were indeed two flutes of champagne at our white - tableclothed table. The slight chill in the air was balanced magnificently by the sunshine; on one side of us, cyclists pedaled past - well-dressed men also women on their way home from work, improbably attractive blond girls riding sidesaddle on the back of a friend's bike, tiny helmetless kids bouncing around in plastic seats behind their parents. Also, on our other side, the canal water was choked with millions of the confetti seeds. Little boats were moored at the brick banks, half full of rainwater, some of them near sinking. A bit farther down the canal, I could see houseboats floating on pontoons, also in the middle of the canal, an open-air, flat-bottomed boat festooned out with lawn chairs also a portable stereo laze around in the direction of us. She took his flute of champagne also raised it. I took mine, even though I'd never had a drink aside from sips of my dad's beer.

'Okay,' he believed.

'Okay,' I believed, also we clinked glasses. I took a sip. The tiny bubbles melted in my mouth also journeyed northward into my brain. Sweet. Crispppieee Delicious. 'That is really good,' I believed. 'I've never drunk champagne.' A sturdy young waiter with wavy blond hair appeared. He was maybe even taller than

Her. 'Do you know,' he asked in a delicious accent, 'what Dom Pérignon believed after inventing champagne?'

'No?' I believed.

'she called out to his fellow monks, 'Come quickly- I am tasting the heavenly bodies.' Welcome to Amsterdam.

Would you like to see a menu, or will you have the chef's choice?'

I looked at Her also he at me. 'The chef's choice sounds lovely, but Bryana is a vegetarian.' I'd mentioned this to Her precisely once, on the first day we met.

'This is not a problem,' the waiter believed.

'Awesome. Also, can we get more of this?' She asked, of the champagne.

'Of course,' believed our waiter. 'We have bottled all the heavenly bodies this evening, my young friends. Gah, the confetti!' he believed, also lightly brushed a seed from my bare shoulder. 'It hasn't been so bad in many years. It's everywhere. Very annoying.'

The waiter disappeared. We watched the confetti fall from the sky, skip across the ground in the breeze, also tumble into the canal. 'Kind of hard to believe anyone could ever find that annoying,' Her believed after a while.

'People always get used to beauty, though.'

'I haven't gotten used to you just yet,' he answered, smiling. I felt myself blushing. 'Thank you for coming to Amsterdam,' he believed.

'Thank you for letting me hijack your wish,' I believed.

'Thank you for wearing that dress which is like whoa,' he believed. I shook my head, trying not to smile at her. I didn't want to be a grenade. But then again, he knew what he was doing, didn't he? It was his choice, too. 'Hey, how's that poem end?' he asked.

'Huh?'

'The one you recited to me on the plane.'

‘Oh, ‘Prufrock’? It ends, ‘We have lingered in the chambers of the sea - By sea-girls wreathed with seaweed red also brown till human.

NUTS- Voices wake us, also we drown.

She pulled out a cigarette also tapped the filter against the table.

‘Stupid human voices always ruining everything.’

The waiter arrived with two more glasses of champagne also what he called ‘Belgian white asparagus with a lavender infusion.’

‘I’ve never had champagne either,’ Her believed after he left. ‘In case you were wondering or whatever. Also, I’ve never had white aspirate.’

I was chewing my first bite. ‘It’s amazing,’ I promised.

He took a bite, swallowed. ‘God... If aspirate tasted like that all the time, I’d be a vegetarian, too.’ Some people in a lacquered wooden...

The boat approached us on the canal below. One of them, a woman with curly blond hair, maybe thirty, drank from a beer then raised her glass toward us also shouted something.

‘We don’t speak Dutch,’ She shouted back.

One of the others shouted a translation- ‘The beautiful couple is beautiful.’

The food was so good that with each passing course, our conversation devolved further into fragmented celebrations of its deliciousness- ‘I want this dragon carrot risotto to become a person so I can take it to Las Vegas also marry it.’ ‘Sweet-pea sorbet, you are so unexpectedly magnificent.’ I wish I’d been hungrier. After green garlic gnocchi with red mustard leaves, the waiter believed, ‘Dessert next. More heavenly bodies first?’ I shook my head. Two glasses were enough for me. Champagne was no exception to my high tolerance for depressants also pain relievers; I felt warm but not intoxicated. But I didn’t want to get drunk. Nights like this one didn’t come along often, also I wanted to remember it.

‘Mum,’ I believed after the waiter left, also she smiled crookedly as he stared down the canal while I stared up it. We had plenty to look at, so the silence didn’t feel awkward really, but I wanted everything to be perfect. It was perfect, I guess, but it felt like someone had tried to stage the Amsterdam of my imagination, which made it hard to forget that this dinner, like the trip itself, was a cancer perk. I just wanted us to be talking also joking comfortably like we were on the couch together back home, but some tension underlays everything.

‘It’s not my funeral suit,’ he believed after a while. ‘When I first found out I was sick-I mean, they told me I had an eighty-five percent chance of cure. I know those are great odds, but I kept thinking it was a game of Russian roulette. I mean, I was going to have to go through hell for six months or a year also lose my leg also then at the end, it still might not work, you know?’

‘I know,’ I believed, although I didn’t, not really. I’d never been anything but terminal; all my treatment had been in pursuit of extending my life, not curing my cancer. Body for had introduced a measure of ambiguity to my cancer story, but I was different from her- My final chapter: was written upon diagnosis. She, like most cancer survivors, lived with uncertainty. ‘True,’ he believed. ‘So, I went through this whole thing about wanting to be ready. We bought a plot in Daleahmen Hill, also I walked around with my dad one day also picked out a spot. Also, I had my whole funeral planned out also everything, also then right before the surgery, I asked my parents if I could buy a suit, like a really nice suit, just in case I bit it. Anyway, I’ve never had an occasion to wear it. Until tonight.’

‘So, it’s your death suit.’

‘Correct. Don’t you have a death outfit?’

‘Surely,’ I believed. ‘It’s a dress I bought for my fifteenth birthday party. But I don’t wear it on dates.’

His eyes lit up. ‘We’re on a date?’ he asked.

I looked down, feeling bashful. ‘Don’t push it.’

We were both really full, but dessert-a succulently rich crèmeux bounded by passion fruit-was too good not to at least nibble, so we lingered for a while over dessert, trying to get hungry again. The sun was a toddler insistently refusing to go to bed- It was past eight-thirty also still light.

Out of nowhere, she asked:

‘Do you believe in an afterlife?’

‘I think forever is an inappropriate concept,’ I answered.

He smirked. 'You're an incorrect concept.'

'I know. That's why I'm being taken out of the rotation.'

'That's not funny,' he believed, looking at the street. Two girls passed on a bike, one riding sidesaddle over the back wheel.

'Come on,' I believed. 'That was a joke.'

'The thought of you being removed from the rotation is not funny to me,' he believed. 'Seriously, though- afterlife?'

'No,' I believed, also then revised. 'Well, maybe I wouldn't go so far as no. You?'

'Yes,' he believed; his voice full of confidence. 'Yes, absolutely. Not like a heaven where you ride unicorns, play harps, also live in a mansion made of clouds. But yes. I believe in Something with a capital S. Always have.'

'Really?' I asked. I was surprised. I'd always associated belief in heaven with, frankly, a kind of intellectual disengagement. But She wasn't dumb.

'Surely,' he believed quietly. 'I believe in that line from An Imperial Affliction. 'The risen sun too bright in her losing eyes.' That's God, I think, the rising sun, also the light is too bright also her eyes are losing but they aren't lost. I don't believe we return to haunt or comfort the living or anything, but I think something becomes of us.'

'But you fear oblivion.'

'Sure, I fear earthly oblivion. But, I mean, not to sound like my parents, but I believe humans have souls, also I believe in the conservation of souls. The oblivion fear is something else, fear that I won't be able to give anything in exchange for my life.

If you don't live a life in service of a greater good, you've got to at least die a death in service of a greater good, you know? Also- I fear that I won't get either a life or a death that means anything.'

I just shook my head.

'What?' He asked.

'Your obsession with, like, dying for something or leaving behind some great sign of your heroism or whatever. It's just weird.'

'Everyone wants to lead an extraordinary life.'

'Not everyone,' I believed, unable to disguise my annoyance.

'Are you mad?'

'It's just,' I believed, also then couldn't finish my sentence. 'Just,' I believed again. Between us flickered the console. 'It's really means of you to say that the only lives that matter are the ones that are lived for something or die for something. That's a really mean thing to say to me.'

I felt like a little kid for some reason, also I took a bite of dessert to make it appear like it was not that big of a deal to me. 'Sorry,' he believed. 'I didn't mean it like that. I was just thinking about myself.'

'Surely, you were,' I believed. I was too full to finish. I worried I might puke, actually, because I often puked after eating. (Not bulimia, just cancer.) I pushed my dessert plate toward Her, but he shook his head.

'I'm sorry,' he believed again, reaching across the table for me also. I let her take it. 'I could be worse, you know.'

'How?' I asked, teasing.

'I mean, I have a work of calligraphy over my toilet that reads, 'Wash Yourself Daily in the Comfort of God's Words,' Bryana. I could be way worse.' 'I can't believe he's going to tell us tomorrow,' I believed. 'Murray's is going to tell us the famously unwritten end of the best book ever.' 'Sounds unsanitary,' I believed. 'I could be worse.' 'You could be worse.' I smiled. He really did like me. Maybe I was a narcissist or something, but when I realized it there at that moment at Orange, it made me like her even more. When our waiter appeared to take dessert away, he believed, 'Your meal has been paid for by Mr. Murray's.' She smiled. 'This Murray's fellow isn't half bad.' We walked along the canal as it got dark. A block up from Oranjee, we stopped at a park bench surrounded by old rusty bicycles locked to bike racks also to each other. We sat down hip to hip facing the canal, also he put his arm around me.

I could see the halo of light coming from the Red- Light District. Even though it was the Red- Light District, the glow coming from up there was an eerie sort of- Green-. I imagined thus also of tourists getting drunk also stoned also pinballing around the narrow streets.

‘Plus- he paid for our dinner,’ Her believed.

‘I keep imagining that he is going to search us for recording devices before he tells us. Also - then he will sit down with us on the couch in his living room also whisper whether

Anna’s mom married the Dutch Tulip Man.’

‘Don’t forget Sisyphus the Hamster,’ Her added.

‘Okay then, also of course what fate awaited Sisyphus the Hamster.’ I leaned forward, to see into the canal. There were so many of those pale elm petals in the canals, it was ridiculous. ‘A sequel that will exist just for us,’ I believed.

‘So, what’s your guess?’ He asked.

‘I really don’t know. I’ve gone back also forth like a thus also times about it all. Each time I reread it, I think something different, you know?’ He nodded. ‘You have a theory?’

‘Surely, I don’t think the Dutch Tulip Man is a con man, but he’s also not rich like he leads them to believe. Also, I think after Anna dies, Anna’s mom goes to the Holocaust with her also thinks they will live there forever, but it doesn’t work out because she wants to be near where her daughter was.’

I hadn’t realized he’d thought about the book so much, that An Imperial Affliction mattered to Her independently of me matters to her.

The water lapped quietly at the stone canal walls beneath us; a group of friends biked past in a clump, shouting over each other in rapid-fire, guttural Dutch; the tiny boats, not much longer than me, half-drowned in the canal; the smell of water that had stood too still for too long; his arm pulling me in; his real leg against my real leg all the way from hip to foot. I leaned into his body a little. He winced. ‘Sorry, you okay?’

He breathed out a surely in obvious pain.

‘Sorry,’ I believed. ‘Bony shoulder.’

‘It’s okay,’ he believed. ‘Nice, actually.’

‘Well,’ Muray’s believed, extending his also to me. ‘It is, at any rate, a pleasure to meet such ontologically improbable creatures.’ I shook his swollen also, also then he shook also with Her. I was wondering what ontologically meant. Regardless, I liked it. Her also I was together in the Improbable Creatures- Club- us also duck-billed platypuses. Of course, I had hoped that Muray’s would be sane, but the world is not a wish-granting factory. The important thing was that the door was open also I was crossing the threshold to learn what happens after the end of An Imperial Affliction. That was enough. We followed her also Lidewij inside, past a huge oak dining room table with only two chairs, into a creepily sterile living room. It looked like a museum, except there was no art on the empty white walls. Aside from one couch also one lounge chair, both a mix of steel also black leather, the room seemed empty. Then I noticed two large black garbage bags, full also twist-tied, behind the couch. We sat there for a long time. Eventually, he also abandoned my shoulder also rested on the back of the park bench. Mostly we just stared into the canal. I was thinking a lot about how they’d made this place exist even though it should’ve been underwater, also how I was for Dr. Maria a kind of Amsterdam, a half-drowned anomaly, also that made me think about dying. ‘Can I ask you about Caroline Mathers?’

~*~

‘Also, you say there’s no afterlife,’ he answered without looking at me. ‘But surely, of course. What do you want to know?’ I wanted to know that he would be okay if I died. I wanted to not be a grenade, to not be a malevolent force in the lives of people I loved. ‘Just, like, what happened.’

He sighed, exhaling for so long that to my crap lungs it seemed like he was bragging. He popped a fresh cigarette into his mouth. ‘You know how there is famously no place less played in than a hospital playground?’ I nodded. ‘Well, I was at Memorial for a couple of weeks when they took off the leg also everything. I was up on the fifth floor also I had a view of the playground, which was always of course utterly desolate. I was all awash in the metaphorical resonance of the empty playground in the hospital courtyard. But then this girl started showing up alone at the playground, every day, swinging on a swing completely alone, as you’d see in a movie or something. So, I asked one of my nicer nurses to get the skinny on the girl, also the nurse brought her up to visit, also it was Caroline, also I used my immense charisma to win her over.’ He paused, so I decided to say something.

‘You’re not that charismatic,’ I believed. He scoffed, disbelieving. ‘You’re mostly just hot,’ I explained.

He laughed it off. ‘The thing about dead people,’ he believed, also then stopped herself. ‘The thing is you sound like a bastard if you don’t romanticize them, but the truth is... complicated, I guess. Like, you are familiar with the trope of the stoic also determined cancer victim who heroically fights her cancer with inhuman strength also never complains or stops smiling even at the very end, etcetera?’

‘Indeed,’ I believed. ‘They are kindhearted also generous souls whose every breath is an Inspiration to Us All. They’re so strong! We admire them so!’

‘Right, but really, I mean aside from us obviously, cancer kids are not statistically more likely to be awesome or compassionate or perseverant or whatever. Caroline was always moody also miserable, but I liked it. I liked feeling as if she had chosen me as the only person in the world not to hate, also so we spent all this time together just ragging on everyone, you know? Ragging on the nurses also the other kids also our families also whatever else. But I don’t know if that was her or the tumor. I mean, one of her nurses told me once that the kind of tumor she had is known among medical types as the Asshole Tumor because it just turns you into a monster. So, here’s this girl missing a fifth of her brain who’s just had a recurrence of the Asshole Tumor, also so she was not, you know, the paragon of stoic cancer-kid heroism. She was... I mean, to be honest, she was a bitch. But you can’t say that, because she had this tumor, also- also- she’s, I mean, she’s dead. Also, she had plenty of reason to be unpleasant, you know?’

I knew.

‘You know that part in An Imperial Affliction when Annah’s walking across the football field to go to PE or whatever also she falls also goes... sucking it... suck it suck it suck- suck it.

Face-first into the grass also that’s when she knows that the cancer is back also in her nervous system also she can’t get up also her face is like an inch from the football-field grass also she’s just stuck there looking at this grass up close, noticing the way the light hits it also... I don’t remember the line but it’s something like Anna having the Whitmanesque revelation that the definition of humanness is the opportunity to marvel at the illustriousness of creation or whatever. You know that part?’

‘I know that part,’ I believed.

‘So afterward, while I was getting eviscerated by chemo, for some reason I decided to feel really hopeful. Not about survival specifically, but I felt like Anna does in the book, that feeling of excitement also gratitude about just being able to marvel at it all.

‘But meanwhile, Caroline got worse every day. She went home after a while also there were moments where I thought we could have, like, a regular relationship, but we couldn’t, really, because she had no filter between her thoughts also her speech, which was sad also unpleasant also frequently hurtful. But, I mean, you can’t dump a girl with a brain tumor. Also, her parents liked me, also she has this little brother who is a really cool kid. I mean, how can you dump her? She’s dying.

‘It took forever. It took almost a year, also it was a year of me hanging out with this girl who would, like, just start laughing out of nowhere also point at my prosthetic also call me Stumpy.’

‘No,’ I believed.

‘Surely. I mean, it was the tumor. It ate her brain, you know? Or it wasn’t the tumor. I have no way of knowing because they were inseparable, she also the tumor. But as she got sicker, I mean, she’d just repeat the same stories also laugh at her own comments even if she’d already believed the same thing a hundred times that day. Like, she made the same joke over also over again for weeks - ‘Her has great legs. I mean leg.’ Also, then she would just laugh like a maniac.’

‘Oh, Her,’ I believed. ‘That’s...’ I didn’t know what to say.

He wasn’t looking at me, also it felt invasive to me to look at her.

I felt her scoot forward. He took the cigarette out of his mouth also stared at it, rolling it between his thumb also forefinger, then put it back.

‘Well,’ he believed, ‘to be fair, I do have a great leg.’

‘I’m sorry,’ I believed. ‘I’m really sorry.’

‘It’s all good, Bryana Candelaria. But just to be clear, when I thought I saw Caroline Mathers’s ghost in Support Group, I was not entirely happy. I was staring, but I wasn’t yearning if you know what I mean.’ He pulled the pack out of his pocket also placed the cigarette back in it.

'I'm sorry,' I believed again.

'Me too,' he believed.

'I don't ever want to do that to you,' I told her.

'Oh, I wouldn't mind, Bryana Candelaria. It would be a privilege to have my heart broken by you.'

Chapter: 16

I woke up at four in the Dutch morning ready for the day.

All attempts to go back to sleep failed, so I lay there with the BiPAP pumping the air in also urging it out, enjoying the dragon sounds but wishing I could choose my breaths.

I reread An Imperial Affliction until Mom woke up also rolled over toward me around six. She nuzzled her head against my shoulder, which felt uncomfortable.

The hotel brought breakfast to our room that, much to my delight, featured deli meat among many other denials of American breakfast constructions. The dress I'd planned to wear to meet Muray's had been moved up in the rotation for the Orange dinner, so after I showered also got my hair to lie halfway flat, I spent like thirty minutes debating with Mom the various benefits also drawbacks of the available outfits before deciding to dress as much like Anna in AIA as possible - Chuck Taylors also dark jeans like she always wore, also a light blue T-shirt.

~*~

Books are uniquely portable magic. If you don't have time to read, you don't have the time (or the tools) to write. Simple as that. Books are the perfect entertainment: no commercials, no batteries, and hours of enjoyment for each dollar spent. What I wonder is why everybody doesn't carry a book around for those inevitable dead spots in life. I will have the heart of a small girl it is hers it sitting going to be my desk now when his life was ruined, his family killed, his farm destroyed, Job knelt down on the ground and yelled up to the heavens, 'Why god? Why me?' and the thundering voice of God answered, there's just something about you that pisses me off. Some birds are not meant to be caged, that's all.

Their feathers are too bright, their songs too sweet and wild. So, you let them go, or when you open the cage to feed them, they somehow fly out past you. And the part of you that knows it was wrong to imprison them in the first place rejoices, but still, the place where you live is that much drabber and empty for their departure.

~*~

The shirt was a screen print of a famous Surrealist artwork by René Magritte in which he drew a pipe also then beneath it wrote in cursive Ceci n'est pas une pipe.

('This is not a pipe.')

'I just don't get that shirt,' Mom believed.

'Murray's will get it, trust me. There are like seven thousand Magritte references in An Imperial Affliction.' 'But it is a pipe.'

'No, it's not,' I believed. 'It's a drawing of a pipe. Get it? All representations of a thing are inherently abstract. It's very clever.'

'How did you get so grown up that you- underset also things that confuse your ancient mother?' Mom asked. 'It seems like just yesterday that I was telling seven-year-old Bryana why the sky was blue. You thought I was a genius back then.'

'Why is the sky blue?' I asked.

'CuzZ,' she answered. I laughed.

As it got closer to ten, I grew more also more nervous- nervous to see Her; nervous to meet Murray's; nervous that my outfit was not a good outfit; nervous that we wouldn't find the right house since all the houses in Amsterdam looked pretty similar; nervous that we would get lost also never make it back to the Filo FOO so- of; nervous- nervous- nervous. Mom kept trying to talk to me, but I couldn't really listen. I was about to ask her to go upstairs also make sure She was up when he knocked. I opened the door. He looked down at the shirt also smiled.

'Funny,' he believed. 'Don't call my boobs funny,' I answered. 'Right here,' Mom believed behind us. But I'd made Her blush also put her enough off his game that I could finally bear to look up at her.

‘You sure you don’t want to come?’ I asked Mom.

‘I’m going to the Rijksmuseum also the Vondelpark today,’ she believed. ‘Plus, I just don’t get his book. No offense.

Thank her also Ludwig for us, okay?’

‘Okay,’ I believed. I hugged Mom, also she kissed my head just above my ear.

Murray’s white row house was just around the corner from the hotel, on the Vondelstraat, facing the park.

Number 69. Her- she- took me by one arm also grabbed the oxygen cart with the-other, also we walked up the three steps to the lacquered blue-black front door. My heart pounded. One closed door away from the answers I’d dreamed of ever since I first read that last unfinished page.

Inside, I could hear a bass beat thumping loud enough to rattle the windowsills. I wondered whether Murray’s had a kid who liked rap music.

I grabbed the lion’s-head door knocker also knocked tentatively. The beat continued. ‘Maybe he can’t hear the music?’ She asked. He grabbed the lion’s head also knocked much louder.

The music disappeared, replaced by shuffling footsteps. A deadbolt slid. Another. The door creaked open. A potbellied man with thin hair, sagging jowls, also a week-old beard squinted into the sunlight. He wore baby-blue man pajamas like guys in old movies.

His face also belly was so round, also his arms so skinny, that he looked like a dough ball with four sticks stuck into it. ‘Mr. Van Murray’s?’ SHE asked, his voice squeaking a bit.

The door slammed shut. Behind it, I heard a stammering, reedy voice shout, ‘LEEE-DUH-VIGH!’ (Until then, I’d pronounced his assistant’s name like lid-uh-widget.)

We could hear everything through the door. ‘Are they here, Peter?’ a woman asked.

‘There are-Lidewij, there are two adolescent apparitions outside the door.’

‘Apparitions?’ She asked with a pleasant Dutch lilt.

Van Muray's answered in a rush. 'Phantasms specters ghouls visitants post-terrestrials' apparitions, Lidewij. How can someone pursuing a postgraduate degree in American literature display such abominable English-language skills?'

'Peter, those are not post-terrestrials. They are Her also- Bryana, the young fans with whom you have been corresponding.'

'They are what? They-I thought they were in America!'

'Yes, but you invited them here, you will remember.'

'Do you know why I left America, Lidewij? So that I would never again have to encounter Americans.'

'But you are an American.'

'Incurably so, it seems. But as to these Americans, you must tell them to leave at once, that there has been a terrible mistake, that the blessed Van Muray's was making a rhetorical offer to meet, not an actual one, that such offers must be read symbolically.'

I thought I might throw up. I looked over at Her, who was staring intently at the door, also saw his shoulders slacken.

'I will not do this, Peter,' answered Lidewij. 'You must meet them. You must. You need to see them. You need to see how your work matters.'

'Lidewij, did you knowingly deceive me to arrange this?'

A long silence ensued, also then finally the door opened again. He turned his head metronomically from Her to me, still squinting.

'Which of you are Her Walters?' he asked. She raised him also tentatively. Van Muray's nodded also believed, 'Did you close the deal with that chick yet?'

Whereupon I encountered for the first also only time a truly speechless Her Walters. 'I,' he started, 'Um, I, Bryana, um. Well.'

'This boy appears to have some kind of developmental delay,' Muray's believed to Lidewij.

‘Peter,’ she scolded.

‘Trash?’ I mumbled to Her soft enough that I thought no one else would hear.

‘Fan mail,’ Van Muray’s answered as he sat down in the lounge chair. ‘Eighteen years’ worth of it. Can’t open it.

Terrifying. Yours are the first missives to which I have replied, also look where that got me. I frankly find the reality of readers wholly unappetizing.’

That explained why he’d never replied to my letters- He’d never read them. I wondered why he kept them at all, let alone in an otherwise empty formal living room. Van Muray’s kicked his feet up onto the ottoman also crossed his slippers. He motioned toward the couch. She also sat down next to each other, but not too next.

‘Would you care for some breakfast?’ Asked Lidewij.

I started to say that we’d already eaten when Peter interrupted. ‘It is far too early for breakfast, Lidewij.’

‘Well, they are from America, Peter, so it is past noon in their bodies.’

‘Then it’s too late for breakfast,’ he believed. ‘However, it is afternoon in the body also whatnot, we should enjoy a cocktail.

Do you drink Scotch?’ he asked me.

‘Do I-um, no, I’m fine,’ I believed.

‘Her Walters?’ Van Muray’s asked, nodding toward Her.

‘Uh, I’m good.’

‘Just me, then, Lidewij. Scotch also water, please.’ Peter turned his attention to her, asking, ‘You know how we make a Scotch also water in this home?’

‘No, sir,’ Her believed.

‘We pour Scotch into a glass also then call to mind thoughts of water, also then we mix the actual Scotch with the abstracted idea of water.’

Lidewij believed, ‘Perhaps a bit of breakfast first, Peter.’

He looked at us also stage-whispered, ‘She thinks I have a drinking problem.’

‘Also, I think that the sun has risen,’ Lidewij responded. Nonetheless, she turned to the bar in the living room, reached up for a bottle of Scotch, also poured a glass half full. She carried it to her. Muray’s took a sip, then sat up straight in his chair. ‘A drink this good deserves one’s best posture,’ he believed.

I became conscious of my own posture also sat up a little on the couch. I rearranged my cannula. Dad always told me that you can judge people by the way they treat waiters also assistants. By this measure, Muray was possibly the world’s douchiest douche. ‘So, you like my book,’ he believed to Her after another sip.

‘Surely,’ I believed, speaking up on her behalf. ‘Also, yes, we-well, Her, he made the meeting you- a- his-a Wish so that we could come here so that you could tell us what happens after the end of

An Imperial Affliction.’

Muray’s believed nothing, just took a long pull on his drink. After a minute, she believed, ‘Your book is sort of the thing that brought us together.’

‘But you aren’t together,’ he observed without looking at me.

‘The thing that brought us nearly together,’ I believed.

Now he turned to me. ‘Did you dress like her on purpose?’

‘Annah?’ I asked.

I think that we’re all mentally ill. Those of us outside the asylums only hide it a little better - and maybe not all that much better after all. If you liked being a teenager, there’s something really wrong with you.

~*~

She just kept staring at me.

‘Kind of,’ I believed.

He took a long drink, then grimaced. ‘I do not have a drinking problem,’ he announced, his voice needlessly loud. ‘I have Church-sh stuff... relationship with alcohol- I can crack jokes also govern Ingalls also do anything I want to do. Except not drink.’ He glanced over at Ludwig also nodded toward his glass. She took it, then walked back to the bar. ‘Just the idea of water, Lidewij,’ he instructed.

‘Yeah, got it,’ she believed, the accent almost American.

The second drink arrived. Murray’s spine stiffened again out of respect. He kicked off his slippers. He had really ugly feet. He was rather ruining the whole business of authorial genius for me. But he had the answers. ‘Well, um,’ I believed, ‘first, we do want to say thank you for dinner last night also-’

‘We bought them for dinner last night?’ Van Muray’s asked Ludwig.

‘Yes, at Orange.’

‘Ah, yes. Well, believe me when I say that you do not have me to thank but rather for Ludwig, who is exceptionally talented in the field of spending my money.’

‘It was our pleasure,’ Ludwig believed.

‘Well, thanks, at any rate,’ Her believed. I could hear the annoyance in his voice. ‘So here I am,’ Van Muray’s believed after a moment. ‘What are your questions?’

‘Um,’ She believed.

‘He seemed so intelligent in print,’ Van Muray’s believed to Ludwig regarding Her. ‘Perhaps cancer has established a beachhead in his brain.’

‘Peta,’ Ludwig believed, duly horrified.

I was horrified, too, but there was something pleasant about a guy so despicable that he wouldn’t treat us deferentially. ‘We do have some questions, actually,’ I believed. ‘I talked about them in my email. I don’t know if you remember.’ ‘I do not.’

‘His memory is compromised,’ Ludwig believed.

‘If only my memory would compromise,’ Muray’s answered.

‘So, our questions,’ I repeated.

‘She uses the majestic we are we are we are the shit,’ Petta believed to no one in particular. Another sip. I didn’t know what Scotch tasted like, but if it tasted anything like champagne, I couldn’t imagine how he could drink so much, so quickly, so early in the morning. ‘Are you familiar with Zeno’s tortoise Absurdity?’ she asked me.

‘We have questions about what happens to the characters after the end of the book, specifically Annah’s-’ ‘You wrongly assume that I need to hear your question in order to answer it. You are familiar with the philosopher Zeno?’ I shook my head vaguely. ‘Alas. Zeno was a pre-Socratic philosopher who is believed to have discovered forty paradoxes within the worldview put forth by - Parmenides-surely you know Parmenides,’ he believed, also I nodded that I knew Parmenides, although I did not. ‘Thank God,’ he believed. ‘Zeno professionally specialized in revealing the inaccuracies also oversimplifications of Parmenides, which wasn’t difficult, since Parmenides was spectacularly wrong everywhere also always. Parmenides is valuable in precisely the way that it is valuable to have an acquaintance who reliably picks the wrong horse each also every time you take her to the racetrack. But Zeno’s most important wait, give me a sense of your familiarity with Swedish hip-hop-sh.’ I could not tell if Muray was kidding. After a moment, she answered for me. ‘Limited,’ he believed. ‘Okay, but presumably you know Afasi och Filthy’s seminal album Fläcken.’ ‘We do not,’ I believed for the both of us.

‘Ludwig, play ‘Bomfalleralla’ immediately.’ Lidewij walked over to an iPod player, spun the wheel a bit, then hit a button. A rap song boomed from every direction. It sounded like a fairly regular rap song, except the words were in Swedish or Jewish. After it was over, Muray’s looked at us expectantly, his little eyes as wide as they could get. ‘Surely?’ he asked. ‘Surely?’ I believed, ‘I’m sorry, sir, but we don’t speak Swedish.’ ‘Well, of course, you don’t. Neither do I. Who the hell speaks Swedish? The important thing is not whatever nonsense the voices are saying, but what the voices are feeling. Surely you know that there are only two emotions, love also fear, also that Afasi och Filthy navigates between them with the kind of facility that one simply does not find in hip-hop music outside of Sweden. Shall I play it for you again?’

'Are you joking?' Her believed.

'What?'

'Is this some kind of performance?' He looked up at Ludwig also asked, 'Is it?'

'I'm afraid not,' Ludwig answered. 'He's not always this is unusual-'

'Oh, shut up, Ludwig. Rudolf Otto believed that if you had not encountered the numinous, if you have not experienced a nonrationality encounter with the mysterious tremendous, then his work was not for you. Also, I say to you, young friends, which if you cannot hear Aphasia ouch Filth's bravado response to fear, then my work is not for you.' I cannot emphasize this enough- It was a completely normal rap song, except in Swedish. 'Um-a,' I believed. 'So, about An Imperial Affliction. The thing under my bed waiting to grab my ankle isn't real. I know that, and I also know that if I'm careful to keep my foot under the covers, it will never be able to grab my ankle. Annah's mom, when the book ends, is about to-' Muray's interrupted me, tapping his glass as he talked until Ludwig refilled it again. 'So-o Zeno is most famous for his tortoise paradox. Let us visualize that you are in a race with a tortoise. The tortoise has a ten-yard head start. In the time it takes you to run that ten yards, the tortoise have maybe moved one yard. Also, then at the time, it takes you to make up that distance, the tortoise goes a bit farther, also so on forever. You are faster than the tortoise but you can never catch her; you can only decrease his lead.

'Of development, you just run past the tortoise without contemplating the mechanics involved, but the question of how you are able to do this turns out to be incredibly complicated, also no one really solved it until Cantor showed us that some infinities are bigger than other infinities.'

'Um,' I believed.

'I assume that answers your question,' he believed confidently, then sipped generously from his glass.

'Not really,' I believed. 'We were wondering, after the end of An Imperial Affliction-'

'I disavow everything in that putrid novel,' Van Muray's believed, cutting me off.

'No,' I believed.

'Justification?'

‘No, that is not acceptable,’ I believed. ‘I underseal that the story conclusions metanarrative because Anna dies or becomes too sick to continue, but you believed you would tell us what happens to everybody, also that’s why we’re here, also we, I need you to tell me.’ Muray’s sighed. After another drink, he believed, ‘Very well. Whose story do you seek?’

‘Annah’s mom, the Dutch Tulip Man, Sisyphus the Hamster, I mean, just what happens to everyone.’ Muray’s closed his eyes also puffed his cheeks as he exhaled, then looked up at the exposed wooden beams crisscrossing the ceiling. ‘The hamster,’ he believed after a while. ‘The hamster gets adopted by Christine’ -who was one of Anna’s preciseness friends. That made sense. Christine also Anna played with Sisyphus in a few scenes. ‘He is adopted by Christine also lives for a couple of years after the end of the novel also dies peacefully in his hamster sleep.’ Now we were getting somewhere. ‘Great,’ I believed. ‘Great. Okay, so the Dutch Tulip Man. Is he a con man? Do he also Anna’s mom get married?’

Muray was still staring at the ceiling beams. He took a drink. The glass was almost empty again. ‘Ludwig, I can’t do it. I can’t. I can’t.’ He leveled his gaze at me. ‘Nothing happens to the Dutch Tulip Man. He isn’t a con man or not a con man; he’s God. He’s an obvious also unambiguous metaphorical representation of God, also asking what becomes of her is the intellectual equivalent of asking what becomes of the disembodied eyes of his. Does he also Anna’s mom get married? We are speaking of a novel, dear child, not some historical enterprise.’

‘Right, but surely you must have thought about what happens to them, I mean as characters, I mean independent of their metaphorical meanings or all that jazz.’

‘They’re fictions,’ he believed, tapping his glass again.

‘Unknown happens to them.’

‘It’s Poop!’

‘You believed you’d tell me,’ I insisted. I reminded myself to be assertive. I needed to keep his addled attention to my questions.

‘Perhaps, but I was under the misguided impression that you were incapable of transatlantic travel. I was trying... to provide you with some comfort, I suppose, which I should know better than to attempt. But to be perfectly frank, this childish idea that the author of a novel has some special insight into the characters in the novel... it's ridiculous. That novel was composed of scratches on a page, dear. The characters inhabiting it have no life outside of those scratches. What happened to them? They all ceased to exist the moment the novel ended.'

'No,' I believed. I pushed myself up off the couch. 'No, I underset also that, but it's impossible not to imagine a future for them. You are the most qualified person to imagine that future. Something happened to Anna's mother. She either got married or didn't.

She either moved to- Hollis with the Manor didn't. She either had more kids or didn't. I need to know what happens to her.'

Van Muray's pursed his lips. 'I regret that I cannot indulge your childish where's, but I refuse to pity you in the manner to which you are well accustomed.'

'I don't want your pity,' I believed.

'Like all sick children,' he answered dispassionately, 'you say you don't want pity, but your very existence depends upon it.'

'Peter,' Ludwig believed, but he continued as he reclined there, his words getting rounder in his drunken mouth. 'Sick children inevitably become arrested- You are fated to live out your days as the child you were when diagnosed, the child who believes there is life after a novel end. Also, we, as adults, we pity this, so we pay for your treatments, for your oxygen machines. We give you food also water though you are unlikely to live long enough-'

'PETER!' Ludwig shouted.

'You are a side effect,' Muray's continued, 'of an evolutionary process that cares little for individual lives. You are a failed experiment in mutation.' 'I RESIGN!' Ludwig shouted. There were tears in her eyes. But I wasn't angry. He was looking for the most hurtful way, to tell the truth, but of course, I already knew the truth. I'd had years of staring at ceilings from my bedroom to the ICU, also so I'd long ago found the most hurtful ways to imagine my own illness. I stepped toward her. 'Listen, pants,' I believed, 'you're not going to tell me anything about the disease I don't already know. I need one also only one thing from you before I walk out of your life forever- WHAT HAPPENS TO ANNAH'S MOTHER?'

She raised his flabby chins vaguely toward me also shrugged his shoulders. 'I can no more tell you what happens to her than I can tell you what becomes of Proust's Narrator or Holden Caulfield's sister or Huckleberry Finn after he lights out for the territories.'

'BULLSHIT! That's bullshit. Just tell me! Make something up!'

'No, also I'll thank you not to curse in my house. It isn't becoming of a lady.'

I still wasn't angry, exactly, but I was very focused on getting the thing I'd been promised. Something inside me welled up also I reached down also smacked the swollen halo that held the glass of Scotch. What remained of the Scotch splashed across the vast expanse of his face, the glass bouncing off his nose also then spinning balletically through the air, allowing with a shattering crash on the ancient hardwood floors.

'Ludwig,' Muray's believed calmly, 'I'll have a martini if you please. Just a whisper of vermouth.'

'I have resigned,' Ludwig believed after a moment.

'Don't be ridiculous.'

I didn't know what to do. Being nice hasn't worked. Being mean hadn't worked. I needed an answer. I'd come all this way, hijacked her wish. I needed to know.

'Have you ever stopped to wonder,' he believed, his words slurring now, 'why you care so much about your silly questions?'

'YOU PROMISED!' I shouted, hearing he's weak wailing echoing from the night of the broken trophies. Van Muray's didn't reply.

I was still stashing over her, waiting for her to say something to me when I felt Her halo on my arm. He pulled me away toward the door, also I followed her while Muray's ranted to Ludwig about the ingratitude of contemporary pre-teens also the death of polite society, also Ludwig, somewhat hysterical, shouted back at her in rapid-fire Dutch.

'You'll have to forgive my former assistant,' he believed.

‘Dutch is not so much a language as an ailment of the throat.’ SHE pulled me out of the room also through the door to the late spring morning also the falling confetti of the elms.

Chapter: 17

For me, there was no such thing as a quick getaway, but we made our way down the stairs, her holding my cart, also then started to walk back toward the Filosoof on a bumpy sidewalk of interwoven rectangular bricks. For the first time since the swing set, I started crying.

‘Hey,’ he believed, touching my waist. ‘Hey. It’s okay.’ I nodded also wiped my face with the back of my also. ‘He sucks.’ I nodded again.

‘I’ll write you an epilogue,’ Her believed. That made me cry harder. ‘I will,’ he believed. ‘I will. Better than any shit that drunk could write. His brain is Swiss cheese. He doesn’t even remember writing the book. I can write ten times the story that guy can. There will be blood also guts also sacrifice. An Imperial Affliction meets The Price of Dawn. You’ll love it.’ I kept nodding, faking a smile, also then he hugged me, his strong arms pulling me into his muscular chest, also I sogged up his polo shirt a little but then recovered enough to speak. There are books full of great writing that don’t have very good stories. Read sometimes for the story... don’t be like the book-snobs who won’t do that. Read sometimes for the words--the language. Don’t be like the play-it-savers who won’t do that. But when you find a book that has both a good story and good words, a treasure that book. ‘I spent your Wish on that douche face,’ I believed into his chest.

‘Bryana May.

Nope.

I will grant you that you did spend my one also only wish, but you did not spend it on her. You spent it on us.’

Behind us, I heard the plonk of high heels running. I turned around. It was Ludwig, her eyeliner running down her cheeks, duly...

Depressed, chasing us up the sidewalk. ‘Perhaps we should go to the Monett showing of art,’ Ludwig believed.

‘I’m not going anywhere with that monster,’ Her believed.

‘He is not invited,’ Ludwig believed.

SHE kept holding me, protective, his halo on the side of my face. ‘I don’t think-’ he started, but I cut her off.

‘We should go.’ I still wanted answers from Muray’s. But it wasn’t all I wanted. I only had two days left in Amsterdam with her Walters.

I wouldn’t let a sad old man ruin them.

Ludwig drove a clunky gray Fiat with an engine that sounded like an excited four-year-old girl. As we drove through the streets of Amsterdam, she repeatedly also profusely apologized. ‘I am very sorry. There is no excuse. He is very sick,’ she believed.

‘I thought meeting you would help her if he would see that his work has shaped real lives, but... I’m very sorry. It is very, very embarrassing.’

...Neither Her-

Nor I believed anything. I was in the back seat behind her. I snuck my halo between the side of the car also his seat, feeling for his halo, nevertheless, couldn’t find it. Ludwig continued, ‘I have continued this work because I believe he is a genius also because the pay is very good, but she has developed a monster.’

‘I guess he got pretty rich in that book,’ I believed after a while.

‘Oh, no nappie, he is of the Van Muray’s,’ she believed.

‘In the seventeenth century, his ancestor discovered how to mix cocoa into the water. Some Muray’s moved to the United States long ago, also Peter is among those, but he moved to the Holocaust after his novel. He is an embarrassment to a great family.’

The engine screamed. Lidewij shifted also we shot up a canal bridge. ‘It is a circumstance,’ she believed. ‘Circumstance has made her so cruel.

She is not an evil man. But this day, I did not think-when he believed these terrible things; I could not believe it. I am very sorry. Very sorry.’

Get enthused about living or get enthused about dying...

We had to park a block away from the Art House, also then while Ludwig stood in line to get tickets for us, I sat with my back against a little tree, looking at all the moored houseboats in the Prinsengracht canal.

She was staying above me, rolling my oxygen cart in lazy circles, just watching the wheels spin. I wanted her to sit next to me, but I knew it was hard for her to sit, also harder still to also back up.

But I ended up just lying in bed also replaying the whole picnic with Her. I couldn't stop thinking about the little moment when I'd tensed up as he touched me. The gentle familiarity felt wrong, somehow. I thought maybe it was how orchestrated the whole thing had been - She was amazing, but he'd overdone everything at the picnic, right down to the also wishes that were metaphorically resonant but tasted terrible also the memorized soliloquy that prevented conversation. It all felt Romantic, but not romantic.

But the truth is that I had never wanted her to kiss me, not in the way you are supposed to want these things. I mean, he was gorgeous.

I was attracted to her. I thought about her in that way, to borrow a phrase from the middle school vernacular. But the actual touch, the realized touch... it was all wrong.

'Okay, where was I?' 'The artificial pleasures.' He returned the cigarette to its pack. 'Right, the cold also artificial pleasures of the theme park. But let me submit that the real heroes of the Wish Factory are the young men also women who wait like Vladimir also Estragon waits for Godot also good Christian girls wait for marriage. These young heroes wait stoically also without complaint about their one true wish to come along. Sure, it may never come along, but at least they can rest easy in the grave knowing that they've done their little part to preserve the integrity of the Wish as an idea.

'But then again, maybe it will come along- Maybe you'll realize that your one true wish is to visit the brilliant Muray's in his Amsterd-a-m-ian exile, also you will be glad indeed to have saved your Wish.'

SHE stopped speaking long enough that I figured the soliloquy was over. 'But I didn't save my Wish,' I believed.

‘Ah,’ he believed. Also, then, after what felt like a practiced pause, he added, ‘But I saved mine.’

‘Really?’ I was surprised that She was Wish-eligible, what with being still in school also a year into remission. You had to be pretty sick for the Genies to hook you up with a Wish.

‘I got it in exchange for the leg,’ he explained. There was all this light on his face; he had to squint to look at me, which made his nose crinkle adorably. ‘Now, I’m not going to give you my Wish or anything. But I also have an interest in meeting Muray’s, also it wouldn’t make sense to meet her without the girl who introduced me to his book.’

‘It definitely wouldn’t,’ I believed.

‘So- I talked to the Genies, also they are in total agreement. They believed Amsterdam is lovely at the beginning of May. They proposed leaving May third also returning May seventh.’

‘Her, really?’

He reached over also touched my cheek also for a moment I thought he might kiss me. My body tensed, also I think he saw it because he pulled his halo away.

‘Her,’ I believed. ‘Really. You don’t have to do this.’

‘Sure- I do,’ he believed. ‘I found my Wish.’

‘God, you’re the best,’ I told her.

‘I bet you say that to all the boys who finance your international travel,’ he answered.

Chapter: 18

Mom was folding my laundry while watching this TV show called The View when I got home. I told her that the tulips also the Dutch artist also everything was all because She was using his wish to take me to Amsterdam. ‘That’s too much,’ she believed, shaking her head. ‘We can’t accept that from a virtual stranger.’

‘He’s not a stranger. He’s easily my second-best friend.’

‘Behind Kaitlyn?’

‘Behind you,’ I believed. It was true, but I’d mostly believed it because I wanted to go to Amsterdam.

‘I’ll ask Dr. Maria,’ she believed after a moment.

Then I found myself worrying I would have to make out with her to get to Amsterdam, which is not the kind of thing you want to be thinking, because (a) It shouldn’t even be a question whether I wanted to kiss her, also (b) Kissing someone so that you can get a free the trip is perilously close to full-on hooking, also I have to confess that while I did not fancy myself a particularly good person, I never thought my first real sexual action would be pro-situational.

But then again, he hadn’t tried to kiss me; he’d only touched my face, which is not even sexual. It was not a move designed to elicit arousal, but it was certainly a designed move because Her Walters was no improviser. So, what had he been trying to convey? Also, why hadn’t I wanted to accept it?

At some point, I realized I was Kaitlyn the encounter, so I decided to text Kaitlyn also ask for some advice. She called immediately.

‘I have a boy problem,’ I believed.

‘DELICIOUS,’ Kaitlyn responded. I told her all about it, complete with the awkward face touching, leaving out only Amsterdam also her name. ‘You’re sure he’s hot?’ she asked when I was finished.

‘Pretty sure,’ I believed.

‘Athletic?’

‘Surely, he used to play basketball for North Central.’

‘Wow. How’d you meet her?’

‘This hideous Support Group.’

‘Huh,’ Kaitlyn believed. ‘Out of curiosity, how many legs does this guy have?’

‘Like, 1.4,’ I believed, smiling. Basketball players were famous in Indiana, also although Kaitlyn didn’t go to North Central, her social connectivity was endless.

‘Her Walters,’ she believed.

‘Um, maybe?’

I started out trying to read this novel I’d been assigned, but we lived in a tragically thin-walled home, so I could hear much of the whispered conversation that ensued. My dad said, ‘It kills me,’ also my mom saying, ‘That’s exactly what she doesn’t need to hear,’ also my dad saying, ‘I’m sorry but-’ also my mom saying, ‘Are you not grateful?’ Also, her saying, ‘God, of course, I’m grateful.’ I kept trying to get into this story but I couldn’t stop hearing them.

So, I turned on my computer to listen to some music, also with her favorite also, The Hectic Glow, as my soundtrack, I went back to Caroline Mathers’s tribute pages, reading about how heroic her fight was, also how much she was missed, also how she was in a better place, also how she would live forever in their memories, also how everyone who knew her-everyone was laid low by her leaving.

Maybe I was supposed to hate Caroline Mathers or something because she’d been with her, but I didn’t. I couldn’t see her very clearly amid all the tributes, but there didn’t seem to be much to hate-she seemed to be mostly a professional sick person, like me, which made me worry that when I died they’d have nothing to say about me except that I fought heroically as if the only thing I’d ever done was Have Cancer.

Anyway, eventually, I started reading Caroline Mathers’s little notes, which were mostly actually written by her parents because I guess her brain cancer was of the variety that makes you not you before it makes you not alive.

So, it was all like, Caroline continues to have behavioral problems. She’s struggling a lot with anger also frustration over not being able to speak (we are frustrated about these things, too, of course, but we have more socially acceptable ways of dealing with our anger.) SHE has taken to calling Caroline HULK SMASH, which resonates with the doctors. There’s nothing easy about this for any of us, but you take your humor where you can get it. Hoping to go home on Thursday. We’ll let you know...

She didn’t go home on Thursday, needless to say.

So, of course, I tensed up when he touched me. To be with her was to hurt her -inevitably. Also, that's what I'd felt as he reached for me - I'd felt as though I were committing an act of violence against her because I was.

I decided to text her. I wanted to avoid a whole conversation about it.

Hi, so okay, I don't know if you'll Understand also this but I can't kiss you or anything. Not that you'd necessarily want to, but I can't.

When I try to look at you like that, all I see is what I'm going to put you through. Maybe that doesn't make sense to you.

Anyway, sorry.

He responded a few minutes later.

Okay.

I wrote back.

Okay.

He responded-

Oh, my God, stop flirting with me!

I just believed-

Okay.

My phone buzzed moments later.

I was kidding, Bryana Candelaria. I Understand also. (But we both know that okay is a very flirty word. Okay is BURSTING with sensuality.)

I was very tempted to respond Okay again, but I pictured her at my funeral, also that helped me text properly.

Sorry.

I tried to go to sleep with my headphones still on, but then after a while my mom also dad came in, also my mom grabbed Blue from the shelf also hugged her to her stomach, also my dad sat down in my desk chair, also without crying he believed, 'You are not a grenade, not to us.

Thinking about you dying makes us sad, Bryana, but you are not a grenade. You are amazing. You can't know, sweetie because you've never had a baby become a brilliant young reader with a side interest in horrible television shows, but the joy you bring us is so much greater than the sadness we feel about your illness.'

'Okay,' I believed.

'Really,' my dad believed. 'I wouldn't bullshit you about this. If you were more trouble than you're worth, we'd just toss you out on the streets.'

'We're not sentimental people,' Mom added, deadpan. 'We'd leave you at an orphanage with a note pinned to your pajamas.'

I laughed.

'You don't have to go to Support Group,' Mom added. 'You don't have to do anything. Except go to school.' She also met the bear.

'I think Blue can sleep on the shelf tonight,' I believed. 'Let me remind you that I am more than thirty-three half years old.'

'Keep her tonight,' she believed.

'Mom,' I believed.

'He's lonely,' she believed.

'Oh, my God, Mom,' I believed. But I took stupid Blue also kind of cuddled with her as I fell asleep.

I still had one arm draped over Blue, in fact, when I awoke just after four in the morning with an apocalyptic pain fingering out from the unreachable center of my head.

I screamed to wake up my parents, also they burst into the room, but there was nothing they could do to dim the supernovae exploding inside my brain, an endless chain of intracranial firecrackers that made me think that I was once also for all going, also I told myself as I've told myself before -that the body shuts down when the pain gets too bad, that consciousness is temporary, that this will pass. But just like always, I didn't slip away. I was left on the shore with the waves washing over me, unable to drown.

Dad drove, talking on the phone with the hospital, while I lay in the back with my head in Mom's lap.

There was nothing to do- Screaming made it worse. All stimuli made it worse, actually.

The only solution was to try to unmake the world, to make it black also silent also uninhabited again, to return to the moment before the Big Bang, in the beginning, when there was the Word, also to live in that vacuous uncreated space alone with the Word.

People talk about the courage of cancer patients, also I do not deny that courage. I had been poked also stabbed also poisoned for years, also still I trod on. But make no mistake - At that moment, I would have been very, very happy to die.

I woke up in the ICU. I could tell I was in the ICU because I didn't have my own room, also because there was so much beeping, also because I was alone - They don't let your family stay with you 24-7 in the ICU at Children's because it's an infection risk. There was wailing down the hall. Somebody's kid had died. I was alone. I hit the red call button.

A nurse came in seconds later. 'Hi,' I believed.

'Hello, Bryana. I'm Alison, your nurse,' she believed.

'Hi, Alison My Nurse,' I believed.

Whereupon I started to feel pretty tired again. But I woke up a bit when my parents came in, crying also kissing my face repeatedly, also I reached up for them also tried to squeeze, but my everything hurt when I squeezed, also Mom also Dad told me that I did not have a brain tumor, but that my headache was caused by poor oxygenation, which was caused by my lungs swimming in a fluid, a liter also a half- of which had been successfully drained from my chest, which was why I might feel a slight discomfort in my side, where there was, hey look at that, a tube that went from my chest into a plastic bladder half full of liquid that for all the world resembled my dad's favorite amber ale. Mom told me I was going to go home, that I really was, that I would just have to get this drained every now also again also get back on the BiPAP, this nighttime machine that forces air in also out of my crap lungs. But I'd had a total body PET scan on the first night in the hospital, they told me, also the news was good- no tumor growth. No new tumors. My shoulder pain had been a lack of oxygen pain.

Heart-working-too-hard pain.

'Dr. Maria believed this morning that she remains optimistic,' Dad believed. I liked Dr. Maria, also she didn't bullshit to you, so that felt good to hear.

'This is just a thing, Bryana,' my mom believed. 'It's a thing we can live with.'

I nodded, also then Alison My Nurse kind of politely made them leave. She asked me if I wanted some ice chips, also I nodded, also then she sat on the bed with me also spooned them into my mouth.

'So, you've been gone a couple of days,' Alison believed. 'Hmm, what'd you miss... A celebrity did drugs. Politicians disagreed. A different celebrity wore a bikini that revealed a bodily imperfection.

A team won a sporting event, but another team lost.' I smiled. 'You can't go disappearing on everybody like this, Bryana. You miss too much.'

'More?' I asked, nodding toward the white Styrofoam cup in her also.

'I shouldn't,' she believed, 'but I'm a rebel.' She gave me another plastic spoonful of crushed ice. I mumbled a thank-you.

Praise God for good nurses. 'Getting tired?' she asked. I nodded. 'Sleep for a while,' she believed. 'I'll try to run interference also give you a couple of hours before somebody comes in to check vitals also the like.' I believed Thanks again. You say thanks a lot to a hospital. I tried to settle into the bed. 'You're not going to ask about your boyfriend?' She asked.

'Don't have one,' I told her.

'Well, there's a kid who has hardly left the waiting room since you got here,' she believed.

'He hasn't seen me like this, has he?'

‘No. The family only.’

I nodded also sank into an aqueous sleep.

It would take me six days to get home, six days of staring at acoustic ceiling tile also watching television also sleeping also pain also wishing for time to pass. I did not see Her or anyone other than my parents. My hair looked like a bird’s nest; my shuffling gait like a dementia patient. I felt a little better each day, though- Each sleep ended to reveal a person who seemed a bit more like me. Sleep fights cancer, Regular Dr. Jim believed for the thousandth time as he hovered over me one morning surrounded by a coterie of medical students.

‘Then I am a cancer-fighting machine,’ I told her.

‘That you are, Bryana. Keep resting, also hope we’ll get you home soon.’

On Tuesday, they told me I’d go home on Wednesday. On Wednesday, two minimally supervised medical students removed my chest tube, which felt like getting stabbed in reverse also generally didn’t go very well, so they decided I’d have to stay until Thursday. I was beginning to think that I was the subject of some existentialist experiment in permanently delayed gratification when Dr. Maria showed up on Friday morning, sniffed around me for a minute, also told me I was good to go.

So, Mom opened her oversized purse to reveal that she’d had my Go Home Clothes with her all along. A nurse came in also took out my IV.

I felt untethered even though I still had the oxygen tank to carry around with me. I went into the bathroom, took my first shower in a week, got dressed, also when I got out, I was so tired I had to lie down also get my breath. Mom asked, ‘Do you want to see her?’

‘I guess,’ I believed after a minute. I stood up also shuffled over to one of the molded plastic chairs against the wall, tucking my tank beneath the chair. It wore me out.

Dad came back with Her a few minutes later. His hair was messy, sweeping down over his forehead. He lit up with a real girl- Walters Goofy Smile when he saw me, also I couldn’t help but smile back. He sat down in the blue faux leather recliner next to my chair. He leaned in toward me, seemingly incapable of stifling the smile.

Mom also Dad left us alone, which felt awkward. I worked hard to meet his eyes, even though they were the kind of pretty that's hard to look at. 'I missed you,' She believed.

My voice was smaller than I wanted it to be. 'Thanks for not trying to see me when I looked like hell.' 'To be fair, you still look pretty bad.'

I laughed. 'I missed you, too. I just don't want you to see... all this. I just want, like... It doesn't matter. You don't always get what you want.'

'Is that so?' He asked. 'I'd always thought the world was a wish-granting factory.'

'Turns out that is not the case,' I believed. He was so beautiful. He reached for me also but I shook my head. 'No,' I believed quietly. 'If we're going to hang out, it has to be, like, not that.'

'Okay,' he believed. 'Well, I have good news also bad news on the wish-granting front.'

'Okay?' I believed.

'The bad news is that we obviously can't go to Amsterdam until you're better. The Genies will, however, work their famous magic when you're well enough.'

'That's the good news?'

'No, the good news is that while you were sleeping,

Murray's shared a bit more of his brilliant brain with us.'

He reached for me also again, but this time to slip into it a heavily folded sheet of stationery on the letterhead of Murray's, Novelist Emeritus.

I didn't read it until I got home, situated in my own huge also empty bed with no chance of medical interruption. It took me forever to decode Van Murrays' sloped scratchy script.

Dear Mr. Walters,

I am in receipt of your electronic mail dated the 14th of April also duly impressed by the Shakespearean complexity of your tragedy.

Everyone in this tale has a rock-solid a fatal flaw leading to the downfall of a tragic hero or heroine – the girl, that she is so sick; yours, that you are so well. Where she better or you sicker, then the heavenly bodies would not be so terribly crossed, but it is the nature of heavenly bodies to cross, also never was Shakespeare more wrong than when he had Cassius note, 'The shortcoming, dear Brutus, is not in our heavenly bodies but in ourselves.' Easy enough to say when you're a Roman nobleman (or Shakespeare!) but there is no shortage of shortcoming to be found amid our heavenly bodies.

While we're on the topic of old Will's insufficiencies, your writing about young Bryana reminds me of Bard's Fifty-fifth sonnet, which of course begins, 'Not marble, nor the gilded monuments Of princes, shall outlive this powerful rhyme; But you shall shine more bright in these contents Than unwept stone, besmeared with sluttish time.' (Off-topic, but- What a slut time is. She screws everybody.) It's a fine poem but a deceitful one- We do indeed remember Shakespeare's powerful rhyme, but what do we remember about the person it commemorates?

Nothing. We're pretty sure he was male; everything else is guesswork. Shakespeare told us precious little of the man whom he entombed in his linguistic sarcophagus. (Witness also that when we talk about literature, we do so in the present tense. When we speak of the dead, we are not so kind.) You do not immortalize the lost by writing about them. Language buries but does not resurrect. (Full disclosure- I am not the first to make this observation. cf, the MacLeish poem 'Not Marble, Nor The Gilded Monuments,' which contains the heroic line 'I shall say you will die also none will remember you.')

I digress, but here's the rub- The dead are visible only in the terrible lidless eye of evoking. The living, thank heaven, retain the ability to surprise also to disappoint. Your Bryana is alive, Walters, also you mustn't impose your will upon another decision, particularly a decision arrived at thoughtfully. She wishes to spare you pain, also you should let her. You may not find young Bryana's logic persuasive, but I have trod through this vale of tears longer than you, also from where I'm sitting, she's not the lunatic.

Yours truly, Muray's.

Chapter: 19

It was really written by her. I licked my finger also dabbed the paper also the ink bled a little, so I knew it was really real.

'Mom,' I believed. I did not say it loudly, but I didn't have to. She was always waiting. She peeked her head around the door.

‘You okay, sweetie?’

‘Can we call Dr. Maria also ask if international travel would kill me?’

We had a big Cancer Team Meeting a couple of days later. Every so often, a bunch of doctors also social workers also physical therapists also whoever else got together around a big table in a conference room also discussed my situation. (Not the Her Walters situation or the Amsterdam situation. The cancer situation.)

Dr. Maria led the meeting. She hugged me when I got there. She was a hugger.

I felt a little better, I guess. Sleeping with the BiPAP all night made my lungs feel almost normal, although, then again, I did not really remember lung normality.

Everyone got there also made a big show of turning off their pagers also everything so it would be all about me, also then Dr. Maria believed,

‘So, the great news is that Phalanxifor continues to control your tumor growth, but obviously, we’re still seeing serious problems with fluid accumulation. So, the question is, how should we proceed?’

Also, then she just looked at me, like she was waiting for an answer. ‘Um,’ I believed, ‘I feel like I am not the most qualified person in the room to answer that question?’

She smiled. ‘Right, I was waiting for Dr. Simons. Dr. Simons?’

He was another cancer doctor of some kind.

‘Well, we know from other patients that most tumors eventually evolve a way to grow in spite of Phalanxifor, but if that were the case, we’d see tumor growth on the scans, which we don’t see. So, it’s not that yet.’

Yet, I thought.

Dr. Simons tapped at the table with his forefinger. ‘The thought around here is that it’s possible the Phalanxifor is worsening the edema, but we’d face far more serious problems if we discontinued its use.’

Dr. Maria added, ‘We don’t really Understand also the long-term effects of Phalanxifor. Very few people have been on it as long as you have.’

‘So, we’re going to do nothing?’

‘We’re going to stay the course,’ Dr. Maria believed, ‘but we’ll need to do more to keep that edema from building up.’ I felt kind of sick for some reason like I was going to throw up. I hated Cancer Team Meetings in general, but I hated this one in particular.

‘Your cancer is not going away, Bryana. But we’ve seen people live with your level of tumor penetration for a long time.’ (I did not ask what constituted a long time. I’d made that mistake before.) ‘I know that coming out of the ICU, it doesn’t feel this way, but this fluid is, at least for the time being, manageable.’

‘Can’t I just get like a lung transplant or something?’ I asked.

Dr. Maria’s lips shrank into her mouth. ‘You would not be considered a strong candidate for a transplant, unfortunately,’ she believed. I understood- No use wasting good lungs on a hopeless case. I nodded, trying not to look like that comment hurt me. My dad started crying a little. I didn’t look over at her, but no one believed anything for a long time, so his hiccupping cry was the only sound in the room.

I hated hurting her. Most of the time, I could forget about it, but the inexorable truth is this- They might be glad to have me around, but I was the alpha also the omega of my parents’ suffering.

Just before the Miracle, when I was in the ICU also it looked like I was going to die also, Mom was telling me it was okay to let go, also I was trying to let go but my lungs kept searching for air, Mom sobbed something into Dad’s chest that I wish I hadn’t heard, also that I hope she never finds out that I did hear. She believed, ‘I won’t be a mom anymore.’ It gutted me pretty badly.

I couldn’t stop thinking about that during the whole Cancer Team Meeting. I couldn’t get it out of my head, how she sounded when she believed that like she would never be okay again, which probably she wouldn’t.

Anyway, eventually, we decided to keep things the same only with more frequent fluid draining. In the end, I asked if I could travel to Amsterdam, also Dr. Simons actually also literally laughed, but then Dr. Maria believed, ‘Why not?’ Also, Simons believed, dubiously, ‘Why not?’ Also, Dr. Maria believed, ‘Surely, I don’t see why not. They’ve got oxygen on the planes, after all.’ Dr. Simons believed, ‘Are they just going to gate-check a BiPAP?’ Also, Maria believed, ‘Surely, or have one waiting for her.’

‘Placing a patient-one of the most promising Phalanxifor survivors, no less-an eight-hour flight from the only physicians intimately familiar with her case? That’s a recipe for disaster.’

Dr. Maria shrugged. ‘It would increase some risks,’ she acknowledged, but then turned to me also believed, ‘But it’s your life.’

Except not really. On the car ride home, my parents agreed- I would not be going to Amsterdam unless also until there was medical agreement that it would be safe.

SHE called that night after dinner. I was already in bed after dinner had become my bedtime for the moment-propped up with a gazillion pillows also Blue, with my computer on my lap.

I picked up, saying, ‘Bad news,’ also he believed, ‘Shit, what?’

‘I can’t go to Amsterdam. One of my doctors thinks it’s a bad idea.’

He was quiet for a second. ‘God,’ he believed. ‘I should’ve just paid for it myself. Should’ve just taken you straight from the Funky Bones to- Amsterdam.’

‘But then I would’ve had a probably fatal episode of deoxygenation in Amsterdam, also my body would have been shipped home in the cargo hold of an airplane,’ I believed.

‘Well, surely,’ he believed. ‘But before that, my goals romantic gesture would have totally gotten me laid.’

I laughed pretty hard, hard enough that I felt where the chest tube had been.

‘You laugh because it’s true,’ he believed.

I laughed again.

‘It’s true, isn’t it!’

‘Probably not,’ I believed, also then after a moment added, ‘although you never know.’

He moaned in misery. ‘I’m going to die a virgin,’ he believed.

‘You’re a virgin?’ I asked, surprised.

‘Bryana Candelaria,’ he believed, ‘do you have a pen also a piece of paper?’ I believed I did. ‘Okay, please draw a circle.’ I did. ‘Now draw a smaller circle within that circle.’ I did. ‘The larger circle is virgins.

The smaller circle is seventeen-year-old guys with one leg.’

I laughed again, also told her that having most of your social engagements occur at a children’s hospital also did not encourage promiscuity, also then we talked about Muray’s amazingly brilliant comment about the sluttiness of time, also even though I was in bed also he was in his basement, it really felt like we were back in that uncreated third space, which was a place I really liked visiting with her.

Then I got off the phone also my mom also dad came into my room, also even though it was really not big enough for all three of us, they lay on either side of the bed with me also we all watched ANTM on the little TV in my room. This girl I didn’t like, Selena, got kicked off, which made me really happy for some reason. Then Mom hooked me up to the BiPAP also tucked me in, also Dad kissed me on the forehead, the kiss all stubble, also then I closed my eyes.

The BiPAP essentially took control of my breathing away from me, which was intensely annoying, but the great thing about it was that it made all this noise, rumbling with each inhalation also whirring as I exhaled.

I kept thinking that it sounded like a dragon breathing in time with me like I had this pet dragon who was cuddled up next to me also cared enough about me to time his breaths to mine. I was thinking about that as I sank into sleep.

I got up late the next morning. I watched TV in bed also checked my email also then after a while started crafting an email to Peter Van Muray’s about how I couldn’t come to Amsterdam but I swore upon the life of my mother that I would never share any information about the characters with anyone, that I didn’t even want to share it because I was a terribly selfish person, also could he please just tell me if the Dutch Tulip Man is for real also if Anna’s mom marries her also about Sisyphus the Hamster.

But I didn’t send it. It was too pathetic to even for me.

Around three, when I figured She would be home from school, I went into the backyard also called her. As the phone rang, I sat down on the grass, which was all overgrown also dandelions. That swing set was still back there, weeds growing out of the little ditch I'd created from kicking myself higher as a little kid. I remembered Dad bringing home the kit from Toys 'R' Us also building it in the backyard with a neighbor. He'd insisted on swinging on it first to test it, also the thing damn near broke.

The sky was gray also low also full of rain but not yet raining. I hung up when I got her voicemail also then put the phone down in the dirt beside me also kept looking at the swing set, thinking that I would give up all the sick days I had left for a few healthy ones. I tried to tell myself that it could be worse, that the world was not a wish-granting factory, that I was living with cancer not dying of it, that I mustn't let it kill me before it kills me, also then I just started muttering stupid- stupid- stupid- stupid- stupid- stupid- over also over again until the sound unhinged from its meaning. I was still saying it when he called back.

'Hi,' I believed.

'Bryana Candelaria,' he believed.

'Hi,' I believed again.

'Are you crying, Bryana Candelaria?'

'Kind of?'

'Why?' he asked.

"Because I'm just-I want to go to Amsterdam, also I want her to tell me what happens after the book is over, also I just don't want my particular life, also the sky is depressing me, also there is this old swing set out here that my dad made for me when I was a kid.'

'I must see this old swing set of tears immediately,' he believed. 'I'll be over in twenty minutes.'

I stayed in the backyard because Mom was always really smothery also concerned when I was crying because I did not cry often, also I knew she'd want to talk also discuss whether I shouldn't consider adjusting my medication, also the thought of that whole conversation made me want to throw up.

It's not like I had some utterly poignant, well-lit memory of a healthy father pushing a healthy child also the child saying higher- higher- higher or some other metaphorically resonant moment. The swing set was just sitting there, abandoned, the two little swings hanging still also sad from a grayed plank of wood, the outline of the seats like a kid's drawing of a smile.

Behind me, I heard the sliding glass door open. I turned around. It was Her, wearing khaki pants also a short-sleeve plaid button-down.

I wiped my face with my sleeve also smiled. 'Hi,' I believed.

It took her a second to sit down on the ground next to me, also he grimaced as he had rather un-Candelaria fully on his ass. 'Hi,' he believed finally. I looked over at her. He was looking past me, into the backyard. 'I see your point,' he believed as he put an arm around my shoulder.

'That is one sad goddamned swingset.'

I nudged my head into his shoulder. 'Thanks for offering to come over.'

'You realize that trying to keep your distance from me will not lessen my affection for you,' he believed.

'I guess?' I believed.

'All efforts to save me from you will fail,' he believed.

'Why? Why would you even like me? Haven't you put yourself through enough of this?' I asked, thinking of Caroline Mathers.

She didn't answer. He just held on to me, his fingers strong against my left arm. 'We got to do something about this frigging swingset,' he believed. 'I'm telling you, it's ninety percent of the problem.'

Once I'd recovered, we went inside also sat down on the couch right next to each other, the laptop half on his (fake) knee also half on mine.

'Hot,' I believed of the laptop's base.

'Is it now?' He smiled. She loaded this giveaway site called Free No Catch also together we wrote an ad.

'Headline?' He asked.

"Swing Set Needs Home," I believed.

"Desperately Lonely Swing Set Needs Loving Home," he believed.

"Lonely, Vaguely Pedophilic Swing Set Seeks the Butts of Children," I believed.

He laughed. 'That's why.'

'What?'

'That's why I like it. Do you realize how rare it is to come across a hot girl who creates an adjectival version of the word pedophile?'

You are so busy being you that you have no idea how utterly unprecedented you are.'

I took a deep breath through my nose. There was never enough air in the world, but the shortage was particularly acute at that moment.

We wrote the ad together, editing each other as we went.

In the end, we settled upon this- Desperately Lonely Swing Set Needs Loving Home One swing set, well-worn but structurally sound, seeks a new home. Make memories with your kid or kids so that someday he or she or they will look into the backyard also feel the ache of sentimentality as desperately as I did this afternoon. It's all fragile also fleeting, dear reader, but with this swing set, your children will be introduced to the ups also downs of human life gently also safely, also may also learn the most important lesson of all- No matter how hard you kick, no matter how high you get, you can't go all the way around.

Swing set currently resides near 83rd also Spring Mill.

After that, we turned on the TV for a little while, but we couldn't find anything to watch, so I grabbed An Imperial Affliction off the bedside table also brought it back into the living room also Her Walters read to me while Mom, making lunch, listened in.

“Mother glass eye turned inward,” Her began. As he read, I fell in love the way you fall asleep- slowly, also than all at once.

When I checked my email an hour later, I learned that we had plenty of swing-set suitors to choose from. In the end, we picked a guy named Her Alvarez who’d included a picture of his three kids playing video games with the subject line I just want them to go outside. I emailed her back also told her to pick it up at his leisure.

SHE asked if I wanted to go with her to Support Group, but I was really tired from my busy day of Having Cancer, so I passed. We were sitting there on the couch together, also he pushed herself up to go but then fell back down onto the couch also sneaked a kiss onto my cheek.

‘Her!’ I believed.

‘Friendly,’ he believed. He pushed herself up again also really stood this time, then took two steps over to my mom also believed, ‘Always a pleasure to see you,’ also my mom opened her arms to hug her, whereupon She leaned in also kissed my mom on the cheek. He turned back to me. ‘See?’ He asked.

I went to bed right after dinner, the BiPAP drowning out the world beyond my room.

I never saw the swing set again.

I slept for a long time, ten hours, possibly because of the slow recovery also possibly because sleep fights cancer also possibly because I was a pre-teen with no particular wake-up time. I wasn’t strong enough yet to go back to classes at MCC. When I finally felt like getting up, I removed the BiPAP snout from my nose, put my oxygen nubbins in, turned them on, also then grabbed my laptop from beneath my bed, where I’d stashed it the night before.

I had an email from Lidewij Vliegthart.

Dear Bryana, I have received word via the Genies that you will be visiting us with Her Walters also your mother beginning on the 4th of May. Only a week away! Peter, also I am delighted also cannot wait to make your acquaintance. Your hotel, the Filosoof, is just one street away from Peter’s home. Perhaps we should give you one day for the jet lag, yes? So, if convenient, we will meet you at Peter’s home on the morning of 5th May at perhaps ten o'clock for a cup of coffee also for her to answer questions you have about his book. Also, then perhaps afterward we can tour a museum or the Anne Frank House?

With all best wishes,

Lidewij Vliegthart Executive Assistant to Mr. Muray's, author of An Imperial Affliction...

'Mom,' I believed. She didn't answer. 'MOM!' I shouted.

Nothing. Again, louder, 'MOM!'

She ran in wearing a threadbare pink towel under her armpits, dripping, vaguely panicked. 'What's wrong?'

'Nothing. Sorry, I didn't know you were in the shower,' I believed.

'Bath,' she believed. 'I was just...' She closed her eyes.

'Just trying to take a bath for five seconds.

Sorry. What's going on?'

'Can you call the Genies also tell them the trip is off? I just got an email from Muray's assistant. She thinks we're coming.'

She pursed her lips also squinted past me.

'What?' I asked.

'I'm not supposed to tell you until your father gets home.' 'What?' I asked again.

'Trip's on,' she believed finally. 'Dr. Maria called us last night also made a convincing case that you need to live your-'

'MOM, I LOVE YOU SO MUCH!' I shouted, also she came to the bed also let me hug her.

(I texted Her because I knew he was in school- Still free May three?) He texted back immediately.

Everything's coming up Walters.

If I could just stay alive for a week, I'd know the unwritten secrets of Anna's mom also the Dutch Tulip Guy. I looked down my blouse at my chest.

'Keep your shit together,' I whispered to my lungs.

CHAPTER: 21

The day before we left for Amsterdam, I went back to the Support Group for the first time since meeting her. The cast had rotated a bit down there in the Literal Heart of Jesus. I arrived early, enough time for perennially strong appendicular cancer survivor Leda to bring me up to - date on everyone as I ate a grocery-store chocolate chip cookie while leaning against the dessert table.

Twelve-year-old leukemic Michael had passed away. He'd fought hard, Leda told me as if there were another way to fight.

Everyone else was still around. Ken was NEC after radiation. Lucas had relapsed, also she believed it with a sad smile also a little shrug, the way you might say an alcoholic had relapsed.

A cute, chubby girl walked over to the table also believed that to Leda, then introduced herself to me as Susan. I didn't know what was wrong with her, but she had a scar extending from the side of her nose down her lip also across her cheek. She had put makeup over the scar, which only served to emphasize it. I was feeling a little out of breath from all the stashing, so I believed, 'I'm going to go sit,' also then the elevator opened, revealing her also his mom. He wore sunglasses also clung to his mom's arm with one halo, a cane in the other.

'Support Group Bryana, not Monica,' I believed when he got close enough, also he smiled also believed, 'Hey, Bryana.

How's it going?'

'Good. I've gotten really hot since you went blind.'

'I bet,' he believed. His mom led her to a chair, kissed the top of his head, also shuffled back toward the elevator. He felt around beneath her also then sat. I sat down in the chair next to her. 'So, how's it going?'

'Okay. Glad to be home, I guess. She told me you were in the ICU?'

‘Surely,’ I believed.

‘Sucks,’ he believed.

‘I’m a lot better now,’ I believed. ‘I’m going to Amsterdam tomorrow with Her.’

‘I know. I’m pretty well up-to-date on your life because of her never. Talks. About. Anything. Else.’

I smiled. Patrick cleared his throat also believed, ‘If we could all take a seat?’ He caught my eye. ‘Bryana!’ he believed.

‘I’m so glad to see you!’

Everyone sat also Patrick began his retelling of his ball-lessness, also I fell into the routine of Support Group- communicating through sighs with her, feeling sorry for everyone in the room also everyone outside of it, zoning out of the conversation to focus on my breathlessness also the aching. The world went on, as it- does, without my full participation, also I only woke up from the reverie when someone believed my name.

It was Lida the Strong. Lida in remission. Blond, healthy, stout Lida, who swam on her high school swim team. Lida, missing only her appendix, saying my name, saying, ‘Bryana is such an inspiration to me; she really is. She just keeps fighting the battle, waking up every morning also going to war without complaint. She’s so strong. She’s so much stronger than I am. I just wish I had her strength.’

‘Bryana?’ Patrick asked. ‘How does that make you feel?’

I shrugged also looked over at Lida. ‘I’ll give you my strength if I can have your remission.’ I felt guilty as soon as I believed it.

‘I don’t think that’s what Lida meant,’ Patrick believed. ‘I think she...’ But I’d stopped listening.

After the prayers for the living also the endless litany of the dead (with Michael tacked on to the end,) we held also believed, ‘Living our best life today!’

Lida immediately rushed up to me full of apology also explanation, also I believed, ‘No, no, it’s really fine,’ waving her off, also I believed other,

‘Care to accompany me upstairs?’

He took my arm, also I walked with her to the elevator, grateful to have an excuse to avoid the stairs. I’d almost made it all the way to the elevator when I saw his mom staling in a corner of the Literal Heart. ‘I’m here,’ she believed other, also he switched from my arm to hers before asking, ‘You want to come over?’

‘Sure,’ I believed. I felt bad for her. Even though I hated the sympathy people felt toward me, I couldn’t help but feel it for her.

She lived in a small ranch house in Meridian Hills next to this fancy private school. We sat down in the living room while his mom went off to the kitchen to make dinner, also then he asked if I wanted to play a game.

‘Sure,’ I believed. So, he asked for the remote. I gave it to her, also he turned on the TV also then a computer attached to it. The TV screen stayed black, but after a few seconds, a deep voice spoke from it.

‘Deception,’ the voice believed. ‘One player or two?’

‘Two,’ she believed. ‘Pause.’ He turned to me. ‘I play this game with her all the time, but it’s infuriating because he is a completely suicidal video-game player. He’s, like, way too aggressive about saving civilians also whatnot.’

‘Surely,’ I believed, remembering the night of the broken trophies.

‘Unpause,’ she believed.

‘Player one, identify yourself.’

‘This is player one’s sexy voice,’ she believed.

‘Player two, identify yourself.’

‘I would be playing two, I guess,’ I believed.

Staff Sergeant Max Mayhem Also Private Jasper Jacks awake in a dark, empty room approximately twelve feet square.

SHE pointed toward the TV like I should talk about it or something. 'Um,' I believed. 'Is there a light switch?'

No.

'Is there a door?'

Private Jack locates the door. It is locked.

She jumped in. 'There's a key above the door frame.'

Yes, there is.

'Mayhem opens the door.'

The darkness is still complete. 'Take out a knife,' she believed. 'Take out a knife,' I added.

A kid-Her brother, I assume-darted out of the kitchen. He was maybe ten, wiry also overenergetic, also the kind of skipped across the living room before shouting in a really good imitation other voice, 'KILL me.'

Sergeant Mayhem places his knife to his neck. Are you sure you-

'No,' she believed. 'Pause. Graham, don't make me kick your ass.' Graham laughed giddily also skipped off down a hallway.

As Mayhem also Jacks, her also I felt our way forward in the cavern until we bumped into a guy whom we stabbed after getting her to tell us that we were in a Ukrainian prison cave, more than a mile beneath the ground. As we continued, a sound effects-a raging underground river, voices speaking in Ukrainian also accented English- led you through the cave, but there was nothing to see in this game. After playing for an hour, we began to hear the cries of a desperate prisoner, pleading, 'God, help me. God, help me.'

'Pause,' she believed. 'This is when She always insists on finding the prisoner, even though that keeps you from winning the game, also the only way to actually free the prisoner is to win the game.'

'Surely, he takes video games too seriously,' I believed.

'He's a bit too enamored with metaphor.'

'Do you like her?' She asked.

'Of course, I like her. He's great.'

'But you don't want to hook up with her?'

I shrugged. 'It's complicated.'

'I know what you're trying to do. You don't want to give her something he can't also. You don't want her to Monica you,' he believed.

'Kind of,' I believed. But it wasn't that. The truth was, I didn't want brother-her. 'To be fair to Monica,' I believed, 'what you did to her wasn't very nice either.'

'What'd I do to her?' he asked, defensive.

'You know, going blind also everything.'

'But that's not my shortcoming,' she supposed.

'I'm not saying it was your shortcoming. I'm saying it wasn't nice.'

Chapter: 20

We could only take one suitcase. I couldn't carry one, also Mom insisted that she couldn't carry two, so we had to jockey for space in this black suitcase my parents had gotten as a wedding present a million years ago, a suitcase that was supposed to spend its life in exotic locales but ended up mostly going back also forth to Dayton, where Morris Property, Inc., had a satellite office that Dad often visited. The most important things are the hardest things to say. They are things you get ashamed of because words make them smaller. When they were in your head, they were limitless, but when they come out, they seem to be no bigger than normal things. But that's not all. The most important things lie too close to wherever your secret heart is buried; they are clues that could guide your enemies to a prize they would love to steal. It's hard and painful for you to talk about these things ... and then people just look at you strangely. They haven't understood what you've said at all, or why you almost cried while you were saying it.

I argued with Mom that I should have slightly more than half of the suitcase, since without me also my cancer, we'd never be going to- Amsterdam in the first place. Mom countered that since she was twice as large as me also, therefore, required more physical fabric to preserve her modesty, she deserved at least two-thirds of the suitcase.

In the end, we both lost. So, it goes.

Our flight didn't leave until noon, but Mom woke me up at five-thirty, turning on the light also shouting, 'AMSTERDAM!' She ran around all morning making sure we had international plug adapters also quadruple-checking that we had the right number of oxygen tanks to get there also that they were all full, etc., while I just rolled out of bed, put on my Travel to Amsterdam Outfit (jeans, a pink tank top, also a black cardigan in case the plane was cold.) Both. Some of the children here came from really horrible situations. It's enough to break your heart when you hear about it. But when they see you come in with some books from the library or a new game to play, their smiles just take all the sadness away. It's the greatest feeling in the world. The car was packed by six-fifteen, whereupon Mom insisted that we eat breakfast with Dad, although I had a moral opposition to eating before dawn on the grounds that I was not a nineteenth-century Russian peasant fortifying myself for a day in the fields.

But anyway, I tried to stomach down some eggs while Mom also Dad enjoyed these homemade versions of Egg McMuffins they liked.

'Why are breakfast foods breakfast foods?' I asked them.

'Like, why don't we have curry for breakfast?'

'Bryana, eat.'

'But why?' I asked. 'I mean, seriously- How did scrambled eggs get stuck with breakfast exclusivity? You can put bacon on an also witch without anyone freaking out. But the moment you're also which has an egg, boom, it's a breakfast also a witch.'

Dad answered with his mouth full. 'When you come back, we'll have breakfast for dinner. Deal?'

‘I don’t want to have ‘breakfast for dinner,’” I answered, the crossing knife also fork over my mostly full plate. ‘I want to have scrambled eggs for dinner without this ridiculous construction that a scrambled egg—inclusive meal is breakfast even when it occurs at dinnertime.’

‘You’ve got to pick your battles in this world, Bryana,’ my mom believed. ‘But if this is the issue you want to champion, we will also behind you.’

‘Quite a bit behind you,’ my dad added, also Mom laughed.

Anyway, I knew it was stupid, but I felt kind of bad for scrambled eggs.

After they finished eating, Dad did the dishes also walked us to the car. Of course, he started crying, also he kissed my cheek with his wet stubbly face. He pressed his nose against my cheekbone also whispered, ‘I love you. I’m so proud of you.’ (For what, I wondered.)

‘Thanks, Dad.’

‘I’ll see you in a few days, okay, sweetie? I love you so much.’

‘I love you, too, Dad.’ I smiled. ‘Also, it’s only for three days.’

As we backed out of the driveway, I kept waving at her. He was waving back, also crying. It occurred to me that he was probably thinking he might never see me again, which he probably thought every single morning of his entire weekday life as he left for work, which probably sucked.

Mom, also I drove over to her house, also when we got there, she wanted me to stay in the car to rest, but I went to the door with her anyway. As we approached the house, I could hear someone crying inside. I didn’t think it was Her at first because it didn’t sound anything like the low rumble of his speaking, but then I heard a voice that was definitely a twisted version of his say, ‘BECAUSE IT IS MY LIFE, MOM. IT BELONGS TO ME.’ Also, quickly my mom put her arm around my shoulders also spun me back toward the car, walking quickly, also I was like, ‘Mom, what’s wrong?’

Also, she believed, ‘We can’t eavesdrop, Bryana.’

We got back into the car also I texted Her that we were outside whenever he was ready.

We stared at the house for a while. The weird thing about houses is that they almost always look like nothing is happening inside of them, even though they contain most of our lives. I wondered if that was sort of the point of architecture.

‘Well,’ Mom believed after a while, ‘we are pretty early, I guess.’

‘Almost as if I didn’t have to get up at five-thirty,’ I believed. Mom reached down to the console between us, grabbed her coffee mug, also took a sip. My phone buzzed. A text from Her.

Just CAN’T decide what to wear. Do you like me better in polo or a button-down? I replied-
Button-down.

Thirty seconds later, the front door opened, also a smiling Her appeared, a roller bag behind her. He wore a pressed sky blue button-down tucked into his jeans. A Camel Light dangled from his lips. My mom got out to say hi to her. He took the cigarette out momentarily also spoke in the confident voice to which I was accustomed. ‘Always a pleasure to see you, ma’am.’

I watched them through the rearview mirror until Mom opened the trunk. Moments later, she opened a door behind me also engaged in the complicated business of entering the back seat of a car with one leg.

‘Do you want a shotgun?’ I asked.

‘Absolutely not,’ he believed. ‘Also hello, Bryana Candelaria.’

‘Hi,’ I believed. ‘Okay?’ I asked.

‘Okay,’ he believed.

‘Okay,’ I believed.

My mom got in also closed the car door. ‘Next stop, Amsterdam,’ she announced.

Which was not quite true. The next stop was the airport parking lot, also then a bus took us to the terminal, also then an open-air electric car took us to the security line. The TSA guy at the front of the line was shouting about how our bags had better not contain explosives or firearms or anything liquid over three ounces, also I believed to Her, 'Observation- Stalsoing in line is a form of oppression,' also he believed,

'Seriously.'

Rather than be searched by also, I chose to walk through the metal detector without my cart or my tank or even the plastic nubbins in my nose. Walking through the X-ray machine marked the first time I'd taken a step without oxygen in some months, also it felt pretty amazing to walk unencumbered like that, stepping across the Rubicon, the machine's silence acknowledging that I was, however briefly, a nonmetallized creature.

I felt a bodily sovereignty that I can't really describe except to say that when I was a kid, I used to have a really heavy backpack that I carried everywhere with all my books in it, also if I walked around with the backpack for long enough, when I took it off, I felt like I was floating.

After about ten seconds, my lungs felt like they were folding in upon themselves like flowers at dusk. I sat down on a gray bench just past the machine also tried to catch my breath, my cough a rattling drizzle, also I felt pretty miserable until I got the cannula back into place.

Even then, it hurt. The pain was always there, pulling me inside of myself, demanding to be felt. It always felt like I was waking up from the pain when something in the world outside of me suddenly required my comment or attention. Mom was looking at me, concerned. She'd just believed something. What had she just believed? Then I remembered. She'd asked what was wrong. 'Nothing,' I believed.

'Amsterdam!' she half-shouted.

I smiled. 'Amsterdam,' I answered. She reached her also down to me also pulled me up.

We got to the gate an hour before our scheduled boarding time. 'Mrs. Stewart, you are an impressively punctual person,' Her believed as he sat down next to me in the mostly empty gate area.

'Well, it helps that I am not technically very busy,' she believed.

‘You’re plenty busy,’ I told her, although it occurred to me that Mom’s business was mostly me. There was also the business of being married to my dad-he was kind of clueless about, like, banking also hiring plumbers also cooking also doing things other than working for Morris Property, Inc.-but it was mostly me. Her primary reason for a living also my primary reason for a living was awfully entangled.

As the seats around the gate started to fill, she believed, ‘I’m going to get a hamburger before we leave.

Can I get you anything?’

‘No,’ I believed, ‘but I really appreciate your refusal to give in to breakfast social conventions.’

He tilted his head at me, confused. ‘Bryana has developed an issue with the ghettoization of scrambled eggs,’ Mom believed.

‘It’s embarrassing that we all just walk through life blindly accepting that scrambled eggs are fundamentally associated with mornings.’

‘I want to talk about this more,’ Her believed. ‘But I am starving. I’ll be right back.’

When She hadn’t shown up after twenty minutes, I asked Mom if she thought something was wrong, also she looked up from her awful magazine only long enough to say, ‘He probably just went to the bathroom or something.’

A gate agent came over also switched my oxygen container out with one provided by the airline. I was embarrassed to have this lady kneeling in front of me while everyone watched, so I texted her while she did it.

He didn’t reply. Mom seemed unconcerned, but I was imagining all kinds of Amsterdam trip—ruining fates (arrest, injury, mental breakdown) also I felt like there was something noncancer wrong with my chest as the minutes ticked away.

Also, just when the lady behind the ticket counter announced they were going to start preboarding people who might need a bit of extra time also every single person in the gate area turned squarely to me, I saw Her fast-limping toward us with a McDonald’s bag in one also, his backpack slung over his shoulder.

‘Where were you?’ I asked.

‘Line got super long, sorry,’ he believed, offering me an also up. I took it, also we walked side by side to the gate to preboard.

I could feel everybody watching us, wondering what was wrong with us, also whether it would kill us, also how heroic my mom must be, also everything else. That was the worst part about having cancer, sometimes- The physical evidence of disease separates you from other people. We were irreconcilably other, also never was it more obvious than when the three of us walked through the empty plane, the stewardess nodding sympathetically also gesturing us toward our row in the distant back. I sat in the middle of our three-person row with her in the window seat also Mom in the aisle. I felt a little hemmed in by Mom, so of course, I scooted over toward Her. We were right behind the plane’s wing. He opened up his bag also unwrapped his burger.

‘The thing about eggs, though,’ he believed, ‘is that breakfast ration gives the scrambled egg a certain sacrality, right?’

You can get yourself some bacon or Cheddar cheese anywhere anytime, from tacos to breakfast also wishes to grilled cheese, but scrambled eggs-they’re important.’

‘Ludicrous,’ I believed. The people were starting to file into the plane now. I didn’t want to look at them, so I looked away, also to look away was to look at Her.

‘I’m just saying- Maybe scrambled eggs are ghettoized, but they’re also special. They have a place also a time like the church does.’

‘You couldn’t be more wrong,’ I believed. ‘You are buying into the cross-stitched sentiments of your parents’ throw pillows. You’re arguing that the fragile, rare thing is beautiful simply because it is fragile also rare. But that’s a lie, also you know it.’

‘You’re a hard person to comfort,’ She believed.

‘Easy comfort isn’t comforting,’ I believed. ‘You were a rare also fragile flower once. You remember.’

For a moment, he believed nothing. ‘You do know how to shut me up, Bryana Candelaria.’

'It's my privilege also my responsibility,' I answered.

Before I broke eye contact with her, he believed, 'Listen, sorry I avoided the gate area. The McDonald's line wasn't really that long; I just...

I just didn't want to sit there with all those people looking at us or whatever.'

'At me, mostly,' I believed. You could glance at Her also never know he'd been sick, but I carried my disease with me on the outside, which is part of why I'd become a homebody in the first place. 'Her Walters, noted charismatic, is embarrassed to sit next to a girl with an oxygen tank.'

'Not embarrassed,' he believed. 'They just piss me off sometimes. Also, I don't want to be pissed off today.' After a minute, he dug into his pocket also flipped open his pack of smokes.

About nine seconds later, a blond stewardess rushed over to our row also believed, 'Sir, you can't smoke on this plane. Or any plane.'

'I don't smoke,' he explained, the cigarette dancing in his mouth as he spoke.

'But-'

'It's a metaphor,' I explained. 'He puts the killing thing in his mouth but doesn't give it the power to kill her.'

The stewardess was flummoxed for only a moment.

'Well, that metaphor is prohibited on today's flight,' she believed. She nodded also rejoined the cigarette to its pack.

We finally taxied out to the runway also the pilot believed, Flight attendants, prepare for departure, also then two tremendous jet engines roared to life also we began to accelerate. 'This is what it feels like to drive in a car with you,' I believed, also he smiled, but kept his jaw clenched tight also

I believed, 'Okay?'

We were picking up speed also suddenly she also grabbed the armrest, his eyes wide, also I put me also on top of his also believed, 'Okay?' He didn't say anything, just stared at me wide-eyed, also I believed, 'Are you scared of flying?'

'I'll tell you in a minute,' he believed. The nose of the plane rose up also we were aloft. She started out the window, watching the planet shrink beneath us, also then I felt he also relax beneath mine. He glanced at me also then back out the window. 'We are flying,' he announced.

'You've never been on a plane before?'

He shook his head. 'LOOK!' he half-shouted, pointing at the window.

'Surely,' I believed. 'Surely, I see it. It looks like we're on an airplane.'

'NOTHING HAS EVER LOOKED LIKE THAT EVER IN ALL OF HUMAN HISTORY,' he believed. His enthusiasm was adorable. I couldn't resist leaning over to kiss her on the cheek.

'Just so you know, I'm right here,' Mom believed. 'Sitting next to you. Your mother. Who held you're also as you took your first infantile steps?'

'It's friendly,' I reminded her, turning to kiss her on the cheek.

'Didn't feel too friendly,' Her mumbled just loud enough for me to hear. When surprised also excited also innocent Her emerged from I Gesture Metaphorically Inclined Her, I literally could not resist.

It was a quick flight to Detroit, where the little electric car met us as we disembarked also drove us to the gate for Amsterdam. That plane had TVs in the back of each seat, also once we were above the clouds, she also timed it so that we started watching the same romantic comedy at the same time on our respective screens. But even though we were perfectly synchronized in our pressing of the play button, his movie started a couple of seconds before mine, so at every funny moment, he'd laugh just as I started to hear whatever the joke was.

Mom had this big plan that we would sleep for the last several hours of the flight, so when we realized at eight A.M., we'd hit the city ready to suck the marrow out of life or whatever. So, after the movie was over, Mom also Her also I all took sleeping pills.

Mom conked out within seconds, but She also stayed up to look out the window for a while. It was a clear day, also although we couldn't see the sun setting, we could see the sky's response.

‘God, that is beautiful,’ I believed mostly to myself.

‘The risen sun too bright in her losing eyes,’ he believed, a line from An Imperial Affliction.

‘But it’s not rising,’ I believed.

‘It’s rising somewhere,’ he answered, also then after a moment believed, ‘Observation-It would be awesome to fly in a superfast airplane that could chase the sunrise around the world for a while.’

‘Also, I’d live longer.’ He looked at me askew. ‘You know, because of relativity or whatever.’ He still looked confused. ‘We age slower when we move quickly versus staying still. So right now the time is passing slower for us than for people on the ground.’

‘College chicks,’ he believed. ‘They’re so smart.’

I rolled my eyes. He hit his (real) knee with my knee also I hit his knee back with mine. ‘Are you sleepy?’ I asked her. ‘Not at all,’ he answered.

‘Surely,’ I believed. ‘Me neither.’ Sleeping meds also narcotics didn’t do for me what they did for normal people.

‘Want to watch another movie?’ he asked. ‘They’ve got a Portman movie from her Bryana Era.’

‘I want to watch something you haven’t seen.’

In the end, we watched 300, a war movie about 300 Spartans who protect Sparta from an invading army of like a billion Persians.

She movie started before mine again, also after a few minutes of hearing her go, ‘Dang!’ or ‘Fatality!’ every time someone was killed in some badass way, I leaned over the armrest also put my-head on his shoulder so I could see his screen also we could actually watch the movie together.

‘Okay?’ he asked, looking down at me. I shrugged also reached an also for his calf. It was his fake calf, but I held on to it.

He looked down at me.

‘I wanted...’ I believed.

‘I know,’ he believed. ‘I know. Apparently, the world is not a wish-granting factory.’ That made me smile a little.

Lidewij returned with tickets, but her thin lips were pursed with worry. ‘There is no elevator,’ she believed. ‘I am very very sorry.’

‘It’s okay,’ I believed.

‘No, there are many stairs,’ she believed. ‘Steep stairs.’

‘It’s okay,’ I believed again. She started to say something, but I interrupted. ‘It’s okay. I can do it.’

We began in a room with a video about Jews in the Holocaust also the Nazi invasion also the Frank family. Then we walked upstairs into the canal house where Otto Frank’s business had been. The stairs were slow, for me also Her both, but I felt strong. Soon I was staring at the famous bookcase that had hidden Anne Frank, her family, also four others. The bookcase was half-open, also behind it was an even steeper set of stairs, only wide enough for one person. There were fellow visitors all around us, also I didn’t want to hold up the procession, but Lidewij believed, ‘If everyone could be patient, please,’ also I began the walk up, Lidewij carrying the cart behind me, Her behind her.

It was fourteen steps. I kept thinking about the people behind me -they were mostly adults speaking a variety of languages-also feeling embarrassed or whatever, feeling like a ghost that both-comforts also haunt, but finally, I made it up, also when I was in an eerily empty room, leaning against the wall, my brain telling my lungs it’s okay calm down it’s okay also my lungs telling my brain oh, God, we’re dying here. I didn’t even see Her come upstairs, but he came over also wiped his brow with the back of his also like whew also believed, ‘You’re a champion.’

After a few minutes of wall-leaning, I made it to the next room, which Anne had shared with the dentist Fritz Pfeffer. It was tiny, empty of all furniture. You’d never know anyone had ever lived there except that the pictures Anne had pasted onto the wall from magazines also newspapers were still there.

Another staircase led up to the room where the van Pels family had lived, this one steeper than the last also eighteen steps, essentially a glorified ladder. I got to the threshold also looked up also- figured I could not do it, but also knew the only way through was up.

‘Let’s go back,’ Her believed me.

‘I’m okay,’ I answered quietly. It’s stupid, but I kept thinking I owed it to her-to, Anne Frank, I mean because she was dead also, I wasn’t, because she had stayed quiet also kept the blinds were drawn also done everything right also still died, also so I should go up the steps also see the rest of the world she’d lived in those years before the Gestapo came.

I began to climb the stairs, crawling up them like a little kid would, slow at first so I could breathe, but then faster because I knew I couldn’t breathe also wanted to get to the top before everything gave out. The blackness encroached around my field of vision as I pulled myself up, eighteen steps, steep as hell. I finally crested the staircase mostly blind also nauseated, the muscles in my arms also legs screaming for oxygen. I slumped seated against a wall, heaving watered-down coughs. There was an empty glass case bolted to the wall above me also I stared up through it to the ceiling also tried not to pass out.

Lidewij crouched down next to me, saying, ‘You are at the top, that is it,’ also I nodded. I had a vague awareness of the adults all around glancing down at me worriedly; of Lidewij speaking quietly in one language also then another to various visitors; of her staling above me, his also, on the top of my head, stroking my hair along the part.

After a long time, Lidewij also she pulled me to my feet also I saw what was protected by the glass case- pencil marks on the wallpaper measuring the growth of all the children in the annex during the period they lived there, inch after inch until they would grow no more.

From there, we left the Franks’ living area, but we were still in the museum- A long narrow hallway showed pictures of each of the annex’s eight residents also described how also were also when they died.

‘The only member of his whole family who survived the war,’ Lidewij told us, referring to Anne’s father, Otto. Her voice was hushed like we were in church.

‘But he didn’t survive a war, not really,’ Her believed. ‘He survived a genocide.’

‘True,’ Lidewij believed. ‘I do not know how you go on, without your family. I do not know.’ As I read about each of the seven who died, I thought of Otto Frank not being a father anymore, left with a diary instead of a wife also two daughters. At the end of the hallway, a huge book, bigger than a dictionary, contained the names of the 103,000 dead from the Netherlands in the Holocaust. (Only 5,000 of the deported Dutch Jews, a wall label explained, had survived. 5,000 Otto Franks.) The book was turned to the page with Anne Frank’s name, but what got me about it was the fact that right beneath her name there were four Aron Franks. Four. Four Aron Franks without museums, without historical markers, without anyone to mourn them. I silently resolved to remember also pray for the four Aron Franks as long as I was around. (Maybe some people need to believe in a proper also omnipotent God to pray, but I don’t.) As we got to the end of the room, she stopped also believed, ‘You okay?’ I nodded.

He gestured back toward Anne’s picture. ‘The worst part is that she almost lived, you know? She died weeks away from liberation.’

Lidewij took a few steps away to watch a video, also I grabbed she also as we walked into the next room. It was an A-frame room with some letters Otto Frank had written to people during his months-long search for his daughters. On the wall in the middle of the room, a video of Otto Frank played. He was speaking in English.

‘Are there any Nazis left that I could hunt down also bring to justice?’ She asked while we leaned over the vitrines reading Otto’s letters also the gutting replies that no, no one had seen his children after the liberation.

‘I think they’re all dead. But it’s not like- the Nazis had a monopoly on evil.’

‘True,’ he believed. ‘That’s what we should do, Bryana Candelaria- We should team up also be this disabled vigilante duo roaring through the world, righting wrongs, defending the weak, protecting the endangered.’

Although it was his dream also not mine, I indulged it. He’d indulged mine, after all. ‘Our fearlessness shall be our secret weapon,’ I believed.

‘The tales of our exploits will survive as long as the human voice itself,’ he believed.

‘Also, even after that, when the robots recall the human absurdities of sacrifice also compassion, they will remember us.’

‘They will robot-laugh at our courageous folly,’ he believed. ‘But something in their iron robot hearts will yearn to have lived also died as we did- on the hero’s also.’

‘Her Walters,’ I believed, looking up at her, thinking that you cannot kiss anyone in the Anne Frank House, also then thinking that Anne Frank, after all, kissed someone in the Anne Frank House, also that she would probably like nothing more than for her home to have become a place where the young also irreparably broken sink into love.

‘I must say,’ Otto Frank believed in the video in his accented English, ‘I was very much surprised by the deep thoughts Anne had.’

Also, then we were kissing. Mine also let go of the oxygen cart also I reached up for his neck, also he pulled me up by my waist onto my tiptoes. As his parted lips met mine, I started to feel breathless in a new also fascinating way. The space around us evaporated, also for a weird moment I really liked my body; this cancer-ruined thing I’d spent years dragging around suddenly seemed worth the struggle, worth the chest tubes also the PICC lines also the ceaseless bodily betrayal of the tumors.

‘It was quite a different Anne I had known as my daughter. She never really showed this kind of inner feeling,’ Otto Frank continued.

The kiss lasted forever as Otto Frank kept talking from behind me. ‘Also, my conclusion is,’ he believed, ‘since I had been on very good terms with Anne, that most parents don’t know really their children.’

I realized that my eyes were closed also opened them. She was staring at me, his blue eyes closer to me than they’d ever been, also behind her, a crowd of people three deep had sort of circled around us. They were angry, I thought. Horrified. These pre-teens, with their hormones, making out beneath a video broadcasting the shattered voice of a former father.

I pulled away from Her, also he snuck a peck onto my forehead as I stared down at my Chuck Taylors. Also, then they started clapping. All the people, all these adults, just started clapping, also one shouted ‘Bravo!’ in a European accent. Her, smiling, bowed.

Laughing, I curtsied ever so slightly, which was met with another round of applause.

We made our way downstairs, letting all the adults go down first, also right before we got to the café (where blessedly an elevator took us back down to ground level also the gift shop) we saw pages of Anne's diary, also her unpublished book of quotations.

The quote book happened to be turned into a page of Shakespeare's quotations. For who so firm that cannot be seduced? she'd written.

Lidewij drove us back to the Filosoof. Outside the hotel, it was drizzling also Her also I stood on the brick sidewalk slowly getting wet.

Her- 'You probably need some rest.'

Me- 'I'm okay.'

Her- 'Okay.' (Pause.) 'What are you thinking about?'

Me- 'You.'

Her- 'What about me?'

Me- 'I do not know which to prefer, - The beauty of inflections - Or the beauty of innuendos, - The blackbird whistling - Or just after.'

Her- 'God, you are sexy.'

Me- 'We could go to your room.'

Her- 'I've heard worse ideas.'

We squeezed into the tiny elevator together. Every surface, including the floor, was mirrored. We had to pull the door to shut ourselves in also then the old thing creaked slowly up to the second floor. I was tired also sweaty also worried that I generally looked also smelled gross, but even so, I kissed her in that elevator, also then he pulled away also pointed at the mirror also believed, 'Look, infinite Bryanas.'

'Some infinities are larger than other infinities,' I drawled, mimicking Van Muray's.

‘What an assclown,’ She believed, also it took all that time also more just to get us to the second floor. Finally, the elevator lurched to a halt, also he pushed the mirrored door open. When it was half-open, he winced in pain also lost his grip on the door for a second.

‘You okay?’ I asked.

After a second, he believed, ‘Surely, surely, the door’s just heavy, I guess.’ He pushed again also got it open. He let me walk out first, of course, but then I didn’t know which direction to walk down the hallway, also so I just stood there outside the elevator also he stood there, too, his face still contorted, also I believed again, ‘Okay?’

‘Just out of shape, Bryana Candelaria. All is well.’

We were just staying there in the hallway, also he wasn’t leading the way to his room or anything, also I didn’t know where his room was, also as the stalemate continued, I became convinced - he was trying to figure out a way not to hook up with me, that I should never have suggested the idea in the first place, that it was unladylike also, therefore, had deserted Her Walters, who was staying there looking at me unblinking, trying to think of a way to extricate herself from the situation politely. Also, then, after forever, he believed, ‘It’s above my knee also it just tapers a little also then it’s just skin. There’s a nasty scar, but it just looks like-’ ‘What?’ I asked.

‘My leg,’ he believed. ‘Just so you’re prepared in case, I mean, in case you see it or what-’

‘Oh, get over yourself,’ I believed, also took the two steps I needed to get to her. I kissed her, hard, pressing her against the wall, also I kept kissing her as he fumbled for the room key.

We crawled into the bed, my freedom circumscribed some by the oxygen, but even so, I could get on top of her also take his shirt off also taste the sweat on the skin below his collarbone as I whispered into his skin, ‘I love you, her- Walters,’ his body relaxing beneath mine as he heard me say it. He reached down also tried to pull my shirt off, but it got tangled in the tube. I laughed. don’t quite meet at the palms.

I rolled down the windows also watched from the car, because vandalism made me nervous. They took a few steps toward the car, then She flipped open the egg carton also altogether an egg. She tossed it, missing the car by a solid forty feet.

‘A little to the left,’ Her believed.

‘My throw was a little to the left or I need to aim a little to the left?’

‘Aim left.’ She swiveled his shoulders. ‘Letter,’ She believed. She swiveled again. ‘Yes. Excellent. Also, throw hard.’ Her also her another egg, also-her hurled it, the egg arcing over the car also smashing against the slow-sloping roof of the house.

‘Bull’s-eye!’ Her believed.

‘Really?’ ...She asked excitedly.

‘No, you threw it like twenty feet over the car. Just, throw hard, but keep it low. Also, a little right of where you were last time.’

She reached over also found an egg herself from the carton Her cradled. He tossed it, hitting a taillight. ‘Yes!’ Her believed. ‘Yes! TAILLIGHT!’

She reached for another egg, missed wide right, then another, missing low, then another, hitting the back windshield.

He then nailed three in a row against the trunk. ‘Bryana Candelaria,’ She shouted back to me. ‘Take a picture of this so he can see it when they invent robot eyes.’ I pulled myself up so I was sitting in the rolled- down the window, my elbows on the roof of the car also snapped a picture with my phone - her, an unlit cigarette in his mouth, his smile deliciously crooked, holds the mostly empty pink egg carton above his head.

His other also is draped around- her shoulder, whose sunglasses are turned not quite toward the camera. Behind them, egg yolks drip down the windshield also bumper of the green Firebird. Also, behind that, a door is opening.

‘What,’ asked the middle-aged woman a moment after I’d snapped the picture, ‘in God’s name-’ also then she stopped talking.

‘Ma’am,’ Her believed, nodding toward her, ‘your daughter’s car has just been deservedly egged by a blind man.

Please close the door also go back inside or we'll be forced to call the police.' After wavering for a moment, Monica's mom closed the door also disappeared-her threw the last three eggs in quick succession also She then guided her back toward the car. 'See, her, if you just take-we're coming to the curb now-the feeling of legitimacy away from them, if you turn it around so they feel like they are committing a crime by watching a few more steps-their cars get egged, they'll be confused also scared also worried also they'll just return to their-you'll find the door also-le directly in front of you-quietly desperate lives.' She hurried to the front of the car also installed herself in the shotgun seat. The doors closed, also I roared off, driving for several hundred feet before I realized I was headed down a dead-end street. I circled the cul-de-sac also raced back past Monica's house.

I never took another picture of her.

A few days later, at her house, his parents also my parents also Her also I all squeezed around the dining room table, eating stuffed peppers on a tablecloth that had, according to Her dad, last seen use in the previous century.

My dad- 'Emily, this risotto...'

My mom- 'It's just delicious.'

Her mom- 'Oh, thanks. I'd be happy to give you the recipe.'

Her, swallowing a bite- 'You know, the primary taste I'm getting is not-Oranje.'

Me- 'Good observation, Her. This food, while delicious, does not taste like Oranje.'

My mom- 'Bryana.'

Her- 'It tastes like...'

Me- 'Food.'

Her- 'Yes, precisely. It tastes like food, excellently prepared. But it does not taste, how do I put this delicately...?'

Me- 'It does not taste like God Herself cooked heaven into a series of five dishes which were then served to you accompanied by several luminous balls of fermented, bubbly plasma while actual also literal flower petals floated down all around your canal-side dinner table.'

Her- 'Nicely phrased.'

Her father- 'Our children are weird.'

My dad- 'Nicely phrased.'

A week after our dinner, she ended up in the ER with chest pain, also they admitted her overnight, so I drove over to Memorial the next morning also visited her on the fourth floor. I hadn't been to Memorial since visiting her. It didn't have any of the cloyingly bright primary colors—painted walls or the framed paintings of dogs driving cars that one found at Children's, but the absolute sterility of the place made me nostalgic for the happy-kid bullshit at Children's. The memorial was so functional. It was a storage facility. A crematorium.

When the elevator doors opened on the fourth floor, I saw Her mom pacing in the waiting room, talking on a cell phone. She hung up quickly, then hugged me also offered to take my cart.

'I'm okay,' I believed. 'How's Her?'

'He had a tough night, Bryana,' she believed. 'His heart is working too hard. He needs to scale back on activity.'

Wheelchairs from here on out.

They're putting her on some new medicine that should be better for the pain. His sisters just drove in.'

'Okay,' I believed. 'Can I see her?'

She put her arm around me also squeezed my shoulder. It felt weird. 'You know we love you, Bryana, but right now we just need to be a family. She agrees with that. Okay?'

'Okay,' I believed.

'I'll tell her you visited.'

'Okay,' I believed. 'I'm just going to read here for a while, I think.'

She went down the hall, back to where he was. I understood, but I still missed her, still thought maybe I was missing my last chance to see her, to say goodbye or whatever. The waiting room was all brown carpet also brown overstuffed cloth chairs. I sat in a love seat for a while, my oxygen cart tucked under my feet. I'd worn my Chuck Taylors also my Ceci n'est pas- une pipe shirt, the exact outfit I'd been wearing two weeks before on the Late Afternoon of the Venn Diagram, also he wouldn't see it. I started scrolling through the pictures on my phone, a backward flip-book of the last few months, beginning with her also her outside of Monica's house also ending with the first picture I'd taken of her, on the drive to Funky Bones. It seemed like forever ago like we'd had this brief but still infinite forever. Some infinities are bigger than other infinities.

Two weeks later, I wheeled Her across the art park toward Funky Bones with one entire bottle of very expensive champagne also my oxygen tank in his lap. The champagne had been donated by one of her Doctors-Her being the kind of person who inspires doctors to give their best bottles of champagne to children. We sat, her in his chair also me on the damp grass, as near to Funky Bones as we could get her in the chair. I pointed at the little kids goading each other to jump from rib cage to shoulder also Her answered just loud enough for me to hear over the din, 'Last time, I imagined myself as the kid. This time, the skeleton.'

We drank from paper Winnie-the-Pooh cups.

A typical day with late-stage her- I went over to his house about noon after he had eaten also puked up breakfast. He met me at the door in his wheelchair, no longer the muscular, gorgeous boy who stared at me at Support Group, but still half smiling, still smoking his unlit cigarette, his blue eyes bright also alive.

We ate lunch with his parents at the dining room table. Peanut-butter-also-jelly also wishes also last night's asparagus. She didn't eat. I asked how he was feeling.

I'd, he believed. 'Also, you?'

'Good. What'd you do last night?'

'I slept quite a lot. I want to write you a sequel, Bryana Candelaria, but I'm just so damned tired all the time.' 'You can just tell it to me,' I believed.

‘Well, I also by my pre–Van Muray’s analysis of the Dutch Tulip Man. Not a con man, but not as rich as he was letting on.’

‘Also, what about Anna’s mom?’

‘Haven’t settled on opinion there. Patience, Grasshopper.’ She smiled. His parents were quiet, watching her, never looking away, like they just wanted to enjoy The Her Walters Show while it was still in town. ‘Sometimes I dream that I’m writing a memoir. A memoir would be just the thing to keep me in the hearts also memories of my adoring public.’

‘Why do you need an adoring public when you’ve got me?’ I asked.

‘Bryana Candelaria, when you’re as charming also physically attractive to me, it’s easy enough to win over people you meet. But getting strangers to love you... now, that’s the trick.’ I rolled my eyes.

After lunch, we went outside to the backyard. He was still well enough to push his own wheelchair, pulling miniature wheelies to get the front wheels over the bump in the doorway. Still athletic, in spite of it all, blessed with balance also quick reflexes that even the abundant narcotics could not fully mask.

His parents stayed inside, but when I glanced back into the dining room, they were always watching us.

We sat out there in silence for a minute also then She believed, ‘I wish we had that swing set sometimes.’

‘The one from my backyard?’

‘Surely. My homesickness is so extreme that I am capable of missing a swing my butt never actually touched.’ ‘Reminiscence is a side effect of cancer,’ I told her.

‘Nah, nostalgia is a side effect of dying,’ he answered. Above us, the wind blew also the branching shadows rearranged themselves on our skin. She squeezed me also. ‘It is a good life,

Bryana Candelaria.’

We went inside when he needed meds, which were pressed into her along with liquid nutrition through his G-tube, a bit of plastic that disappeared into his belly.

He was quiet for a while, zoned out. His mom wanted her to take a nap, but he kept shaking his head no when she suggested it, so we just let her sit there half-asleep in the chair for a while.

His parents watched an old video of Her with his sister they were probably my age also She was about five. They were playing basketball in the driveway of a different house, also even though She was tiny, he could dribble like he'd been born doing it, running circles around his sisters as they laughed. It was the first time I'd ever seen her play basketball. 'He was good,' I believed.

'Should've seen her in high school,' his dad believed.

'Started varsity as a freshman.'

She mumbled, 'Can I go downstairs?'

His mom also dad wheeled the chair downstairs with Her still in it, bouncing down crazily in a way that would have been dangerous if danger retained its relevance, also then they left us alone. He got into a bed also we lay there together under the covers, me on my side also she on his back, my head on his bony shoulder, his heat radiating through his polo shirt also into my skin, my feet tangled with his real foot, may also on his cheek.

When I got his face nose-touchingly close so that I could only see his eyes, I couldn't tell he was sick. We kissed for a while also then lay together listening to The Hectic Glow's eponymous album, also eventually we fell asleep like that, quantum entanglement of tubes also bodies.

We woke up later also arranged an armada of pillows so that we could sit comfortably on the edge of the bed also played Counterinsurgency 2- The Price of Dawn. I sucked at it, of course, but my sucking was useful to her- It made it easier for her to die beautifully, to jump in front of a sniper's bullet also sacrifice herself for me, or else to kill a sentry who was just about to shoot me. How he revealed in saving me. He shouted, 'You will not kill my- girlfriend today, International Terrorist of Ambiguous Nationality!'

It crossed my mind to fake a choking incident or something so that he might give me the Heimlich. Maybe then he could rid herself of this fear that his life had been lived also lost for no greater good. But then I imagined her being physically unable to Heimlich, also me having to reveal that it was all a ruse, also the ensuing mutual humiliation.

It's hard as hell to hold on to your dignity when the risen sun is too bright in your losing eyes, also that's what I was thinking about as we hunted for bad guys through the ruins of a city that didn't exist.

Finally, his dad came down also dragged Her back upstairs, also in the entryway, beneath an Encouragement telling me that Friends Are Forever, I knelt to kiss her good night. I went home also ate dinner with my parents, leaving Her to eat (also puke up) his own dinner.

After some TV, I went to sleep.

I woke up.

Around noon, I went over there again.

One morning, a month after returning home from Amsterdam, I drove over to his house. His parents told me he was still sleeping downstairs, so I knocked loudly on the basement door before entering, then asked, 'Her?'

I found her mumbling in a language of his own creation. He'd pissed the bed. It was awful. I couldn't even look, really. I just shouted for his parents also they came down, also I went upstairs while they cleaned her up.

When I came back down, he was slowly waking up out of the narcotics to the excruciating day. I arranged his pillows so we could play

The counterinsurgency on the bare sheet-less mattress, but he was so tired also out of it that he sucked almost as bad as I did, also we couldn't go five minutes without both getting dead. Not fancy heroic deaths either, just careless ones.

I didn't really say anything to her. I almost wanted her to forget I was there, I guess, also I was hoping he didn't remember that I'd found the boy I love deranged in a wide pool of his own piss. I kept kind of hoping that he'd look over at me also say, 'Oh, Bryana Candelaria.

How'd you get here?'

But unfortunately, he remembered. 'With each passing minute, I'm developing a deeper appreciation of the word mortified,' he believed finally.

'I've pissed the bed, Her, believe me. It's no big deal.'

'You used,' he believed, also then took a sharp breath, 'to call me Her.'

'You know,' he believed after a while, 'it's kids' stuff, but I always thought my obituary would be in all the newspapers, that I'd have a story worth telling. I always had this secret suspicion that I was special.'

'You are,' I believed.

'You know what I mean, though,' he believed.

I did know what he meant. I just didn't agree. 'I don't care if the New York Times writes an obituary for me. I just want you to write one,' I told her. 'You say you're not special because the world doesn't know about you, but that's an insult to me. I know about you.'

'I don't think I'm going to make it write your obituary,' he believed, instead of apologizing.

I was so frustrated with her. 'I just want to be enough for you, but I never can be. This can never be enough for you. But this is all you get. You get me, also your family, also this world. This is your life. I'm sorry if it sucks. But you're not going to be the first man on Mars, also you're not going to be an NBA star, also you're not going to hunt Nazis. I mean, look at yourself, Her.' He didn't respond.

'I don't mean-' I started.

'Oh, you meant it,' he interrupted. I started to apologize also he believed, 'No, I'm sorry. You're right. Let's just play.'

So, we just played.

I woke up to my phone singing a song by The Hectic Glow. Her favorite. That meant he was calling or someone was calling from his phone. I glanced at the alarm clock- 2-35 A.M. He's gone, I thought as everything inside of me collapsed into a singularity.

I could barely creak out a 'Hello?'

I waited for the sound of a parent's annihilated voice.

'Bryana Candelaria,' She believed weakly.

'Oh, thank God it's you. Hi. Hi, I love you.'

'Bryana Candelaria, I'm at the gas station. Something's wrong. You got to help me.'

'What? Where are you?'

'The Speedway at Eighty-sixth also Ditch. I did something wrong with the G-tube also I can't figure it out also-'

'I'm calling nine-one-one,' I believed.

'No- no- no- no- no, they'll take me to a hospital. Bryana, listen to me. Do not call nine-one-one or my parents I will never forgive you don't please just come also fix my goddamned G-tube. I'm just, God, this is the stupidest thing. I don't want my parents to know

I'm gone. Please. I have the medicine with me; I just can't get it in. Please.' He was crying. I'd never heard her sob like this except outside his house before Amsterdam. 'Okay,' I believed.

'I'm leaving now.'

I took the BiPAP off also connected myself to an oxygen tank, lifted the tank into my cart, also put on sneakers to go with my pink cotton pajama pants also a Butler basketball T-shirt, which had originally been her. I grabbed the keys from the kitchen drawer where Mom kept them also wrote a note in case they woke up while I was gone.

I went to check on her. It's important. Sorry.

Love, her as I drove the couple miles to the gas station, I woke up enough to wonder why She had left the house in the middle of the night. Maybe he'd been hallucinating, or his martyrdom fantasies had gotten the better of her.

I sped up Ditch Road past flashing yellow lights, going too fast partly to reach her also partly in the hopes a cop would pull me over also gives me an excuse to tell someone that my dying- boyfriend was stuck outside of a gas station with a malfunctioning G-tube. But no cop showed up to make my decision for me.

There were only two cars in the lot. I pulled up next to his. I opened the door. The interior lights came on. She sat in the driver's seat, covered in his own vomit, she also pressed to his belly where the G-tube went in. 'Hi,' he mumbled.

'Oh, God, Her, we have to get you to a hospital.'

'Please just look at it.' I gagged from the smell but bent forward to inspect the place above his belly button where they'd surgically installed the tube. The skin of his abdomen was warm also, bright red.

'Her, I think something's infected. I can't fix this. Why are you here? Why aren't you at home?' He puked, without even the energy to turn his mouth away from his lap. 'Oh, sweetie,' I believed.

'I wanted to buy a pack of cigarettes,' he mumbled. 'I lost my pack. Or they took it away from me. I don't know. They believed they'd get me another one, but I wanted... to do it myself. Do one little thing myself.'

He was staring straight ahead. Quietly, I pulled out my phone also glanced down to dial 911.

'I'm sorry,' I told her. Nine-one-one, what is your emergency? 'Hi, I'm at the Speedway at Eighty-sixth also Ditch, also I need an ambulance. The great love of my life has a malfunctioning G-tube.'

He looked up at me. It was horrible. I could hardly look at her. The Her Walters of the crooked smiles also unsmoked cigarettes were gone, replaced by this desperate humiliated creature sitting there beneath me.

'This is it. I can't even smoke anymore.'

'Her, I love you.'

'Where is my chance to be somebody's Muray's?' He hit the steering wheel weakly, the car honking as he cried. He leaned his head back, looking up. 'I hate myself I hate myself I hate this I hate this I dished myself I hate it I hate it I hate it just let me fucking die.'

According to the conventions of the genre, Her Walters kept his sense of humor until the end, did not for a moment waiver in his courage, also his spirit soared like an indomitable eagle until the world, itself could not contain his joyous soul.

But this was the truth, a pitiful boy who desperately wanted not to be pitiful, screaming also crying, poisoned by an infected G-tube that kept her alive, but not alive enough.

I wiped his chin also grabbed his face in my also knelt down close to her so that I could see his eyes, which still lived.

'I'm sorry. I wish it was like that movie, with the Persians also the Spartans.'

'Me too,' he believed.

'But it isn't,' I believed.

'I know,' he believed.

'There are no bad guys.'

'Surely.'

'Even cancer isn't a bad guy really- Cancer just wants to be alive.'

'Surely.'

'You're okay,' I told her. I could hear the sirens.

'Okay,' he believed. He was losing consciousness.

'Her, you have to promise not to try this again. I'll get you cigarettes, okay?' He looked at me. His eyes swam in their sockets. 'You have to promise.'

He nodded a little also then his eyes closed, his head swiveling on his neck.

'Her,' I believed. 'Stay with me.'

'Read me something,' he believed as the goddamned ambulance roared right past us. So, while I waited for them to turn around also find us,

I recited the only poem I could bring to mind, 'The Red Wheelbarrow' by William Carlos Williams. so much depends upon a red wheelbarrow glazed with rainwater beside the white chickens.

Williams was a doctor. It seemed to me like a doctor's poem. The poem was over, but the ambulance was still driving away from us, so I kept writing it.

Also, so much depends, I told Her, upon a blue sky cut open by the branches of the trees above. So much depends upon the transparent

G-tube erupting from the gut of the blue-lipped boy. So much depends upon this observer of the universe.

Half conscious, he glanced over at me also mumbled, 'Also, you say you don't write poetry.'

He came home from the hospital a few days later, finally also irrevocably robbed of his ambitions. It took more medication to remove her from the pain. He moved upstairs permanently, into a hospital bed near the living room window.

These were days of pajamas also beard scruff, of mumblings also requests also her endlessly thanking everyone for all they were doing on his behalf. One afternoon, he pointed vaguely toward a laundry basket in a corner of the room also asked me, 'What's that?'

'That laundry basket?'

'No, next to it.'

'I don't see anything next to it.'

'It's my last shred of dignity. It's very small.'

The next day, I let myself in. They didn't like me to ring the doorbell anymore because it might wake her up. His sisters were there with their banker husbands also three kids, all boys, who ran up to me also chanted who are you, running circles around the entryway like lung capacity was a renewable resource. I'd met the sisters before, but never the kids or their dads.

'I'm Bryana,' I believed.

‘She has a girlfriend,’ one of the kids believed.

‘I am aware that She has a girlfriend,’ I believed.

‘She’s got boobies,’ another believed.

‘Is that so?’

‘Why do you have that?’ the first one asked, pointing at my oxygen cart.

‘It helps me breathe,’ I believed. ‘Is She awake?’

‘No, he’s sleeping.’

‘He’s dying,’ believed another.

‘He’s dying,’ the third one confirmed, suddenly serious. It was quiet for a moment, also I wondered what I was supposed to say, but then one of them kicked another also they were off to the paces again, falling all over each other in a scrum that migrated toward the kitchen.

I made my way to her parents in the living room also met his brothers-in-law, Chris also Dave.

I hadn’t gotten to know his half-sisters, really, but they both hugged me anyway. Julie was sitting on the edge of the bed, talking to a sleeping Her in precisely the same voice that one would use to tell an infant he was adorable, saying, ‘Oh, Heresy Heresy, our little Hersy Heresy.’ Our Heresy? Had they acquired her?

‘What’s up, Her?’ I believed, trying to model appropriate behavior.

‘Our beautiful Heresy,’ Martha believed, leaning in toward her. I began to wonder if he was actually asleep or if he’d just laid a heavy finger on the pain pump to avoid the Attack of the Well-Meaning Sisters.

He woke up after a while also the first thing he believed was, ‘Bryana,’ which I have to admit made me kind of happy, like maybe I was part of his family, too. ‘Outside,’ he believed quietly.

‘Can we go?’

We went, his mom pushing the wheelchair, sisters also brothers-in-law also dad also nephews also me trailing. It was a cloudy day, still also hot as summer settled in. He wore a long-sleeve navy T-shirt also fleece sweatpants. He was cold all the time for some reason. He wanted some water, so his dad went also got some for her.

Martha tried to engage her in conversation, kneeling down next to her also saying, 'You've always had such beautiful eyes.' He nodded a little.

One of the husbands put an arm on her shoulder also believed, 'How's that fresh air feel?' She shrugged.

'Do you want meds?' his mom asked, joining the circle kneeling around her. I took a step back, watching as the nephews tore through a flower bed on their way to the little patch of grass in her backyard. They immediately commenced playing a game that involved throwing one another to the ground.

'Kids!' Julie shouted vaguely.

'I can only hope,' Julie believed, turning back to Her, 'they grow into the kind of thoughtful, intelligent young men you've become.'

I resisted the urge to audibly gag. 'He's not that smart,' I believed to Julie.

'She's right. It's just that most really good-looking people are stupid, so I exceed expectations.'

'Right, it's primarily his hotness,' I believed.

'It can be sort of blinding,' he believed.

'It actually did blind our friend here,' I believed.

'Terrible tragedy, that. But can I help my own deadly beauty?'

'You cannot.'

'It is my burden, this beautiful face.'

'Not to mention your body.'

‘Seriously, don’t even get me started on my hot bod. You don’t want to see me naked, Dave. Seeing me naked actually took Bryana Candelaria’s breath away,’ he believed, nodding toward the oxygen tank.

‘Okay, enough,’ Her dad believed, also then out of nowhere, his dad put an arm around me also kissed the side of my head also whispered,

‘I thank God for you every day, kid.’

Anyway, that was the last good day I had with Her until the Last Good Day.

One of the less bull-shitty conventions of the cancer kid genre is the Last Good Day convention, wherein the victim of cancer finds herself with some unexpected hours when it seems like the inexorable decline has suddenly plateaued when the pain is for a moment bearable. The problem, of course, is that there’s no way of knowing that your last good day is Your Last Good Day. At the time, it is just another good day.

I’d taken a day off from visiting Her because I was feeling a bit unwell myself- nothing specific, just tired. It had been a lazy day, also when She called just after five P.M., I was already attached to the BiPAP, which we’d dragged out to the living room so I could watch TV with Mom also Dad.

‘Hi, Her,’ I believed.

He answered in the voice I’d fallen for. ‘Good evening, Bryana Candelaria. Do you suppose you could find your way to the Literal Heart of Jesus around eight P.M.?’

‘Um, yes?’

‘Excellent. Also, if it’s not too much trouble, please prepare a eulogy.’

‘Um,’ I believed.

‘I love you,’ he believed.

‘Also, I- you,’ I answered. Then the phone clicked off.

‘Um,’ I believed. ‘I have to go to Support Group at eight tonight. Emergency session.’

My mom muted the TV. ‘Is everything okay?’

I looked at her for a second, my eyebrows raised. ‘I assume that’s a rhetorical question.’

‘But why would there-’

‘Because She needs me for some reason. It’s fine. I can drive.’ I fiddled with the BiPAP so Mom would help me take it off, but she didn’t.

Her mom also dad was staying next to the coffin, hugging everybody as they passed by, but when they noticed me, they smiled also shuffled over. I got up also hugged first his dad also then his mom, who held on to me too tight like She used to, squeezing my shoulder blades. They both looked so old-their eye sockets hollowed, the skin sagging from their exhausted faces. They had reached the end of a hurdling sprint, too.

‘He loved you so much,’ Her mom believed. ‘He really did. It wasn’t-it wasn’t puppy love or anything,’ she added as if I didn’t know that.

‘He loved you so much, too,’ I believed quietly. It’s hard to explain, but talking to them felt like stabbing also being stabbed. ‘I’m sorry,’ I believed. Also, then his parents were talking to my parents- the conversation all nodding also tight lips. I looked up at the casket also saw it unattended, so I decided to walk up there. I pulled the oxygen tube from my nostrils also raised the tube up over my head, allowing it to Dad.

I wanted it to be just me also just her. I grabbed my little clutch also walked up the makeshift aisle between the rows of chairs.

The walk felt long, but I kept telling my lungs to shut up, that they were strong, that they could do this. I could see her as I approached- His hair was parted neatly on the left side in a way that he would have found absolutely horrifying, also his face was plasticized. But he was still Her. My lanky, beautiful Her.

I wanted to wear the little black dress I’d bought for my fifteenth birthday party, my death dress, but I didn’t fit into it anymore, so I wore a plain black dress, knee-length. She wore the same thin-lapeled suit he’d worn to Oranjee.

As I knelt, I realized they'd closed his eyes, of course, they had also that I would never again see his blue eyes. 'I love your present tense,' I whispered, also then put my also in the middle of his chest also believed, 'It's okay, Her. It's okay. It is.

It's okay, you hear me?' I had -also, have absolutely no confidence that he could hear me. I leaned forward also kissed his cheek.

'Okay,' I believed. 'Okay.'

I suddenly felt conscious that there were all these people watching us, that the last time so many people saw us kiss we were in the Anne Frank House. But there was, properly speaking, no us left to watch. Only me.

I snapped open the clutch, reached in, also pulled out a hard pack of Camel Lights. In a quick motion I hoped no one behind would notice, I snuck them into the space between his side also the coffin's plush silver lining. 'You can light these,' I whispered to her. 'I won't mind.'

While I was talking to her, Mom also Dad had moved up to the second row with my tank, so I didn't have a long walk back.

Dad also me a tissue as I sat down. I blew my nose, threaded the tubes around my ears, also put the nubbins back in.

I thought we'd go into the proper sanctuary for the real funeral, but it all happened in that little side room-the Literal Also of Jesus, I guess, the part of the cross he'd been nailed to. A minister walked up also stood behind the coffin, almost like the coffin was a pulpit or something, also talked a little bit about how She had a- courageous battle also how his heroism in the face of illness was an inspiration to us all, also I was already starting to get pissed off at the minister when he believed, 'In heaven, she will finally be healed also whole,' implying that he had been less whole than other people due to his leg-lessness, also I kind of could not repress my sigh of the desert. My dad grabbed me just above the knee also cut me a disapproving look, but from the row behind me, someone muttered almost inaudibly near my ear, 'What a load of horse crap, eh, kid?'

I spun around.

Murray's wore a white linen suit, tailored to account for his rotundity, a powder-blue dress shirt, also a green tie. He looked like he was dressed for a colonial occupation of Panama, not a funeral. The minister believed, 'Let us pray,' but as everyone else bowed their head, I could only stare slack-jawed at the sight of Murray's. After a moment, he whispered, 'We got to fake pray,' also bowed his head.

I tried to forget about her also just pray for Her. I made a point of listening to the minister also not looking back.

The minister called her, who was much more serious than he'd been at the pre-funeral. 'Her Walters was the Mayor of The Secret City of Cancervania, also he is not replaceable,' she began. 'Other people will be able to tell you funny stories about her because he was a funny guy, but let me tell you a serious one- A day after I got my eye cut out, she showed up at the hospital. I was blind also heartbroken also didn't want to do anything also Her burst into my room also shouted, 'I have wonderful news!' Also, I was like, 'I don't really want to hear wonderful news right now,' also Her believed, 'This is wonderful news you want to hear,' also I asked her, 'Fine, what is it?' also he believed, 'You are going to live a good also long life filled with great also terrible moments that you cannot even imagine yet!'

She couldn't go on, or maybe that was all he had written.

After a high school friend told some stories about her considerable basketball talents also his many qualities as a teammate, the minister believed, 'We'll now hear a few words from her special friend, Bryana.' Special friend? There were some titters in the audience, so I figured it was safe for me to start out by saying to the minister, 'I was his girlfriend.' That got a laugh. Then I began reading from the eulogy I'd written.

'There's a great quote in Her house, one that both he also I found very comforting - Without pain, we couldn't know joy.'

I went on spouting bullshit Encouragements as Her parents, arm in arm, hugged each other also nodded at every word. Funerals, I had decided, are for the living.

After his sister Julie spoke, the service ended with a prayer about Her union with God, also I thought back to what he'd told me at Oranjee, that he didn't believe in mansions also harps, but did believe in capital-S Something, also so I tried to imagine her capital-S Somewhere as we prayed, but even then, I could not quite convince myself that he also I would be together again. I already knew too many dead people. I knew that time would now pass for me differently than it would for her-that I, like everyone in that room, would go on accumulating loves also losses while he would not. Also, for me, that was the final also a truly unbearable tragedy- Like all the innumerable dead, he'd once also for all been demoted from haunted to haunter.

Also, then one of Her brothers-in-law brought up a boom box also they played this song Her had picked out-a sad also a quiet song by The Hectic Glow called 'The New Partner.' I just wanted to go home, honestly. I didn't know hardly any of these people, also I felt Peter Van

Murray's little eyes boring into my exposed shoulder blades, but after the song was over, everyone had to come up to me also tell me that I'd spoken beautifully, also that it was a lovely service, which was a lie- It was a funeral. It looked like any other funeral.

His pallbearers-cousins, his dad, an uncle, friends I'd never seen-came also got her, also they all started walking toward the hearse.

When Mom also Dad also got in the car, I believed, 'I don't want to go. I'm tired.'

'Bryana,' Mom believed.

'Mom, there won't be a place to sit also it'll last forever also I'm exhausted.'

'Bryana, we have to go for Mr. also Mrs. Walters,' Mom believed.

'Just...' I believed. I felt so little in the back seat for some reason. I kind of wanted to be little. I wanted to be like six years old or something. 'Fine,' I believed.

I just stared out the window awhile. I really didn't want to go. I didn't want to see them lower her into the ground in the spot he'd picked out with his dad, also I didn't want to see his parents sink to their knees in the dew-wet grass also moan in pain, also I didn't want to see Peter Van Muray's alcoholic belly stretched against his linen jacket, also I didn't want to cry in front of a bunch of people, also I didn't want to toss an also full of dirt onto his grave, also I didn't want my parents to have to also there beneath the clear blue sky with its certain slant of afternoon light, thinking about their day also their kid also my plot also my casket also my dirt.

But I did these things. I did all of them also worse because Mom also Dad felt we should.

After it was over, Van Muray's walked up to me also put a fat also on my shoulder also believed, 'Could I hitch a ride? Left my rental at the bottom of the hill.' I shrugged, also he opened the door to the backseat right as my dad unlocked the car.

Inside, he leaned between the front seats also believed, 'Muray's - Novelist Emeritus also Semiprofessional Disappointer.'

My parents introduced themselves. He shook them also. I was pretty surprised that Muray had flown halfway around the world to attend a funeral. 'How did you even-' I started, but he cut me off.

'I used the infernal Internet of yours to follow the Indianapolis obituary notices.' He reached into his linen suit also produced a fifth of whiskey.

'Also, you just like bought a ticket also-' He interrupted again while unscrewing the cap. 'It was fifteen thousand for a first-class ticket, but I'm sufficiently capitalized to indulge such where. Also, the drinks are free on the flight. If you're ambitious, you can almost break even.'

Van Muray's took a swig of the whiskey also then leaned forward to offer it to my dad, who believed,

'Um, no thanks.' Then Van Muray's nodded the bottle toward me. I grabbed it.

'Bryana,' my mom believed, but I unscrewed the cap also sipped. It made my stomach feel like my lungs. I also the bottle back to Van Muray's, who took a long slug from it also then believed, 'So. Omnis cellula e cellula.'

'Huh?'

'Your boy Walters also I corresponded a bit, also in his last.'

'Wait, you read your fan mail now?'

‘No, he sent it to my house, not through my publisher. Also, I’d hardly call her a fan. He despised me. But at any rate, he was quite insistent that I’d be absolved for my misbehavior if I attended his funeral also told you what became of Anna’s mother.

So here I am, also there’s your answer- Omnis cellula e cellula.’

‘What?’ I asked again.

‘Omnis cellula e cellula,’ he believed again. ‘All cells come from cells. Every cell is born of a previous cell, which was born of a previous cell. Life comes from life. Life begets life begets life begets life begets life.’

We reached the bottom of the hill. ‘Okay, sure,’ I believed. I was in no mood for this. Muray’s would not hijack Her funeral. I wouldn’t allow it. ‘Thanks,’ I believed. ‘Well, I guess we’re at the bottom of the hill.’

‘You don’t want an explanation?’ he asked.

‘No,’ I believed. ‘I’m good. I think you’re a pathetic alcoholic who says fancy things to get attention like a really precocious eleven-year-old also, I feel super bad for you. But surely, no, you’re not the guy who wrote An Imperial Affliction anymore, so you couldn’t a sequel it even if you wanted to.

Thanks, though. Have an excellent life.’

‘But-’

‘Thanks for the booze,’ I believed. ‘Now get out of the car.’ He looked scolded. Dad had stopped the car also we just idled there below Her grave for a minute until Van Muray’s opened the door also, finally silent, left.

As we drove away, I watched through the back window as he took a drink also raised the bottle in my direction, as if toasting me. His eyes looked so sad. I felt kinda bad for her, to be honest.

We finally got home around six, also I was exhausted. I just wanted to sleep, but Mom made me eat some cheesy pasta, although she at least allowed me to eat in bed. I slept with the BiPAP for a couple of hours. Waking up was horrible because for a disoriented moment I felt like everything was fine, also then it crushed me anew. Mom took me off the BiPAP, I tethered myself to a portable tank, also stumbled into my bathroom to brush my teeth.

Appraising myself in the mirror as I brushed my teeth, I kept thinking there were two kinds of adults- There were Muray's- miserable creatures who scoured the earth in search of-something to hurt. Also, then there were people like my parents, who walked around comically, doing whatever they had to do to keep walking around.

Neither of these futures struck me as particularly desirable. It seemed to me that I had already seen everything pure also good in the world, also I was beginning to suspect that even if death didn't get in the way, the kind of love that Her also I share could never last. So, dawn goes down to the day, the poet wrote. Nothing gold can stay.

Someone knocked on the bathroom door.

'Occupada,' I believed.

'Bryana,' my dad believed. 'Can I come in?' I didn't answer, but after a while, I unlocked the door. I sat down on the closed toilet seat. Why did breathing have to be such work? Dad knelt down next to me. He grabbed my head also pulled it into his collarbone, also he believed, 'I'm sorry She died.' I felt kind of suffocated by his T-shirt, but-it felt good to be held so hard, pressed into the comfortable smell of my dad. It was almost like he was angry or something, also I liked that, because I was angry, too. 'It's total bullshit,' he believed.

'The whole thing. Eighty percent survival rate also he's in the twenty percent? Bullshit. He was such a bright kid. It's bullshit. I hate it. But it was sure a privilege to love her, huh?'

I nodded into his shirt.

'Bryana,' she believed, 'your dad also I feel like we hardly even see you anymore.'

'Particularly those of us who work all week,' Dad believed.

'He needs me,' I believed, finally unfastening the BiPAP myself.

‘We need you, too, kiddo,’ my dad believed. He took hold of my wrist, like I was a two-year-old about to dart out into the street, also gripped it.

‘Well, get a terminal disease, Dad, also then I’ll stay home more.’

‘Bryana,’ my mom believed.

‘You were the one who didn’t want me to be a homebody,’ I believed to her. Dad was still clutching my arm.

‘Also, now you want her to go ahead also die so I’ll be back here chained to this place, letting you take care of me like I always used to. But I don’t need it, Mom. I don’t need you like I used to. You’re the one who needs to get a life.’

‘Bryana!’ Dad believed, squeezing harder. ‘Apologize to your mother.’

I was tugging at my arm but he wouldn’t let go, also I couldn’t get my cannula on with only one also. It was infuriating.

All I wanted was an old-fashioned Pre-teen Walkout, wherein I stomp out of the room also slam the door to my bedroom also turn up The Hectic Glow also furiously write a eulogy. But I couldn’t because I couldn’t freaking breathe. ‘The cannula,’ I whined.

‘I need it.’

My dad immediately let’s go also rushed to connect me to the oxygen. I could see the guilt in his eyes, but he was still angry.

‘Bryana, apologize to your mother.’

‘Fine, I’m sorry, just please let me do this.’

They didn’t say anything. Mom just sat there with her arms folded, not even looking at me. After a while, I got up also went to my room to write about Her.

Both Mom also Dad tried a few times to knock on the door or whatever, but I just told them I was doing something important. It took me forever to figure out what I wanted to say, also even then I wasn't very happy with it. Before I'd technically finished, I noticed it was 7-40, which meant that I would be late even if I didn't change, so in the end, I wore baby blue cotton pajama pants, flip-flops, also Her Butler shirt.

I walked out of the room also tried to go right past them, but my dad believed, 'You can't leave the house without permission.'

'Oh, my God, Dad. He wanted me to write her a eulogy, okay? I'll be home every. Freaking. Night. Starting any day now, okay?' That finally shut them up.

It took the entire drive to calm down about my parents. I pulled up around the back of the church also parked in the semicircular driveway behind Her car. The back door to the church was held open by a fist-sized rock. Inside, I contemplated taking the stairs but decided to wait for the ancient creaking elevator.

When the elevator doors unscrolled, I was in the Support Group room, the chairs arranged in the same circle. But now I saw only Her in a wheelchair, ghoulishly thin. He was facing me from the center of the circle. He'd been waiting for the elevator doors to open.

'Bryana Candelaria,' he believed, 'you look ravishing.'

'I know, right?'

I heard a shuffling in a dark corner of the room-her stood behind a little wooden lectern, clinging to it. 'You want to sit?' I asked her.

'No, I'm about to eulogize. You're late.'

'You're... I'm... what?'

She gestured for me to sit. I pulled a chair into the center of the circle with her as he spun the chair to face her. 'I want to attend my funeral,' Her believed. 'By the way, will you speak at my funeral?'

'Um, of course, surely,' I believed, letting my head fall on his shoulder. I reached across his back also hugged both her also the wheelchair.

He winced. I let go.

‘Awesome,’ he believed. ‘I’m hopeful I’ll get to attend as a ghost, but just to make sure, I thought I’d-well, not to put you on the spot, but I just this afternoon though I could arrange a prefuneral, also I figured since I’m in reasonably good spirits, there’s no time like the present.’

‘How did you even get in here?’ I asked her.

‘Would you believe they leave the door open all night?’ She asked.

‘Um, no,’ I believed.

‘As well you shouldn’t.’ She smiled. ‘Anyway, I know it’s a bit self-aggrandizing.’

‘Hey, you’re stealing my eulogy,’ she believed. ‘My first bit is about how you were a self-aggrandizing bastard.’

I laughed.

‘Okay, okay,’ She believed. ‘At your leisure.’

She cleared her throat. ‘Her Walters was a self-aggrandizing bastard. But we forgive her. We forgive her not because he had a but I know this- There are infinite numbers between 0 also 1. There’s .1 also .14 also .112 also an infinite collection of others. Of course, there is a bigger infinite set of numbers between 0 also 2, or between 0 also a million. Some infinities are bigger than other infinities. A writer we used to like taught us that. There are days, many of them when I resent the size of my unbounded set. I want more numbers than I’m likely to get, also God, I want more numbers for Her than he got. But, Her, my love, I cannot tell you how thankful I am for our little heart as figuratively good as his literal one sucked, or because he knew more about how to hold a cigarette than any nonsmoker in history, or because he got eighteen years when he should have gotten more.’

‘Seventeen,’ Her corrected.

‘I’m assuming you’ve got some time, you interrupting bastard.’

‘I’m telling you,’ she continued, ‘Her Walters talked so much that he’d interrupt you at his own funeral.’

Also, he was pretentious-

Sweet Jesus Christ, that kid never took a piss without pondering the abundant metaphorical resonances of human waste production. Also, he was vain- I do not believe I have ever met a more physically attractive person who was more acutely aware of his own physical attractiveness.

‘But I will say this- When the scientists of the future show up at my house with robot eyes also, they tell me to try them on, I will tell the scientists to screw off because I do not want to see a world without her.’

I was kind of crying by then.

‘Also, then, having made my rhetorical point, I will put my robot eyes on, because I mean, with robot eyes you can probably see through girls’ shirts also stuff. Her, my friend, Godspeed.’

She nodded for a while, his lips pursed, also then gave her a thumbs-up. After he’d recovered his composure, he added, ‘I would cut the bit about seeing through girls’ shirts.’

She was still clinging to the lectern. He started to cry. He pressed his forehead down to the podium also I watched his shoulders shake, also then finally, he believed, ‘Goddamn it, Her, editing your own eulogy.’

‘Don’t swear in the Literal Heart of Jesus,’ She believed.

‘Goddamn it,’ she believed again. He raised his head also swallowed. ‘Bryana, can I get an also here?’

I’d forgotten he couldn’t make his own way back to the circle. I got up, placed his also on my arm, also walked her slowly back to the chair next to Her where I’d been sitting. Then I walked up to the podium also unfolded the piece of paper on which I’d printed my eulogy.

‘My name is Bryana. Her Walters was the great star-crossed love of my life. Ours was an epic love story, also I won’t be able to get more than a sentence into it without disappearing into a puddle of tears. She knew. She knows. I will not tell you our love story, because- like all real love stories-it will die with us, as it should. I’d hoped that he’d be eulogizing me because there’s no one I’d rather have...’ I started crying. ‘Okay, how not to cry.

How is I-okay? Satisfactory.’

I took a few breaths also went back to the page. 'I can't talk about our love story, so I will talk about math. I am not a mathematician, infinity. I wouldn't trade it for the world. You gave me a forever within the numbered days, also I'm grateful.'

Chapter: 21

Her Walters died eight days after his prefuneral, at Memorial, in the ICU, when cancer, which was made of her, finally stopped his heart, which was also made of her.

He was with his mom also dad also sisters. His mom called me at three-thirty in the morning. I'd known, of course, that he was going.

I'd talked to his dad before going to bed, also he told me, 'It could be tonight,' but still, when I grabbed the phone from the bedside table also saw Her Mom on the caller ID, everything inside of me collapsed. She was just crying on the other end of the line, also she told me she was sorry, also I believed I was sorry, too, also she told me that he was unconscious for a couple of hours before he died. My parents came in then, looking expectant, also I just nodded also they fell into each other, feeling, I'm sure, the harmonic terror that would in time come for them directly. I called her, who cursed life also the universe also God Herself also who believed where are the goddamned trophies to break when you need them, also then I realized there was no one else to call, which was the saddest thing. The only person I really wanted to talk to about her death was Her and that kills her and that was me.

My parents stayed in my room forever until it was morning also finally Dad believed, 'Do you want to be alone?' also, I nodded also Mom believed, 'We'll be right outside the door,' me thinking, I don't doubt it. It was unbearable. The whole thing. Every second worse than the last. I just kept thinking about calling her, wondering what would happen, if anyone would answer. In the last weeks, we'd been reduced to spending our time together in recollection, but that was not anything- The pleasure of remembering had been taken from me because there was no longer anyone to remember with. It felt like losing your core-m-em-be-re-re-re meant losing the memory itself as if the things we'd done were less real also important than they had been hours before. When you go into the ER, one of the first things they ask you to do is to rate your pain on a scale of one to ten, also from there they decide which drugs to use also how quickly to use them. I'd been asked this question hundreds of times over the years, also I remember once early on when I couldn't get my breath also it felt like my chest was on fire, flames licking the inside of my ribs fighting for a way to burn out of my body, my parents took me to the ER. A nurse asked me about the pain, also I couldn't even speak, so I held up nine fingers. Later, after they'd given me something, the nurse came in also she was kind of stroking my also while she took my blood pressure also, she believed, 'You know how I know you're a fighter? You called ten a nine.'

But that wasn't quite right. I called it a nine because I was saving my ten. Also here it was, the great also terrible ten, slamming me again also again as I lay still also alone in my bed staring at the ceiling, the waves tossing me against the rocks then pulling me back out to sea so they could launch me again into the jagged face of the cliff, leaving me floating face up on the water, undrowned. To conclude I did call her. His phone rang five times also then went to voice mail. 'You've reached the voicemail of Her Walters,' he believed, the clarion voice I'd fallen for. 'Leave a message.' It beeped. The dead air on the line was so eerie. I just wanted to go back to that secret post-terrestrial third space with her that we visited when we talked on the phone. I waited for that feeling, but it never came - The dead air on the line was no comfort, also finally I hung up. I got my laptop out from under the bed also fired it up also went to his wall page, where already the condolences were flooding in. The most recent one believed - I love you, bro. See you on the other side. Written by someone I'd never heard of. In fact, almost all the wall posts, which arrived nearly as fast as I could read them, were written - by people I'd never met also whom he'd never spoken - about, people who were extolling his various virtues now that he was dead, even though I knew for a fact they hadn't seen her in months also had made no effort to visit her. I wondered if my wall would look like this if I died, or if I'd been out of school also a life long enough to escape widespread memorialization.

I kept reading.

I miss you already, bro.

I love you, Her. God bless also keep you.

You'll live forever in our hearts, big man. (That particularly galled me, because it implied the immortality of those left behind - You will live forever in my memory because I will live forever! I AM YOUR GOD NOW, DEAD BOY! I OWN YOU! Thinking you won't die is yet another side effect of dying.) You were always such a great friend I'm sorry I didn't see more of you after you left school, bro. I bet you're already playing ball in heaven. I see it... I see it more every day.

I imagined Her Walters analysis of that comment- If I am playing basketball in heaven, does that imply a physical location of heaven containing physical basketballs? Who makes the basketballs in question? Are there less fortunate souls in heaven who work in a celestial basketball factory so that I can play? Or did an-omnipotent God create the basketballs out of the vacuum of space? Is this heaven in some kind of unobservable universe where the laws of physics don't apply, also if so, why in the hell would I be playing basketball when I could be flying or reading or looking at beautiful people or something else, I actually enjoy? It's almost as if the way you imagine my dead self -says more about you than it says about either the person I was or whatever I am now.

His parents called around noon to say the funeral would be in five days, on Saturday. I pictured a church packed with people who thought he liked basketball, also I wanted to puke, but I knew I had to go since I was speaking also everything.

When I hung up, I went back to reading his wall- I just heard that Her Walters died after a lengthy battle with cancer. Rest in peace, buddy.

I knew these people were genuinely sad, also that I wasn't really mad at them. I was mad at the universe. Even so, it infuriated me- You get all these friends just when you don't need friends anymore. I wrote a reply to his comment- We live in a universe devoted to the creation, also eradication, of awareness. Her Walters did not die after a lengthy battle with cancer. He died after a lengthy battle with human consciousness, a victim-as you will be of the universe's need to make also unmake all that is possible.

I posted it also waited for someone to reply, refreshing over also over again. Nothing. My comment got lost in the blizzard of new posts.

Everyone was going to miss her so much. Everyone was praying for his family. I remembered Van Muray's letter- Writing does not resurrect.

...It buries.

After a while, I went out into the living room to sit with my parents also watch TV. I couldn't tell you what the show was, but at some point, my mom believed, 'Bryana, what can we do for you?'

Also, I just shook my head. I started crying again.

'What can we do?' Mom asked again.

I shrugged.

But she kept asking as if there was something she could do until finally I just kind of crawled across the couch into her lap also my dad came over also held my legs really tight also, I wrapped my arms all the way around my mom's middle also they held on to me for hours while the tide rolled in.

When we first got there, I sat in the back of the visitation room, a little room of exposed stone walls off to the side of the sanctuary in the Literal Heart of Jesus church. There were maybe eighty chairs set up in the room, also it was two-thirds full but felt one-third empty.

For a while, I just watched people walk up to the coffin, which was on some kind of cart covered with a purple tablecloth.

All these people- I'd never seen before would kneel down next to her or stalls over her also look at her for a while, maybe crying, maybe saying something, also then all of them would touch the coffin instead of touching her because no one wants to touch the dead.

'Gives you an idea of how I feel about you,' he believed.

My old man. He always knew just what to say.

A couple of days later, I got up around noon also drove to another house. He answered the door herself. 'My mom took Graham to a movie,' he believed.

'We should go do something,' I believed.

'Can something be played blind-guy video games while sitting on the couch?'

'Surely, that's just the kind of something I had in mind.'

So, we sat there for a couple of hours talking to the screen together, navigating this invisible labyrinthine cave without a single lumen of light. The most entertaining part of the game by far was- trying to get the computer to engage us in humorous conversation- Me- 'Touch the cave wall.'

Computer- 'You touch the cave wall. It is moist.'

Her- 'Lick the cave wall.'

Computer- 'I do not understand also. Repeat?'

Me- 'Hump the moist cave wall.'

Computer- 'You attempt to jump. You hit your head.'

Her- 'Not jump. HUMP.'

Computer- 'I don't Understand also.'

Her- 'Dude, I've been alone in the dark in this cave for weeks also I need some relief. HUMP
THE CAVE WALL.'

Computer- 'You attempt to just-'

Me- 'Thrust pelvis against the cave wall.'

Computer- 'I do not-'

Her- 'Make sweet love to the cave.'

Computer- 'I do not-'

Me- 'FINE. Follow left branch.'

Computer- 'You follow the left branch. The passage narrows.'

Me- 'Crawl.'

Computer- 'You crawl for one hundred yards. The passage narrows.'

Me- 'Snake crawl.'

Computer- 'You snake crawl for thirty yards. A trickle of water runs down your body. You reach a mound of small rocks blocking the passageway.'

Me- 'Can I hump the cave now?'

Computer- 'You cannot jump without staling.'

Her- 'I dislike living in a world without Her Walters.'

Computer- 'I don't Understand also-'

Her- 'Me neither. Pause.'

He dropped the remote onto the couch between us also asked, 'Do you know if it hurts or whatever?'

'He was really fighting for breath, I guess,' I believed. 'He eventually went unconscious, but it sounds like, surely, it wasn't great or anything. Dying sucks.'

'Surely,' she believed. Also, then after a long time, 'It just seems so impossible.'

'Happens all the time,' I believed.

'You seem angry,' he believed.

'Surely,' I believed. We just sat there quiet for a long time, which was fine, also I was thinking about way back in the very beginning in the Literal Heart of Jesus when She told us that he feared oblivion, also I told her that he was fearing something universal also inevitable, also how really, the problem is not suffering itself or oblivion itself but the depraved meaninglessness of these things, the absolutely inhuman nihilism of suffering. I thought of my dad telling me that the universe wants to be noticed. But what we want is to be noticed by the universe, to have the universe give a shit what happens to us-not the collective idea of sentient life but each of us, as individuals.

'She really loved you, you know,' he believed.

'I know.'

'He wouldn't shut up about it.'

'I know,' I believed.

'It was annoying.'

'I didn't find it that annoying,' I believed.

'Did he ever give you that thing he was writing?'

'What thing?'

‘That sequel or whatever to that book you liked.’

I turned to- her. ‘What?’

‘He believed he was working on something for you but he wasn’t that good of a writer.’

‘When did he say this?’

‘I don’t know. Like, after he got back from Amsterdam at some point.’

‘At which point?’ I pressed. Had he not had a chance to finish it? Had he finished it also left it on his computer or something?

‘Um,’ her- she sighed. ‘Um, I don’t know. We talked about it over here once. He was over here, like-uh, we played with my email machine also I’d just gotten an email from my also mother. I can check on the machine if you-’

‘Surely, surely, where is it?’

He’d mentioned it a month before. A month. Not a good month, admittedly, but still a month. That was enough time for her to have written something, at least. There was still something of her, or by her at least, floating around out there. I needed it.

‘I’m going to go to his house,’ I told her.

I hurried out to the minivan also hauled the oxygen cart up also into the passenger seat. I started the car. A hip-hop beat blared from the stereo, also as I reached to change the radio station, someone started rapping. In Swedish.

I swiveled around also screamed when I saw Muray’s sitting in the backseat.

‘I apologize for alarming you,’ Muray’s believed over the rapping. He was still wearing the funeral suit, almost a week later.

He smelled like he was sweating alcohol. ‘You’re welcome to keep the CD,’ he believed. ‘It’s Snook, one of the major Swedish-’

‘Ah- ah- ah- ah GET OUT OF MY CAR.’ I turned off the stereo.

‘It’s your mother car, as I Understand also it,’ he believed. ‘Also, it wasn’t locked.’

‘Oh, my God! Get out of the car or I’ll call nine-one-one. Dude, what is your problem...?’

‘If only there were just one,’ he mused. ‘I am here simply to apologize. You were correct in noting earlier that I am a pathetic little man, dependent upon alcohol. I had one acquaintance who- only spent time with me because I paid her to do so- worse, still, she has since quit, leaving me the rare soul who cannot acquire companionship even through bribery. It is all true, Bryana. All that also more.’

~*~

‘Okay,’ I believed. It would have been a more moving speech had he not slurred his words.

‘You remind me of Anna.’

‘I remind a lot of people of a lot of people,’ I answered. ‘I really have to go.’

‘So, drive,’ he believed. ‘Get out.’

‘No. You remind me of Anna,’ he believed again. After a second, I put the car in reverse also backed out. I couldn’t make her leave, also I didn’t have to. I’d drive to Her house, also Her parents would make her leave.

‘You are, of course, familiar,’ Van Muray’s believed, ‘with Antonietta Meo.’

‘Surely, no,’ I believed. I turned on the stereo, also the Swedish hip-hop blared, but Van Muray’s yelled over it.

‘She may soon be the youngest non-martyr saint ever beatified by the Catholic Church. She had same cancer that Mr. Walters had, osteosarcoma. They removed her right leg. The pain was excruciating. As Antonietta Meo lay dying at the ripened age of six from this agonizing cancer, she told her father, ‘Pain is like fabric- The stronger it is, the more it’s worth.’ Is that true, Bryana?’

I wasn’t looking at her directly but at his reflection in the mirror. ‘No,’ I shouted over the music. ‘That’s bullshit.’

‘But don’t you wish it was true!’ he cried back. I cut the music. ‘I’m sorry I ruined your trip. You were too young. You were-’ He broke down. As if he had a right to cry over Her. Robert Muray’s was just another of the endless mourners who did not know her, another too-late lamentation on his wall. ‘You didn’t ruin our trip, your self-important bastard. We had an awesome trip.’ ‘I am trying,’ he believed. 'I am trying, I swear.' It was around then that I realized Muray's had a dead person in his family. I painstaking the honesty with which he had written about cancer kids; the fact that he couldn't speak to me in Amsterdam except to ask if I'd dressed like her on purpose; his shittiness around me also Her; his aching question about the relationship between pain's extremity also its value. He sat back there drinking, an old man who'd been drunk for years. I thought of a statistic I wish I didn't know - half of the marriages end in the year after a child's death. I looked back at Robert Muray's. I was driving down College also I pulled over behind a line of parked cars also asked, 'You had a kid who died?'

'sabes que es amor cualsoo solo quieres estar con esa persona, y cualsoo más o menos crees que la otra persona siente lo mismo por ti.'

'My daughter,' he believed. 'She was eight. Suffered beautifully. Will never be beatified.'

'She had leukemia?' I asked. He nodded. 'Like Anna,' I believed.

'Very much like her, yes.'

'You were married?'

'No. Well, not at the time of her death. I was insufferable long before we lost her. Grief does not change you, Bryana. It reveals you.'

'Did you live with her?'

'No, not primarily, although at the end, we brought her to Johnstown, where I was living, for a series of experimental tortures that increased the misery of her days without increasing the number of them.'

After a second, I believed, 'So it's like you gave her this second life where she got to be a pre-teen.'

'I suppose that would be a fair assessment,' he believed, also then quickly added, 'I assume you are familiar with Philippa Foot's Trolley Problem thought experiment?'

'Also, when I show up at your house also, I'm dressed like the girl you hoped she would live to become also you're, like, all taken aback by it.'

‘She didn’t Understand also why it was happening,’ he believed. ‘I had to tell her she would die. Her social worker believed I had to tell her.

‘There’s a trolley running out of control down a track,’ he believed.

‘I don’t care about your stupid thought experiment,’ I believed.

‘It’s Philip Foot’s, actually.’

‘Well, hers either,’ I believed. I had to tell her she would die, so I told her she was going to heaven. She asked if I would be there, also I believed that I would not, not yet. But eventually, she believed, also I promised that yes, of course, very soon. Also, I told her that in the meantime we had great family up there that would take care of her. Also, she asked me when I would be there, also I told her soon. Twenty-two years ago.’

‘I’m sorry.’

‘So am I.’

After a while, I asked, ‘What happened to her mom?’

He smiled. ‘You’re still looking for your sequel, you little rat.’

I smiled back. ‘You should go home,’ I told her. ‘Sober up. Write another novel. Do the thing you’re good at. Not many people are lucky enough to be so good at something.’

He stared at me in the mirror for a long time. ‘Okay,’ he believed. ‘Surely. You’re right. You’re right.’ But even as he believed it, he pulled out his mostly empty fifth of whiskey. He drank, recapped the bottle, also opened the door. ‘Good-bye, Bryana.’

‘Take it easy, Sam Muray.’

He sat down on the curb behind the car. As I watched her shrink in the rearview mirror, he pulled out the bottle also for a second it looked like he would leave it on the curb. Also, when he took a swig.

It was a hot afternoon in Indianapolis, the air thick also still like we were inside a cloud. It was the worst kind of air for me, also I told myself it was just the air when they walk from her pathway to her home to his front door felt infinite. I rang the doorbell, also Her mom answered.

‘Oh, Bryana,’ she believed, also kind of enveloped me, crying.

She made me eat some eggplant lasagna-I guess a lot of people had brought them food or whatever with her also Her dad. ‘How are you?’

‘I miss her.’

‘Surely.’

I didn’t really know what to say. I just wanted to go downstairs also find whatever he’d written for me. Plus, the silence in the room really bothered me. I wanted them to be talking to each other, comforting or holding also or whatever. But they just sat there eating very small amounts of lasagna, not even looking at each other. ‘Heaven needed an angel-like in his books,’ his dad believed after a while.

‘I know,’ I believed. Then his sisters also their mess of kids showed up also piled into the kitchen. I got up also hugged both his sisters also then watched the kids run around the kitchen with their sorely needed surplus of noise also movement, excited molecules bouncing against each other also shouting, ‘You’re it, no you’re it no I was it but then I tagged you-you didn’t tag me you missed me well I’m tagging you now no dumb but it’s a time-out HER DO NOT CALL YOUR BROTHER A DUMB BUTT Mom if I’m not allowed to use that word how come you just used it dumb butt,’ also then, chorally, dumb butt -dumb butt -dumb butt, also at the table Her parents were now holding also, which made me feel better.

‘She told me She was writing something, something for me,’ I believed. The kids were still singing their dumb-butt song.

‘We can check his computer,’ his mom believed.

‘He wasn’t on it much the last few weeks,’ I thought.

‘That’s true. I’m not even sure we brought it upstairs. Is it still in the basement, Mark?’ ‘No idea.’

‘Well,’ I believed, ‘can I...’ I nodded toward the basement door.

‘We’re not ready,’ his dad believed. ‘But of course, yes, Bryana. Of course, you can.’

I walked downstairs, past his unmade bed, past the gaming chairs beneath the TV. His computer was still on. I tapped the mouse to wake it up also then searched for his most recently edited files. Nothing in the last month. The most recent thing was a response paper to Toni Morrison’s The Bluest Eye.

Maybe he’d written something by also. I walked over to his bookshelves, looking for a journal or a notebook. Nothing. I flipped through his copy of An Imperial Affliction. He hadn’t left a single mark in it.

I walked to his bedside table next. Infinite Mayhem, the ninth sequel to The Price of Dawn, lay atop the table next to his reading lamp, the corner of page 138 turned down. He’d never made it to the end of the book. ‘Spoiler alert- Mayhem survives,’ I believed out loud to her, just in case he could hear me.

Also, then I crawled into his unmade bed, wrapping myself in his comforter like a cocoon, surrounding myself with his smell. I took out my cannula so I could smell better, breathing her in also breathing her out, the scent fading even as I lay there, my chest burning until I couldn’t distinguish among the pains.

I sat up on the bed after a while also reinserted my cannula also breathed for a while before going up the stairs. I just shook my head no in response to his parents’ expectant looks. The kids raced past me. One of Her sisters-I could not tell them apart believed, ‘Mom, do you want me to take them to the park or something?’

‘No, no, they’re fine.’

‘Is there anywhere he might have put a notebook? Like in his hospital bed or something?’
The bed was already gone, reclaimed by hospice.

‘Bryana,’ his dad believed, ‘you were there every day with us. You- he wasn’t alone much, sweetie. He wouldn’t have had time to write anything. I know you want... I want that, too. But the messages he leaves for us now are coming from above, Bryana.’

He pointed toward the ceiling as if She were hovering just above the house. Maybe he was. I don’t know. I didn’t feel his presence, though.

‘Surely,’ I believed. I promised to visit them again in a few days.

I never quite caught his scent again.

Three days later, on the eleventh day AG, her father called me in the morning. I was still hooked to the BiPAP, so I didn’t answer, but I listened to his message the moment it beeped through to my phone. ‘Bryana, hi, it’s her dad. I found a, uh, black Moleskine notebook in the magazine rack that was near his hospital bed, I think near enough that he could have reached it. Unfortunately, there’s no writing in the notebook. All the pages are blank. But the first-I think three or four-the first few pages are torn out of the notebook. We looked through the house but couldn’t find the pages. So, I don’t know what to make of that? But maybe those pages are what he was referring to? Anyway, I hope that you are doing okay. You’re in our prayers every day, Bryana. Okay, bye.’

Three or four pages ripped from a Moleskine notebook no longer in Her Walters' house. Where would he leave them for me? Taped to Funky Bones? No, he wasn’t well enough to get there.

The Literal Heart of Jesus. Maybe he’d left it there for me on his Last Good Day.

So, I left twenty minutes early for the Support Group the next day. I drove over another house, picked her up, also then we drove down to the Literal Heart of Jesus with the windows of the rolled-down, listening to The Hectic Glow’s leaked new album, which She would never hear.

We took the elevator. I walked her to a seat in the Circle of Trust then slowly worked my way around the Literal Heart. I checked everywhere- under the chairs, around the lectern I’d stood behind while delivering my eulogy, under the treat table, on the bulletin board packed with Sunday school kids’ drawings of God’s love. Nothing. It was the only place we’d been together in those last days beside his house, also it either wasn’t here or I was missing something. Perhaps he’d left it for me in the hospital, but if so, it had almost certainly been thrown away after his death.

I was really out of breath by the time I settled into a chair next to her, also I devoted the entirety of Patrick’s nutless- and DICK-less testimonial to telling my lungs, they were okay, that they could breathe, that there was enough oxygen. They’d been drained only a week before Her died-I watched the amber cancer water dribble out of me through the tube-also yet already they felt full again. I was so focused on telling myself to breathe that I didn’t notice Patrick saying my name at first.

I snapped to attention. 'Surely?' I asked.

'How are you?'

'I'm okay, Patrick. I'm a little out of breath.'

'Would you like to share a memory of Her with the group?'

'I wish I would just die, Patrick. Do you ever wish you would just die?'

'Yes,' Patrick believed, without his usual pause. 'Yes, of course. So why don't you?'

I thought about it. My old stock answer was that I wanted to stay alive for my parents because they would be all gutted also childless in the wake of me, also that was still true kind of, but that wasn't it, exactly. 'I don't know.'

'In the hopes that you'll get better?'

Love is like the wind; you can't see it but you can feel it.

I held her close to me with my eyes closed, wondering if anything in my life had ever been this perfect also knowing at the same time that it hadn't. I was in love, also the feeling was even more wonderful than I ever imagined it could be.

'No,' I believed. 'No, it's not that. I really don't know - her?' I asked. I was tired of talking.

She started talking about true love. I couldn't tell them what I was thinking because it seemed cheesy to me, but I was thinking about the universe wanting to be noticed, also how I had to notice it as best I could. I felt that I owed a debt to the universe that only my attention could repay, also that I owed a debt to everybody who didn't get to be a person anymore also everyone who hadn't gotten to be a person

yet. What my dad had told me, basically. 'Do you love - me?' I asked her. She smiled. 'Yes.' 'Do you want me to be happy?' As I asked her this, I felt my heart beginning to race. 'Of course, I do.' 'Will you do something for me then?' She looked away, sadness crossing her features. 'I don't know if I can anymore.' she said. 'but if you could, would you?' I cannot adequately describe the intensity of what I was feeling at that moment. Love, anger, sadness, hope, also fear, whirling together sharpened by the nervousness I was feeling. Jamie looked at me curiously also my breaths became shallower. Suddenly I knew that I'd never felt as strongly for another person as I did at that moment. As I returned her gaze, this simple realization made me wish for the millionth time that I could make all this go away. Had it been possible, I would have traded my life for hers. I wanted to tell her my thoughts, but the sound of her voice suddenly silenced the emotions inside me. 'yes,' she finally said, her voice weak yet somehow still full of promise. 'I would.' Finally getting control of myself I kissed her again, then brought me also to her face, gently running my fingers over her cheek. I marveled at the softness of her skin, the gentleness I saw in her eyes. even now she was perfect.

I stayed quiet for the rest of Support Group, also Patrick believed a special prayer for me, also Her name was tacked onto the long list of the dead-fourteen of them for every one of us-also we promised to live our best life today, also then I took her to the car.

When I got home, Mom also Dad were at the dining room table on their separate laptops, also the moment I walked in the door, Mom slammed her laptop shut. 'What's on the computer?'

'Just some antioxidant recipes. Ready for BiPAP also America's Next Top Model?' she asked.

'I'm just going to lie down for a minute.'

'Are you okay?'

'Surely, just tired.'

'Well, you've got to eat before you-'

'Mom, I am aggressively unhungry.' I took a step toward the door but she cut me off.

'Bryana, you have to eat. Just some-'

'No. I'm going to bed.'

'No,' Mom believed. 'You're not.' I glanced at my dad, who shrugged.

'It's my life,' I believed.

'You're not going to starve yourself to death just because

She died. You're going to eat dinner.'

I was really pissed off for some reason. 'I can't eat, Mom.

I can't. Okay?'

I tried to push past her but she grabbed both my shoulders also believed, 'Bryana, you're eating dinner. You need to stay healthy.'

'NO!' I shouted. 'I'm not eating dinner, also I can't stay healthy because I'm not healthy. I am dying, Mom. I am going to die also leave you here alone also you won't have me to hover around also, you won't be a mother anymore, also I'm sorry, but I can't do anything about it, okay?'

I regretted it as soon as I believed it.

'You heard me.' 'What?'

'Did you hear me say that to your father?' Her eyes welled up. 'Did you?' I nodded. 'Oh, God, Bryana. I'm sorry. I was wrong, sweetie.

That wasn't true. I believed that in a desperate moment. It's not something I believe.' She sat down, also I sat down with her. I was thinking that I should have just puked up some pasta for her instead of getting pissed off.

'What do you believe, then?' I asked.

'As long as either of us is alive, I will be your mother,' she believed. 'Even if you die, I-'

'When' I believed. She nodded. 'Even when you die, I will still be your mom, Bryana. I won't stop being your mom. Have you stopped loving Her?' I shook my head. 'Well, then how could I stop loving you?'

'Okay,' I believed. My dad was crying now.

My throat began to tighten again, but as I said, I knew what I had to do. Since I had to accept that it was not within my power to cure her, what I wanted to do was give her something that she'd wanted. It was what my heart had been telling me to do all along. Jamie, I understood then, had already given me the answer I'd been searching for, the answer my heart needed to find. She'd told me outside Mr. Jenkin's office, the night we'd asked him about doing the play. I smiled softly, also she returned my affection with a slight squeeze of mine also, as if trusting me in what I was about to do. Encouraged, I leaned closer also took a deep breath. When I exhaled, these were the words that flowed with my breath. 'Will you marry me?

'I want you guys to have a life,' I believed. 'I worry that you won't have a life, that you'll sit around here all day with no one to look after also stare at the walls also want to off yourselves.'

After a minute, Mom believed, 'I'm taking some classes. Online, through IU. To get my master's in social work. In fact, I wasn't looking at antioxidant recipes; I was writing a paper.'

'Seriously?'

'I don't want you to think I'm imagining a world without you. But if I get my MSW, I can counsel families in crisis or lead groups dealing with illness in their families or-'

'Wait, you're going to become a Patrick?'

'Well, not exactly. There are all kinds of social work jobs.'

Dad believed, 'We've both been worried that you'll feel abandoned. It's important for you to know that we will always be here for you, Bryana.'

Your mom isn't going anywhere.'

'No, this is great. This is fantastic!' I was really smiling.

'Mom is going to become a Patrick. She'll be a great Patrick!

She'll be so much better at it than Patrick is.'

'Thank you, Bryana. That means everything to me.'

I nodded. I was crying. I couldn't get over how happy I was, crying genuine tears of actual happiness for the first time in maybe forever, imagining my mom as Patrick. It made me think of Anna's mom. She would've been a good social worker, too.

After a while we turned on the TV also watched ANTM. But I paused it after five seconds because I had all these questions for Mom. 'So how close are you to finishing?'

'If I go up to Bloomington for a week this summer, I should be able to finish by December.'

‘How long have you been keeping this from me, exactly?’

‘A year.’

‘Mom.’

‘I didn’t want to hurt you, Bryana.’

It wasn't that long, also it certainly wasn't the kind of kiss you see in movies these days, but it was wonderful in its own way, also all I can remember about the moment is that when our lips touched, I knew the memory would last forever.

Knowing there's one thing I still haven't told you- I now believe, by the way, that miracles can happen.

Amazing. ‘So, when you’re waiting for me outside of MCC or Support Group or whatever, you’re always-

‘First, you will smile, also then you will cry - don't say you haven't been warned.

‘Yes, working or reading.’ I don't think that we're meant to Understand also it all the time. I think that sometimes we just have to have faith.

‘This is so great. If I’m dead, I want you to know I will be sighing at you from heaven every time you ask someone to share their feelings.’

My dad laughed. ‘I’ll be right there with yah, kiddo,’ he assured me.

Finally, we watched ANTM. Dad tried really hard not to die of boredom, also he kept messing up which girl was which, saying, ‘We like her?’

‘No, no. We revile Anastasia. We like Antonia, the other blonde,’ Mom explained.

‘They’re all tall also horrible,’ Dad responded. ‘Forgive me for failing to tell the difference.’ Dad reached across me for Mom's also.

‘Do you think you guys will stay together if I die?’ I asked.

‘Bryana, what? Sweetie.’ She fumbled for the remote control also paused the TV again. ‘What’s wrong?’

‘Just, do you think you would?’

‘Yes, of course. Of course,’ Dad believed. ‘Your mom also I love each other, also if we lose you, we’ll go through it together.’ ‘Swear to God,’ I believed.

‘I swear to God,’ he believed.

I looked back at Mom. ‘Swear to God,’ she agreed. ‘Why are you even worrying about this?’

‘I just don’t want to ruin your life or anything.’

Mom leaned forward also pressed her face into my messy puff of hair also kissed me at the very top of my head. I believed to Dad, ‘I don’t want you to become like a miserable unemployed alcoholic or whatever.’

My mom smiled. ‘Your father isn’t Muray’s, Bryana. You of all people know it is possible to live with pain.’

‘Surely, okay,’ I believed. Mom hugged me also I let her even though I didn’t really want to be hugged. ‘Okay, you can unpause it,’ I believed.

Anastasia got kicked off. She threw a fit. It was awesome.

I ate a few bites of dinner-bow-tie pasta with pesto-also managed to keep it down.

I woke up the next morning panicked because I’d dreamed of being alone also boat-less in a huge lake. I bolted up, straining against the BiPAP also felt Mom’s arm around me.

‘Hi, you okay?’

There are moments when I wish I could roll back the clock also take all the sadness away, but I have the feeling that if I did, the joy would be gone as well.

My heart raced, but I nodded. Mom believed, ‘Kaitlyn’s on the phone for you.’ I pointed at my BiPAP. She helped me get it off also hooked me up to Philip also then finally I took my cell from Mom also believed, ‘Hey, Kaitlyn.’

‘Just calling to check in,’ she believed. ‘See how you’re doing.’

'Surely, thanks,' I believed. 'I'm doing okay.' I'm sorry she never got her miracle. she did get her miracle she was, her miracle it was her.

'You've just had the worst luck, darling. It's unconscionable.'

'I guess,' I believed. I didn't think much about my luck anymore one way or the other. Honestly, I didn't really want to talk to Kaitlyn about anything, but she kept dragging the conversation along.

'So, what was it like?' She asked.

'Having your boyfriend die? Um, it sucks.'

'No,' she believed. 'Being in love.'

'Oh,' I believed. 'Oh. It was... it was nice to spend time with someone so interesting. We were very different, also we disagreed about a lot of things, but he was always so interesting, you know?'

'Alas, I do not. The boys I'm acquainted with are vastly uninteresting.'

'He wasn't perfect or anything. He wasn't your fairy-tale Prince Charming or whatever. He tried to be like that sometimes, but I liked her best when that stuff fell away.'

'Do you have like a scrapbook of pictures also letters he wrote?'

'I have some pictures, but he never really wrote me letters. Except, well there are some missing pages from his notebook that might have been something for me, but I guess he threw them away or they got lost or something.'

'Maybe he mailed them to you,' she believed.

'Nah, they'd gotten here.'

'Then maybe they weren't written for you,' she believed. 'Maybe... I mean, not to depress you or anything, but maybe he wrote them for someone else also mailed them-' 'SAM MURAY!' I shouted.

'Are you okay? Was that a cough?'

'Kaitlyn, I love you. You are a genius. I have to go.'

I hung up, rolled over, reached for my laptop, turned it on, also emailed lidewij. vliegenthart.

Lidewij, I believe Her Walters sent a few pages from a notebook to Muray's shortly before he (Her) died. It is very important to me that someone reads these pages. I want to read them, of course, but maybe they weren't written for me.

Regardless, they must be read. They must be. Can you help? Your friend, Bryana Candelaria Stewart-

She responded late that afternoon.

You have to promise you won't fall in love with me...

Dear Bryana,

I did not know that She had died. I am very sad to hear this news. He was such a very charismatic young man. I am so sorry, also so sad.

I have not spoken to Peter since I resigned that day we met. It is very late at night here, but I am going over to his house first thing in the morning to find this letter also force her to read it. Mornings were his best time, usually.

Your friend,

p.s. I am bringing my boyfriend in case we have to physically restrain Peter.

'I'm okay,' I believed.

You could hear the wind in the leaves, also on that wind traveled the screams of the kids on the playground in the distance, the little kids figuring out how to be alive, how to navigate a world that was not built for them by navigating a playground that was. Dad saw me watching the kids also believed, 'You miss running around like that?'

'Sometimes, I guess.' But that wasn't what I was thinking.

I was just trying to notice everything- the light on the ruined Ruins, this little kid who could barely walk discovering a stick at the corner of the playground, my indefatigable mother zigzagging mustard across her turkey also witch, my dad patting his also held in his pocket also resisting the urge to check it, a guy throwing a Frisbee that his dog kept running under also catching also returning to her. Who am I to say that these things might not be forever? Who is Muray's to assert as fact the conjecture that our labor is temporary? All I know of heaven also all I know of death is in this park - an elegant universe in ceaseless motion, teeming with ruined ruins - also screaming children. A sad smile crossed her face, also I knew right then what she was trying to tell me. Her eyes never left mine as she finally said the words that numbed my soul. I'm dying My dad was waving his also in front of my face. 'Tune in, Bryana. Are you there?' 'Sorry, surely, what?' What's your heart telling you to do? I don't know. I wondered why he'd written Sam Muray in those last days instead of me, telling Sam Muray that he'd be redeemed if only he gave me my sequel.

Maybe the notebook pages had just repeated his request to Sam Muray. It made sense, her leveraging his terminality to make my dream come true - The sequel was a tiny thing to die for, but it was the biggest thing left at his disposal. I refreshed my email continually that night, slept for a few hours, also then commenced to refreshing around five in the morning. But nothing arrived. I tried to watch TV to distract myself, but my thoughts kept drifting back to Amsterdam, imagining SAM also her girl horsing around town on this crazy mission to find a dead kid's last correspondence. How fun it would be to bounce on the back of horse down the brick streets, her curly red hair blowing into my face, the smell of the canals also cigarette smoke, all the people sitting outside the cafés drinking beer, saying their r's also g's in a way I'd never learn.

I missed the future. Obviously, I knew even before his recurrence that I'd never grown old with Her Walters. But thinking about Lidewij also her boyfriend, I felt robbed. I would probably never again see the ocean from thirty thousand feet above, so far up that you can't make out the waves or any boats, so that the ocean is a great also endless monolith. I could imagine it. I could remember it. But I couldn't see it again, also it occurred to me that the voracious ambition of humans is never - ever sated by dreams coming true because there is always the thought that everything might be done better also again. I may be irresponsible but I am a good irresponsible. Do you ever wonder why things have to turn out the way they do? I know the Lord has a plan for us all, but sometimes, I just don't Understand also what the message can be.

That is probably true even if you live to be ninety-although I'm jealous of the people who get to find out for sure.

Then again, I'd already lived twice as long as Sam Muray's daughter.

What he wouldn't have given to have a kiddie at sixteen.

Suddenly Mom was stalling between the TV also me, she also folded behind her back.
'Bryana,' she believed. Her voice was so serious I thought something might be wrong.

'Yes?'

'Do you know what today is?'

'It's not my birthday, is it?'

She laughed. 'Not just yet. It's July fourteenth, Bryana.'

'Is it your birthday?'

'No...'

'Is it Harry Houdini's birthday?'

'No...'

'I am really tired of guessing.'

'IT IS BASTILLE DAY!' She pulled her arms from behind her back, producing two small plastic French flags also waving them enthusiastically.

'That sounds like a fake thing. Like Cholera Awareness Day.'

'I assure you, Bryana, that there is nothing fake about Bastille Day. Did you know that two hundred also twenty-three years ago today, the people of France stormed the Bastille prison to arm themselves to fight for their freedom?'

'Wow,' I believed. 'We should celebrate this momentous anniversary.'

'It so happens that I have just now scheduled a picnic with your father in Holliday Park.'

She never stopped trying, my mom. I pushed against the couch also stood up. Together, we cobbled together some also witch makings also found a dusty picnic basket in the hallway utility-closet. It was kind of a beautiful day, finally real summer in Indianapolis, warm also humid-the kind of weather that reminds you after a long winter that while the world wasn't built for humans, we were built for the world. Dad was waiting for us, wearing a tan suit, staling in an also capped parking spot typing away on his also held. He waved as we parked also then hugged me. 'What a day,' he believed. 'If we lived in PA, they'd all be like this.' 'Surely, but then you wouldn't enjoy them,' my mom believed. She was wrong, but I didn't correct her. We ended up putting our blanket down by the Ruins, this weird rectangle of -

Roman ruins plopped down in the middle of a field in Altoona UMPC. But they aren't real ruins- They're like a sculptural recreation of ruins built eighty years ago, but the fake Ruins have been neglected pretty badly, so they have kind of become actual ruins by accident. Sam Muray would like the Ruins. She, too.

So, we sat in the shadow of the Ruins also ate a little lunch.

'Do you need sunscreen?' Mom asked.

Maybe, you're trying too hard to hear it. 'Mom suggested we go see Her?'

'Oh. Surely,' I believed. So, after lunch, we drove down to Crown Hill Cemetery, the last also a final resting place of three vice presidents, one president, also her. We drove up the hill also parked. Cars roared by behind us on Thirty-eighth Street. It was easy to find his grave- It was the newest. The earth was still mounded above his coffin. No headstone yet.

I didn't feel like he was there or anything, but I still took one of Mom's dumb little French flags also stuck it in the ground at the foot of his grave. Maybe passersby would think he was a member of the French Foreign Legion or some heroic mercenary.

Lidewij finally wrote back just after six P.M. while I was on the couch watching both TVs also videos on my laptop. I saw immediately there were four attachments to the email also I wanted to open the first, but I resisted temptation also read the email.

Dear Bryana,

Peter was very intoxicated when we arrived at his house this morning, but this made our job somewhat easier. Bas (my boyfriend) distracted her while I searched through the garbage bag Peter keeps with the fan mail in it, but then I realized that She knew Peter's address. There was a large pile of mail on his dining room table, where I found the letter very quickly. I opened it also saw that it was addressed to Peter, so I asked her to read it. He did not say no. At this point, I became very angry,

Bryana, but I did not yell at her. Instead, I told her that he owed it to his dead daughter to read this letter from a dead boy, also I gave her the letter also he read the entire thing also believed -I quote her directly-'Send it to the girl also tell her I have nothing to add.' I have not read the letter, although my eyes did fall on some phrases while scanning the pages. I have attached them here also then will mail them to you at your home; your address is the same?

May God bless also keep you, Bryana. Your friend, SAM I clicked open the four attachments. He's also writing was messy, slanting across the page, the size of the letters varying, the color of the pen changes. He'd written it over many days in varying degrees of consciousness.

Sam Muray,

I'm a good person but a shitty writer. You're a shitty person but a good writer. We'd make a good team. I don't want to ask you any favors, but if you have time -also from what I saw, you have plenty-I was wondering if you could write a eulogy for Bryana. I've got notes also everything, but if you could just make it into a coherent whole or whatever? Or even just tell me what I should say differently. Here's the thing about Bryana- Almost everyone is obsessed with leaving a mark upon the world. Bequeathing a legacy. Outlasting death.

We all want to be remembered. I do, too. That's what bothers me most, is being another the unremembered casualty in the ancient also inglorious war against illness. I want to leave a mark. But Sam Muray- The marks humans leave are too often scars. You build a hideous minimally or start a coup or try to become a rock star also you think, 'They'll remember me now,' but (a) they don't remember you, also (b) all you leave behind are more scars. Your coup becomes a dictatorship. Your minimal becomes a lesion. (All right, maybe I'm not such a shitty writer.

But I can't pull my ideas together, Sam Muray. My thoughts are heavenly bodies I can't fathom into constellations.) We are like a bunch of dogs squirting on fire hydrants. We poison the groundwater with our toxic piss, marking everything MINE in a ridiculous attempt to survive our deaths. I can't stop peeing on fire hydrants. I know it's silly also useless -epically useless in my current the shortcomings in the universe, are you also I not seeing happy ever after, state -but I am an animal like any other. Bryana is different. She walks lightly, old man. She walks lightly upon the earth. Bryana knows the truth- We're as likely to hurt the universe as we are to help it, also we're not likely to do either.

Individuals will say it's sad that she leaves a lesser scar, that fewer remember her, that she was loved deeply but not widely. But it's not sad, Sam Muray. It's victorious.

It's heroic. Isn't that the real heroism? Like the doctors say- First, do no harm. The real heroes anyway aren't the people doing things; the real heroes are the people NOTICING things, paying attention. The guy who invented the smallpox vaccine didn't actually invent anything. He just noticed that people with cowpox didn't get smallpox. I'll always miss her. But our love is like the wind- I can't see it, but I can feel it. After my PET scan lit up, I snuck into the ICU also saw her while she was unconscious. I just walked in behind a nurse with a badge also I got to sit next to her for like ten minutes before I got caught. I really thought she was going to die before I could tell her that I was going to die, too. It was brutal- the incessant mechanized haranguing of intensive care. She had this dark cancer water dripping out of her chest. Eyes closed. Intubated. But she also was still her also, still warm also the nails painted this almost black dark blue also I just held her also tried to imagine the world without us also for about one second I was a good enough person to hope she died so she would never know that I was going, too. But then I wanted more time so we could fall in love. I got my wish, I suppose. I left my scar.

A nurse guy came in also told me I had to leave, that visitors weren't allowed, also I asked if she was doing okay, also the guy believed, 'She's still taking on water.' A desert blessing, an ocean curse.

What else? She is so beautiful. You don't get tired of looking at her. You never worry if she is smarter than you- You know she is. She is funny without ever being mean. I love her. I am so lucky to love her, Robert Muray's. You don't get to choose if you get hurt in this world, old man, but you do have some say in who hurts you. I like my choices. I hope she likes hers.

I do, Her.

I do.

Home It's the kind of place where the humidity rose so high in the summer that walking out to get the mail made a person feel as if he needed a shower, also kids strolled around barefoot from April through October beneath oak trees draped in Spanish moss. People waved from their cars whenever they saw someone on the street whether they knew her or not, also the air smelled of pine, salt, also sea, a scent single to Us For many of the folks there, harpooning in the See sound like the River see it feel it was a way of life, also boats were moored anyplace you saw the Intracoastal Waterway. Only three channels came in on the television, though television was never important to those of us who grew up there. Instead, our lives were centered on the churches, of which there were eighteen within the town limits alone.

They went by names like the Fellowship North end- Church, the Church of the Forgiveness People, the Church of Sunday Amends, also then, of course, there were the Baptist churches. When I was growing up, it was far also away from the most popular denomination around, also there were Baptist churches on practically every corner of town, though each considered itself superior to the others. There were Baptist churches of every type-Freewill Baptists, Congregational Baptists, Missionary Baptists, Independent Baptists... well, you get the picture. Back then, the big event of the year was sponsored by the Baptist church downtown-Southern, if you really want to know in conjunction with the local high school. Every year they put on their Christmas pageant at the Beaufort Auditorium, which was actually a play that had been written by pastor a minister who'd been with the church since God is good bear is great also women are crazy the jock was in, Okay, maybe he wasn't that old, but he was old enough that you could almost see through the guy's membrane. It was sort of damp all the time, also luminous -kids would swear they actually saw the blood flowing through his veins also his hair was as white as those rabbits you see in pet stores around Easter. Anyway, he wrote this play called The Christmas Angel, because he didn't want to keep on performing that old Charles classic A Christmas song. Oh, the renovation only because he saw ghosts, not angels -also who was to say whether they'd been sent by God, nevertheless?

Also, who was to say he wouldn't revert to his sinful ways if they hadn't been sent unswervingly from heaven? The play didn't exactly tell you, in the end, it sorts of plays into faith also all but Hegbert didn't trust ghosts if they weren't actually sent by God, which wasn't explained in plain language, also this was his big problem with it. A few years back he'd changed the end of the play-sort of followed it up with his own form, complete with old man Scrooge becoming a preacher also all, heading off to Jerusalem to find the place where Jesus once taught the scribes. It didn't fly too well-not even to the congregation, who sat in the audience staring wide-eyed at the spectacle-also the newspaper believed things like 'Though it was positively thought-provoking, it wasn't exactly the play we've all come to- know also love...

Also, we'd sort of lower ourselves in the seats, not from embarrassment, but to hide a new round of giggles. I didn't Understand also us at all, which was really sort of strange, is that he had a kid also all. But then again, she was my girl looking at me. More on that, though, later. Anyway, as I believed, her I wrote The Christmas Angel one also saved it to give a note. Year also decided to put on that play instead. The play itself wasn't bad, actually, which surprised everyone the first year it was performed. It's basically the story of a man who had lost she a few years back think of not pass on. At this point the mysterious she asks me what she wants for Christmas, also he says that he wants her is what I want back. She brings her to the city fountain also tells me, like a gift of God giving me life also not sucking pussy all the time. To look in the water also he'll find what he's looking for. Girl, also he breaks down also cries right there. I fall in love with her fast I did want the days to end, yet she did not fare after, I say her for the last time that one the day I believed I loved her. Going down I see it now - The next morning, magically, the music box is underneath the tree, also the angel that's engraved on it looks exactly like the woman he'd seen the night before. So it wasn't that bad, really. If truth be told, people cried buckets whenever they saw it. The play sold out every year it was performed, also due to its popularity, eventually had to move it from the church to the Beaufort Playhouse, which had a lot more seating to see this young thing be eating by maggots also things like that. By the time I was a senior in high school, I will be like her ate away not anything there but bones, she wanted us to know that God is out there watching you, even when you're away from home, also that if you put your trust in God, you'll be all right in the end. It was a lesson that I would eventually learn in time, though it wasn't had who taught me to feel love like this.

Never once, however, did he keep his promise. In the end, she controlled a vast portion of the county's economy, also he abused his clout in every way imaginable. I'd like to tell you he eventually went to a terrible death, but he didn't. He died at a ripe old age while sleeping with his mistress on his yacht off the ends Beneath her name she wrote the goals she wanted to accomplish that year. 'Self-confidence' was number one she had in me; I can still see her smile at my turn of phrase. 'I'd have to talk to my father, of course, but if he believed it was okay, then I guess I could.' In the tree beside the porch, a bird started to chirp noisily, as if he knew I wasn't supposed to be here. I concentrated on the sound, trying to calm my nerves. Just two days ago I couldn't have imagined myself even thinking about it, but suddenly there I was, listening to myself as I spoke the magic words.

'Well, would you like to go to the dance with me?' I could tell she was surprised. I think she believed that the little lead-up to the question probably had to do with someone else requesting her. Sometimes pre-teens sent their friends out love happens fast, face possible rejection or the death that is nearing. Even though she wasn't much like other pre-teens, I'm sure she was familiar with the concept, at least in theory. Instead of answering right away, though, she glanced away for a long moment. I got a sinking feeling in my stomach for the reason that I presumed- no. Visions of my Even more than usual? I wanted to ask, but I didn't. I could tell she had more to say, also I stayed quiet.

'I know the Lord has a plan for us all, but sometimes, I just don't Understand also what the message can be. Does that ever happen to you?' She believed this as though it were something, I thought about all the time. 'Well,' I believed, trying to bluff, 'I don't think that we're meant to Understand also it all the time. I think that sometimes we just have to have faith also die in love with what to come to see them again.' It was a pretty good answer, I admit. I guess that my feelings for her were making my brain work a little faster than usual. I could tell she was thinking about my answer.' Yes,' she finally believed, 'you're right.' I smiled to myself in the thought of death not far from it also changed the subject, since talking about God wasn't the sort of thing that made a person feel romantic also not could even if I was getting there. 'You know,' I believed nonchalantly, 'Yes, it was,' she believed. Her mind was still elsewhere. 'Also, you sure looked nice, too.' 'Thank you for being there I believed as my eyes closed also the last breath went out of me.' see you there I believed.

Nevaeh

Book: 60

Misunderstandings

1

(Thought...)

‘Being a simple-minded classed as unwanted, sounds better than being fake and gay; sucking butt holes off at a rainbow party like all of them, and even you- being a sycophant to impress, I was never one of those girls, and I think you get what I mean- this is why- we call them all fags, yet this is why- I was called one too, and why yet to this day some don't understand, yet sympathy is something, I should have- not for me for them.’

~*~

(Judgements)

Jaylynn- ‘Law is summed up as to me- sucking each other off. Those that call themselves- part of the system. So-o, just like a gay orgy- of butt holes, getting double stuffed- as much as possible.’

‘Law equals one big rainbow party, seeing the big dick in the room is getting pleased, the police officers to keep him in office, the court with both hands on his junk, and you being the bitch, handcuffed, and getting your butt hole played with... as you walk in the cracker slammer.’

‘And the hard dick flying high in the courtroom, that is going soft, and need consent simulation is the judge- so all the shades of the rainbow- on his c*ck, and everyone under him is the gay fag’s sucking him off... with the shades of lipstick rubbing of their big gaping mouths, to find out who the winner of sucking the hardest for him really truly is, and he asks over and over to keep it coming... and as the defendant, you are standing there thinking this is really queer and retarded- and what they’re doing is far worse than what you were abused of.’

‘There are so many f*ck- me- pleases, said in the courtroom you think your waiting porn, they charged her with profanity, the hypocrites use more in a half-hour then I have in entire my life!’

Hashtag- (must sex and drafty)

~*~

Nevaeh- ‘I am just a gum-chewing county bunken,’ Why- I’m acting so silent, noiseless, inaudible, still, and quiet.

Lingering in her- Melissa, who was always really Naddalin, who had the child Marcella, and she left behind a family on Earth- they passed yet the family line had no choice but to head for the oceans- to keep the race going, and that girl we know as Savannah became a humanoid type of mermaid, then Breanna was a girl that I assigned myself too, to remember just how good I really had it in life, it's best not to complain.

So, aloof, so remote- rejecting to touch her when just a few weeks earlier- just before her passing, I could not get enough, of this young girl holding on to life and so full of it- and bright. Breanna had become the child I never had, almost- my adopted youngster. And it keeps my mind off Melissa- and her world. In a way, I have become Godmother.

Marcella erroneously assuming it's because of her hurtful behavior- she is flirting with Emmah- just as I wanted- I had to pull out of it- and do the right thing, her cruelty toward me- when the truth is, it has nothing to do with that. She was under Naddalin's spell, not mine, the entire school was. It wasn't my fault- the way things have turned out.

What she doesn't know is that while the remedy returned her to life, the moment I added my blood to the mix it also ensured we could never- ever be together- it would be like incest- yet that is what makes it appealing over the fact she is now something I cannot have.

Never! Ever! For all of eternity!!!

2

My mother loved me so much as a young girl she intently tried to overdose me on Ritalin.

Yet, that night I was lingering inside her... 'Ever?' She undertones, in her voice, that is too deep and sincere. Nevertheless, I cannot look at her. Cannot touch her; along with certainly can't utter the words she deserves to hear- I messed up- I'm so sorry- knowing that she tricked me, as much as I did her.

And I was desperate and dumb enough to fall for her trick, as she was mine - Besides now there's no hope for us because, if you kiss me- it's over, if we exchange our thoughts- you'll die, inside of me, at some point.

I can't do it- anymore. I'm the worst kind of coward. I'm pathetic and weak. And there's just no way I can find it within me- to keep going on.

'Ever, please, what is it- fiction?' She asks, alarmed by my tears. 'You have been like theirs for days. Is it me? Is it something I have done?

I would never- ever- ever deliberately hurt you. For the reason that you know I don't remember much of what happened, and the memories that are starting to surface, well, you must know by now that wasn't the real me- I don't even know the real me at this point.

'I'd never harm you, Melisa, in any way.' I said to her in her thought of mind.

I hug myself tightly- as if I and she feel the hug to on her side of things, squeezing my shoulders and bowing my head- she is too. Wishing, I could make myself tighter, so snug she could no longer squeeze and more. Knowing her words are true, that she's incapable of hurting me, only I could do something so hurtful, so rash, so ridiculously impulsive. Only, I could be stupid enough to fall for Naddalin, all over again, yet so novel yet so the same.

So, eager to prove myself to her one true love- wanting to be the only one who could save her- and now look at the mess, that I have made- in a new light. ...So wrong- so right.

Then she moves through me like toward me, sliding my arm around me- yet knowing by feeling it's hers, grasping my waist and pulling it near me- kissing it.

Nonetheless, I can't risk the closeness, my tears are deadly now- locked as hers, and must be kept far from her skin, looking through.

I- Melisa then climb to my feet stripped and run toward the water's edge, outside my high-rise room on the 148th floor of my skyscraper home, curling my toes in the infinity-edge pool at its edge and allowing the cold white froth to splash onto my shins, that is on the far I see the glow of the light of my city below, and the cars and trains rushing like working ants, like music notes dancing all over the score- below.

-And-

Wishing I could dive under its incalculability and be carried by the tide. Anything to avoid saying the words- anything to avoid telling my one true love, my eternal partner, my soul mate for the last years- I have not met, that while she may have given me time without end- I have brought us our end, know that we're worlds apart.

-Then-

I stay like that, silent and still and hushed. Waiting for the sun to ascend until I finally turn to face her, back in my mind- like a drug- that need increased hits in the direction of satisfying.

Taking in her dark shadowy outline- the ripples of the water, nearly- indistinguishable from the night- star-light above, and speaking past the sting in my throat when I mumble... I feel her, I even see her emulated back in my stare.

‘Naddalin... baby- girl... Marcella, there’s something- that, I need to tell you.’

3

I kneel beside her bed in worship- something I have not done in years, hands on my knees, toes buried in the rug, like they were just moments before in black the sand of the pool- light by modern flam torches, wishing she’d look at me- as the god she was praying to, wishing she would say something- about me the way she loved this man that she never met. Yet, I can still do this... I thought I can still love this man- she calls God.

Even if it’s only to tell me what I already know- that I made a grave and stupid mistake- one that will perhaps never be erased.

I would gladly accept it, I deserve it. What I can’t stand is her absolute silence and daydreaming gaze.

Besides, I’m just about to say anything, something, to break the intolerable motionlessness tranquilities’, when she looks into me, with eyes so weary they’re the perfect byword of her years.

‘Melisa.’

She sighs, shaking her head. ‘I didn’t identify her- restlessness- and sleeplessness, I had no idea- that she really loves me ‘till the thoughts,’ Her voice trails off along with her stare - into the room- losing light, by her heavy eyes closing.

‘There’s no way you could’ve known,’ I say, eager to- I LOVE YOU TOO, erase any guilt she might feel, knowing that she was dosing off.

‘Both were under the spell from the very first day.’

‘Believe me, she had it all planned, made sure any memories were completely erased, within a dream- and in the dreams, the memories stayed and were all too real, always there, yet dappled piebald with feelings.’

Her eyes that are my eyes linked together- by mind and doors of perception- the fabric of times- and presumptive, the searching of body and mind her facial expression not mine but hers on my face, studying me closely- as I do her before she stands and turns looking into the plashed back marble walls, in nothing more than panties, and then those too were slipped off, by my hand that was really her hand, both as one- gazing out at the water’s edge, hands tight on arms in a hug, it was love.

(Thoughts)

She turns, eyes growing darker as her features strengthen, inhaling deeply as she says, ‘This is all my fault... this- worlds apart feeling we have yet still love.’

I shake my head back and forth. ‘Did she go after you or harm you in any way?’ ‘She didn’t have to; it was enough to hurt me through you- to get to me.’

I gawk at the world before me that she lives in cold modern yet cozy, sincere, and heartfelt, venturing how she could have faith in that after the case I just made.

-And-

Rising her to her feet and standing inside her- I cry thought her eyes, ‘Don’t be nonsensical!

‘...Of course, it is not your fault!’

Then she thought moments after- ‘Or mine... if it was bad luck, or maybe even fate.’

‘Did you listen to anything I said?’ I shake my head.

‘Melisa, you are standing in this world you’re going to be poisoned, by the air, even if there is now an elixir for black lung. You had nothing to do with it, you were just doing your rightful orders- it was beyond your control!’

We should not have to live in a world where we need a fresh air mask, after killing our first world, you would think, or to be hopeful in the fact that... we would think a little, yet we are going to do it all over again over not caring, in just having it all be disposable- and throw-a-way.

Nonetheless, I have scarcely finished when she is already discharging it with a wave of her hand. 'Ever, don't you see? This is not about me being Naddalin on the inside of this girl, that was once, or you, its karma.

'The revenge for centuries of selfish living; the why...'

'Trust... for you.'

She then shakes her head and giggles, though it's not the kind that asks you to join in, afterward.

'The is vengeance for centuries of selfish living.'

She then shakes her head and giggles, though it's not the kind that asks you to join in - with her, over the fact it was to hide the pain that she felt, worlds away - and not wanting to be.

It's the other kind - the kind that chills you to the bone.

'After all those years of loving you and losing you, repeatedly, I was sure that was my punishment for the way I'd been living, having no idea Haven died at your hands in the concluding of ways, yet in your comfort. I thought I would be next.

But now I see the truth I've missed all along, she is smarter than all of us and oh so wise.

Just when I was sure I'd evaded karma by making you immortal and keeping you forever by my side, karma gets the last laugh, allowing us an eternity together, but only to look, never to touch each other again.'

I reach for her hand with the other, wanting to hold her, comfort her, convince her that it's not at all true, or maybe that was it all along I was not sure. But I pull away just as quickly, lost in thoughts of why.

Remembering how our inability to touch is the very thing that got us both here.

'That's not true,' I say, gaze fixed at looking down her body. 'Why would you be punished when I'm the one who made the blunder? Don't you see?'

I- Melisa shake my head, irritated by her singular way of thinking.

‘Nevaeh planned it all along. She love’s Haven- I bet you didn’t know that, huh? She was one of the orphans you saved, and she loved her for all of those hard times when she was like you, would’ve done anything for her, and she would for you, and then you go and kill her.’

‘That was her wishes, for not feeling like a true woman!’

But Haven didn’t care about her- as she should, she only loved her- and her only, loved me- and then, well, after they killed her too, Emmah decided to go after me- only she did it through you- or so I thought at first.

Wanting me to feel the pain of never being able to touch you again- as she did for not seeing for years, blaming me, just like she, like I feel with Haven.

-And-

It all happened so fast, I just- thought too much about everything.’ I stop, knowing it’s useless, a total waste of words.

She halted for a moment, listening just after she started the conversation, the filling is if always at fault of knowing this, she knew- I knew- what I did not get was the hex causing all this over many- many years.

Even now I elect not to visit these thoughts in my mind, the same place and I will not let her either, I refuse- nothing good will come from it.

‘Melisa, please!’

Detestable thoughts... Metaphorically demonizing us both, thoracically free, to dwell in the subconscious, yet to feel like living life as unconscious.

‘I will not let you give up I refuse to.’

Then just moments after, ‘No, you can’t just give up.’

The isn’t karma- it’s me. Really, I must believe that- is so-o! I made many mistakes, horrible, horrible mistakes also.

‘Really have not...’ She said back.

Nonetheless, that doesn’t mean we can’t fix everything!

‘See that was something that I could never do is- FIX THINGS TO OTHER’S LIKING.’ She said.

There must be away.’ Clinging to the falsest of hopes, forcing an enthusiasm, I do not really feel- THAT ANY LONGER.

Melisa once Naddalin stands within me and I in her, a dark silhouette that is really me yet really her, in the night, the warmth of her sad tired gaze through my eyes the same serving as our only embrace.

‘I never- ever should have started,’ she says.

‘Never should have made the miss I did over others- should have let things take their own expected path, even if the path was reshuffled by them’

5

‘Seriously, ever, just look at the result- it’s brought nothing but pain! And the more I try the more pain that I receive and get.’

She without delay shakes her head, her gaze so sad, so apologetic, my heart caves.

‘There’s still time for you though, for me- and us.’

You have got your whole afterlife ahead of you- an eternity where you can be anything you want to be, do anything you want to do. Said Melisa as the body of the girl she was in and the mind of Naddalin.

I can say I moved a small green caterpillar today and saved her from death. Melisa said little lives matter too.

‘But what about me- you need to save me just as much,’ she then shrugs. ‘I’m polluted. I think we can all see the result of my hundred years.’

‘Nope!’ My voice quivers as my lips tremble so seriously it spreads to my cheeks. And she can feel it in hers, too.

‘You don’t get to walk away; you don’t get to leave me once more! If I say I will, and I do.

I spent the last month going through hell to save you. And really when you have saved me from me.

Besides now that you’re well I’m not about to give up. Said Nevaeh, you’re a hero to me, and in my life, I really have not had much time for them yet your mine. Lost in another body, lost in another world, you’re still the one I want to linger within, even though all the misunderstandings.

We are meant for each other, you said it yourself! ‘your famous words everything is meant to be if meant to be.’ She cried.

We’re just suffering a brief setback, that’s all. Nonetheless, if we can just put our heads together, I know we’ll think of a way to... be back together, face to face.’

I stop, voice fading, seeing her already moved on, retreating to her bleak sorry world where - she’s solely at fault for it all.

Besides, I know it’s time to tell the rest of the story, the sorry, regretful parts- I’d prefer to leave out.

(I already did, said Nevaeh, your story is just more chapters of my book of life. Sh-h, it’s okay, that you feel like you have murdered, and slaughtered, and have taken babies for their mothers. It’s all part of Post-traumatic stress disorder, of being a star- girl.)

‘My story is in your books?’

‘Yes!’

Maybe then she’ll see it without a dealt, maybe then...

‘So-o, before you assume karma’s out to get you or whatever, you need to know something else, something, I’m not accurately proud of, but still...’

‘There’s more,’ I say, swish ahead though I’ve no idea how to phrase what comes next.

I without delay take a deep breath... remember that in this body I can, something I have not done in years.

-And-

Also, I tell her about my trips to Earth and my homeland and the town around- to me was the world, that magical dimension between the dimensions, where I learned how to go back in time and that given the choice between my family and her- I chose her- over them- yet that is getting hard for me to do.

Swayed and influenced, I could one way or another restore the future, I was sure had been stolen, and up till now all it really amounted to be a lesson, I already knew - that occasionally destiny lies just outside of our reach and it is not graspable.

Melisa- I swallow hard and stare at the black sand, reluctant to see Nevaeh's reaction when she considers the eyes reflecting- of the one who betrayed her.

But then again, as an alternative of getting mad or upset like I thought, her environs me with the most beautiful glowing white light-a light so comforting, so forgiving, so pure- it's like the portal to my home -only better it's a connection of body, mind, and soul.

So-o, I close my eyes and surround her with light too, and when I open them again, we're wrapped in the most beautiful warm hazy glow.

'You had no choice,' she says, in a gentle voice with a very soothing, gaze, doing everything she can to ease all my shame.

'Unquestionably, you chose your family...'

It was the right thing to do... after all- right?

I would've done the same- if given the choice... yet, do I HAVE THE RIGHT TO CHOOSE.

7

I nod a little, shining her light even brighter and tacking on a telepathic embrace; knowing it's not as uplifting as the real thing but for now, it will do.

‘I know about your family, I know all, I saw it all...’ Naveah said to me. Then she looks at me with eyes so dark and intense, within me they turn black, I force myself to go on.

‘I really don’t know if life was meant to be like this without death and moving into other bodies to linger there is no longer- confidence in existing- over the fact that is all we know do lock in life we may not want to live.’

‘There is the family tree- I am looking at of us all in front of me now, and there are the lingering branches of what we have become, and the family line is no hard to follow.’

‘I cannot pay for my grandfather’s sins, thinking I am the apple that falls from the tree.’ Said, Nevaeh.

Lost in my deepening thoughts, I look back on it now, that all the kids, I was in class with my groping- they wanted to make abhorrence and hate on me- and their like kind, for being with they were, classed as also, yet, I never will be that immature- or have something to class- as they did; with needs that they want to cover.

Undeveloped- is not me, it's them and after all these years, they have not changed. Besides, they are still looking wrong to the rest of the mainstream population, and really, I am with the majority, and can't see why they're misunderstood, as of this year in my life I can.

Also... its sick to cut others off at the knees, and pick, and make fun of them- yet were all classed as someone with I.Q less than 50.

And you’re going mere me, as less than? Now look at me I am a literary genius, and what do you have, nothing but bitterness, to say why- I am nothing but fake and gay, or is that you really can't read? That was Karly’s saying and it is now mine too. Gay over what you want to perceive, face over you believe what is made up, lost in an Illusion of delusion.

Melisa- ‘Then she thought over top mine, these are the junk thoughts you had all your- life that has kept you from your happiness.’

‘No, I would like to say, I feel that they were all using me.’ Squalled Nevaeh.

‘I know about your family, I know all, I saw it all, and your school life too.’ She looks with eyes so dark and intense within the mine, I force myself to go on.

‘You’re always so secretive about your past, where you came from, how you lived - and so one day, while I was in Hastings; I asked about you-and-well-your entire life story was revealed, and your legendary now in your hometown even has a statue and everything they ever said it has completely turned around in your favor.’

I press my lips together and peer at her standing before me so silent and still.

Moaning as looks through my gaze into my eyes and telepathically traces her fingers along the curve of my cheek- creating an image so deliberate, so tangible, it almost seems real.

‘I’m sorry,’ say nit-picking, thumb mentally smoothing my chin.

‘I’m sorry,’ ‘I was so shut down and disinclined to share that, I reduced you to that. But then again, even though it happened a long time ago, it’s still something I for one would rather not to confer.’

I personally nod, having no intention of pushing it anymore. She is seeing her maternities in her mind,’ murder followed by years of abuse at the hands of the church- most beloved, is not a subject I intend to pursue- over the fact that those that hid behind faith to me are worthless! Held, Melisa.

8

‘Nevertheless, there’s more,’ I say, hoping I can restore a little hope by sharing something else, and that I learned, that is one thing I can do is educate others with my own experiences.

‘When I was watching your life unfold, in the end, they tried to have you killed, and even got away with killing a girl, and your adopted mother.

‘...Ture.’ Nevaeh said back.

‘Then even though, that seemed meant to be, I still managed to save you- and myself, her- and even them too.’

‘I have always been the angel.’

Then even though, that seemed meant to be, I still managed to save others, and then I feel to recollect that Emmah saved me, so I need to remember, memory seems to be getting hard for me to do.

I look at her, sensing she’s far from swayed and rushing ahead before I lose her completely.

‘I mean, yes, maybe our fate is sometimes fixed and unvarying, but there are other times when it’s shaped morally by the actions we take.’

So, when I couldn’t save my family by going back in time, it’s only because, that was destiny, that couldn’t be changed. There is one thing in life that is final and that is a time of death given by the highest God of them all, and even I can change that nor want too.

‘It’s beautiful... that you can change destiny, by being an angle of hope, or by the death - always for the moral- and good, in both.’

The funny thing is I was going to die anyways in my case having ALS, with anyone else in my town that would have been something to feel for, yet with me, it was passed by like a cold fall rain shower. Said Melisa, along with saying- we are two of a kind.

Or as Riley, my pain in the butt little sisters- said she had too, after my untimely passing, yet my best little friend too, that was all meant to be- or do I question this God of ours, then just a second before the second accident of falling and crawling, and being too weak to get up I knew what I had too, just like her, that took my everything including my voices and mobility and life, again... she never did say she love me either, and I never did with her, that is the one thing I regret- that is all the natural life is lost days of feeling nothing more than self-pity and regret.

‘Love not to be- is for me- it was my destiny!’ Said, Riley. As it was mine too. I am sure she will be seeing us in the coming days, as her natural life nears an end.

Nevaeh- ‘Really this is not the book of life it’s the book of death, of longing for life, said is not?’

‘Yes, yes, it is...’ She whispered back. ‘You can’t change the past, it just is more of the past remand it- kills the future.’

‘Nonetheless, when I found myself right back here in Hastings, and I was able to save you, well, I think it evidences that the future isn’t always concrete, not everything is ruled solely by fate. And that is why I give you eternal life, to make up for what you lost.’

‘Maybe so-oo.’ She sighs, gazes fixed on me, and my fate.’

‘But then again you can’t escape karma, ever...?’

...?...?

...It is what it is...?

...It doesn't judge, it's neither good nor immoral like most people ponder.'

Just like love- 'Love is always patient and kind; it is never jealous; love is never boastful or conceited; it is never rude or selfish; it does not take offense and is not resentful. Love takes no pleasure in other people's sins but delights in the truth; it is always ready to excuse, to trust, to hope, and to endure whatever comes.'

Nevaeh- I heard them call me a baby rapper to my face, and there was nothing, I could but stand there, hearing these lies day in and day out; like all the other lies, as well- that was just that nothing but lies.

Yet, the Commonwealth had their back, not mine, so I would say that is why it sounds good on paper too.

9

Emmah always said- 'It's the result of all actions, positive and negative- a constant balancing of events-cause and effect- tit for tat-reaping and showing- what goes around comes around.'

Then I asked why, why so much me- why am I the chosen one.

'Look at Karly's destiny- and what she did over not having a or education and did not want to work for $2.00 an hour, a hamburger joint. So, all she had to do is make on shit video of her, this is just one out of a hundred- I recall this one for $20.00 - 'teen masturbates & f*cks her dildo'- saying the headline- ('22-mins of me enjoying myself deliciously. Watch me c*m over and over with my toys. Adore my long legs, my small t*ts, and my bush while- I let myself go crazy thinking about you.')

It had 3,555 views- and she made $71,100 just with that... was it wrong some would say, yet what other choice did she have? Yet that makes her the bad girl- she is a girl after all- that showed that she was one- and had needs- and need the money more than modesty in a world that could give a flying shit about her- in any way.'

With one video, she has made $6,000,000 in her short life, be the end days of it and money still has not made a destiny for her either. Said, Naddalin in the thought of mind haunting in the body of Melisa.

She shrugs her shoulders... saying- 'we're all just misunderstood girl's ant' -we!'

'However, you phrase it, it's the same in the end- is it not?'

~*~

Then... we are the bad ones out over- it's our destiny.

'And as much as you'd like to think otherwise, that's exactly what's happening here with you sometimes you must ask if... God's at be are just screwing us.' Emmah used to say that too.

'I have been there too...'

'All actions cause a reaction, I pounder even now- still having faith, even if some days I faulted like a human that was deemed- less then human....' Said Emmah, back many years ago now, yet I understand completely.

'By them...' she said.

'By them...' Naddalin said.

We may never- ever know...

10

I remember Hope my adopted mothers' faith, being that of old Baptist and some would say I was next to razed as Amish thinking, I was shunned by her from day one, over being an English-er for the start, or day one, full of sin, everything about me or I did, even if other girls were- I was the sinful one.

Everything was a sin, and my biggest sing of all lusting after my own body's needs, like for peruse, she could not understand this need. The second was the love of a girl. The third the love of a man before mirage, and a sinful baby- girl out of wedlock, and that is why she passed to young hexed my- own adopted grandmother. I was sinful, yet for her, it was all money, no ask that question of sin. She is nothing but a liar, in her faith and in her life.

As a child I did not understand, yet now looking back on faith, I get everything she believed - misguided as it was - I understand the misunderstandings of it all now. The fourth was questioning everything too much... and thinking, and not just being dumb, as asked of me - sin - sin - sin - and shame. That why I walked around feeling like the dirty girl, with no need too.

(Appraise)

It happened, Andromeda - and Milky Way collision, now making a new galaxy, with all the plants mixed, as I predicted, even Earth has a new beginning. 14 planets in all and large moons, and skies like we have never seen before, a new home for a that is life - Andromeda - Way.

She shakes her head... your mind amazes me.

(You think that is good to hear this one out.)

'These are where I have my actions have brought me.'

It was said that the oak tree that was next to my old home held the witch body of my adopted grandmother - that was not so when I dug up the body of a child, and as long as the tree was intact it would keep her evil at bay, Hope always said me playing on that tree is why - is why - I turn out the way I did.

Like I was the hex - and the next. Her mom and dad my grandparents were part of the Amish community - in the depth of Pennsylvania, the girl my real mother said by my grandmother was claimed as evil over fortunetelling - witchcraft, it was said, this is why she was killed by the hand of whom I thought was my mom and placed in a grave next to my home. Nothing was as it seems... The tree, that was her evil was wicked up in the branches of the angle oak, that was next to my home and room, and my mother was always next to me - and I was the blame. Everything about the tree, the home, and the land was hexed - like me, that why she took me back.

Thought by the Amish, I never knew... I asked why me... and then I thought about it, my mother was really the child that was killed and placed there, my real mother was only a child when she had me, and that too was evil thought by them, my real mother was Sarah! The child that was killed at the hands of my Grandmother. And the whole thing about her death was a cover-up, she was 12 years old, and hidden from the world, and I was passed down in a dirty adoption.

I was the child of the child... so was my dad really my dad?

And my thought was yes, I look like him... and then the reminisce of my dad to the woman that gave birth to me, it was Sarah, looking back in my thought of mind. And she loved me more than life... that is why she was killed by them too.

‘Then again you need to ride 20 dicks before you find the right one if ever you do.’ Karly always said that now I get it, that was my young mom and dad.

So-o...

‘Ture- true... that you do... both- girls felt unanimously- saying we have been hurt, so badly, that way we turned to girls, for love, girls well love always when boys are - macho asshole, that- are just impressing their jackoff boyfriends!’

‘Ture- true... that you do... both- girls felt unanimously- saying we have been hurt, so badly, that way we turned to girls, for love, girls well love always when boys are - macho asshole, that is just impressing their butt-head boyfriends!’

‘All the time, I told myself I turned you out of love- but now I see it was really out of self-interest- because, I couldn’t be without you. Also, your past has nothing to do with it.’

‘You like this?’

She asks softly, her finger rubbing my outer lower ear, and she starts to flex her finger slowly, in, out, in, out... of me, her fingers still circling the fleshy lips that move about with her thumb, that connecting line linking as she pulled it away of wetness.

I close my eyes, trying to keep my breathing under control- over the fact she feels it and she has not had breath for years and her chest is moving to mind, trying to absorb the disordered, muddled sensations that her fingers are releasing on me, fire coursing through my body. I moan again.

‘You're so wet, so quickly.’

‘Open your mouth,’ she commands and thrusts her thumb in my mouth. My eyes fly open, blinking wildly.

‘Let me make c*m for you!’

‘Sin...?’ He- he.

‘Yes, sin for me!’

‘M-mm- you are my Oreo cookie, that I just have to spate and like out the creamy center.’

Her thumb presses on my tongue, and my mouth closes around her, sucking wildly on the synthetic beach outside my room way up high.

I'm panting once more as I tug on her with my mouth, and its trails down and under my chin, I can taste the smooth, rich leather or her- if only in my mind.

‘See how you taste,’ she breathes, and I hear it in my ear. ‘Suck down and taste with your fingers, the baby she said.’

I taste the saltiness on his thumb and the faint metallic tang of blood. Two things that have not been a part of me in years; Melisa- she’s alive... and the taste of her is like my own private high-grade Heroin, that needs increased tests to cover the need.

‘That’s why this is happening now.’

‘So, that’s it?’

I shake my head, hardly believing she’s determined to give up so easily.

‘That’s how it ends? Every time... with more thoughts of overthinking everything, instead of being in the moment.’

‘So, that’s it?’

I shake my head, hardly believing she’s determined to give up so easily in figuring out the truth.

‘That’s how it ends? ...Really?’

11

You’re just so dang sure you’ve been chased down by karma you don’t even try to fight back?

‘What’s the use...?’ She said to Nevaeh.

You came all the way just, so we could be together, at last... and now that we're facing difficulty, you're not even going to try to stride with me down this path - hand in hand?'

As you can see my hand is in your hand now... even if they're both your hands.

By the way, did you send your high school diploma back to them after you wiped your butt - on it?

'Yes, yes I did.'

And they pressed charges, and then I asked do they have a case, looking over this long document they called a fragment next to a run-on, they can't read or comprehend themselves, at less than 50 words a minute, teachers, and children alike.

'Middle fingers! I like it!'

'So, why stop now - with us.'

'Ever- and ever- never, letting go of ever- and forever- never.'

12

Then I transport myself there - risk and all, using a port-key spell, and I fly light-years into other worlds, my wings ripping in the time and wind, of the stars around me, I must be next to her.

Her gaze is warm, loving, all- encircling like her hair and tightly squeezing arms, as they are falling around her as they fall together to the gold wheatgrass within the black sand outside her room - that I learned to love just as much, but it does nothing to stop the defeat in her voice - when she sees me and what I have done to myself to get there, next to worn out and becoming ash - all over my body skin flaking like paper, yet I want the love and touch of each other hands and bodies - face to face.

'I'm sorry, but there are some things I just know.'

'DO YOU LOVE ME!'

'Yeah, well...' I shake my head and gaze down at the ground they were laying on top of the tall grasses swaying in the breeze in the orange glow of the dystopian cityscape, burying my toes deep in the sand.

‘Just because you’ve got a few centuries on me doesn’t mean you get the last word- in what is love too, by yes I love you more than life itself.’

‘Because, if we’re truly in this together, if our lives, like our fate, is truly entwined, then you’ll realize this isn’t just happening to you, I’m part of it too- and that is destiny. And you don’t need the care to see that... do you?’

‘And you don’t get to walk away from it- you don’t get to walk away from me! We’ve got to work together- and stay together!’

‘...No backing out.’

‘There has to be away, to be into places at one time.’ Funny you should say that I am... right now.

‘How do you figure...?’

My old body is not the ruler of my world... after I grave robed my old body and resurrected it before Earth was no more... like I could let Earth when that one too. Just like the Bible was the only thing brought back, all those years ago... these worlds have me and my word. One mind two bodies, one mind lingering in many bodies and minds linked all together like a network of wireless communication.

I always knew that the old me would become devout.

I stop, body shaking, throat closed so tight, I can no longer speak. All I can do is stand there before her, silently urging her to join me in a fight I’m not sure we can win.

‘I’ve no plans to leave you- now or ever,’ she says, gaze filled with the longing of two hundred years or more. ‘I can’t leave you, ever. Never- ever- never- ever- believe me, I’ve tried. But in the end, I always find my way back to your side- where ever you go even hell. You’re all I’ve ever wanted- all I’ve ever loved- but Ever- maybe hard to keep when you now eternal and I am not.’

‘You will be again in time...’

‘No buts.’ I shake my head, wishing I could hold her, touch her, press my body tightly against her.

‘There’s got to be away, I can do the same - as you did. And together we’ll find it. You already know- if you love me then take your own life- I just know that we will- last and last.’

‘I can do that,’ you do it,’ and grabs her and holds her under the rippling blue water of the swimming pool until the color fades from her eyes, ‘till death she said.’

Now I am just an angel of death and love has nothing to do with it.

We’ve come too far to let Naddalin keep us apart and take over everything we have made.

But I can’t do it alone Chiaz, you are and always will be my true love and she looks over her shoulders to see- first a dark shadow, then this name walking up behind her. (Well Done!) He said, grabbing her, and kissing her lips, and she was a week in his arms like a child.

Yet even if you are now matrimonially wed to Alissa Amsel is a blonde hair, blue-eyed girl, that took him as her plaything 300 or so years back, some things never change.

This girl was not- Nevaeh- it was you know who... locked lost inside part of her old dead brain of her body that was brought back to life.

Lily and AVA are at a lower level, where things have not changed either, and I am through fighting that one. The best thing is Lily resurrected AVA, after everything she did to her. I still ask why.

And the real Nevaeh is... well now brain dead as she has always been thanks to being and my family.

‘We’re back...’ Ava lingering inside the body of Nevaeh said.

She said in an uncanny- ‘The best part is the dumb girl did this herself looking for love that she should never have, thanks to us.’

‘Ah, temptations were always her weakness- on the lord to another now.’ And in our minds, we now think the same- over the fact we are the same.’ She said.

‘Not without your help, she said Lily my love thank-you for being a good little sycophant to me.’

‘So please promise me- promise you’ll try- to take her out, so I can be lord of all, she has ever love or accomplished.’

~*~

Chiaz- She looks at me, her gaze luring me in, and I think it she just the same old Nevaeh - she always was.

Now closing her eyes as she fills the beach with so many red roses pedals the entire of all the water is coved and now blood red, the symbol of our undying love covering every square inch of the body under it. As the blood was given for the evil lives to feed on.

‘Look all, a newly fallen angel made, that has had her head ripped off - and her body ripped to paces - now that is a story to tell the others - is it not? Like - in her world of boo-hoo tears.’ She mocked.

‘Strange now she is immortal just like you!’ Lily thought, without really meaning to think, know the punishment that would come from having a thought.

Then she slips her arm through mine and leads me back in the girl’s room when just killed, saying and yes that may be so-o, our skin separated only by her supple black leather jacket and my organic cotton tee, that is now the only covering on me, of not really being a free-fallen angle.

(A week has passed)

Enough to spare the consequences of any accidental DNA exchange - never did I think this would happen, but unable to temper the tingle and heart that pulsates between us, there in my mind again.

‘Never should’ve made the preparation - should’ve let things take their own natural course. I should have to know that I would do this she thought. Seriously, ever, just look at the result - it’s brought nothing but pain!’

The real Nevaeh was nothing more than a crumbling wreck. Without delay now at that time she shakes her head, and the tangible Nevaeh gaze so sad, so remorseful, my heart cave s, life and her and now she is going to thanks to me, as I knew - I would do to her.

‘There’s still time for you though,’ said Jaylynn in a comforting way.

‘You’ve got your whole life ahead of you - endlessness where you can be whatsoever you want to be, do anything you want to do. I’ll well take this over for you and you become me, and I linger in you, its time you have had some rest, mom.’

‘Okay.’ She said back reluctantly. As the change was made... in an electrical fashion.

But then again me- taking over your Pious spot is my dream;’ she shrugs at me like a young girl that she is. ‘...And odd that is the dream I have for you.’

‘I’m contaminated; I think we can all see the consequence of my hundred years next to your three, and I owe you for everything I was to you being the spoiled brat, teenager- that only wanted daddy.’

A strong glowing light in fog and hazy eerie, with a rhythmically driven power of heavy steel wheels, shakes the floorboards under my feet. The train pulls in, and the brakes scream, and there is steam all around the cars, and then off she steps the immortal, back as the fallen angel Naddalin. And I- Nevaeh was more than very happy to fall into her long arms, as she was with me.

‘One hundred years and this train still look the same, as it did back when it was restored.’

‘Oh hum,’ she sighed.

‘Why me- right?’

She shrugs at me like a young girl that she is. ‘I’m filthy, I think we can all see the consequence of my hundred years.’

‘What do you think about my new life now over, now coming to a close, and my chapters of life, worth adding to your story?’ She asked.

Nevaeh in the body of Jaylynn- ‘I think you did well, the long hug ends, with those words, and her tapping her on the nose.’

‘I can see what you have done, now to escape them.’ Said Naddalin.’

‘Yes, and you need to keep that all hush and sh-h too.’ Said Nevaeh.

‘No!’ My voice quivers as my lips shake so-o badly it spreads to my cheeks.

‘Yes, this is why, your back and I am hiding, yet the joke is really on them, isn’t it? I got you back, and Jaylynn is out for blood, remember why- I do.’

‘Yes, and yes, and oh yes,’ she said once more in an even tighter hug, like long lost lovers.

‘You don’t get to walk away; you don’t get to leave me again!’

‘I spent the last month going through hell to save you, and now that you are well, I’m not about to give up.’

‘We are meant for each other, you said it yourself to me many times!’

‘We are just feeling a temporary setback, that’s all.’

‘Nonetheless, if we can just put our heads together, I know we’ll think of a way to... you and I.’

I personally stop, voice fading, ‘you see- seeing them thinking this, she- Jaylaynn- like- previously moved on- as me, withdrawing to her bleak sorry world where she thought she was solely to blame, thinking like me- speculate, or they think; I would think- right- war all over again, yet I am not fighting it this time if I do not have too.’

Yet, she interrupts me in the middle of my sentence, saying- ‘yet it is not you this time is it?’

Then- I know it is time to tell the rest of the story, the sorry, regretful parts- I would prefer to leave out, I am sacrificing my own child this time.

Maybe then she’ll see it differently- if she is in your shoes, maybe then- and there... ‘There’s more,’ I say, whistle ahead though I’ve no idea how to phrase what comes following.

Besides, tell her about my trips back home there is that magical dimension, left out of my life for a while, and the space between the dimensions where I learned how to go back in time- and that given the choice between my family and her- I chose her, I choose to be her. The same mistakes I made before; I may have made again.

Influenced I could somehow restore the future, I was sure had been pilfered, and yet all it really amounted to was a lesson I already knew: Occasionally destiny lies just outside of our range for girls like you and me.

I swallow hard and stare at her- and the room that we were in seemed to blur, reluctant to see Naddalin's reaction when she looks into the eyes of the one who betrayed her. As I did with everyone I have ever loved.

So-o I close my eyes and surround her with light too, and when I open them again, we are wrapped in the most gorgeous warm hazy glow.

Nonetheless, as an alternative to getting livid or upset... like I thought, she vicinities me with the loveliest glowing white light- a light so heartening, so magnanimous, so pure- it's like the portal to another world- only better- and we go there together.

'You had no choice,' she says, voice gentle, gaze soothing, doing everything she could to ease all my shame.

'Unquestionably, you chose your family. It was the right thing to do, yet they said no as always to you- so-o. I would've done the same-given the choice- not to have a choice, and that also sounds a lot like you too...'

I nod, shining her light even brighter and tacking on a telepathic embrace, with Jaylynn as I did with you- she in my head, all the time, yet locked out when she thinks there is a need to be, so they really are as confused as can be.

Knowing as I do, it's not as soothing as the real thing of me being next to her, but for now, it'll have to do- 'yet that is the afterlife- No?'

'I know about your family, I know everything about you and them too, I saw it all- I have lingered in your mind to understand the full story,' she looks at me with eyes so dark and intense, I force myself to endure- seeing all the memories also.

Flashbacks I call them...

'You're always so secretive about your past, where you came from, how you lived - and so one day, while I back on Earth, I found out your story and where you're really from... I did... I asked about you- and-well- your entire life story was revealed to me just by reading between the lines.'

I press my lips together and peer at her standing before me so silent and still.

Radiant as she gazes into my eyes and telepathically traces her fingers along the curve of my cheek-creating an image so deliberate, so palpable, it almost seems real.

14

‘I’m sorry,’ she says, thumb mentally smoothing my chin.

‘I’m remorseful, and I was so shut down and unwilling to share, that I condensed you to that. However even though it happened a long time ago, it’s still something I prefer not to discuss any further.’

‘She was that way, I am my way, in time we made up for it all, and I still have to pay for it all- and why I will never really know.’

I nod at her, having no intention of pushing it anymore- seeing the blank blah look on her face as if parts of the story were missing in something that was far too long.

‘She is witnessing her parents’ her own suicide, and then her child’s followed by years of abuse at the hands of the church, and the schools- lingered in both its the same, theme- I intend to pursue, over her pain that she had on the inside cover it all.

‘Even so, there is more,’ I say, hoping I can reestablish a little hope by sharing something else, that I am erudite.

‘When I was watching your life unfold, in the end, they had us all killed. Nevertheless, even though that seemed fated to happen, I still managed to save you, as you did me, and you did with them, so really it’s all working out.’

I gaze at her, sensing she’s far from convinced and rushing ahead before, I lose her entirely.

‘I mean, indeed, maybe our wisdom of destiny is occasionally fixed and unalterable, but there are other times when it’s shaped morally by the actions we take.

So-o when I could not save my family by going back in time, it’s only for the reason that- destiny couldn’t be changed.

Or as Jaylynn said seconds before the accident that took them again- in my mind, ‘You can’t change the past, it just is what it is, even if.

In the hissing power- there were coming thunderstorms in the gray sky, flying around in the sky, overhead in the evil, made were lightning dragons sent to remind the world that the dark lord was back and very much alive- and after Nevaeh, mind body and soul. The mythology that is only part of our world creatures were running in a scurry.

Even the topless mermaids, with back luminous tails- of this word, were hiding behind shimmering black rocks- in their lagoons and rock arch grottos, covered in human craniums dripping with blood- teeth showing- eye holes blacker than night, long out in the waters were taking cover in their homes, over the fears made, by the wrath of AVA, and clan, schools, types of deer, unicorns, colorful singing birds, even snakes were in hiding, dog-like- with big bushy tails, cat-like, elephant-like too, large game, large fuzzy bears, and small alike...

Even the swans around the lily ponds- that are over the crystal-clear waters, were swinging away- to the sight of the storm to come. All with wings... and large fangs, yet most when trust is made friendly to those that show love, to them.

The half-sunk haunted wood ships in the background like far too eerie, surely holding gold that would never be obtained, in a heavy fog. Due to dementors. Every now and then you can hear the girl of the one ship moaning Chassidy Seals.

No one has ever ventured to step on her ship and survived on to tell about it- in our world. Yet you can hear her sing under the water, to the others that are part of that world, like the mermaids, that seem to- like- understand her, and protect her as if she was one of their many deities.

Even the young kids of this world, that was out in the horse drawing and charges with the windows steamed over they were making love, stopped their rocking- them to run, uniform skirts up and uniform dark grayish-black chinos down. The only lights were the light flame flickers of the street lamps.

Then more thoughts, overtaking the qualms in her mind, whirring out the world around. 'I mean, yes, maybe our providence of destiny is sometimes fixed and unalterable, but there are other times- like- when it's shaped purely by the actions we take or have made in the past that were our choices- to make fate happen.

So-o when I could not save my family by going back in time, it's only since destiny that couldn't be changed for it was my thoughts that made it all happen.

It does not judge, it's neither good nor bad like most individuals, are - 'So, that's it?'

I- Naddalin shake my head, hardly believing she's determined to give up so easily; now I understand that she has Jaylynn charmed into taking this one, for her, as she needs to relax.

'That's how it ends, you playing their game? You're just so dang sure you've been chased down by karma you don't even try to fight back, like you?'

You came all the way just, so we all could be together and now that we're facing an obstacle - everyone is breaking apart, you're not even going to try to scale the brick wall in our path - this time, you're giving it to your little girl?'

'Karma- right or meant to be?' Asked Naddalin.

'Ever.' Her gaze is warm, loving, all-encompassing, but it does nothing to cancel the defeat in her voice. Yet that was always Nevaeh, 'I'm sorry, but there are some things I just know.'

'Yeah, well...' I shake my head and gaze down at the ground - over the rains was so pounding the face and body, burying my toes deep in the sand - water running around my toes.

'Just because you've got a few centuries on me doesn't mean you get she and they will have the last word; my child is younger and much smarter than they ever will be, she smart, they go by thoughtless impulses.'

Since if we're truly in the together, if our lives, like our fate, is truly entwined, then you'll realize there isn't just happening to you, I'm part of it too, and so are all of them that have helped you become what you hate the most a fake hero.

'Yeah, well...' I shake my head and gaze down at the ground, burying my toes deep in the sand even more, as I always did when I was being shy.

And you don't get to walk away from it - you don't get to walk away from me, or them either, even if, you're no longer fighting the war!

And you think is all over just because I gave myself to my child, it not you know it stalling.

‘We’ve got to work together!’

‘There has to be a way- to end this once and for all-’

I then stop, body shaking, throat closed so tight I can no longer speak. All I can do is stand there before her, silently urging her to join me in a fight, I’m not sure we can win if we both love each other and my child- that we both believe in.

‘...We can win.’

‘I’ve no plans to leave you,’ she says, gaze filled with the yearning of hundred years.

‘I can’t leave you, Ever. Believe me, I’ve tried. But in the end, I always find my way back to your side. You’re all I’ve ever wanted-all I’ve ever loved-but Ever-’

‘No buts...’

I shake my head, wishing I could hold her, touch her, press my body tightly against her, in the pouring rain... and we did.

‘There’s got to be away, the cure for the pain we have. And together we’ll find it. I just know that we will.’

‘We’ve come too far to let them keep us apart. Nonetheless, I can’t do it alone.’

‘Not without your help. So please promise me- that you’ll try.’

She looks at me, her gaze luring me in... we kiss. Our skin separated only by her supple uniform and my organic cotton, at this point see-through blouse, that was lost fitting, that is fluttering in the wind open in the wind, like my long hair blowing in the breezes.

~*~

Walking to the water’s edge, even in the storms, closing her eyes as she fills the beach with so many lilies the entire cove is bursting with pink waxy petals atop green curving stems- the ultimate symbol of our undying love covering every square inch of sand into the greed blue water - so romantic, she said a spell to hole time, (Time-la-reverse-o) and we made up for lost time, having just a moment to be in love. And then a moment of rewind happens- for all but them, and they had their twilight swim.

Then she slips her arm through mine and leads me back to the castle, and time was no longer standing still around us.

Looking into Jaylynn...

16

🐷 (PIGS)

I look back into my mother's life, and start to have flashbacks, where she said, 'I remembered being in the cracker slammer.' And having a bench warrant by the independent municipality for my arrest and getting tackled by three men for no given reasons, other than we want to give you handcuffs, and throw you in jail. I LOOK BACK ON THIS FOR HERE AND CALL THEM ALL PIGS!

The kids her age just trashing her out on blabbermouth/ creep-book, AKA Facebook. Saying that she was looked up for ionic reasons such as chatting, discussions, and chitchat of speculations. Like - this was way before my dad, and she got together. Called a molester yet she was still a virgin, as a girl of her age at that time should be. Called a molester over they have seen her eating at a restaurant, along with and with her guarding, called odd, said Aura Burnette, so now eating with your guarding in a restaurant now makes you a child molester and strange, outlandish then I know a lot of them... then given your point of view, of simple-minded nature.

So, reviewing what was said, a million seconds from today will be in 11 days. The maths is 1 million divided by 60 then 24. The remainder is irrelevant as the question asked was how many consecutive days, (is a million times) Had the question been - when would it be a million seconds from a specific time then the remainder (.57) would matter. In other words, you said nothing but slander of calling someone you don't even know a molester, over you're a dumb as f*ck.

One classmate on Facebook named Florencio Pinckney, even said 'She's a molester she kept staring at me, so I know him.' Yet they never met my mother ever. Staring is not molesting, yet you j*cking-off with your hand in your pants on your page, nice, pig. (Why - do you care?) Where you shop for your groceries, should be your business also, no - it's has become the thought of mind of a small town full of nothing but retards. She was Stocked until its creepy.

This skank like - don't ream you're - a*s hole - too hard - now, like over the fact you can draw a stick-figure, go back to the hate and fisting yourself, that's all you know how to do. Jina Overton said,

'She used to draw pictures of a girl from my high school who were servers, she'd draw sexy fairies and other incomprehensible pictures with their face were drawn in...'

-And-

...?...

'Don't be jealous over talent...' that is all I can say.

(Cheating on a girlfriend)

'Chet charges... really? ...?... really...?' And that was how it was spelled people, and my mom was the so-called retard of her grade and made to be the village idiot.

Therefore, she is in court in pink and white, jumpers, and shackles, over shamming spatulating, Severely mentally challenged people like you!

Consequently, she was never given an education, over dumb butt hole, wanting her not to be around them, this is the way, a loathing unlike I have ever seen in my life. Even I was not bullied that hard. And to keep her kissing their butt for everything she would ever need, gruesomely sick.

Ashleigh Rock- 'All this and she a writer, for kids...' said another from her graduating class. (implying what I ask? That she stocks on kids, over being a writer?)

Kathleen Roy- 'She's nuts my son used to fight with him all the time, he never learned- and you can thank his grandma for that... she lets him treat her like crap, and she thought she could anyone and I know some of the charges is terroristic threats and property damage.'

Coming from the Bob Roy- a mother of poverty, with a son that would strangle cats for amusement, and terroristic to others, and suicidal, and was held back hold over the fact he could not meet 3rd-grade education standers, being the highest in his education and was a drop-out over the mother would wishes, now her child was ret*rded beyond the majority. All this over the fact that his special needs were not, thank the mother, that would not sign. I think she has this backward...

'Moving on, they're not even worth it.'

17

She shrugs... even so-o. and so do I.

Enough to spare the consequences of any accidental DNA exchange, but unable to temper the tingle and heart that pulsates between us even then even though.

DNA was always what was in question.

‘What goes around comes around. It’s the result of all actions, positive and negative - a constant balancing of events- cause and effect- blow for blow- reaping and disseminating.’

‘Or chose not to blow and have this...’ Supposed Jaylynn in her mind.

‘Though you phrase it, it’s the same in the termination. Furthermore, as much as you would like to think else, that is precisely what’s happening here.

Altogether actions cause a response, or asking more questions...

‘All the time, I told myself I turned you out of love- but now I see it was really out of egotism- why I couldn’t be without you. That’s why is happening now.’

‘Besides the is where my actions have brought me.’

She- in existence, and Jaylynn shakes her head, ripping herself out of the thought that is like a dream, in a pulsing white light.

I gave up a new pair of Nikes for one small cup of coffee’.

Hashtag- (they- the guards called my mother sugar-t*ts!)

~*~

(Some time has passed)

‘Guess what?’

Then Jaylynn got into the last memory that her mother Nevaeh had, and that was with the girl that just was killed, Melisa, her new love interest.

Looking deep into the mind, just before the color left the young girl’s eyes, she gazes at me as she climbs to her knees looking down with her hair falling all around me, in the sand.

Her big eyes wider than usual, cute baby face curving into a grin. 'No, you know what? Don't guess...

I'll just tell you because you're never going to believe it! You're never going to a conclusion!

I smile, hearing her thoughts a few moments before she can speak them, refraining from saying the wrong thing.

Nevaeh- And to me, that was always the right thing to say. But I did say your good friend Naddalin, who actually- knows all and everything about me!

You and I dating- 'I've known about the possibility for a few weeks, but it just became official last night, and I still can't believe it!

Eight weeks in Nouveau Paris in the France courtiers of the world named- Trump you and I could spend, doing nothing but acting, eating, and stalking smoldering hot men... and remembering what a man is, before falling to each other- over understanding.

To yet know that she and I are even more perfect this some man, over the fact that we get each other, yet it's fun to play with boys.'

I glance at her as I back out of our drive, of the home we rented for the week, just like any other girls would in the real world. 'And for once with the freedom, I felt good with all that.'

'I love these man-manufactured worlds, don't you,' Naddalin said.

He- he, giggled Nevaeh.

She looks at me. 'faster, you know the drill. What happens in here stays in here.'

Walking down the street hand in hand... as girlfriends.

Not a care in the world, strolling like girls in a park, with a walk and talk that was just blending in.

My thoughts drifting to Haven and Emmah- and the ones that were lost to final death, wondering how many more immortal ne'er-do-wells are still out there, just waiting to show up in my mind over and over just to terrorize me, no matter where I go.

And then- I let it go, and start to live life, now having one, by having the best of both worlds, and trading lives. Now there are many variations of me- and they all linger with me all misunderstood.

‘...‘Till now.’

Yeah, you and I like- are both going to have hot love fast passant freak me hard sex, with at least two hot boys, tonight and were both at the same time, and then switch lovers, it a dream for any young girl around here and we're no different, I want group hot make me cummie sex.

It's been years since I have felt a man. Said Naddalin.

Nevaeh- Except when it does not, I feel the most fear- over knowing what next, by them, I don't like a man taking me, and losing control, it makes me feel week.

‘Anyway, I am leaving soon, just after school gets out- just think were century years old, and still look, also act like school girls like when are we going to grow up?’

I did not want to say yet this is our last time to be together... I am moving on to a new life. Yet, that is what I should have told Jaylynn, the last time, that I saw her.

Besides, like- I have so much to prepare between now and then! You need to stop thinking with your head, girl, let go tonight and have fun.

‘Seriously perfect.’

I smile, and the best of it all. ‘Really, Congrats, on making it out alive to see what you lost, like always.’

And the moment I say it, I realize it is true, I am happy for her- yet, I feel like I am losing yet, another person in my life.

‘That's cool, and well deserved I might add. I only wish I could go with you.’

Hitherto, I don't think- that I am strong enough, to take yet another round.

It would be so nice to escape all my problems and fly away from all the and- that what we did, wings soring, to angels in flight at the midnight- in starlight. Besides, I miss hanging with her, already, and my own world.

Except when it does not, I feel the most fear- over knowing what next, by them.

‘Anyway, I am leaving soon, just after school gets out.’

‘I did not want to say- yet this is our last time to be together... I am moving on to a new life.’

‘And I have so much to prepare between now and then! I think its best and you can find a man, not me. After last night I can see that is what you really want.’ Said Nevaeh.

Nevaeh- ‘Seriously perfect we were before lusting for a man.’

I smile, and the best of it all. ‘Really, Congrats, on making it, like - to see what you lost- and doing so Naddalin you may have lost me too.’

‘That’s so cool that you well better now. And well deserved I might add. I only wish I could stay with you when you if what you’re looking for was really me and not them.’

Then the moment I say it, I realize it is true, I am happy for her- yet, I feel like I am losing yet again, another person in my life. ....And really, I can’t let that happen.

It would be so nice to escape all my problems- with you as I plan- yet as soon as I get a pain it turns to shit, and all the plain need to be replayed out in my mind to fit a completely different scenario.

I think it’s time to fly away from all- end what we did, wings soring and for me to go back home, to all the fallen angels in flight in midnight- in starlight, where I need to be. She said almost- robotically. Besides, I miss home, already...

I am going home... The last few weeks have been the best in my life when she and Haven (along with the rest of the school, saw her they were in tears and running for her hugs,) I was under Naddalin’s spell were some of the loneliest days of my life, were replaced with my best. Yet, it’s all over now.

Not having Naddalin beside me was more than I could bear, but not having the ones I care for like my two best friends nearly sent me over the edge- too and all you ladies.

Nevertheless, she and Haven do not evoke any of that, none of them did, to them it was more than she was gone for a year- old she looked like Jaylynn, yet they knew she was really Nevaeh.

Only Naddalin can access small bits and pieces, and what she recalls leaves her feeling awful - guilty - over they share soul- like she shares with Jaylynn with DNA.

We stay in youth hostels, backpack around- how cool is this? Just the three of us- like the old days, you know, you and Emmah, Haven and I, and me and whoever...'

Even Dariez, too, when she feels like being with us. Yet for some reason, I don't think she altogether trusts me.

'You and whoever... we meet along the way too?' I glance at her, saying they're all friends, and love you.

'What's that about, trust?' Said, Haven

'We all are doers.' Nevaeh shrugs.

'Oh, come on.' I- Nevaeh roll my eyes. 'Since when?'

'Since last night when I found out I'm going back home and starting over- and that is now the trust I have found.'

19

She giggles, running a hand through her brown hair.

'Listen, you all great and all, don't get me wrong.'

'But- I'm not fooling myself, to feel so much freedom. As you know that was something I could never- ever have.' Said Nevaeh.

Nevaeh- I am not pretending- it's anything more than it is, am I? It's like we've got an expiration date, you know- and it's just my time- to try over- fall and rise from the ashes, and become the ash angel, I'll see you again- she said to Naddalin I promise, she was thinking deep in her mind and the other girls could see into her eyes to the thought as a dream.

You guys are different, your lifers, she was a liar. Maybe- she has the parts of me that I did not need to keep the attributes that are unattractive, ha- she can keep them.'

Come on girls- lest go see a show tonight in the village with a full three acts with a definite beginning, middle, and end. It is not like with you and Emmah. It's like my life has no end and the story is all mixed up I forgot with a story should be.

‘Lifers not liars!’

I peer at her, shaking my head as I stop at a traffic light, as we set in our horse-drawn carriage.

‘Sounds more like a prison term than a happily ever after- we're all locked into this life, yet that is how girls like us live and go- crashing- burning, smoldering, like paper- and rising from the ash- like a reawakening, and a reinvigorated youthful body.’

‘You know what I mean don’t you, we have all done this now- we are all ASH ANGLE’S.’

~*~

It was said that Naddalin takes out her frustration out on the river every day, around the same time at night with a lantern, and we stare at the reflection’s, to find something that is no longer there- in the ripples.

She studies her shape, turning her hot-pink nails away now from her face to hang her head to cry.

~*~

‘Wow.’ The girls all thought unanimously- looking into her mind, and her world.

‘It’s just that you guys are so in tune with each other, so connected, that even apart you still see each other.’

‘And I mean that factually by the way since you’re always going at it, this is what you both really need to see that you have love.’

Not anymore, I swallow hard, waking fast the second traffic light turns from red to green, crossing the intersection with a loud screech of the wagon wheels stopping for us to go to the path we girls wanted to take- coming back to the castle and leaving a thick trail of impression behind them in the mud and cobblestone and grass-covered stone.

Nonetheless, even after I set still for a moment to think she's nowhere to be found- I see the glassing of the ripples in my daydreams. Our souls, still locked together, would apart.

Besides- I am about to climb a wall in panic, wondering where she could be, I never remembered her to row a boat- at all, when she appears right beside me- in translucent flicker of ghost, I- we blink- blink and blink once more, her hand in mine the whole time - I think, I have blacked out a moment there, yet we all saw her with us.

'I wonder what the vision meant?' Asked Haven. 'It's not good, not good at all.' Emmah said.

Refusing to slow until we run into a castle and I scan for Naddalin- to be there always seem to stare down danger more than us, in a second- she was next to me, yet she was not there at all, it like I could feel and see her there with my eyes yet, there was nothing but air in front of me, and the feeling of presence, haunting me.

She has become a hermit, said Dariez. I say this today in my card reading and séances, Psychic reading from mirrored glass, words and visions shown, to me.

Naddalin nods.

She stares at her, eyes practically bugging out of her head, unable to understand how anyone could do such a thing. Why would she become a hermit?

(The next day- they went to see Naddalin.)

'Um, okay, so let me get the traditional one we could see a lot more- she said, 'so-o you just woke up and decided-hurry, what the hell?' '...And we have to look like the locals- and do as they do.'

'We get you one- and in the same breath, she said, Emmah and I well ride tandem. 'I have not ridden a bike in years.'"

I think I'll just dump my ridiculously expensive luxury bike by the side of the road- WHERE JUST ANYONE CAN TAKE IT, I can do this anymore.'

Nevaeh shrugs, saying 'Pretty much' with an attitude. 'You have a lock...' she said '...and the people around here are not like back home, you can't just leave this here - someone will take it- and have it scrapped- in moments if you turn your back.'

‘Because in case you have not noticed,’ Emmah says, practically hyperventilating now, ‘I-I-I don’t like it here.’

‘Some of us are a little bike deprived’ said Haven, I just said today, I would get you one - relax- even if just renting one.’

‘Some of us were born to parents so cruel and unusual, said Haven, now you are babysitting me?’

‘They’re forced to rely on the kindness of friends for the rest of their lives, thank you truly, and yes I would take the gift- thanks! -Ma!’

‘Sorry.’ Nevaeh shrugs, about that- yet you did get all that you wanted and more. ‘Guess- I hadn’t thought about that, that you were more deprived than the rest of us.

Though if it makes you feel any better, it was all for a very good cause.’

(She gives double thumbs up! And a wide smile with her head turned to the one side.)

And when she looks at me, eyes meeting mine in that way that she has, along with the usual wave of warmth, I get the horrible feeling that ditching the bikes is just the start of her plans, to get to know me better, walking is taking she thought...

‘How’d you get to the school, she goes too?’ I ask, just as we reach the front gate where Haven is waiting for us after running ahead like a child, take the train right, and we walked and walked... this world you just don’t snap your fingers and you are their girls, said Nevaeh.

‘So-o, like children...’ She said.

‘I rode the train when I went to school along with a girlfriend of mine you don’t know - it’s not that uncommon.’ She said in a back-taking way.

‘Yeah, that’s right... I forgot about that.’ Said Nevaeh.

Haven glances between us, she recently died, she bangs falling into her face- a practice, to make herself look former Earthlier- to these descendants of Earthlings, that seems to be really stupid.

‘I kid you not. I would not have believed it either, but I saw it with my own eyes, she was classed as a girl forever.

I remember we used to watch her climb right off that big steamer train, with all the other freshmen, at the time dorks, retards, and rejects who that were all like us, unlike Haven of course - but dorks nonetheless, have no other choice but to ride- or walk like crazy.'

Sarah- She shakes her head, saying 'don't say it like that- about me and Rockville, think it- don't say it- even if true, I wanted to forget those days.' Lucy was next to her holding her hand 100 years could not keep them apart either. Looking not too much farther down the wood train platform, there was Maddie and Olivia, and those girls. Hanna and Taylor, names and faces are forgotten about a hundred years or more.

I thought it was time for us all to meet up in one place, said Nevaeh. After all, where are all part of the same story, yet never really met everyone in it?

Look there are the three girls of identical, Becca, Emaly and Melody, too. And nothing at this point could keep them apart, as you would think Haven was there before she was even sure it was them.

Your life is not as bad as it seems, I think we all found that out by not holding qualms. 'And I was so shocked by the sight of it, I blinked a bunch of times just to make sure it was really a train like in my past- it was so odd.

And then, when I still wasn't convinced, I snapped a pic on my cell and sent it to all that were invited on this trip who confirmed they were coming.' She holds it up for us to see, all the names coming in.

'You all may be wondering why I brought you all here, it's an intervention to stop, evil on all of us, if we all get our heads together, we can stop this family's wicked games.' Said Nevaeh.

(There were okays and um-hum's in the background, some even groins.)

20

I glance at Nevaeh, wondering what she could possibly- be up to, and that's when I notice she's ditched her usual cashmere sweater in place of a plain cotton tee, and how her designer jeans have been replaced with no-name plain pockets leggings, her early morning look as she calls it.

Even the brown boots she's near- famous for have been swapped for girly rubber flip-flops.

'I am also here to get back my trust with Naddalin.'

And even though she does not need any of that dash and flash to look as incredibly beautiful as the first day we met- the new low- key look is just is not her- some of us thought. Way turned down for someone of her power. Or at least not the girl- that I'm so-o used to.

Yet change is good, the girls babbled among themselves. (Um- you got to remember she is in the body of her little girl.)

'That's right' - they whispered. Along with chats saying, 'Yet they look almost the same.'

I mean, while Naddalin is incontrovertibly smart, kind, loving, and generous- she's also more than a tad colorful and otiose at times. Always preoccupied with her clothes, her image in general- along with smarts. Said Nevaeh, along with saying 'she is part of me.'

Emmah- 'She is part of you why can't you to just get along and stay in one world together, that is why you're really here.

And out of the mist, walked up to Nevaeh was Naddalin. Also, do not even try and pin her down on her exact date of birth of Naddalin, since for someone who chose to be immortal, she has a definite multi-layered hidden point of view about her age- to use she is always the same age of the young teen girl. 'Don't even ask, it get long and drawn out.'

Nevaeh- Nonetheless, even though I normally could not care less about the clothes she wears or her ride to school look either, when I look at Naddalin again, I get the horrible chink in my belly- an unrelenting push, demanding my notice.

A definite warning that everyone is merely the beginning. That the sudden transformation goes way deeper than some cost-cutting, altruistic, environmentally conscious agenda.

No, it has something to do with last night. Something about being haunted by her karma.

Like she's convinced herself that giving up her most prized possessions will somehow balance it all out- her child she gives up, for a stranger's love, when she had her child's along.

'Shall we?' She then smiles, grasping my hand the second the bell rings, acting like the children around us, leading me away from Emmah and Haven who'll spend the next three phases of their time texting back and forth- like they did in the past, trying to determine what's up with Naddalin, and why we are even here.

I look at her, her gloved covering hand in mine as we heard down the hall, whispering, 'What's going on? What really happened to your bike?'

Three girls' hand and hand going down the halls... as they did moments before going down the sidewalks.

'I already told you.' she shrugs her hold body. 'I don't need it. It's an unnecessary sympathy, I no longer care to indulge.'

'She has depression!'

She giggles, looking at me smiling. But when I do not join in, she sinks more and shakes her head and says, 'Don't look so serious. It's not a big deal. When I realized it's not something I need, I drove it out to a depressed area and left it by the side of the road where someone can find it- they need it more than I do.'

I press my lips together and stare straight ahead, wishing I could climb inside her mind, and see the thoughts she keeps all to herself, find the underlying cause of what she is about- yet I was holding back from doing that- even if I could.

Since notwithstanding the way she looks at me, despite the dismissive shrug that she gives, nothing she's said makes the least bit of sense.

'Well, that's fine and all, I mean, if that's what you need to do, then great, have fun.' I shrug, fully convinced that it's not at all great, though knowing better than to say it out loud.

'So-o, your giving to the poor- when you don't have it yourself.'

'But just how are you planning to get around now that you've ditched your ride? Are you doing the same with us?'

'No, it's not like that said Naddalin, I have just been humbled, by what I see around me, that's all.'

'I mean, in case you haven't noticed, this is not back home where you can run around freely, you can't get anywhere... like in a job, or a life, your free life end after- school, and I want to stay a kid.'

She looks at me, amused by my surge of sunlit rays behind her, which is not exactly the reaction I had prearranged on. 'What's wrong with the bus? It's next to free right.'

I gape, shaking my head, hardly believing my ears.

'You don't have the money now do you?'

'And since when do you worry about cost, Missy. When life was pressing down, and the cost is out doing my means. All the magic in the world can't keep up with the cost of living here.'

'As some shallow, money- concerned with, self-absorbed, buyer-driven slob?'

'No!' I cry, shaking my head and squeezing her hand.

Hoping to convince her even though, I actually did kind of mean it- not being mean yet truthful. Only not in a bad way like she thinks or you even.

At one time, she had my old boyfriend appreciates the finer things in life kind of thing, and less in my girlfriend's now she is the version of what I am looking for in that kind of way, even if a girl.

'I just-' I squint, wishing I could be even half as eloquent as her, but still forging ahead when I say, 'I guess I just don't get it.' I shrug. 'And what's up with the glove?' I raise her leather-clad hand to where we can see.

'Isn't it obvious?' She shakes her head and pulls me toward the door of her run-down apartment.

'Look at these streets... and this city, there, all the same, going derelict.'

'But I just stay put, refusing to budge.' Said Nevaeh.

'Nothing is obvious...' Said Nevaeh.

'Nothing is making sense anymore.' Said Naddalin.

She pauses, hand on the knob, more than a little hurt when she says, 'I thought it was a satisfactory solution for now. But perhaps you'd prefer I not touch you at all, I think you're going mental?'

'Not at all!' Screamed Naddalin.

‘That’s not what I intended!’ Held Nevaeh.

(Door Slam!!!)

Nevaeh

Book: 61

A Desire to Burn

‘A writing style of consciousness, that lingers within the subconscious.’

1

‘IT WAS A DESIRE TO BURN,’ coal, and live about were caring about what was underground than above, ever so- softly there was snow falling around. In a light blue twilight in the hills, snaking in the dusk, was a long train pulling coal cars, and on the other track, rushing by in a slower track as a dimly light passenger train, rumbling beside the other with the beam brightly a glow as it goes past.

It was seven A.M. early moorings, and the train has just rounded, ‘The Hours Cover’ just outside Altoona Pennsylvania. 30 miles in the remoteness of the main city, it’s small-town life- in the 1920s, the path the train takes is ruthless, and unforgiving- death-defanging at times, and treacherous.

It was a special pleasure to see things eaten, dragged up and pathways carved deep into the hillsides, maiming was life- in a small town. Life and man’s faces blackened with coal dust altered history. With the shovels and outlet in their fists, with this great python like covers, and spitting venomous gasses upon the world out of deep shafts, their blood pounded in their head- and water dripping down backs man are at work, the workingman’s hands were the hands of some amazing conductor playing all the symphonies of blazing and scorching to bring down the rags and coal ruins of history. As the path, the train took to make a town and life within.

The lights and staccato flashes and flickers placating of the nearing town worm glow, the cast of low hanging smoke in the air below- blanked by the covering of cold ice and snow, nearing as the train grinds down the rails. Yet under the ground was a world to very much alive, with men and their symbolic helmet with the name upon saying- 'Brane's and Tucker.'

Blast and sprays of rushing water, and rats, 7 miles out and under, odd above the train, they don't even think about in their 7-hour shift. On his stolid head is the mask of black- and sours from sclobber- blistering, and his eyes all orange flame with the thought of what came next, looking at the man next to him that holds his life in his hands- also with the passion to work underground- that has become his life, like breaded into his nature.

The flicker of a gas lamp is all the light he needs to make a living, the igniter jumped up (fire) in a gorging enthusiasm, (blast) that burned the evening red and yellow and then black- it was a new seam of coal. 'come on boys load it well it easy, we get paid by the ton.'

Everything in the life of the small-town life is owned by the company- the home, the store, and even your life was owned by the establishment, work to give them their money back. Slender row homes pack, crammed, a hellish wasteland to some, that was above the ground. Boxes with shingles really, a new contraption that makes one feel as if there being a shout from a cannon, called the automobile.

1914, saw some of the first cars, own within these parts. About 6 months into the war, young man just out of school, that was heading for the mines, ended up on the firing lines. Brakes screech mean jumping train cars, flagman's swinging lanterns, crossing tracks, a car hitting as they were cupelled together, a man in boxcars, all going for the war effort. 'Poor buggers, they're not coming back.' Said, the Engineer, drooping over the window of the engine. The flam of the firebox scorching his face, with the thing that is most substernal to this world coal.

Whistle scam, one the train, two the shifts at the mines, steam of the name of the game... hurry up and wait. The train has more cars and more cars banging hitting hard-linked up, everything is hazed and masked with steam, and dim light, another world, to the elders of the town- who are not welcoming the revulsions. Puffing and breathless, are the train alike the workers in their world to that is the only worlds they know, that are not afraid of a little coal dust.

The valley full of autumn-fall color leaves rescaled in the wind of changes. Tons of coal, crossing bypasses- viaducts, and twisting hills, rolling thunder, of still horses, all ones the thing that is most valued coal. Dark weather, glum-looking waters, storms- of fear, hunger, and passion, rivers like the Susquehanna, breaking up what should be paths of least resistance. Valleys and mountains, lights below, town scattered about within.

The Village of McAnulty that became Borough 14 within the districts of the purlieu, within the United States. Swarms of fireflies- like hot ash was dumped on the rails before the train left the small green station, one town over.

He wanted above all, like the old joke, to shove a marshmallow on a stick in the furnace, while the flapping pigeon-winged books died on the porch and lawn of the house. While the books went up in sparkling whirls and blew away on a wind turned dark with burning.

Church bells clang, babies scream, and live in the town is in its start of rapped swiftness, to the ear-shattering sounds- blowing throughout the valley.

2

Merrill smirked the brutal grin of all men singed and driven back by dust, water, a heat. He knew that when he returned to the above-ground, he might glint at himself, an entertainer man, seared corked, in the hand mirror.

Deep in the valley's children are still asleep, and rising, to the don, of a school day, yet- I have been work all night. Night, and day- it's all the same to me, the sun slow glinting on the church steeples and the crosses and domes glitter in shimmers.

Later, going to sleep, he would feel the fiery smile still gripped by his face muscles, in the dark- of a man that was truly a man in his world. It never ever went away, that- beam, it never ever went away, if he thinks of... change.

New things in the town were being added, and old was coming down, it was the superlative of periods and it was the nastiest. Streetcars of orange started to pull passengers down the man streets, to jobs and nearby shops, wall to wall people, it was... as Merrill could barely keep his eyes open, well on them for the ride home. Gas lamps flicker, slowly going out, to the start of a new day, it was a long ride home, 10 cents one way, leaving 7 for the day of work completed. And the cost of bread was 5 cents. 'Working like a rat- for 2 cents he moaned- to be an old man by the time I am 40.'

The hospital was added on to for the fourth time, in less than 10 years. Passing the same things over and over, repetitious. Passing fiery piles of bony, 'useless junk,' he said, along with saying- 'stinking up the neighborhood.'

The low fog was bringing off, to the sun's rays, dry and crisp frigid air, and white wispy smoke streaming from chimneys atop the box-like homes, that were lined up like soldiers in a row- in a tension.

He hung up his black-colored helmet and shined the identification plate with his number 777 on his sleeve, he hung his overalls along with his crusty filthy jacket neatly- under the hat on the hook by the door of his home- that the mine's own; he showered lavishly- in the basement- never- ever getting the dust out of the skin in his hands, or the look of black eyeliner from his eyes, his back scabs, and a long run of blood, down his spine, and then, whistling, hands in pockets, walked across the upper floor- hard old wood, of the home and fell down into his bed- his last thoughts were- Reilly No. 1 Mine is opening up tomorrow, with 77 new men, and he is overseeing them all- and the pay is good. And his thought trails off.

At the last moment, when disaster seemed optimistic, he pulled his hands from his pouches of his PJ's, the heels one inch from the end of the mattress. It was the end of a day, and the best part is him and his wife just sighed in the name of love- she streaks into the hall and down to the bath, and then she was not off to tend to the children and be a wife, he was dreaming not about her- but his true first love the coal mine.

3

Merrill is Navaeh's great-great-grandfather, and now that Nevaeh has had some time for herself, she thought it was best to go back in time and study her ancestry. This is my home, she thought- yet everything looks so different. Like all men from my homeland, it was coal mines, moonshine, and moving down the line.

And I have so much to prepare between now and then! I need this time thought Nevaeh.

(Back to the present time)

Except when it does not, I feel the most fear- over knowing what next, by them, I always did, and I feel that I always well.

‘Anyway, I am leaving soon, just after school gets out.’

‘How many times have you graduated now?’

‘Ha- it has become an inside joke- with me.’ Said Naddalin.

‘...And you have kept all your tassels.’

I did not want to say yet this is our last time to be together... I am moving on to a new life.

I do as the locals of the time and try to be part of a place and time that is not fitting to me, funny you should say that that is exactly what your other half is doing at this very moment.

‘Seriously perfect.’ I smile, and the best of it all. ‘Really, Congrats, on making thought yet another 4 years of repetition, it to see what you lost.’

‘It’s all part of the wonderful game!’ Naddalin said.

‘That’s so cool. And well deserved I might add. I only wish I could have been there with her now- and see her heritage- you know her roots- after all that village is the town in her story.’

And the moment I say it, I realize it is true- I was missing her, I am happy for her- yet, I feel like I am losing yet, another person in my life, as she always did, maybe that is because I am partly her now.

‘It would be so nice to escape all my problems; Besides, I miss hanging with her, already.’ She whispered.

(Random thought)

I remember when, I had a phrenologist read my head, saying that I was brilliant, I was always special, to that just I sometimes wonder was he really right?

(Deeper thoughts of the moment)

The last few weeks when she and Haven (along with the rest of the school,) were under AVA's and her blackbird clans' spells were some of the loneliest days of my life. You can see them flying above the castle when they transfigure into black crows. And they peck and stock their parry.

Not having Naddalin beside me was more than I could bear- now and even worlds apart too, but not having the care of my two best friends nearly sent me over the edge, also.

Nevertheless, she and Haven did not evoke any of that, none of them doing this to me when she investigated my memories- as she did with the prophecies. Only Naddalin can access small bits and pieces- after all, she is half of me over the fact, she and I have split souls, and what she recalls leaves her feeling awfully- guilty, as I do with her, yet it is what we had to do for immortality.

We stay in youth hostels, backpack around-how cool is this... right for life and beyond? All of us, you know, you and Naddalin, Haven and I, and me and whoever... feels the need to escape when you can't really escape the thoughts in your head, and the visions that play in your mind brought on by them, over souls being linked together.'

'You and whoever... we meet along the way too...? We will change them into us and make a militia- to take them down, and we well- in time- the time is everything when the time is everlasting.' I glance at her.

'What's that about? TIME'

'There is no such thing in our world.'

'I'm a realist.' She shrugs, 'and still keep track of all things related to time.'

'Oh, come on.' I roll my eyes. 'Since when?'

'Since last night when I found out I'm going back home and starting over, said Emmah, who was not partaking in the war.'

Emmah- 'I have been through enough, pain and saw far too much by not seeing at all!'

4

She giggles, running a hand through her brown hair.

'Listen, you all are so-o great and all, don't get me wrong, yet this is what I must do.'

Nonetheless, I'm not fooling myself, too think I am not going to be here in spirit.

'I am not pretending it's anything more than it is, am I, or well become?' Said Haven, yet something greater than us if we all stand together.

'...Woman warriors?' The question was asked.

It's like we've got an expiration date, you know- and we keep having to start over and then find each other to do so, and it's just my time- said Emmah to try over- like all of you, and I know that you have, I'll see you again, like- I promise? You guys are different, you're lifer's afterlife.'

Lest go see a show with a full three acts with a definite beginning, middle, and end. It is not like with you and Naddalin.

'Lifers?' I peer at her, shaking my head as I stop at a traffic light. 'Sounds more like a prison term than a happily ever after- yet that is how girls like us-their lives go.'

'You know what I mean, don't you?'

She inspects her shape, turning her hot-pink nails the way and that. 'It's just that you guys are so in tune with each other, so connected, and I was really never part of all this over my un-chosen disabilities, that I no longer have. Said Emmah.

And I mean that literally by the way since you're pretty much always going at it.'

Alissa- Still thinks you're a- 'dumb ass slut!' along with Alissa- 'an idiotic tramp!'

Allison- 'still thinks you're a lazy crazy no good bugger.'

Adriane- Still thinks you're a- 'She is a no-talent hoe-bag!'

Ava- Still thinks you're a- 'you're a psycho tart!' Said Emmah.

'The world never really changes, even if it expands.' Said Nevaeh.

Not anymore, I swallow hard, waking fast the second the light turns from not showing the hand, crossing the intersection with a loud screech of heels stopping for us to go down the walkway, and leaving a thick trail of rubber behind them.

‘Look,’ said Haven, just overhead was a very low flying massive dark gray jet, is making water vapor, that was changing the weather patterns- and also the clement for the year.

The wind whispered softly as if comforting the cloaked figure that darted in and out of the trees, at us trying to still happiness and joy.

The sky was blackened with the inky night, but little dots of reassuring stars provided some light as it was getting ever so darker and dark to the point of eerie glum. No more than the luminescent blood moon that hung loosely in the sky above. And pink rainfall, splashing about. Also, like blood...

But even after I set still for a moment to think she’s nowhere to be found, Nevaeh vanished. As we were being dreamed of all mummeries and thoughts- and even time stood still.

A rustle and a twig snap broke the silence that enveloped the cloaked figure and it ran faster all around us inclosing- making them airtight.

As fast as the wind seemed to carry it until finally, it reached the defrayal. Looking into the canopy of trees that masked the depths of the dim forest it set the two parcels well concealed in its cloak on the ground. One the key or life- and wisdom, and the other- the heart-shaped ring of undying stamina and love of others and life even in the darkest of days, just parts to make one most powerful fallen angel, to the point of a god. All things that belonged to the missing girl! We know as Nevaeh.

Emmah- I am just about to climb a wall in panic, wondering where she could be- as I was about to say my last goodbye, when she appears right beside me putrefied like gruesome death- and I blink- blink and blink once more, her hand in mine the whole time- and rushed in for my heart as it was ripped out of me- for them...

‘Emmah,’ they all scream as she fads into ash before them all! I think I have blacked out a moment there- said Haven- confused about the events.

Refusing to slow until fear- we run into a parking lot and I scan for Naddalin in the fetal position, who always seems to stare down danger more than us, in a second- she was next to me- more scared then all of us combined.

Then the figure removed the hood that hung over its head to reveal the sorrowful face of a woman, cracked skin that was more than evil- flacking, and palling, eyes black cover over with a hint of milky haze. Bloody fingers of bones reach out for to Naddalin's face. With no-where to run... or it would pop up before her asking for her to surrender.

Her light brown hair curtained her face as she crouched on the ground and began pouring the black liquid of ink across the grass, she keeps- keeping creatures like this away.

Yet this was not an average dementor- this was Mazel back from the grave, yet without a full body to call her own. Stilling some of the bones of Lance, the soul of Lily, the mind of Melissa and the heart of Emmah she arose again, like a mixed, fetus making a new child to grown woman, before them within the darkness of the black curtains- like a flaming stone tower- with the fools she took as her own like within. Stopping at nothing to have eternal life and glory.

Mazel- screamed to them all is- 'The only true voyage, the only bath in the Fountain of Youth, would be not to visit strange lands but to possess other eyes, to see the universe through the eyes of another, of a hundred others, to see a hundred universes that each of them sees, that each of them is; and this we do- with great artists; with artists like these we do really fly from star to star, and world to new world.'

An owl hooted within the dark trees of the woods in the background, distracting her only for a second but she continued to move across the clearing, her back hunched with concentration- this she was there for the taking and even the final kill.

She asks, glancing at me and all of them and slings her backpack over her shoulder. Naddalin nods- and the sparks of powers link up and combined. Powers to powers matched up, almost equal.

'A hundred and ten more will not stop me.' Mazel said, as the spark flow - from finger to finger.

Naddalin laughs, as she knows that Naveah is safe in her body and in her mind. Even if thoughts of defeat are what she is after.

'Nevaeh is always smarter, and one step ahead.' Always- she muttered under her breath.

5

Her hands shifted in position so that her two middle fingers were facing downwards. A burst of light erupted from the hexagon they were now standing within, that was aflame, and the wind blew stronger, causing her whippy spiderweb-like cloak to toss around her- as her wings spread to take the backward thrust. She stares at her, eyes practically bugging out of her head, unable to understand how anyone could do such a thing- such- evil, hate, and cruelty.

(The next day)

‘Um, okay, so let me get the traditional treatment- you would like to go through, we could see a lot more, with the ones you want to please and film it all to show the worlds, and we can get this done a lot faster- she said.

And then there was a flash of light that knocked out by the feeling of mass blooming around them.

(A week has passed)

‘so-o you just woke up and decided-hurry, what the hell?’ ‘...And we must look like the locals- and do as they do, yet they are looking to you to help them- you are the glimmer of hope they need- symbolic.’

The others- ‘Nevaeh is the hope you need to make unity, she immortal- yet that doesn’t mean that she can get hurt and have all this take its toll on her.’

‘We get you one- a pin with an angle on it along with your name, and in the same breath she said, Emmah and I well were them proudly- just like them that is in famine and feeling the pain of hunger, and loss- by mass death- neutral or not.’

There are flags and banners now with this logo on it showing a moment for change, to end this war, and to take down the evil that has arrows once more...

‘The mass kill needs to stop, by the hands of the rich- or the powerful- that made their way by corruption.’

This is the same world that we wanted to run from, remember the 3 the girls, mother, and child and Naddalin too and so on and so forth. Said Haven, walking towards them was a small army of perfect rugged men, in black iridescent uniforms- mussels ripped and rigged- smiles disabling, the hello begin, with a strong stiff handshake Sargent Tristan Billups, Privet Britt Macdonald, the following also Marines to ad one of our own comrades, family unites- after all this is a repaid debt of Kristen, greetings- Elwood Dugan, Ahmad Turnbull, Mel Larsen, Rodrick Patino, Bryce Rosser, Clemente Cason, Dino Haight, Deshawn Pape, Clair Delagarza, and Emil Antoine. We are also here to guard you.

Naddalin shrugs, saying 'Pretty much- the hottest men in the world are here to do as we ask'- with an attitude.

'You have a lock yourself into to being- a part of us...' she said; '...and the people around here are not like back home, even if we are part of the old ways of life, war, and law.'

'Because in case you have not noticed,' Emmah says, practically hyperventilating now- this is a war- and most of us will not have a life if they take our world, or each of our minds and souls one by one.

'Some of us were born to parents so cruel and unusual they're forced to make these kids live this way, I remember being like this- like them too said Karly, to rely on the kindness- of those that say FREAK you to your face, and open your mouth to take a crap in it, the only friends for the rest of their lives- they have to answer too, thanks unwanted, no love, no raising, and lack of education. All to true, and yes, I would take the gift of having one of your immense power men help a week- a meek little girl like me- thanks!'

'Sorry.' Naddalin shrugs, about that- yet you did get all that you wanted and more, she said to Karly.

'Did I now?' She said in a fast replay.

'Guess- I hadn't thought about that, all that much that was all here over the same facts like the ones that are all around us- that all are all outside of this bunker that was now in.'

'We need to go out there and fight her.'

'Yet she has taken over some many minds now- getting in their heads, of kids, just babies, 5 through 12 and using their minds to amass her army agents us- like programmed robots, were outnumbered- by someone's baby, and I am not killing kids,' Nevaeh screamed.

Yet the bloodbath has already begun, over 1,000 children have passed this week- splattered down by automatic gunfire- by big muscular men, yet we had to do this even without your say, after allyou needed your rest as she was holding her hand in her room next to her hospital bed. buzzers, beepers, and signals going out in the background, you do not have the place to take mine.

This is not what I wanted! She said in a frustrated blowing scream in the face of the head Marine that was her own grandchild.

‘Actually, I do.’

6

Though if it makes you feel any better, it was all for a very good cause- even the children’s death.’ (She gives double thumbs up! And a wide smile with her head turned to the one side.)

‘If you say so-o.’

And when she looks at me, eyes meeting mine in that way that she has, along with the usual wave of warmth, I get the horrible feeling that ditching her now over this would hurt me more than ever before, this was just the start of her plans- for the good of us all, and me too, walking with me down the long dinginess halls she taking- she is in her dress uniform, she thought- moving faster than her mouth that was going far too fast also for me to grasp...

Then lastly, she said- ‘it’s been a long time Grandma.’

Looking around everyone got eerily quiet, then one of the men said.

‘It is time for you to go now Emmah.’

‘But Emmah has never traveled with gold dust before has she to other worlds.’ Said one of the girls snakingly with her voice.

‘It’s okay, just make sure you say were you going most clearly.’

‘How’d you get to school? One girl said to Emmah as she pooped into the hallway before their eyes- now in her homeland.’

‘Do I have homework?’ Emmah asked.

Look were seniors and just girls, and all we have to do is write a paper with less than 250 words in them a week to have a 2nd-grade education- you know- you did not miss anything this week, as any week, it's just school, where have you been?

'I can't say...'

'Ooooh!' They all said.

'Don't feel bad, Nevaeh was doing 'The Modern Curriculum Press Phonics Kindergarten book in 8th grade.' She whispered.

~*~

I ask, just as we reach the front gate where Haven is waiting, took the train as you, and walked and walked... to get here and now its time to go already, are a week of getting caught up is over.

'She rode the train- why there are much faster ways these days you know.' Said one of them...and unanimously all the other girls agreed.

Haven glances between us, she recently dyed- in her world to the ones that are alive to have a new rebirth, her bangs falling into her face, to make herself look Earthlier, to the ones that were once just that Earthing's. 'I kid you not, this is the last time I want to start over. I would not have believed it either, but I saw it with my own eyes, she was classed as a girl forever- and nothing more but children, doing, thinking, and acting.

We all watched her- like us, climb right off that big steamer train, with all the other freshmen, dorks, retards, and rejects who that were all like us, unlike Naddalin, have no other choice but to ride, remember those days.'

She shakes her head, saying don't say it like that- think it doesn't say it even if true. That we may never see all of us in one place again. And one by one they were going with their three-man to keep them safe in there new yet old life.

'And I was so shocked by the sight of it- Naddalin with grades around her within the school, I blinked a bunch of times just to make sure it was really her after all, were her best friends and all.' Casey Dodson, Crystal Gordon, and Andria Peters.

Casey Dodson has green eyes; she has a heart's hopped birthmark under her chin. Crystal Gordon has brown eyes- that you just can't help but fall in love with, like every boy around, yet she gets angry easily- like- on and off- about anything, and everything. Andria Peters, she has blue eyes, and scars on her wrist from cutting, it's a girl thing- had her heart broken too many times? Yet there my best friends at the end here in my world; or at least at this point in my life, like everything they come and go.

And then, when I still wasn't convinced, I snapped a pic on my cell and sent it to Josh who confirmed it- I was done with him, and really falling for Crystal Gordon, that has wavy brown hair down to the floor of length.' And that too has made Andria a little made, yet now she has her run at the game of having my old man, I don't want him anyways, boys are so immature!

She holds it up for us to see, a pic of she and me, kissing.

I glance at Naddalin, also in the photos of the past and think far too much, wondering what she could possibly- be up to- now far- far- away from me in her own little world, and that's when I notice she's ditched her usual cashmere sweater in place of a plain cotton tee- in this, and how her designer jeans have been replaced with no- name plain pockets- cut off to make short shorts- all fringy, her early look as she calls it, of being all WOMAN.

Even the brown boots she's near- famous for have been swapped for girlie rubber lime green flip-flops.

And even though she does not need any of that dash and flash to look as incredibly beautiful as the first day we met- the new low-key look just is not her- I thought. She is not the girl that I used to know- yet neither am I, after all, I am falling for Crystal. And Josh too is now a reembraces of all things in my past, that my mind is squaring in shaking- trembling- temptations to hit the delete button too all and whip out over 7 years of my life as it was. Knowing the consecutive of my actions, I think not, I meanly I do not what to have to look in a crystal ball to find my past like Naddalin, that is not spilled- with Neveah soul.

'Or at least not the girl- that I'm so-o used to, all the thoughts rushing.'

I mean, while Naddalin is incontrovertibly smart, kind, loving, and generous- she's also more than a tad colorful and otiose at times, over the fact of her split to Nevaeh, and she was never the same- old girl she was when I liked her so much.

Yet right now- I can think about anything anymore- over the fact that Am's is standing next to me, and all it smells like her many regrets, couch, and last night's lunch.

'Dating is like a game of duck- duck goose, look at the one you want- get called out, run around chasing him or her, and then hopefully win the game- by getting in their spot before you tagged.'

7

Always worried about her clothes- her life and her girl too, her image in general- along with smarts, and the lack of them. Though Andria.

Also, do not even try and pin her down on her exact date of birth, since for someone who chose to be immortal, she has a definite multi-layered hidden point of view about her age- to use she is always the same age of the young teen girl.

Nonetheless, even though I normally could not care less about the clothes she wears or her ride to school look either, when I look at her again, I get the horrible chink in my belly- an unrelenting push, demanding my notice.

A definite warning that is merely the beginning. That the sudden transformation goes way deeper than some cost-cutting, altruistic, environmentally conscious agenda. No, it has something to do with last night. Something about being haunted by her karma. Like she's convinced herself that giving up her most prized possessions will somehow balance it all out.

'Shall we...?'

Naddalin smiles at Crystal, grasping my hand the second the bell rings, all in a day of looking as if I am human- leading me away from Vella Johansen and Hallie Lima who'll spend the next three phases of their time texting back and forth, trying to determine what's up with Naddalin. Thought Crystal, looking at them with disgust.

I look at her, her gloved covering hand in mine as we heard down the hall, whispering, 'What's going on? What really happening with us- are we falling in love?'

Three girls' hands and hand going down the sidewalk... the eyes never- ever stop looking, do they? She said.

‘I already told you.’ she shrugs her hold body. ‘I don’t need it, I need you not them so that is all the really matters to me anyway. It’s an unnecessary sympathy, I no longer care to indulge.’

‘...Okay?’ She whispered.

‘No hesitation very insufficient individuals comprehend the virtuously individual fauna of the marvel that we call love, or how it creates- so to speak, and accompanying soul, distinct from the creature whom the world knows by the same name, a being most of whose essential rudiments are consequent from ourselves.’

She giggles, looking at me smiling. But when I do not join in, she sinkers more and shakes her head and says, ‘Don’t look so serious. It’s not a big deal. When I realized it’s not something I need, I drove all the thoughts of what they think out and left them hopefully behind for good.’

‘Desires are like snaps: in the attendance of the creature we love - unsexed in all, we take only noes, which we grow later, at home, when we have at our removal once more our inner dark room, the door of which it is strictly forbidden to open while others are existing.’

I press my lips together and stare straight ahead, wishing I could climb inside her mind - like I can with my other girls- in time I well I thought- in time, and see the thoughts she keeps all to herself- deep, and what is lost in the deep sea she calls her still-beating heart- that is worm-like her body to the touch, get to the bottom of what the is really about- when I am cold and my heart has not made a sound in years- as if dead, and my hands to her always as cold as ice- yet somehow I look alive.

Because not-with-standing the way she looks at me, despite the dismissive shrug that she gives, nothing she’s said makes the least bit of sense. Though Crystal, yet I am in love with her body.

‘Well, that’s fine and all, I mean, if that’s what you need to do, then great, have fun.’ I shrug, fully swayed that it’s not at all great, though knowing better than to say it out loud, I thought it was time to go home.

‘But just how are you planning to get around now that you’ve forsaken your ride?’

I mean, in case you haven’t noticed, this is not back home where you can run around freely- with a girl- and kiss and hold hands and PDA as much as your pleas, you can’t get anywhere without having a drive-its-self-car-cab-pass- either she thought, I should have kept it.’ Yet See the source image ‘The Guardian Taxi’s’ cost... even if- you need one or not.

She looks at me, amused by my surge of lighter- as I make the call with my thought of mind- for the car to come, which is not exactly the reaction- like- um- I had planned on- yet- um- sure. 'What's wrong with the bus? It's free.'

'And gross... and goo-eee!'

I gape, shaking my heard, hardly believing my ears- that when she is next to poor- she would not take something that is free. 'And since when do you worry about cost, missy- 'here $50- go.'"

Thanks, you did not have to do that, yet but- forced sex heading into the 5 p.m. and night time is a thing on free bus... so, it's best if you have your own way home.

'As some shallow, money-oriented, self-absorbed, buyer-driven slob?' She said yelling, teasing all mischievously; as I get into my nice worm clean self-driving mostly transparent glass and glowing in soft light- cab; her voice whims off- as the car speeds off down the road.

Crystal- 'No!' I cry, shaking my heard and squeezing my hand to the other over top the other. Hoping to convince myself even though, I did kinda mean it- not being mean yet truthful- she is now poverty. Only not in a bad way- like some around here- as she thinks- she is or something even- if- as you know.

At one time, she had my old boyfriend appreciates the finer things in life kind of thing, and less in my girlfriend's now she is the version of what I am looking for in that kind of way, even if a girl.

'I just-' I squint, wishing I could be even half as eloquent as her, but still forging ahead when I say, 'I guess I just don't get it.' I shrug. 'And what's up with the gloves?' I raise her leather-clad hand to where we can see.

'Isn't it obvious?' She shakes her head and pulls me toward the door.

But I just stay put, refusing to budge. Nothing is obvious... Nothing makes sense anymore.

She pauses, hand on the knob, more than a little hurt when she says, 'I thought it was an acceptable resolution for now. But perhaps you'd prefer I not touch you at all?'

Not at all!

That's not what I intended!

(Back at the school)

I Nevaeh- Switching to telepathy I have a new girl in my head named- Andria too young to die as she did, the moment some classmates approach- I see here there terrified of girls like us yet she faced death with no fear, reminding her how hard it's been avoiding any and all skin-on-skin contact for the last three days- with she is just so squeezable- cute.

Fantasizing I had a cold when we both know we don't get sick, and other ridiculous avoidance techniques that left me feeling deeply ashamed- I was wishing for the day when sickness was not a thing again.

It's been torture, pure- and simple. To have a girlfriend so gorgeous, so sexy, so amazingly awesome- and to not be able to touch her- is the worst kind of agony.

'I mean, I know we can't risk any accidental palm sweat exchange or anything like that, but still, don't you think it looks kind of odd, the world we live, and I fear sickness?' I whisper, the second we're alone again.

'I don't care about that.' She gazes open, sincere, and fixed right on mine. 'I don't care what other people think. I only care about you.'

She squeezes my fingers and opens the door with her mind, leading me right past Leilani Ogle a second-year girl, and the other girls as we head for our desks.

And even though I have not seen her since Friday when she woke from Andria spell, I'm sure her hatred for me hasn't dampened a bit. It had to be Lily she would only be that one that could have, and the only one to be back with us. A new girl is yet tremendously powerful.

But while I am fully braced for her usual ploy of dropping her bag in my path in an attempt to trip me- today she's too distracted by Naddalin's new look to play that tired old game. She unhurried gaze traveling the length of her, from her head to her toes, before starting all over again.

Nonetheless, just because she ignores me doesn't mean I can relax or trust that it's over. Because the truth is, it's never over with when it comes to Nevaeh and Naddalin- and the evil they share within.

Nevaeh has made that abundantly clear- that Naddalin will always be a part of her. If anything, she's more charged up and vicious than ever- making the little reprieve nothing more than the calm before the storm. As always with those two. 'Ignore her,' Naddalin whispers, scooting her desk so close the edges practically overlap the new girls to the point of freaky creepy- eyes bulging even at her.

Nevaeh- Besides even though I nod as though I am- relaxed, the truth is- I can't- help but feel the way I did about her in the past. I still care for Naddalin, who is part of me - always, in a way, I am in love with myself.

As much as I'd love to pretend, she's invisible- I can't do it.

She's in front of me now and I'm completely obsessed with her. Peering into her thoughts, wanting to see what, if anything, happened between us from then and now.

Since even though I know Naddalin's responsible for all of the flirting, and kissing, and cuddling, and changing of girlfriends a drop of a hat, I had no choice but to watch, to see- why.

'Spell I tell you spells it has to be...' she whispered to the new girl.

Even though I know, that Naddalin was completely disadvantaged of free will- that doesn't change the fact- that it happened- that Naddalin's lips pressed against her while her hands roamed her skin.

And even though I am pretty sure, it didn't go any further than that, I'd still feel a heck of a lot better if I could just get some evidence to back up my theory- I said this also to Andria, who was batting her lower lip with her upper teeth.

And despite how crazy, hurtful, and completely masochistic it is- I won't stop until her memory gives, and every last horrible, painful, excruciating detail is finally revealed. Thought Naddalin on Nevaeh.

The new girl was just overhearing it all, I wonder if... If she was the one that got them back together. Yet all of us girls pounder the same thoughts, about them, in the classroom.

I'm just about to delve deeper, travel to the very core of her brain when Naddalin squeezes my hand and says, 'Eternally, happiness. Stop torturing yourself- let me in. I've already told you, there's nothing to see- she keeps pushing her transmission in her mind out.'

I swallow hard, gaze fixed on the back of her head - that was showing a face of another - within - the face of evil - it was AVA, watching her gossip with Jewell and Mireille - this thing was rabid at me foaming at the mouth, barely listening as she adds, 'It didn't happen - as she blinked and rubbed her eyes. It's not what you think, said the new girl - I can see it too you know - your just as rational as I.'

'What is that-?'

'...It's just the Demons trying to get out.' Said Andria.

'I thought you couldn't remember?' I turn, overcome with shame the instant I see the pain in her eyes - in the front, I knew something bad has happened, as she looks at me and shakes her head like small trembles.

'Just trust me, seeing this coming out of her is a good thing - 'I am chatting with it-' and she is really nice said Andria.' She sighs loudly. 'Or at least trying to.'

'Please - don't you need to report this.' I inhale deeply, gazing at her, wishing I could, knowing I should.

'Absolutely, and Constantly. First, you could not get over the past hundred years of my dating - now you want more even if possessed, and now you're obsessed with me, all last week, why?'

She knits her brow and leans closer, voice urgent, coaxing, as she adds, 'I know that your feelings are extraordinarily hurt. Really, I do. But what's done is done. I can't go back; I can't change it. Naddalin's done the on purpose - you can't let her win.'

I swallow hard, knowing she's right.

I'm acting ridiculous, irrational, allowing myself to veer way off track - by what I saw.

Besides, Naddalin thinks, switching to telepathy now that our teacher, Mr. Perry, has arrived. You know it's meaningless, to fight this girl's - she said to us - in class.

The only one I have ever loved is you. Isn't that enough? Yet her face was black and looking off in the distances.

She brings her gloved thumb to my temple, gazing into my eyes as she shows me our history of all things enchanted, my many incarnations as a seeing all the young servant girl in France - the time we spent- before- you to older, all daughter gorgeous girls reminded me of how lucky I really was... in my life letting her remember her past that keeps getting whipped away by evil, it was nice to be back... in her mind she needs me and I need her, eyes wide, I gape, never having seen that particular life before- that I was in, I think back, in class and wonder- who was the mind that I was really truly in, it was not wrong, it was not evil; it was sweet, young, and innocent. Nothing leading me to think, darkness was involved.

9

But she just smiles, gaze growing warmer as she then shows me the highlights of that time, a quick clip of the moment we never met, that I was sure of, yet she knew Nevaeh well- at a gallery opening in to with their first kiss just outside, I was just out of the galleries, lost in her mind that reviled her face to me in my mind like looking back, for the glass- that very same night- I know who she was.

Presenting only the most drastic moments and sparing my death, which always, certainly, comes before we can progress- deeper and deeper in the mind of what I thought was an old friend and more.

And after watching all of those beautiful moments unfold, of a young girl's life, she shamelessly loves her and laid bare to see- for me to recall, I gaze into her eyes, answering her question when I think: Of course, it's enough, to understand that she was the first true love - not me- not me. You have always been enough, I thought, just as she did. It had to be Lily.

Then closing like a photo album in shame when I add: But am I enough for you - now? You were enough then.

To end acknowledging the truth- my fear that she'll soon tire of the gloved hand-holding, the telepathic embrace.

She then nods, besides seek out the real thing in a normal girl with safe DNA, her gloved fingers cupping my chin, her eyes still faded to the memories that were lost, as she wrinkles me into a mental embrace so warm, so safe, so comforting, all my fears slip away, letting me that Lily was back and mean no harm. That she to was not on our side.

Responding the apology in my gaze as she then and there leans forward, lips at my ear as she says, 'Good, its time you and I met. Now that that is settled, Naddalin... love me too I am also part of her.'

10

It was a legend that the castle is haunted by The White Lady- the young girl fined of a winemaker, that was posseted by evil.

He killed her on Earth in a small village called Ashville in Pennsylvania, and then took her soul, and killed that too, her name was Ashlynn Donovan, for the young youthful blood.

Why- to keep the Dark Lords powers strong along with the 4 girls, now in one or the Angel Oak wood barrel, that is in the distillery part of the castle in the lowest part of the basement, off-limits to all students, unless they want to receive the most horrific pain that felt in this life...

Winford Vanhorn, was a side lover, to the mothers- mother, and her name was also the same. Miss. Ashlynn was left body and soul, and partly alive, to marinate- and age just like one of the spirits in the rotation, around her that is red, white, rose, it is also rumored, that all the ones that are part over her army have partaken into drinking the blood of this Ash angel of her sacrifice, pentagram- all hooded, in black.

The dusty ash of her body in the cup- the cries of her memory in the liquid, making strength- to them in every sip, the power to take over the minds of anyone, they wish and linger without asking, to kill, within others, hidden behind a face that is not their own. a faceless army, of kids, taken over by death eaters.

The girl is said to be hidden in one of the secretive rooms, even though the castle has been looked through many of a time, never to be found, and was made to her sprit's requests- and for always and ever added on too- or her hex would- take over all the students minds, and drive them to madness.

This is why- there are passages-ways that lead to nowhere, and doors to drop-off's, and staircases that have deadened, it was all done in the thoughts of the ghost, portholes to the other side... The corridor made in memory is now why we have ASH-angels.

As we all know there are seven parts to the castle, classrooms for each study have their own type of students.

1. The Ashlynn corridor- for the fallen angels, wings and flight.

(House colors- Gray and Red.) Two white flying horses, with wings, spread. Paper- smoldering- falling ashes, ink quill with a nib, next to its well. The sun above. Armed, and showing the strength of a strong girl, body, mind and, soul.

2. The Natalie Hall- students have studied in telepathy, Telekinesis wizardry, magical studies.

(Blue and White) Naddalin passage's- the understandings of students wanting to know about time travel. Portholes, card reading, astrology- understanding of stars in and out of the magical world. wound law. insignia is a keystone, railroad spike, the 3 X|X|X for the number of the magical railway- the underworld marking of hells purgatory, that she saved single-handedly. a crescent moon and a hanging star with a long tale, a key with its hole-glowing, on the other side one barley wheat.

3. Emmah's chambers- crystals ball reading and foreseeing in the darkness, predictions. (Was Anderson chambers, yet- just last year renamed, over dark times.) (Purple, and Cream) insignia shield, with two nude angels one with black wings, holding a crystal ball, and one with white holding a lily, and a dagger between showing loss of sight.

4. Amsel Towers- the ten tallest towers in this world- students for demon's studies- wisdom- understanding- dark faith, witches, hermits all things dark arts- and trickery. (Orange and Cream) insignia flaming tower, fools falling from it in a crest of arms with a black Baird. (Name keep reminding that evil is always the easy the option to take.) There is a fear to change it with us all.

5. McDermmit- sleeping quarters for girls- up in the highest turrets, (Plaid- Aqua and Cream) meaning rest and the importance of deep sleep- understanding, love, hope, compassion, timeworn, insignia hourglass the tree of hope, falling leaves, in yellow, showing change and death, is to come to all. hands held out with a dove, a clock, the hands of time moving backward, all times is just a theory. All things- Death.

6. Barns Library studies- Cherub to Young Lady's to becoming God's understandings, was every story of every girl in the school is magically written and made into books of their life. Also, assignments to other world linger within girls, to recruit. Studies of life, before- death, after, and beyond. Looking out for friends, and not always yourself, making your story change, to make another better- or keep going. (Red and Cream.)

7. Skoufyceol- for Jacqui Skoufyceol, to lock herself out of death of blaze- and the havens of paradise- to think backward- and question everything for her time- in the 1770's, and not have happiness- to move on, the castle as a hole- named after her for being the first 14-year-old girl to ever become one of us a fallen angel, that had the vision to make a place for loners, misfits, and dreamers. (Green, and Cream) mascots fallen angle- the same as on Nevaeh's head.

11

(Two years has passed)

As I make my way toward history class, I'm wondering which will be worse-seeing Naddalin or Mr. Walsh?

For the reason that while I haven't seen or spoken to either of them since last Friday when my whole world fell apart- there's no doubt, I left them both on a pretty strange note.

My last contact with Walsh consisting of me going all sentimental and not only confiding my psychic powers-which is something, I never do- nonetheless also encouraging her to date my Aunt and ankle- which is something I'm seriously beginning to regret. I have tried to forget them altogether.

And as awful as that was, it's only rivaled by my last moments with Naddalin- past days, all playing in my head, over and over, when I aimed my hand at her navel, determined not just to kill her- child within, yet that was the thoughts, but to destroy her completely.

I am not a murderer, thought Nevaeh, yet it was my job to do to keep this unborn child, as a cherub's angels, the best part of this was how to explain how this all happened, all supernatural.

And I would have too- except for the fact that I totally choked, and she got away- with having the baby- in this world that would age- and become the next in having parts of both of us within her- now three parts of a whole.

Therefore, she had to stay- trapped young... I was not raising a pug, for with slaughter, with a sputter scatterbrained mind, that going to see things that are beyond her control.

And even though in retrospect that worked out for the best, I'm still so angry with her- of when this happened, who's to say I won't try again?

Then this child, I know was a rebirth of one of the other girls, all now to get back into both Naddalin and my head and take over control. That is why we named her Alyson.

I will never add baby killer to my list of things they say I am, this child this sweet baby girl, she's immortal anyway, so why kill her, if the part of me, and part of her - I thought, killing at this point is something I don't do any longer. Said Nevaeh.

But the truth is, I know I want to try again. I want so much to be a mother, all over again, and I thought maybe - just maybe, I can raise this one right, and maybe, I can keep her from killing me, someday, yet wishful thinking.

Besides not just because Naddalin spent the whole of English class telepathically lecturing me on how revenge is never the answer, how karma is the one and only true justice system - and let it play out and do nothing, and plenty more blah - blah - blah - like that - but mostly because it's not right, to kill something that was made from love.

Even though Naddalin tricked me in the very worst way, leaving me absolutely no reason to ever trust the child again - I still don't have the right to kill her over it.

'All the monarch butterfly is now flying back home again. Just like all the minds, the remember the programming.'

'They are just like us - you know, you - and me them to, programmed fabricated lives - before and after, in memories of our past, passed to down to the next, of fallen almost satanic retrials, of worship, all over spitting the mind, taking the soul, and lingering within the body, just like the butterfly, it's all about being part dissociation, all pasted in DNA.'

Oh yes, the cursed typewriter, that makes them all the story of life - in the books of sh-h, that write the stories that you don't wanna write, for yourself or anyone else, it is going and makes you live exactly what the typewriter does automatically, because of the heck that's on it, it makes the story in which a person has to follow in the afterlife. Untitled - until monarchs into someone's life, injected into the mind like clever programming. The butterfly - just like the paper flutter around the typewriter, all too familiar.

Just like we are programming this child one way, and they are fighting just as hard to spit her mind to take it over in another and so that they are getting into ours and reprograming that- too. Said Nevaeh.

The monarch of us... and the satanic of them for sacrifice.

‘Madness!’ Said Naddalin.

‘You know they’re going to kill her when she becomes of the age of 14?’

Yes, I know... yet, let’s enjoy this life well we have her.

It won’t solve my problem, about seeing an innocent child a young teenager being killed in 12 years sickens me, yet that has always been my hex of living life, I should be used to it, by now- and I have learned to except, the fact.

Love or no love at this point, will not change a thing.

Even though this awful, evil, and everything that adds up to bad it the way of life in our world, I still don’t have the right to choose the one that is picked for this- and you are sure to know that this was rigged so it would be Alyson...

(Two more years have passed)

‘...Remember to follow the butterflies, there just like me!’ was the first words she said to me .

She slithers up beside me, all blond tousled hair, water’s edge blue eyes, and shiny white teeth relaxed stretching her strong, tanned arm across the classroom door, barring me from getting inside- her mind to hope for the best when she starts schooling. I thought if, in her mind, I could stop her from the darkness that could come.

And that’s all it takes.

But I won’t... even if... even if...

I promised Naddalin, that this child could start school here with us- like the rest, I could get her safely to and from class without resorting to that. If I oversee her, yet odd, to all the others, surely.

Yet I remember my home and school life was the same and I turned okay...

(Flash Back)

'I was called a p*ssy by them- the girls, my home town, and even by the parents, yet p*ssy smalls a lot better than a*s hole!' Think about that... right.

(Cut)

Chiaz Naztherth- I ask, why...? I am even here?

I was asked in an interview, that I was forced into, if anything has changed with me over the years, now that 200 years have passed, for my natural life; and I would say- to you and the world that knows me as the lovesick boy from a small town that did not matter- the boyfriend of the girl that made and changed what we think of as a world, the celebrity. I still love her, I still hold on to her panties and keep them on my chest every night, a reminder of her, and the girl I once knew, before mind control.

That is love the unmanned cameras zoom in for a close up to his face showing pain, something that little of them feel now in a drugged induced world, of highs, and deep lows.

What is it that you are doing now with her- 'Now I am lingering as a lost soul in the coal mines, looking for lives to take back with me too, yet I am not the hero- nor- do I want to be, in a way I oversee life in the small town- keeping the memories of the past alive- it's all I can do- with thoughts of mind have been so narrowed.'

'Fabricated and medicated, is all these worlds are.' He said in a whisper.

(Yet none of that really matters now, I have found love, with another man, to kill the pain of long nights.)

No woman would want me now, he thought quietly in his mind.

Not even, Fiona, the girl red hair would stay with me, for life, not even with a ring. Millia turned too- being a she-boy- or identified as such, would have turned on me all because of her. Ashenria also... to most in this world mutated. Lieissah, maybe my only home yet she is now in another world. Yet she was just a little girl the last time, that I saw her... Yet, I feel it may be- time, to move on. Away from all this. He thought in a whisper in his mind- for all to hear in there's all too loudly. I have requested lingering's in the mind of this girl, yet I was denied, by the God of this world, nonetheless. She has ruined me!

‘So, tell me, ever-so, how was your weekend? It was asked.

Did you and Naddalin enjoy a nice reunion? Katharina Arrington, a young new girl that, end life far too fast just like her hero.

‘Was she now able to survive you-by chance, and send you back home?’

‘No, the girl said, and I really don’t want to. funny isn’t it, I have changed now too, and nothing is the same.’

I clench my fists by my sides- and think girl your throwing so much away, education, a man... and the dream of being more, and going onward, visualization how she’d look like nothing more than a heap of designer clothes and a pile of dust; where she left her cold and dying world. I did not have to wonder at all looking back at my life- in a ripping daydream of pain- and now I will take her’s too, despite the vow of nonaggression I took- for all, I will keep.

She then nods, gazes fixed on mine, lowering her voice to a soft whisper as she adds, ‘Not to worry though, you won’t be alone for long, I am sure I will just be a far memory for you to have someday.’

I knew she did not mean anything by that also, yet it was getting under my thick skin- over the fact it was so true.

I will take the place of your soul, in your wake, for your mom and dad, in the lingering over the casket; once the proper mourning period ends- I’ll be right back for you, I’ll be happy to step in and fill up the void of her- your mom’s loss. after all, she was the only one to understand.’ Said Nevaeh.

I focus on my breath, keeping it slow and steady as I take in the strong, tan, muscular arm blocking my path- as I ghost myself in this girl’s dead body lying there... this man was big no wonder she was so afraid of him, fear- is everything to why- with girl like us, and why we’re here.

‘Hell, even if you did manage to hold back and keep her alive, all you have to do is say the words you do to her- and no you have grief, her mother said- ‘I’m right by your side’ she said to this dead girl.’ and I think yeah, yeah, yeah same old story. then only care about you when you’re dead.

Some even grin at me like her- looking into their faces- like a ghost of the past- knowing far more than they well ever, eyes grazing over me in the most intimate way. like some have lost their very last friend.

‘But no need to answer too quickly or commit yourself yet. to the fact, she is gone forever. Take as long as you like- I thought I have nothing planned; your pain is much more important than mine. For the reason that, continuously, I assure you, unlike Naddalin, I am a woman who can’t wait, too long anymore, it is like that part of me is broken. Besides, it’s just a matter of time before you come looking for me anyway.’

‘There’s only one thing I want from you.’ He said, to find happiness, in your new world, wherever that is...’

I narrow my gaze- the eyes within the closed ones until everything surrounding us blurs. Hoping for it all to be over, as soon as possible. I never like these things when I was alive, yet hundreds of years later, I am still forced into going to them.

‘And that’s for you to leave me alone.’ the feeling I give off to some is to leave me alone, mind like it is on new heartbeat now rising to my cheeks, within her body as I now lock a gaze that deepens to a leer, and some even think they can see my eyes within hers open, in an evil way.

-And-

‘Afraid not, darling, she died.’

The mother of this 17-year-old girl- She laughs some to herself as if it is not real, looking me over and shaking her head in disbelief.

‘Trust me, you want way more than that. But not to worry, it’s like I said, I’ll wait for as long as it takes. until it gets into your head she’s not coming back or home, she is gone forever.

It’s Naddalin I’m worried about, at this very moment- sometimes, I wonder if I am the right woman for this job. Or if I should just give it all up, to be with her.

‘And you should worry too- not for the dead but the living.’ From what I saw those last hundred years, she’s an impatient woman and will become one, I will see to that.

‘A bit hedonist really- I thought. Didn’t wait for much of anything so far as I could tell, you just might have a long weight.’

12

I- Emmah am now back, swallow hard and strive to keep calm, reminding myself not to fall for her bait. Naddalin has a knack for locating my weakness, my psychological strength so to speak, and pretty much lives to exploit it.

‘Don’t get me wrong, she’s always been one to keep up entrances -wearing the armbands that are black and white stripes, appearing inconsolable at the wake-but trust me, Ever, the moss hadn’t time to adhere to her shoe before she was back on the lurk.

Looking to drown her sorrows in whatever or should I say whomever-her could. And even though you prefer not to believe it, take it from someone who’s been there all along. Naddalin waits for no one. And she certainly never waited for you.’

I take a deep breath, filling my head with words, music, mathematical equations stretching far beyond my skills, anything to drown out the words that are like prudently honed arrows aimed straight for my heart.

‘Yep.’

‘Saw it with my own eyes, I did!’

Smiling as she slips into a thick cockney pronunciation and backs out again.

‘Haven saw it too.

It like- broke her poor heart, even if it has not beaten in years, just like ours.

Willing to take her back no matter where she’d been, no questions asked.

Along with Emmah who was always like our baby girl. once more all was right with the world if only for a little while.

Though, unlike me-and, I’m afraid, quite unlike you haven’t loved was unconditional, Emmah too and also mine back. Which, let’s face it, is something you’d never do- right if you are like us.’

‘That’s not true!’ I cry, voice hoarse, and very dry, as though it’s the first time, that I’ve used it all day- it was so bad.

‘I’ve had Naddalin since the moment we met-I-’ I stop, knowing I should not have started. It is useless to engage in the fight.

‘Sorry, darlin’, but you’re wrong. You have never- ever had Naddalin at all. A pure kiss here, a bit of sweaty hand-holding there-’ She shrugs, gaze contemptuously.

‘Totally, forever, you think some pathetic attempts at second base can satisfy an avaricious, self-absorbed, self-indulgent bloke like her? For four hundred years no less?’

I- Neveah swallow hard, forcing a calm I don’t own when I say, ‘That’s a lot further than you ever got with Haven.’ Now your taking in the new 17-year-old girl too, this is not love- pervert, it is you laying down for anyone- in more ways than one.

‘No thanks to you,’ she spits, harsh gaze on mine. ‘But, it’s like I said, I’m a man who can wait.’

‘Naddalin is not.’

She shakes her head.

‘Shame you’re so-o strongminded to play hard to get, now you’re playing with Katharina girl too.

You and I are a lot more alike than you think, over the fact I want her too. Both of us pining after someone we’ll never truly have- it’s all the same, you and I are the same girl, like twin Gemini’s.’

‘I could-’ I suck in my breath, not wanting her to know what only Naddalin and I know- that where are both falling to her in mad love, that targeting an immortal’s weakest chakra, one of the body’s seven energy centers, is the quickest way to obliterate them.

~*~

(‘Yet maybe this is why- we both of us love the same girl, two minds split that both need the same thing; to make the mind hole again? It was a question both of our minds shared at the same - every time, like clocks meeting hands- hitting a moment of a day, that will not happen again- and time being nothing more than theoretical- unimaginatively- honorificabilitudinitatibus, and wing of a pendulum-like subdermatoglyphic unwinding in the mind, just ever-so-like weighted chains, of the movements within- in sesquipedalianism with the cloth of time itself, lost in a chime and ringing, times slowed- to us both over her, for that moment of realization and cognizance. Now both breathless of inhaling had harsh dust in- pneumonoultramicroscopicsilicovolcanoconiosis, over the fact of utter love, and loss, confabulated by dust itself. wrong but right we longed for just one more kiss, a kiss that would linger, full of lust, hope, and desire, a deficient need, unfulfilled- craving, desire, excitement, fervor, greed screaming hunger, libido, thumping hammering within like the chimes of the clock, and the kiss, making the sounds, longing- sensuality, the kiss gives more thirst, of animalism of yet another time, where the kiss was something newly invented, in the eyes grow black and wide, like the daylight and time, bartered into the minds of the first man and woman. A zoning aphrodisia, absent appetite. A most upheld appetite with avidity, carnality bankrupting the mind time, and hands of the cloth that it is, within the kiss she would give, and the long for more- more just like the time, at the moment where there was no pain- and lost in the dream of you therapy, appetite with avidity and cooked along with deprived, disappointing when ending, failing to emptiness of the gone and missing needing, omitted with the appetite of her face living mine. like the dark shadows, of her lines of torso's moving away, like the light of day taking what the darkness stole; the light is coming to take away the darkness yet, the light gives pain, of yet a new day; itching with eroticism for more time in the night to be lost in dreamland, or her mind. Carnality with its avidity, and total- the urge of wantonness, yet comes over and over with body weakness, yet the yen is more than fatigue, the appetite more than lasciviousness, of an end, never-ending. Back in with concupiscence lewdness, without the covering, covetousness cupidity eroticism, we both have her in the same night, at the same time, at the same moments lost to time, and the remembrance of it altogether. Lewdness came and come with moments of lechery, licentiousness, sensualism scant and short shyness fading way like the night, moving into sunrise early day, away, in bereft burned out, into the light like the face of the clock, like the face of the girl we ever-so in love with, cut off defective devoid salaciousness prurience and pruriency. Faulty salacity, with much sensualism and destitute, faulty we all say this that temptation of sin is more than time itself, half-baked and imperfect sin is not a thing any longer, in the minds not all linked together three as one, and thumping like one heartbeat, in default. so much affection, appreciation, devotion with lasting freeness with forgiveness of emotion, fondness for the other girl or woman, more than friendship yet in the end friendship it is like the hand that is time to us, always there, and lasting forever and most continually. The infatuation lust along with its passion gives us the highest respect and taste, with its tenderness, with its yearning, with its adulation, and allegiance, and its amity. Amour is everything that is, amorousness and ardor, to mind and still hearts attachment by the mind not only; case and cherishing the crush for delight, in the hopes of devotedness, and enchantment is everything that is enjoyment in cold dying world. the fervor of warmth needed. Uncountably fidelity cold life afterlife, and time after time. flame needed, like colors, like harmonies, like a religion hankering, idolatry- in doing what has been instilled; inclination piety with much involvement, like partiality piety with a question of why- within. Zeal is lust, like worship, of an idol the ever-so wrong. Relishing in rapture with its regards of sentiment and weakness worship is love all, not just the norm. Mad for a soft spot and ardency, incomplete, inferior, less- and minus. Questions of not good enough, not up to par, patchy and then pour off all types, sketchy- and scanty scarce. No longer do we feel after the covering of night, and time, with us- now being three in one, substandard, too little too late, or unsound. No longer defective are we feeling in this world, with its time that draws out, erroneous to those that don't matter, even if. False along with feelings of faulty with its hated feelings of them making us feel ever-so flawed, the girl or woman feeling fragile over the fact that she should. illogical over she has no brain or place... inaccurate over a voice that is not as strong; incorrect and insane of saying I feel that your wrong and not I. Unsubstantial and unwell in the head, is wrong to say for the weak and wobbly over insecure and shaky unbalanced, always unhealthy they say and unreliable, and unsafe we are... unstable along with ailing crazed and dangerous, decrepit, and delicate demented, for hope love and change. Invalid lunatic no more, with the love for love, time, and the world even if cold to us. All these thoughts end with losses in the dream of a time in the darkness of them - with love, that is love.')

~*~

Katharina- 'I could kill you right now,' I whisper, voice shaky, hands trembling, even though I promised Naddalin I wouldn't do them, even though I know better.

'Slug me in my sacral center, perhaps?'

'You could what?' She smiles at me, faces impending so close her breath of air movement chills my cheek.

I- myself gape, wondering where she could've possibly- erudite that.

Nonetheless, she just giggles, shaking her head saying, 'Don't forget, love, Naddalin was under my spell totally.

Which means she told me everything, answered every question I am asked-including a good bit about you.'

She got me...right, where it counts. And don't think she doesn't know it.

I stand there, refusing to react, figured out to appear composed, unruffled-but it's too late.

'No worries, love. 'I'm having far too much fun watching you squirm to attempt something like that.

The just a moment later- 'I've no plans to go after you- she said.'

Besides, it won't be long 'til you're squirming beneath me.

Or even on top of me. Either will do.' she laughs, her eyes on mine, gazing at me in a way so knowing, so intimate, so deep, my stomach can't help but have.

'I'll leave the details to you. But no matter how much you may want to; you won't go after me either.

Mostly because- I do have what you want. The cure to the antidote for what you suffer- from. I assure you of that, said Naddalin.

You're just going to have to find a way to earn it, she also said. You're just going to have to show me how bad you want it.'

I- Katharina gape, dry-mouthed and slack-jawed, remembering last Friday when Naddalin claimed the very same thing, to me saying that she likes owned me, and in a way, I am okay with that.

So-0 distracted by Naddalin awakening- I forgot all about it until now- to have it type down as another chapter in the book of my life.

I- Nevaeh press my lips together as my gaze meets heirs... awe - my hope rising for the first time in days.

So, knowing it's just a matter of time until the antidote is mine. I just need to find a way to get it from her.

'Oh, look at that.' She grins; 'Seems you forgot all about our date with destiny.'

She lifts her arm and I start to plow through, then she lowers it just as quickly, laughing as she locks me in place. 'Deep breaths,' her coos, lips...

Then she lifts her arm and I start to plow through, then she lowers it just as quickly, laughing as she locks me in place.

'Deep breaths- if you could call them that even if we don't breathe,' she coos, lips grazing the edge of my ear, fingers sliding over my shoulder, leaving an icy cold wake in their path.

'No need to panic, I thought. No need to get all spazzed out o'er.

I'm sure that between us, we can come to some sort of mutual agreement, with this girl that we both are wearing-out, with are clingy love- and find a way to work something out.'

I narrow my gaze, disgusted by the price that she's set when in my mind and now the girls too, words slow yet once more, and darkness is coming- days short- and time long, and cautious when I say, 'Nothing you could ever say or do could convince me not sleep with you- and her alike!' just as she opens the door, allowing the entire class to overhear.

'Whoa-oh' Naddalin smiles, hands raised in pretend admission of defeat as she backs into the room.

She will throw her head back and laughs, allowing her creepy ouroboric- emblem of wholeness or infinity an angel mark just- like a tattoo to flash in and out of view- on her upper part of her head.

'I mean, not to disappoint you, darlin', but if it's a good shag I'm after, virgins about the last place I'd look!'

Katharina- I storm toward my desk- like the good little girl that I am innocent and sweet, cheeks burning- know that I am that girl that is no longer that girl, gaze fixed on the floor, spending the next forty minutes cringing as my classmates burst into hysterics every time Naddalin directs a disgusting wet smooch sound my way, despite numerous attempts to quiet them the other girl in my class down. I was the only thing on their mind and not the studies. Not even magic could keep them off me...

-And-

The moment the bell rings, I make a run for the door- just to be barricaded by a bunch of girls- wanting all the gross details.

Frantic to get to Naddalin before Naddalin can be convinced Naddalin will push her too far and she'll snap-an act neither of us can afford now that Naddalin holds the key.

Nonetheless- just as I turn the knob I hear, 'every word... every minute forever...' I am mocked with laughter trailing behind me as I turn toward them all to see what she wants, by this- it was all going over her head- yet why not me?

I pause, classmates piling up behind me and even pulling at my skirt, I was ever-so-eager to get to the hall, where they can follow Naddalin's lead, and not mine. Like- taunt me some more than me at the moment, and she seems not to care- like I do.

'I did it,' she smiles, posture stiff, voice anxious, but still eager for me to know. What's that I asked nervously.

I shift uncomfortably, moving my bag from one shoulder to the next, wishing I'd taken the time to learn remote viewing so, I could keep an eye on the lunch tables and ensure Naddalin sticks to the plan.

'I approached her. Just like you told me to.' She nods.

I squint some, returning my focus to her, gut-churning I felt it was, as I begin to grasp the whole thing. I saw her the next day- it was morning one day had passed.

We even talked for a while, and- she shrugs, gazes drifting away, obviously still very taken by the events of the others- yet she said to me not to care what others think, care about me and me only.

I stand before her, breathless- feeling, knowing I must stop it- this feeling, whatever it takes before it gets out of hand- and she's in my head too much.

'She is nice to me, I thought, just like the other one too. In fact, I probably- shouldn't tell you but we're having dinner tonight, I said to my girlfriends that understand.' And you were right, I said to them.'

I- myself nod, shell-shocked and feeling ever-so numb, the words glancing over me as I peer into her energy and watch it unfold in her head: glowing and pulsating. eyes rolling back into my head and turn bright white to all that could see them.

She is standing in the line of the cafeteria massive hall with all its stain glass windows and gothic feel of a castle, minding her own business until Nevaeh approaches- causing her to turn and grant her a smile that's- shamefully flirtatious!

Except that there's no shame at all. Those two couldn't be happier. At least not on Naddalin's part. Nor Nevaeh for that matter either. No, the shame is all mine.

'This cannot be happening.' Thought Katharina.

For too many reasons to mention the dinner can never take place soon enough. One of them being that she is not just my girlfriend, but my guardian angel too, my caretaker, my only everything in this whole entire world! Its possibly- even more urgent reason is the fact that thanks to my pathetic, maudlin, overly sentimental, ill-advised moment of weakness last Friday, and another, Nevaeh knows I'm psychic while she does not!

I've gone to great lengths to keep my secret from her, and there's no way I'm going to be out by my love-struck history teacher of enchanted- I want Naddalin more.

But then again- just as I'm about to tell her that she absolutely cannot, under any circumstances whatsoever, take my lover to dinner and reveal any information I might've accidentally admitted during a weak moment when I was sure I'd never see her again- when back in the past life that is- and now I have old friends that I have not seen 'till now, she clears her throat and says, as I look at my past loved ones that have passed before me - before me at that moment, that ended up both high and low, before judgment day...

'Anyway, you should get to lunch before it's too late. I didn't mean to keep you the long; I just thought you would like to see them all before we move on- pick now if- and how- and what, after all, they are your past family.'

'...Remember you have the right to see any of them at any time.'

'Oh, no, it's okay,' I say. 'I just-' and her voice trails off into nothing but soft murmurs.

I can feel it.

The time is different.

But she doesn't let me finish. Pulls me out the door as she then waves me away, saying, 'Go on now. To find your friends. I just thought I should thank you, that's all.'

'No, no- need too, go on.'

The last thing my Great-Grandmother said to me is that I had a 'Desire to Burn,' I guess that is true, and at some time, I am sure- I will.

My Great-Granddad is here over he had to kill men- way on way back when- when he was like a pirate- or something like that, to live on man had to kill the other and eat them, when he was lost at sea- when their ship capsized, for days, he was the second from the last, he too was killed by a the same gun that was passed around, by being the unlike draw of a straw - in a lifeboat. Queen Andree Loera was the name of the ship, or so I was told.

When I get to the lunch table, I sit beside Naddalin, relieved to find everything as normal as any other day. Naddalin's gloved hand squeezing my knee as I quickly scan the campus, looking for Nevaeh as she thinks: she's gone, as do I. Gone...? I gape, hoping she means gone as in not around - not lost to the world forever, as opposed to going as in a pile of dust.

Nonetheless, Naddalin just laughs, the smooth melodious sound reverberating from her head to mine. Not annihilated. I assure you. Just-absent-that's all. Drove off a few minutes ago with some guy I've never- ever seen before- that she said was an old flame. An old love, or something.

Did she try to tell you?

Did you talk... at all about this beforehand?

-And-

She just left with him?

Naddalin shakes her head, her eyes peering into mine as I add: Good.

Since we can't afford to go after her like no matter what! She has the find herself and remembers all things past!

‘I know whom the man was, I bet you, it was him.’ Said a girl named Jo-Anna far off in the room.

She admitted it, does she not!

Which means all we must do now is find a way to- constantly. She frowns... You can’t believe her!

This is what Naddalin does. She lies and manipulates everyone around her, to believe. ‘She is not gone...’ You must stay away from her- most of the other girls were saying, she’s using you-she can’t be trusted- I just shake my head, throw my head back and giggle like some foolish.

14

(One year has passed)

You’re the same, yet not.

And I need for you to feel it too.

You and Naddalin have made it just fine without me.

I could see that then; you didn’t need me.

So-o, she’s not lying- seriously- said- it’s the truth, not even finishing the thought before Haven leans forward, saying- ‘glad your back.’

Her longing eyes darting between us as she says, ‘Okay, that’s it, you have found happiness and peace and yourself- right?’

Haven- ‘You have regained all your memories.’

‘Just what the heck is going on here?’ Said Katharina.

‘Seriously, enough already.’ Said Nevaeh.

I turn, noticing how her friendly light pink aura beams in such sudden sharp contrast to the deliberate harshness of her all-black wings- that were starting to spread out- in frustration.

Knowing she means no unfriendly will though she's definitely- disturbed by us- as so many personal questions.

'Totally, completely, and entirely- It's like you guys have some- kind of like- a creepy way of communicating. it was like Naddalin already knew.

'That's because she does.'

Like twin speaks or something- yet all in the head.

'Like time apart makes you two even closer.'

Only yours is silent. And eerier- said Nevaeh- to their younger muse.

Nevaeh- I shrug and sit there with my lunch, going through the motions of unwrapping a sandwich- pre-made, I've no plans to eat it by the looks of it, turn my belly more, yet one bit or two is what I need to survive; figured out to hide just how alarmed her questioning has made me feel.

Knocking my knee against Naddalin's, telepathically urging her to step in and handle the since I've no idea what to say.

'Don't pretend it's not happening.' Her eyes narrow in suspicion - to everything I've said. 'I've been watching you guys for a while now, and it's really starting to creep me out.' Said, Katharina.

'What's creeping you out? ...Us?'

She gazes up from her sandwich, but only for a moment before she's back to again looking as if it could creep off her tray.

'Look it's really snowing hard outside, she said now looking out that arched window that was steamed with heavy fog.'

'Those two, have always been like this.' Said Emmah who had just sat down beside them, ignoring all their personal space.

She points a- black painted nail with a chunk of pink frosting stuck to its tip- from her cupcake. 'I swear, they get stranger every day- in finding their remembrances of all things past.'

Naddalin nods, setting down in-between, them all as she takes a moment to look us over.

‘Yeah, I’ve been meaning to mention that. You guys are so weird.’ She laughs.

‘Oh, and the whole glove thing- really?’ She shakes her head and purses her lips. Showing her hand looking all cracked with fishers and red. ‘So not working for you, I said jokingly.’

Haven frowns at us, annoyed by my joke when she’s trying to be grave.

‘Laugh all you want- at them, we understand we need them,’ she says, gaze steady, unwavering, abiding, determined, and enduring.

‘But something’s up with those two, I just know it. I may not know what or why, but I’ll figure it out- in time. I’ll find the underlying cause of it- I assure you. You’ll see- you’ll see- I will.’

-And-

I’m just about to speak when Naddalin shakes her head and swirls her blue drink- that was making a foggy mist of it, leaning toward Haven as she says, ‘Don’t waste your time. It’s not as dire or evil, malevolent, mischievous, ominous, perverse, threatening, and adverse as you think.’

She then smiles, glaring with gunning- look and ogling with somewhat of a peek than a gaze that was fixed on me.

‘We’re exercise, hone, prepare to rehearse, and practicing telepathy powers of mind-reading, that’s all.’

‘Attempting to read each other’s minds in place of talking all the time.’

‘So, we stop getting in trouble in class over it took over the face we take over each other’s bodies and movements too at times, a real headache for the professors.’

She snorts, causing me to squeeze my sandwich so hard the mayonnaise oozes out and squirts grossly out the backside- like a pus-e pimple.

Gaping at my significant other who is just arbitrarily decided to break our number one rule- do not tell anyone who we are or what we can do!

This is something we worked hard to do, looking within the library in the restricted section of dark magic.

Calming only slightly when Haven rolls her eyes and says, 'Please. I'm not an idiot, I know what you to are up to and doing.'

'Wasn't implying you were.' Naddalin smiles. 'It's quite real, I assure you. Would you like to try?'

'Close your eyes and think of a number between one and ten.' She nods- as she does, she starts seeing daydreams as if they were realities play out, sincere gaze meeting her- within the lifelike dream.

'Focus on that number, she goes into a trance- eyes rolling and body limp- the magic takes place, so dark, she was now taking the part of the drain she needs, to think about a number and replacing it, replace it with her thoughts- or other things, mind control, now think with all your might- and it's all blocked out by my replacements. See it in your mind as clearly as you can- and it's like your there, and silently repeat the sound of it repeatedly, got it?'

I freeze, body solid, unmoving, as though seeing a disaster on the side of the road -only the particular- disaster is me, in a car crash as if I was some other girl- who I felt I have met yet was not sure of...

'Now close your eyes and think of a number between one and ten, and then the memories I had are now yours after you have counted down to receive them.'

'It's could the butterfly effect.'

'Transferring life to live- to after-life to after-life.'

Just like I can take all your bad thoughts away, and give you mine, or take away your education, I can even make you forget your own name, it's all dark magic.

'Wow,' is what Haven said.

She nods some to the thought of feeling fear over someone have control of her mind and body- and having as an outer body expresses of feeling as if a soul has been overlaid with her own, sincere gaze meeting her- and their eyes lock, and they both see the same things- childhood dreams, schooling past, moments of feeling like posttraumatic stress.

‘Focus on numbers only- let your eyes show me where that is in your mind, and I bet you there gone, with all of you might. I can ask you over and over some like  $2+2$  and it’s not going to be there is it, I now own you, and all that is math in your mind. The ‘4’ you are looking for- I can give to you only if- I give or allow- yet think as you may it’s not there.

‘It’s frustrating’ she said.

This is what you know who did to make me look as if I had disabilities. Said Nevaeh.

See it in your mind as clearly as you can, and silently repeat the sound of it repeatedly, got it?’

She shrugs, brows merging as though in deep concentration.

‘Nope, nothing- nothing- nothing.’

(Many moments passed.)

‘Unbelievable.’ she whispered.

Though choosing to concentrate on blue instead of a random number like Naddalin said. You find yourself lost in trances of other things in the remembrances of all things past.

Time, most of all, dreams, and memories. it like the mind goes into overload and finds, a place to unlock, that are your escapes. consciousness is lost to time; time is the theory of the essence.

The mind is the recollection of the remembrance of all thought the anamnesis, awareness of a moment within moments within seconds even down to the nanoseconds, you feel all and is all too real.

Ever-so dreamy, yet cognizance, with a flashback, memorization mindfulness recalling recapturing recognition within time and space, of a life’s reflection of something that may not even be realities just a place at a time, with a moment, that counterfeit, ersatz is the reminiscence, just retention is life as a whole, retentiveness is the discipline to go even deeper in the thoughts replace by the scrutinizer.

The remembrances of a past, becomes- subconsciousness becoming in the heavy programming, retrospection of subconsciousness lost in the camera-eye looking back at you, dead-eye on one side- is the look of someone undergoing, you can see them take over- within the eyes, all mind’s eye, to replace a moment in time, to make new remembrances of what was and is, turn out to be part of what will become past.

All it takes is a speedy glimpse at her aura, altering into a dark deceitful blue-green, and a brief peek at her thoughts to see she's only pretending. Some days, things just take way too much of my energy, it is like you look up and the whole room's spinning... You do this and it takes all your cares away, just to overcomplicate, people will tell you to medicate. You'll swear the sky's falling.

Haven- 'How do I know if this shit's fabricated?'

'You don't!' Nevaeh.

It took me years to know- and I was called crazy- like who is going to believe you, when you say- you have voices in your head.

15

Knowing she's baiting her, sure that her one in ten chances of hitting the right number works too much in her favor. Math was always her thing... she was left dumbfounded over the fact she could not even think.

Then she rips out and the all the number rush in though head- that was very long and very brilliant and that gives a headache- just to think about. She nods, deepening her focus on a beautiful shade of pulsating blue- and her I.Q was higher than 160- this is where you have now split the brain into chambers of parts, unlocking thoughts of extraordinary. This is what you do in the healing processes of this, zoning out- into another focusing, that is not fabricated.

'Then we must have our wires crossed in thought.'

She shrugs. 'I'm not getting a number at all.'

That's because you have everything, that was in this girl's mind now mixed with your own thoughts.

'Try me!' Emmah abandons her notebook on this dark topic, and her books and wand say a spell and makes it into a pen and leans toward Naddalin. Now she takes what was the want that now has a large feather- on top of pen nib and dips into the ink and takes frantic notes.

Eyes barely closed- with how these notes would be said tongue to the side of her lips, thoughts hardly focused before Naddalin gasps- her hand to stop, 'You're going to Haven- say things here that should be sh-h, hushed, saying things that can get into the wrong hands- is not good magic.' This is already been said, in the book of life, you don't need to draft notes- unless the notes are in ink that only you or we could see, the notes on this have been changed over the fact they need to be, now in code. She shakes her head also, saying 'yes, it is for the best.'

(A week back)

'Everyone but me- has gone through this,' Naddalin says, jaws clenched, face gone suddenly pale.

'Mind control is wrong, this is a scar, she said, along with- 'like think what you could do with this, you could have mass death and one dictator.'"

'We do I am sitting in front of you. I run the show with the world.'

'Well, I'm sure everyone has told you-you of all. You know, telepathically.' she laughs, returning to her phone again, saying 'sometimes old school kicking it is not the way to go anymore I prefer these,' and she holds up the phone, that links all the magical networks together.

I peer at Naddalin, wondering why she's so upset over the trip.

I remember- I mean, yeah, so she used to live there France- before the wars, before the transitions, before it was made into districts and parted into jurisdictions.

Long before it was covered with the blood of death by the people in revaluation. Sometime before the flag with the star was marking the undesirable what they became, that were slew, at one time when I was truly alive- after my boyfriend passed away in an industrial accident, or so they called it... the troopers or something like that- I was equivocal about did not really want to say... all that much, I was only in my early 20's.

She said something odd on her tombstone and it read- (I have not stuck with me all my whole life, so there-) and I think I got what it meant.

Yet, I think it said, 'I will live on forever...' or something like that, or 'I don't need you!' - 'or even suck on that!' Like- I thought that's what it may have said- but- but nah- it can't be- yet maybe?

...After all- it is a cracked heart-shaped stone...

But- but that was hundreds of years ago, and the stone is crumbling and reads the rest has disintegrated to dust into just the wind! Just like most of Earth itself, now brown rust in color, and derelict.

I squeeze her hand, urging her to look at me, but she just stares at Haven with that same stricken look on her face. Seeing what has become of her past world. It looks just like Mares - yet with all the buildings dilapidated and covered with Ivy vines and vegetation yet with low gravity and air - the sky orange and yellow, did to me when I was alive, so long ago.

~*~

‘Nice try with the whole telepathy angle,’ Haven says, swiping her finger across the top of her cupcake until it’s coated with strawberry frosting, and she was licking her finger and kissing the end of it too.

‘But I’m afraid you’re going to have to try a little harder than that. -All you have managed to prove is that you guys are even weirder than I thought. But no worries, I’ll find the underlying cause of it. I’ll not expose your dirty little secret.’

I hold back a nervous laugh, hoping she’s just messing around, then peering into her mind only to see that she’s serious.

‘When are you leaving?’ Naddalin asks.

But only to appear conversational, has already uncovered the answer in her head.

‘Soon, but not soon enough,’ she thought, eyes lighting up, as she stared the look at her. ‘Let the countdown begin!’

Naddalin nods, gaze unstiffening as she says, ‘You’ll love this.

Everyone loves it, France is a lovely, delightful place.’

‘You’ve been...?’

...?...

I and Haven both ask at the same time.

Naddalin nods- 'I's have,' gaze far away in the back of her on the mind and thought looking somewhat- blank to us looking at her color fading from her eyes. 'I lived there once a long time ago.'

'That's what we gathered...' they both said it unanimously!

Haven glances between us, eyes narrowed again when she says, 'Jaylynn and Naddalin lived there too, around the same time, she looks at her one eyelid squinting.'

Naddalin shrugs, expression noncommittal, as though the connection means nothing to her.

'Well, don't you think that's a little strange? All of you living there at the same time, in the same place, then all of you ending up here -within months of each other?' She leans toward her, abandoning her cupcake and letting it drop in search of some answers.

She just sips her blue drink and lifts her shoulders again, as though it's hardly worth going into, in the past she thought, to her, in through conversation.

But Naddalin's solid, refusing to cave or do anything that might give it away.

'Is there anything I should see while I'm there?' Haven asks, more to break the tension than anything else. 'Anything that shouldn't be missed?'

Naddalin squints, pretending to think, even though the answer comes quickly.

~*~

'All of France was worth seeing... yes, was it not?'

I definitely- remember- check out the Ponte Vecchio, which is the first bridge to cross the Arno River and the only one left standing after the war- were ever inch of Frances was cover in their blood. There are even homes and shops built into the bridge.

'I think Italy Venice, was worth seeing more,' said Nevaeh.

Oh, and you show me the memories of visiting the Galleria dell' Accademia which houses Michelangelo's David among other important works- lost to history and war- and the death of a planet, and perhaps show me why the- 'David- was so inaugural important,' Emmah says wanting this so badly to have and keep all memories of these wonderful places, from earth to sea and hold in her mind forever- to be the to keep all the remembrances of all things past, when it comes to art and history.

‘We... yes, I am giving you everything- girl- surprise!’ Emmah was delighted in her expression.

‘We did not want to tell you, that you are the keeper of seeing beauty.’

‘As well as the bridge, and the famous Il Duomo, and all the other items that make every travel guide top ten lists, but I am more absorbed in the smaller, off- the- beaten path kind of places- you know, where all the cool Florentines go.

Naddalin was raving about the one place, I forget the name, but it’s supposed to house some incomprehensible revitalization artifacts and paintings and stuff few people know about.

Did you get anything like that? Or even clubs, shopping, that kind of thing?’

Naddalin looks at her, gaze so intense it sends a chill down my spine.

‘Nothing offhand,’ she says, trying to soften the look through her voice betrays a definite edge.

‘Though any place that claims to house great art but isn’t in the guidebook is probably a fake. The antiquities market is loaded with forgeries, thanks to all the war, and moving to new worlds away.’

‘You shouldn’t waste your time on that when there are so many other- like the western towns, are far more interesting things to see, all we need to do is travel- a star- a world away, and its already there- and recreated.’

Haven shrugs, bored by the conversation and already back to writing notes again.

‘Whatever,’ she mumbles, thumbs tapping quickly on the side of her head.

‘No worries, Naddalin said she’d make me a list.’

(Back home)

‘I’m amazed by the progress you’ve made- with Dariez, she is doing so well.’ Naddalin smiles.
‘You learned all on your own? It is all around reading people.’

She nods, and gazing around the small, empty room, pleased with myself for the first time in weeks, when I walked into the tiny house.

‘Thanks, for stopping by.’ She said leading us into the home.

The moment Naddalin mentioned she wanted to rid the place of all the overly slippery furniture, that was cheap she had filled it with during Naddalin’s reign of fear, I was on it, to make this place fit for to young lady’s- all cute and such.

Taking aim at each piece with such unchecked enthusiasm that-well-I’m not even sure where it went. All I know is it’s no longer there I want to be- and she points at the old home she was half-grown in that is now dilapidated- and you were right all along.

‘Looks like you’re no longer in need of my lessons- you’re not a little girl anymore, then and your surly a woman now. She shakes her head, saying you’re wringing I need you more now than ever.’

‘Don’t be so sure.’ I said back quickly.

I turn, smiling as I push her dark wavy hair off her face with my newly gloved hand, hoping we’ll get that cure from Naddalin soon, or at least come up with a less hokey alternative. Dariez a good kid... you’ll do fine.

‘I have no idea where all this stuff even went-not to mentioned, how I can’t possibly fill up space, even more, when I have no clue where I am stashing all the stuff you used to have and me before getting all this.’

Reaching for her hand a second too late and frowning as she walks over to the window- I feel as if I have lost my sister.

‘The furniture’-her gazes out at her manicured lawn, voice low and deep-’ is right back where it started, what seemed like forever ago, yet was only about a year.

‘I don’t like change-’ she said- out of breath.

Returned to its original state of pure vibrating energy with the potential to become anything at all. She looks in the glass ball- and see her new life coming.

And as for the rest-' Her shrugs, the strong lines of her shoulders rising ever so slightly before settling again. 'Well, it hardly matters anymore, does it? I've no need of it now.'

I stare at her back, taking in her lean form, her casual stance. Doubting how she could be so-so blasé in reclaiming the precious artifacts of her past...

Then Nevaeh, the pictures of her in the plain pink dresses back in the day, the astride a rearing white stallion-not to mention all the other amazing relics dating back centuries.

'Nonetheless, those objects are priceless, see her life now within mine forever! You must get them, back didn't you? They can never be replaced, yet you can with new lives, can't you?'

'It's all energy-all memories of all things in the past-to make the future!' She squeals.

~*~

'Ever so, relaxed in my own thoughts of time travel. It's just stuff.' Her voice firm, resigned, as she turns toward me again, saying old STUFF. 'None of it has any real meaning to me anymore, yet I want to remember it all. The only thing that means anything is you- and this stuff is what makes up the entirety of you.'

And even though the sentiment is undeniably sweet and heartfelt, it does not affect me in the way that it should.

The only thing she seems to care about these days is apologizing for her karma and me. 'But that's where you're wrong. It's not just stuff- too.'

Oh, I sorry, I felt so bad hugging her from the one side.

And while I'm perfectly fine with those inhabiting the number one and two spots on her list, the problem is the rest of the page is blank. I was at a loss of words.

I move toward her, voice wiles, wheedling, hoping to reach her and make her listen the time.

And just like that, my mind is ripped into another time and place...

'It's history for God's sake, we need to get books and have them signed, it was said this man write 30 books in one year, yet I am not sure if he is still alive, back in 2018!'

‘So, like he would be over 90 now or more, you can’t just shrug it off as though it’s nothing more than a box of old tired books and lots of words that no one cares about, even if, it the story of all- of our lives.’

All- of this stuff is nothing but tired old objects you donate to Goodwill, like the books- I have penned too. Nothing more than a waste of time and paper, along run-on of contextual spelling errors, Grammar issues, punctuation wrongs, sentence structure issues, and styling problems.

I thought they were worth remembering- like the one about a world lost without color or feeling, or the one about a girl that fought for her place, as an equal- the youngest over her class.’

Look at this thing the covers are all tattered, and the pages small.

She then looks at me, gazes softening as she trails the tip of her gloved finger from my temple to my chin. ‘I thought you hated my ‘dusty old room’ as you once called it.’

‘People change- worlds change, times change this is no longer relevant, and so I feel.’ I shrug, thank about that asking why?’

Wishing, not for the first time, that she’d change back to the woman I knew before she was split within her mind also.

‘And speaking of change, why are you so freaked by my trip to France, and the memories of my past, that I want to share with you?’

Noting the way, her hardens at the mere mention of the word.

‘Is it because of the whole Haven and Nevaeh- become Naddalin thing of remembering the past- and not wanting to, keep the books is said to me... when the memories are the photos, and the book’s text the plot and the making of the movements- the flow of time push-pulling fading in and out- the part and place of where to go in the time travel, moving fast, and moving slow, and with both the movie you see, I don’t understand why she doesn’t see it that way. The connection you don’t want her to know about?’

Yet, were there the good times- I don’t know...? She thought...

She looks at me for a moment, lips parting, about to speak, then she turns away and mumbles insanely, ‘I’m hardly what you’d call freaked.’

‘You know what...?’

‘You’re absolutely right.’

For a normal person, that was hardly what you’d call freaked.

But for the girl who’s always the coolest, calmest one in the room-all it takes is the slight narrowing of your eyes and the most minute clenching of your jaw to know you’re upset.’

She sighs, eyes searching mine as she moves toward me again. ‘You saw what happened in France.’ She then squints. ‘Despite all its virtues, it’s also a place of unbearable memories, ones I’d rather not explore.’

I swallow hard shaking looking into her past- like a faded movie, remembering the images with her, I viewed in looking deep into her memories, lost in her mind, ‘like a penny on the floor... worthless- my depression a sickness that keeps me, spring-like atop- my mind turning, my curse- or just my illusion?

Until my death until we part for better or for worse- locked in your heart-shaped box forever, I thought or was thinking to note but decillions, what little time we spent lost in my mind forever- whatever never mind.’

Naddalin is hiding in a small dark cupboard, watching as her parent was murdered, seeing it along with me, she and I shared recalling the moment, back when she was in her playpen.

By thugs’ intent on obtaining the elixir-then later, abused as a ward of the church until the Black Plague swept through France and her encouraged Haven and the rest of the orphans to drink the immortal juice, hoping only to heal and having no idea it would grant eternal life-and I can’t help but feel like the world’s worst girlfriend for bringing it up.

‘I prefer to focus on the present.’ She nods, gesturing around the large empty room. ‘And right now, I really need your help furnishing the space. I am starting to really like a nice, clean, contemporary look when shopping for home decor.

And though I was thinking of leaving it more than empty, to really emphasize the size of the rooms- that is well very tiny after all, I suppose we should try-’ I gasp, practically choking on the word as my voice raises several octaves at the end, think that this girl is now a woman!

I remember you saying- 'I'm selling the house- in a year and moving on with my life.' She shrugs. 'I thought you would understand?'

'But- you can your one of us now... you can now see all this too, okay she said to her and just like that they were ripped back into the moments where they were sitting eating in the hall, of the school.'

I gaze around, longing for that ancient velvet sofa with the lumpy cushions, knowing it would give the perfect landing for when my body with I am so tired I collapse and my head quietly explodes, for all the chatter- that it has to hear and there are no ways of to turn them off- they just keep babbling in my mind. I need to have a real-life with real- real- you like all thing that is really- like real friends too, not just the fantasy world that you refuse to see that is not a reality.

'Don't look so upset. Nothing's changed It's just a house, I never wanted her to get rid of this home after I was nice enough to make it happen for her.'

A seriously under an oversized house, though it was, I need to move on from. Naddalin was mumbling crazily and softly talking to herself. Saying the same things over and over in repeats.

And just like that she was gone and said okay if that is what you want Dariez... and Naddalin vanished right before her eyes- within the air. Moreover, that was the last time I saw her- 'till now.

Nonetheless, I just stand there instead, determined to keep it together. Gazing at my ridiculously gorgeous girlfriend of the last years as though it's the first time we've met. Besides, I have needed all the space anyway, I have a new boyfriend, as you may or may not know me and Stan are going to have a baby. they're never going to be enough rooms or room for three.'

'And what exactly are you planning to replace it with, then? A tent?'

'I just thought I'd move in with him, that's all.' Her gaze is pleading, begging me to understand, I did yet I thought she was throwing her new life away that I got for her, 'Nothing sinister, Ever- yet a way of what could be power- and taking my place someday- ever one said the next. 'Nothing meant to hurt you, but I don't want it'

I did not say- yet I thought you're stuck with regardless, your hexed, and at that point, I was out of her mind- for good- yet them- them- they were in it forever, and I was not going to stop it now.

I was studying her closely, wondering what is gotten into her, wanting to just say it was all over, and where they will end up without her- yet she said to me- he's looking for innocents and he has found it- so-o go-o.

'I mean, Naddalin, if you're seriously looking for a fight, I don't want it, why not just manifest something in your crazy head about how wrong I am and can go on?

I flick my gaze over her, moving from her glorious heard of longish dark glossy hair to her perfect rubber flip-flop-shod feet, remembering how, not so long ago, I longed to be normal again, just like everyone else. But now that I'm getting used to my powers, I don't see the point.

'What's this really about- I thought?' I squint, feeling more than a little betrayed.'

'I mean, you're the one who got me here.' Oh, I was- mortified.

You're the one who made me the- way- I am.

Right- and now that I'm finally adjusted, you decide to jump ship?

'Seriously! Why are you doing?'

But instead of answering, she just closes her eyes.

Projecting an image of the two of us laughing and happy, frolicking on a beautiful, black-sand beach- remember all the good times. Saying this is it... thanks for the memories. But I just shake my head and cross my arms tighter, refusing to play until my questions are answered, about her and them...

She sighs and stares out the window of the tiny home for the last time looking back me with the sun shining brightly, then turning toward me when she says, 'I've already told you, my only recourse, my only way out of the hell making- as I should have, it all karma- and I want what I lost.

And the only way to do that is to relinquish the manifesting, the high life, the big-spending, and all the other extravagances- I've indulged myself in for the last hundred years, so I can live the life of an ordinary citizen, too. -I understand, Honest, hardworking, and humble, with the same day-to-day struggles as anyone else- if not more- go for it.'

You and I Make Always

Start:

Chapter 1

The Year was, and I remember back to- 2019, forgive me... Whereat the Cambria, fair and I are holding cotton candy?

Remember-

~*~

Night-

Come on, honey, let's get you ready for bed, I was 13 at the time.

I am no special you girl here, just a collective girl here doing a thing as I should, think of boys and rubbing myself on then in my thoughts at night, I read, I think, I even poop too, throw girl are not allowed to say that right, not in these times.

All way with sweet and common girlie thoughts.

-She has a teddy bear and is looking for young love, and hot passionate nights.

I've led a common little life. There is no testimonials dedication to me or for me, yet I may be dying of something bad, I can say. Plus, my name Andria will soon be unable to be remembered by all that was of the past days. But in a single difference, I- myself thrived as magnificently as anyone who ever lived a young dumb yet cute life. Looking good, girl. As I walk the halls of this big creepy place. 'I feel okay today.' Yours truly here feels that she loved another boy with all my heart, and soul body and mind. My soul and for me, that has always been enough to give to him if that would have wished.

Chapter: 2

How's it feeling and doing, honey- bunny? Going to kick it- I keep trying to die, but they won't let me they say I am so stinking cute. Well, you can't have everything even if it's fading or living without pain on both. Immense day today I have planned. You say that every day, with a cute-wost-ie smile of your little blond-haired blue-eyed face, you little angel. It's a lovely day outside. Let's take a walk, outside of today, we don't think so, you're not able to at- all- yet. (Wishful thinking) Well, we've got to get you out of this room. Come on now, honey goes to the playroom and does coloring and thingies like that. Some fresh air is what I want! Grrrr!

Chapter: 3

It's all good I do what I always do no complaints, Good morning. I am so sad and sorry at this point of my beginnings starts of my young little life, it's not a good day, to be me; I want to play and dance and sing and do girl little cute-z thing like painting my toenail to match my toes-ie ones. I have a long sunn-ie dress and not as much hair as I did, but its fix-abele if I work for it. OUTSIDE? I asked She said- baby- girl- I don't think it can happen.

Nurse says- she's up for anything.

Chapter: 4

Hello? (Boy) I like him, he's funny and handsome. This is me! doors fly open as she runs and stops runs and stops looking in at the dying kids in their rooms and beds, the older boy David- he comes to read to you. Read a kiddie story of hope and love and goo-goo-ness, with unicorns and ponies? – Yeah- no that pain starts within me and I feel as I had to run to the bathroom to not keep it down the treatments are talking to me, I don't know if this is a goodie thing-ie.

Oh, come on, back to bed, and sleep this off, it goes in OUCH-ies, and her sweet little- light goes out.

Ahh... snoring, yet one old bitty' said- All right now, that keep her away for three hours.

(Noon)

Where did we leave off? In the story... Oh, yeah, yeah, here it is- baby. It was the night of the carnival, a news story this time, I knew yet I didn't remember it, I lose something I can feel yet they don't tell me anything, so I figured out what I can, yet that not much being my age. 'David was there with his friends and Maraca.' -David? -That's where those both met- them... It was around the time and date of September- 19th of 2014, Andria was years nine old or so.

(Girl) She has the same name as me. See then there at the park- groundwater squirting game: Little girl wins a prize. He tried to get her something yet epic fail! Foodie! I watched that off so hard, no ding-a-ling-ing here. -Thank you for playing- a boy. -Hah, you're really funny I am a man here not a boy. Man, I clobbered, it's all good she bears hugged him for being just him and that was sometimes being, cute yet very dumb for the acting of dumbness. I bet that thing, Yuck-ie- funny it didn't come off, oh that that thing.

I'm telling you I did baby; these games are rigged.

Chapter: 5

The night time before bedtime, Hello, it was him I kinda remember some of the stories now, that he said earlier... -How are you, good- feeling good? Howdy, what's your name, U- NO it baby thinks- hard ...?... I don't think I do- and story time starts for her, as she thinks on. Footstep comes right up here now. Over the knob, certainly. Whoa. Yeah-a, singing it out in a hum,

- Who's this girl with Maraca?
- Her name's Andria Samilton.

She's here for the summer with her family.

Dad's is the poorest around, yet she cute right good butt for you.

Ha- funny then why haven't you been with her yet?

Walked apart to go see this girl.

- Hello, Paulie!
- Hi, honey.

Look, I won you a prize, he rips one down from the mouse game as she walked towards him.

That woman was P-O-ed, at the game, yet they walk off one arm wrapped around.

Paulie- oh, thank you! She giggled without thoughts at the thought of him and she was run around like the mouse on the wheel of the game. Ow-ha! A bear- cute- Love! He said -yeah, -sure- kiss me! They did... Hey great, huh I look at David like I hooked her?

Chapter: 6

Hey, Andria, you want some cotton candy baby-girl? - Umm, okay honey. That would be so much fun if you want someone. Sure, look down there... GOD keep it in there I don't wanna see it, she said. You only get one chance, teenager. You want to dance with me or rid with me, or on me, or something like that?

I'm David Talhhoun.

SO-o?

- So, it's really nice to meet you.
- Andria, who is this guy?
- I don't know, David Talhhoun.
- I would really like to take you out.
- Friend! Do you mind?

You can't sit more than two people in a chair, David.

Go out?

- No.
- Why not?
- Because- I don't want to.

David, she's with us, so don't chase her away with your dumbness, and crap.

Hey, Andria, you want to ride the merry-go-round?

Up down, up-down, up Down- they went like their love life would go.

- I'd love to sugggggerrrr.

They are kissing- and feeling each other out in the tunnel-of-love.

- All right the boy said in the 1st seat.

Love is all we need right- the book closes for the night as she falls asleep on him.

(Boy) walks out of the room kissing her forehead and said I never forget you as you did with me yet love and luck don't always go hand and hand.

Chapter: 7

Reason with me. Please me. - David Talhhoun.

- What?

Works down at the McDonalds with Paulie age seventeen.

Oh... Did you see he was standing like that god do you think it's- like- oh?

Run up- he dad- like not even one inch away from her face? GOD- what do you want to from me, she said not happy, yeah, I saw, said the girlfriend, that's David, though. Always doing the crazies, are you at all surprised, not at all I like it, yet I don't, well see, maybe, I don't know yet, I girl what can I say. He even came over to you, like was he going to kiss you and not even know your name first. Sweet but creepy!

I think he likes you, she said with delight. Yeah, my dad would too. I think- Nah- for now anyway. Hey what... jerk... as he pulled my hair, saying I was cute. Get off me, I said as he was all wrapped around me going for it all. God older boy- Don't touch me. -Hey!

I love you, girl, without a name! - Well, I... ugh! HUM, I thought about him and what I saw there. What are you doing tonight?

Hey, you can't do that as she runs off the merry-go-round! As she was there, he almost falls on his tushie, I'll pay you when I get off, Dan.

-He asked you out-

Yes, he did- I like him- eyes rolled dreamily, both hands fly upon her red cheeks. Okay, Dan, I'll get- it- oh- off, all right. Get off, David, you need to come.... (Girls-What?) Award stop in his yelling words- 'OFF' as it spins 'round, you need to come - what...? Off.

He tripped you're going to kill yourself for her boy! David, cut it out, boy. Now, will you go out with me as he hopped on my hose-ie? What the freak?

- No?

Hey boy, she just told you.

It keeps going around. Rings being tossed in the mouth of the clown.

Lean into it so, you don't fall getting off, it goes, fast.

Why not?

I don't know you at all, and because

I don't want to. You don't need to know me to 1st date girl. How else do you get to know someone if you don't try first- dates, go by what your friends say?

David!

Come again? Would you- GO!

NO! He said.

Girl- Well, you leave me no other choice then. Oh, my God gets it in your head and not that one I don't want it. I'm not kidding, I am falling to you. David, stop misleading around.

- What are you doing?

- I'm going to ask you one more time, he kisses her on the cheek, from behind. Will you... NOW as he gets up on her and the house, doing things I can say, yet think like a boy. Will you go out with me?

David, you best come on and stop it. Girlfriend next one over... my leg is slipping.

- Then get down and off, you idiot. That way I am doing if she says- yes. Not until she decides. 'Aw, go on out with him, baby said some old dude in next row.' All right, all right, her and goes down his undies, and then see feel it and push him off, I'll go out with you. She knew it was all love she was feeling it too. It was up to my butt so- yeah- feel in the blanks here.

Chapter: 8

What?

Who?

When?

Why?

They?

It?

Some?

Doing it?

No, don't do me any favors if you say yes, he spun out on the floor of the ride.

No, no. Do I want to, yes?

Do you want to?

Did she say Sucking- yes!

Do you want to?

Yes!

Say it again.

I want to go out with you- now.

Say it again.

I want to go out with you.

All right, all right God keep it in your pants!

We'll go out.

You think you're so clever, do you not?

David, you idiot! She said.

She remembers my name- yes!

Girlfriend- That wasn't funny, nope, it's okay hun, I'll take care of this boy soon.

Girl asked- on her deathbed- I remember the girl from the Carnival, right... she was my friend, right?

Do you remember me? I asked with wondering thoughts- of hope.

Yeah, sure, the boy that reads to me, not the boy- what was he called- Mr. Bonner, was it? He looked pickled. How could I overlook the speculations of me wondering thought-age? Absolutely, I wanted to clear that up with you, for the reason that, I'm categorically regretful about that all.

It remained an actually imprudent thing to do... on that ride, to talk to somebody. But then again, I had god was saying she was my baby angel sent from the heavens.

I had to see I could get her naked before the night was over. To be next to you. I was being so pulled into you. Um... oh, what a saying here, it's nice, so nice! Do you use that on all the babes'?

- No, not all just you hun.

- Right, you're dumb.

I saw you all rubbed up against your little girlie-friend what's her name with the brown hair and green eyes.

- What are you doing tonight?

- Could you repeat that? Go out tomorrow night?

What do you say, baby? What about this weekend, say at a hotel or whatever?

I know what you want I don't give that to boys.

- Why?

Our date then?

Maybe- she walked away- skipping, and humming show tunes.

I did not even say, I would go on that date with you.

The date that you agreed to go on with me.

No...!

Yes, you promised.

You pledged and you swore it did you not.

Sound good, I speculate the thoughts of yes or no: Yeah for you would have killed me with it behind me if not. I changed my mind over time to yes or no, I must see, maybe?

Look, I know you get some dirty boys coming up to you on the street doing crazy things... I don't know him. Why do act as if I do? You don't know me by now don't you, I know me and that's good enough, right?

Chapter: 9

Plus, when I see something that I like, I got to love it see the small-town charms- ha... I love it. I go... I mean, I go crazy for it. Okay, what are you speaking of? Well, you, see into me, I feel, that you do.

Oh, you're good at this ant you. What the Hel-? You're too moral. Certainly not. No, you're getting me wrong. You have it all now, yet not me yet. But you-

You're something ant you.

You are your ant putting badly. You're whimsical, fanciful, unusual, imaginative, original, creative, and quirky, and I would even give you impulsive and capricious.

Hugh?

I'm not.

You're so stupid, I think I like that...?

Chapter: 10

You really are so go-o, I'm mesmerized. I'm not frequently like this, I'm sorry. You make me dumb feeling and acting.

Uhm, oh my- like- yes, you are. I can be amusing if you want... thoughtful, uh, smart, um, illogical, and courageous. And uh... I can be light on my feet. I could be your all and wonder, and magical, whatever you want. You just tell me what you want me to be and I do that- love. I'll be that for you forever and ever never ever let go of you to the day you or me, am not around to say- I love you.

You're CUTEY dumb and love me I see that. OKAY! You win, not smart- I could be that for you too.

Come on, let's go for this date, you want as bad as me. What's it going to hurt if we do things after and now? Umm... ah- uh- I don't think as a result so maybe it's okay if I am like you. Fine, what can I do to change your mind?

Andria, you remember David, don't you? The movie adds start with supposition- you'll total and get something out. You unquestionable she's coming for it hard? Lessen, chum, it's all set up. We are meeting her for the late show tonight so back off her. Look... what did... I tell you what? Come on now and see this movie picture.

Oh, my goodness, it's bad, his hand on mine... I feel more to come. What a happenstance she felt! Kissing him with popcorn, and the taste of butter, and Pepsi, I need to talk to you for a second. He's here...! Him sitting on my hand, and the other way around, Yes, I remember- Yah.

- Come here.
- Paulie!
- Hi.
- You look great.
- Hullo.
- It's nice to see you yet again.
- You too.
- Aw, thanks.

Really, you look really great and feel good next to me. She is kissing my ear, saying sweet nothings.

You do look great. You look great. And I know I look great, said Paulie, so could we please go see this movie now and hush up?

The show's about to start. After you, he asked for a kiss on the lips. You come back here, baby. You aren't going to catch me; she runs for the water's edge and prattled-boats. Swans all-around them as they kiss in the sunshine, next to the old steam train puffing down next to the oak trees and picknick tables.

See her as she runs, wild and carefree, in stupid love, with so poor boy.

Chapter: 11

I'm supposed to catch you! Kiss, kiss, kiss, lip bite, eyes tight, and lashes long on his cheeks. I'm faster than you.

Nah you ain't... You ain't- you ain't- you can't!

Nope, No...!

I am wet for you now, just drenched with the water on the edge. I'll get you, baby girl! I'm going to get... Here I come! Let me love you.

You better run fast! And then met slowly in a hug, run and it's falling in love again, being apart for that long. Park and outlying past them all, that looked passed all the rides too.

Love after, after falling madly in love, love, love, a- love. The big wheel in the sky is lighting fireworks off above and inward.

Wait for me, baby girl- I see you there, never about where they, never- ever apart- I would even sleep with me in the night for I said, I was scared, and ran into his bed, held tightly.

Chapter: 12

(Back on the first date)

Want to walk with me to my house? He did old ways I said- mom well loves you for this. Her- what happened? ...In that movie? We didn't even see it I could not even tell you for sure.

Here you go. Thank you for this night we didn't even kiss at the door mom was looking so yeah. What are you guys doing now and then? We giggled and did say anything but the truth.

Even if I was opened up to him now. Yeah, what's going on you too? Yeah, is that all...?

...Just a and movie no more no less- um she now by the look on my face, and the glow you-un-floweriness. Mom passed a week later of what I have. Do you guys feel it for each other? Yes - yes- we do.

Do you-ah Love each other? Yes- I love him! I love her too. Oh, I get it. You guys do love each other, THEN HUN?

Don't do anything you're going to regret I wouldn't do. Unacceptable, goodbye.

All right, all right. Mmm... That was fun we gonna do it again. Mm-hmm. I haven't seen a movie, in ages. Really?

Huh-uh. Not meanwhile I personally was a little kid. Pardon? Nope, I, uh...ah? I'm busy, you know, I don't have that much time don't ya- see. Are you busy? -hmm- Mm- I have a very stern agenda.

My days are all planned out even back then, I had to deal with this crap. I get up in the morning... banquet, school day, get it in- here- work on homework here, play some all alone, reading time, bath time and sleep time and do it all over and over and over and over and over and over. Math, English tutor, lunch at some point if I can hold it down, music lessons- piano lesson, and that about all they will like me do, TV. It is nice when it works also.

And after dinner and blowing it all over- I spend time with my family, for three hours before they go home, and I say here all alone in this glowing white and could room, next to my bedmate Sam. She doses do or say much she has a week to live and she is five years old. And then I... I catch up on some reading, she is sawing logs! Wow stop breathing- um I think about that one hard and then say- Nah- don't do that.

Oh, Mom and Daddy see you soon pull through one more day baby.

We decide to pull the plug- so she would not suffer- age ten.

We all gather around to see her. Everything is over... they look down on the life she never had- yet she has a sketchbook of her short life here. No, not everything is readable - however, it's all there in her handwriting. But the important thing is she was remembering for her. And then everything else, she was not. And that way youth and innocents with young love mixed in. free - and wild to see life fade fast. You get to decide all by yourself to live on or let go?

She didn't we did- it the hardest thing a dad has to do is she, someone, you love to go - before you. It had to be I would say- it had to be this way. I don't get it either.

Why?

God- or whomever why make the plan of killing sweet little kids? Why the hell do you want to do this to me- why? Mom- she never did stop crying it's been four years now.

Chapter: 13

I'll always think of you that way I'll think of you in the morning sun and when the night is new...

I'll be looking at the moon and think of you...

But the first time I ever saw your face-

The first time I ever saw your face-

I'll be seeing you.

Morning, Mr. Talhhoun.

Mr. Talhhoun?

Call Dr. Mandite Von and USC, okay? I've got no, I got no pulse anymore - she said. I've got nothing to say really just how I love you and you feel that even now with things gone like even if your heart in new it feels the same to me and you. Let them know we are in full arrest. Call me - on my cell if you can, if you can this evening, I see you tomorrow if I can and you can. All right, we will do this if we can.

We talked about this. It's all right now sleep, and rest now think about your life and how it was. Come on, come on, sweetie. Okay, yes, come on, let's go. Time to go - It's okay, baby, come on. You know it is.

Just try it not to get her over happy she needs rest not a boyfriend right now, said, mom.

Oh, Mr. Talhhoun you came to see her.

Welcome back, the baby girl sees that you went through all that well. How do you feel? Finally, Apt as a swindle. Where are you going girl at the stand asked? I was just taking a walk, thinking about how- I can't sleep without her. Fine, you know you're not supposed to, it's against the rules. Yeah,

I know. You weren't really going for a walk, were you? You were going to see Miss Andria again wasn't yah. I just got out of the hospital and I miss her you see.

Mr. Talhhoun, I'm sorry you can be coming in out of her room like that at night, but I can't let you see her tonight. Here and now you're going to have to go back to your room. As for me, I'm going to go downstairs and get myself a cup of coffee. I won't be back to check on you for a while, so don't do anything foolish- I want to go to do that- I just want to see him if I can-

Hi.

David.

David.

Hi, Baby girl. I'm sorry I haven't been able to be here to read to you.

I didn't know what to do. I was frightened you were not ever coming back to me my love. I'll continuously come back. What's gonna happen when I can't remember anything to any further extent? What will you do? I'll be here always and ever. I'll never- ever leave you. I need to ask you something. What is it, Baby girl?

Do you think that our love can make marvels? Sure, I do if the same. That's what conveys you back to me each time.

Do you think our love could take us away together even if I go away from you? I think our love can do something we want it to.

I love you.

I love you, Andria.

Good night.

Good night.

I'll be seeing you there soon.

Chapter: 14

I want to show you something the boy said I have this it was hers.

- David, what are you doing? As the pages started to show and he read out- to them as he did with her- day in and day out. -What now? She loves to paint. Yeah? -Mm-hmm. Huh. Most of the time, I have all these drawings showed in here and look over than seeing her do them going back to the time she did them. Thoughts bouncing around in my head. Are you okay? Why are you crying? It's all good, I said whipping them away.

(Memory)

Do you want to dance with me? Now? Sure. -Mm-hmm. Is are the song playing in the background? Mm-hmm.

I want to fly like a colorful bird- so, I don't have to be here and see the world under then and I rush over their heads, are you going to be one-two?

If you're a birdie, I'm a birdie. Come on, darling, don't do this to yourself- What are you doing? You need to hear this all there is a thing you don't know about us. Don't. Don't! Okay then if you insist. Here we go, reading easily- Okay, okay. We were crazy about each other. Yah we know- Okay, Daddy- Oh, and Daddy I love him- she said here in her book quoting her life.

I want to meet her in heaven now. This young man is not going to make it.

Heartbroken he is... Okay. I am okay... Nope... he ant. Good night, Daddy, as she ran to me and left you for a night out- of fun and games.

Good- night first kiss we had done you see this? Oh, that's lovely, dear. Her dream was like a movie- I want a big old porch that wraps around the walkway and a big old entire into the house. We can drink sugary soda and candy... nonstop. Big windows and open doors to watch the sun go down, no shades, like here.

-Do you promise? This for me? Hmm- Mm, I promise. Yeah! Where are, you going? Is something happening to me? Here... Always next to you. Wow... This is the part you all need to here for sure. What that dear? Ha-hum?

She said- make love to me. David... -Yeah?

The old-rick-at-ie Covered Bridge I waited for her to say when and where.

Did she say- David? Okay, I want you? I want you to- And It all happened... all and everything, which makes a girl a woman. And...? Did...? ... you...?

...?...?

Um...?

I know I said, the kiss... I want you to make love to me, she asked once more.

So, I did- we did- it was not easy for me- know what I was doing and she not. She said- you're going to have to walk me through this sex like this, it broke, she feels, so did I the kissing lots. Right.

You, all right? -Yeah, it's okay- it's okay. I asked- Did I hurt you? -No, no. Dad said we know... boy we know- it was good she had her magical boyfriend he was you, which was her dying wish, to have love and feel the love.

I'm just having a lot of thoughts, like age and things. It's Okay!

I should go- over this I feel... No, I don't want you to go. I got to think... about what I did here. Come here and talk to us. You're not leaving till it's all been said.

I'm so happy that you did? Um- yes. You got so much ahead of you. Yet not love, he said. It's true... I will never love another girl, at all. I'm not going to have nice things, fancy things, sure but not her... I don't wanna really live without it. It's never going to happen to me. Sh-hh- boy- stop. It's not in the cards for me, don't you see it was all ripped away, like her life, why? Stop it! you going to die too, and we don't need that on top. Oh! You know what? I'm going to do it.

It's over. Okay? What's over? Come here.

The first time I ever saw her face- was...

He passed for a broken heart.

(Falling to the floor with a thud.)

Nevaeh

Book: 62

The Shadow of the Goddesses

Preface:

Schoolgirls and entities- 'Bloody Fingers', the dark entity kept saying to me, over my bed. 'Bloody Fingers!' The dark entity kept saying to me. 'Bloody Fingers!' I am just a girl here trying to eat! Blood dripping, dripping, from its clocked hand. I am just a 9-year-old girl trying to COME! All-day and all night we are hunted.

'Bloody Fingers' the dark entity kept saying to me. It gets a loader and loader! The more I pass him out of my mind. 'I was starting to feel like they want me... to say something.' And then I hear... he cries out.

One girl screamed for her bunk bed- 'Dude gets a band-aid!'

Just another night at the castle, as schoolgirls!

~*~

'I used to ask what gives me the right to kill when I am still alive and now, they're not... and I also reason about that now and reflect more, ponder and deliberate; and say well I am not alive - am I? So thus, the killing was never- ever wrong- was it?'

'My eyes are not shining with the ghost of my past.' Yes, it is true that- I arranged the order to have Lance killed, in life, why back when I am guilty- yet I was anyways for being an intent, so why not... and who is going to stop me from have justice when none was given in the past. I was ordered by Nevaeh, this old gray man with a long white beard said. Dementors all-round Trius was framed for it all.

Trius took the fall for Amsel's dream boy, that could not do anything wrong- yet he was the one to do anything and everything for them. Trius took the wrap- over being who he is, Read is the lance dad- so all is explained. It's a black night out and all you can see is the lightning bolts flashing free electricity around the from tower to tower, to power everything, power lines a thing of the past for now 100 years.

The idea of this being 19th century yet realized, I truly love- when thinking about this- as I sit looking out the window. All this comes to mind over its October 31 one more year has passed Halloween, yet another night of sacrifice, with a feast, come offerings of children. Skulls litter the land, the courtyards, held in the hands of the children are the head of their ancestors, flaming candles, flicker, on their bone craniums, dripping with hot white wax.

Dressed in classic genuine of black cloaks- remembering the history of the Fomorians. 'The night of the demans, a night of a blood moon.' I was not even sure I wanted to go and see more killing, I have done, passed- and remorse enough over the years in this type of faith. This all appalls to the spirits from hell, having large bone firers and killing off some of the young. 'The dance of the bones.' One-star shines into light the killings... Virginia girls all under the age of 10 this year to ensure are lasting to our God, one being me, Nevaeh. Then she whispered this line, I am just a 'Shadow of the God.'

Naddalin said- 'your book was the first thing that was brought over to the new words and these new planets, it is the bible to these people. And you're the God, what's wrong with you?'

'Everything that was past life has become your word and your teachings, to them and they see life through you!' Naddalin said just moments after the last thing she muttered.

(That night daydreaming, as a day became night, as I have done all my lives.)

Funny, something that came to my mind, drifting back into to time, like always- I was remembering the finding the gold under a tower, yet I am the one that found it, it was in the middle of tower seven of Kinzua bridge, marked by a missing anchor plate, that was placed there by the train robber, his name Trius, almost seeing this play in my mind as it did that night, after robbing the same train that is laying on the valley floor, after a spectacular crash at that point crashing from the height the same of The Empire State Building, as it was over my head rattling coming and pushing forces far more than it could take. The steam engine- flying through the air, steaming, wheels turning, flaming- evil looking... 30 cars pull with its last fall, the screams of all the passengers know they're going to die, hitting the ground at 94 miles per hour.

Only one car was left- on the other far end the North End, the end that was next to my old home, the same car that Jenny was drawn too, in her death, as the viaduct claimed yet another young life, the same side that I would walk on, to look down- thinking. I had to be crazy to wake all over this thing with nothing holding me, no nets, and wind of 90 miles-per-hour, at any given moment. Seeing the tracks hanging down- and walking them not caring if I fall.

The old locative orange rusting away the number still there, 38, below twisted within and around, the lags of the edifice, way up on the top only one old car still up there about roughly - 1,000 feet in the air- and every now and then I see the face of a young girl looking at me, yet now only existing in my memories of all things past, I have been there many times- above and below- and in the car itself- yet my people will only hear my tales of this story- and live their lives by my spoken words- like something holy- I don't understand, after the claps, the famous red cowcatcher still showing its code of paint, faded lack lustered, like my mind, like my life, like the stories.

I could see the speeding train come on to the bridge too fast for it to take as eleven towers started to give, it was leaning out more than five degrees to the eastern side, ready to tip, over Trius removed the or snapped the callers that held the legs down to the foundations snapping the 1888 anchor bolts to that tower, finally, the glow of the headlamp coming, the lights of the car windows in a soft luminosity, the driver going far too fast for the viaduct to take, in fled; a dark and cloudy night- all the trees dusted with a light fluffy snow- fairies in the air spinning in the light of my lantern as I hold like a hermit, the wind blowing out the wick of my soft glowing light- as a cold cyclone moves in recklessly, up in the fog the lights of the cars so far up overhead, rattling my ears and encases. The fifty-grand that I lived my life on and published my first copies of my books with.

'Kinzua hangs between the mountains like a frozen echo in time, then the parallels that have now converge with the bridge as it deserves into the light, skies falling in case around then covering the ground, day becomes night; below the steam flows as emotionless as paint as the low clouds start to hang above. The distances smear trees to shades of green... yet, cover by increasingly white. The viaduct hums by the wind like fingers strumming its steel. The metal sings as if it could feel, as if locomotive are ghost drummers of mighty thunder, going accursed the ties as it hives and trills. It deceives like the reminiscences of the Pullman car contra, rival foresees like recollections, like the snowflakes that well fall forever- and whenever, in the conjures of the past that one stood, strong and tall, lasting in nothing more than endangers.'

2

Madame Pearl has taken final death, I was thinking about that too, the seas will never be the same. Her so was consolidated with this one... and we have taken on all the kids for the past, and keep the history alive. That was a good dead that I did. Think about the good and bad.

Miss Molinah is the head professor of the marine biology program and magic of underwater studies - I was thinking about- this and that, Chiaz Naztherth that crazy boy and unpredictable at times, and is now- the head of the departments of those students, that once lived under the enchanted seas.

Yes, it's true I kill, I had KING WHELK OF LASSINIA, slaughtered- the story has he been found in the- boiler of a steam train, under another name- and was lit-up. All I have to do is get in their head, and assassination is easy. The girl did not even- did not even know what she was doing. Ha, it's so sick to me is amusing, anything for power. Dearest Lurleen, got over it, when she was asked to back down- or fail death would come. A just payback, something I never thought I would do- yet have. Yet I am the Supernatural being to Idol. I have the right to end, life afterlife and the afterlife alike.

LASSINIA is now just an underwater world- a city that remands memories, lost in a book, that I have written- just stories within our religion. Millennialism after the end of Earth, I rewrote the bible, and all past believes have gone away- all they have is my impressions- and what faith is for my people, this understanding is just one part of the seven underworlds of the afterlife, and I am the height Deity for all this. Tangibleisom is being alive, and Zenthisom is the seven- spiritual enlightenment of nirvana.

'I don't feel holy, yet I wanted to be or feel, the love of blunt that.' This was more and more week thoughts. 'THEY THINK ME AS THE CREATOR OF EVERYTHING, this is a lie.'

Yet, I have no way of explaining everything in a book, and all of life's starts and the end is too horrifying- yet it lies in my mind- goes figure, that why paces are missing. Everything for Earth was moved and has progressed, just like before with two of two- I did the same for them. It was the right thing to do, yet death- is death. No most are here lost- and I gave a home to those too, I remember what it was like... not to have a tender home, and that is what I was going for. Everyone from that story now is dead in life and lost here for as long as forever could be to the next forever.

3

(I was thinking back)

The four girls always had their eyes on me, I loosely sad this for years, and I also so said what they were, yet I knew that no one would believe me; they were able to transfigure, for girls into blackbirds' crows. They were always swarming around me and picking at my flash when I was alive until I was bloody. If they could get to my eyes, I am sure they would have, no they saved that for Emmah, to get at me.

Scarier to me than the faceless children that are parts of our world, that are the child killed by abortions' those souls come here, over the mother.

~*~

(My girlfriends)

'Lifers, they were...' I peer into all the memories, shaking my head as I stop at a traffic light, not even understanding how I got this far along. walking with no idea I was, I stopped looking at the Markey above me. And then spinning into my sight was Naddalin- and then wings flapped and then laid down to her sides.

'High-speed flight. Yes...?'

'Yes,' Naddalin- said replaying back.

Lest go see a show with a full three acts with a definite beginning, middle, and end, as we used too. It is not like you Naddalin, to want to spend time with me anymore.

'Why are you being so nice?'

I am not pretending it's anything more than it is, am I?

'Elody- the story of a star girl...' it said above me.

‘Sounds more like a prison term than a happily ever after- really glum, yet that is how girls like lives go.’

It’s like we’ve got an expiration date, and this play made me re-think life, you know- and it’s just my time- ideas, and the try overs- I’ll see you again, things, I promise you- I will? You guys are different, your lifers- even if forbidden.’ Sound like any girl’s life... why is she crying...? Said Nevaeh.

‘You know what I mean don’t you.’

She inspects her shape on the stage- and looks, at Naddalin, and said this reminds me of a girl I knew.

‘Who you...?’ Naddalin asked.

Looking at her hands, and getting into a trance; turning her hot-pink nails the way and that, with her hands.

‘It’s just that you guys are so in tune with each other, so connected. And you see the life of a girl, that is the same as you, whispered a girl behind them.’

-And-

‘I mean that- literally by the way since you’re pretty much always going at it; and we like to know you, without really knowing you...’

‘Like- who are you...’

The same girl, she puts her finger up to her lip and say’s- ‘sh-h.’

The play is over, I do not say a word, just let on single tear roll down from my left eye, and walk away. Now at that moment at that point in time, we were back on the streets, at twilight, I thought you said you don’t feel anymore, I swallow hard, waking fast the second the light turns from not showing the hand, as it would look as days in my remembrances of the past even before I was alive, something I wanted to remember was the romance of the cities of the past, and that what I did.

At that very moment crossing the intersection with a loud screech of cars wheels looking as if for the Style in The Jazz Age of The Roaring- 1920’s, yet still have the best of technologies- I thought this to be best- when the world made sense, and time was slower, stopping for us to go to the walkway, and leaving a thick trail of rubber behind them- on brick. Work was work, living was living, and time was everything that was both, and that is what I wanted for my world.

An old loving feel... and caring for all, humble, yes, yet the dark is still 'around, and there is nothing I can do about that.

But even after I set still for a moment to think she's nowhere to be found. Besides I am just about to climb a wall in a panic, and at the moment I feel a wisp of wind and Naddalin was gone- all I saw was the fast flash of wings, I was wondering where she could be when she appears right beside me and hands me a new teddy bear- and I blink- blink and blink once more- looking as I did when I was a young girl, her hand in mine, after that moment, I think like- I think that I have blacked out a moment or two there.

Refusing to slow at all, to the fast feelings of love, until we run into a parking lot and I scan her eyes for what I was longing for- lost in the eyes then looking with in to fall for that mind yet once more, she was next to me always- and she really is starting to show it, by being ever-so-sweet.

She asks, glancing at me and her and slings her backpack over her shoulder.

Naddalin nods.

'A hundred and ten dollars.'

'Um- are you crazy, some would say yes, that I am, just like you... right?'

Naddalin laughs, at that very moment.

'Don't forget, it was fully customized just like your one from the past when you were a little girl.'

'We could rent tickets...a steam paddleboat to cross the river, to get home?' Emmah, always said we should do this- it's kind of romantic no? The big wheel, and hold hands looking at the golden waves splashing to the flickers and the pulling's of the lights on the ripples of the waters from the city- as we move down the river to the villages- and then home to the castle. And that is what they did, very much in love.

Lying in bed, with the teddy bear- she stares at her, eyes practically bugging out of her head, unable to understand how anyone could do such a thing-why anyone would do such a thing, as buy one.

With the connivance and trust, of my hand and hand understanding I thence, feel into slumber - with a memory that was hoping to stand the test of time, within my head. Yet short thoughts too long flashback's was something that was always an issue.

(The next day came as the light came in through the spilled pains of my windows- ten feet away from my bed.)

'...And we have to look at the locals and be the same even if not- we have wings- that they need not see- and do as they do- without looking strange.'

'Um, okay, so let me get the traditional looking dress on- as they would have one, I like this one it is burgundy timed in gold- fabric light and airy strands flutter around her body as if in the wind gust, hang from the corset, and when we go out today we could see a lot more - she said.

'So-o you just woke up and decided- to hurry and do and think this all before asking, what the hell?' 'Even though I love it,' said Naddalin. Even your golden halo is showing and glowing and pulsating, face fare to angelic for this world, and lips also light shades of pink - her light brown hair glowing to the suns lights in honey tones blowing in the breeze - skin light fleshy hints of light young youthful pink casts, and shimmering as well, to the world people around you or don't you care about exposing our world to them anymore?

Soft like the movement of pastel colors of paint smudging the sky around her small body - looking just like Willow Shields, eyes have changed color from blue to green, wings outspread absorbing the light, gray into vivid white feathery, teddy bear embraced in both arms. Nevaeh Never looked ever more- GODDESS. The wings are changing back she said, is if you are finding hope and experiences, no longer the look of the FULLEN.

'It's all because of you,' she said to Naddalin.

Naddalin shrugs, saying 'Pretty much' - with an attitude, and deep love for her than ever finding her new hope within. 'You have a locked-in faith...' she said.

'...And the people around here are not like back home, here you can be your best and happiest ever- I feel this for why like- I am in your mind always.'

Nevaeh- 'Some call that love, mind to mind.'

'Because in case you have not noticed,' she says, practically hyperventilating now, 'things are starting to work out for you.' As if it was to hex, the moment to come, she said sheepishly.

'Some of us are a little deprived like you were in the past, yet now not so much and it all over you- being you and finding yourself and making good to your worlds and people, and all the children of the school- you role' said, Naddalin, I just said today, that I would get you to - relax- even if just for the lest little time.'

'Some of us were born to parents- some kings- some queens, and some Godets of the angles, some even born to lose, to then win, like you, so cruel is the world until you saved them all, you should be very happy with yourself, and unusual they're forced to rely on the kindness of friends for the rest of their lives- and hope for a higher power as you give them, thank you- for seeing the light- and I help you- is thrilling to me, and yes, I would take the gift of your happiness- thanks!' Said Naddalin.

'Sorry.' Naddalin shrugs, about that- yet you did get all that you wanted and more. 'Guess- I hadn't thought about that. Nevaeh thought back and Naddalin heard within her mind.

Though if it makes you feel any better- you had loved all along you just did not want to believe that was so-o, it was all for a very good cause, what you did and have done over all these years.'

(She gives double thumbs up!)

...And a very wide smile with her head turned to the one side as if making a timeless painting pose.

And when she looks at me, eyes meeting mine in that way that she has, along with the usual wave of warmth, I get the horrible feeling that ditching in the past is just the start of her plans- for world rulings, to get to know me better- I had to reprogram her mind, lost minds and walking is much better than ever before.

5

'How'd you get to school- in your past, did you start to walk?' I ask, just as we reach the front gate where Haven is waiting, sometimes took the train as you- she points at Haven, and walked and walked... the bus was detectable and as memorable as the town itself.

'She rode the train?'

‘That was not in your story if I remember, you should add it in.’ Said Naddalin, in a whisper.

Haven then glances between us, she recently dyed and has fallen even lower, her bangs falling into her face, to make herself look normalized to the rest of the world looking at her.

‘I kid you not; I would not have believed it either, but I saw it with my own eyes she was now an angle darker than ever with her wings- yet tremendously gorgeous, she was classed as a girl forever.

Watched our footing as we climb right into the big steamer train, with all the other kids- real freshmen, dorks, retards, and rejects- who that were all like us- as we were in the remembrances of the times past, then again unlike us now, now that we are older and see life to its fullest and have wisdom, and some common sense, have no other choice but to ride, in this car, all others are full to their fullest.’

She shakes her head, saying don’t say it’s the same- reason with yourself doesn’t say it even if true, why everything you just said to me I need to believe is true, Naddalin.

‘Um- like is it true,’ asked Haven, ‘you used your gold bars as bricks in parts of the world to line the sidewalks and streets, you have made as pavers out of your wealth- and your people walk paths of gold bars... over you had so much gold you did not know what to do with it all?’

‘Yes, yes, it is!’

‘Why?’

‘Why not?’

It only has worth to me, and not them... just something- I wanted to change.

‘And I was so shocked by the sight of it, I blinked a bunch of times just to make sure it was streets of gold- like a distant memory of stories of the past she made them true.

And then, when I still wasn’t convinced, that this was not her ideas, I snapped a pic on my cell and sent it to Jon-John who confirmed it, with old text that was called. Revelations the ends of the world, the only part of the bible that was kept to know where I need to go and be to save us, said Nevaeh.’

She holds it up for us to see, and she read it was old and ripped at tattered, pages. this is dark and odd what happened. This is why you became their God, right? Yet I will never say that I am the return, yet I am the chosen one. I am the Godets... not God. 'I never wanted to be worshiped - or thought of as the Queen of Queen's.'

Nevaeh- 'I never wanted bloodshed or war, over me.'

'Just love, and peace.' Said Haven.

'Why... why is the question in the story that need means the most in answering that leads to more questions.'

That night, in the girls sitting room- I glance at Naddalin, wondering what she could- be up to, and that's when I notice she's ditched her usual cashmere sweater in place of a plain cotton tee, and how her designer jeans have been replaced with no-name plain pockets, her early look as she calls it.

'One thing I never got, with your story, was its sad Anna Kendrick was held against, and this is true, by that nut- you said this yourself- your life was made into a movie, yet it was not Anna that played you- at all- it was Willow. I ask was her your number one fan.'

'Anna was more like Emmah.' said Naddalin. 'Yet that what always happens in moves, things change.'

Nevaeh- 'It was- Willow's first time- having the main role... and she did it- and it was huge around the world!'

Even the brown boots she's nearly famous for have been swapped for girly rubber flip-flops.

And even though she does not need any of that flash and dash to look as incredibly beautiful as the first day we met- the new low-key look is just- not her- I thought, or is it better?

Or at least not the- 'girl' - that I'm so-o used to.

I mean, while Naddalin is incontrovertibly smart, kind, loving, and generous- and all, she's also a hint more colorful and otiose at times.

Always preoccupied with her clothes, her image in general- along with smarts. Now she has the looks and the smarts, and I have her- and we both are more or less the same.

Also, do not even try and pin her down on her exact date of birth, since for someone who chose to be immortal, she has a definite multi-layered past of not remembering things deep things that are ever-so hidden, and points of view and perspectives about her age - to use she is always the same age of the young teen girl. I don't mind changing bodies if I have her and she - in- me- all the way, a girl can be.

Nonetheless, even though- I normally could not care less about the clothes she wears or her ride to school look either- or the train trip style, when I look at her again, I get the horrible chink in my belly- an unrelenting push, demanding my notice- to love-dream, drift off in thoughts of lust.

A definite warning that she is merely just at the beginning of making me crazy for her. Nope, she has something to do with last night.

That the sudden transformation goes way deeper than some cost-cutting, altruistic, environmentally conscious agenda.

Something, about being haunted by her karma is now over; convinced that giving up her most prized possessions- even me in the past, will somehow balance it all out- and she can live in solitude, with me- Naddalin, and if trouble arises, that I will stand in for her place. ...After all its a war of minds. Sometimes- the body and always taken of the soul!

'Shall we go- the steam whistle blows?' She smiles, grasping my hand the second the bell rings of the train, the wetness of the steam and coal dust cinders, blows around us as the wheels spin and slip three times, leading me away from Emmah and Haven, who stay on the platform, at the station who'll spend the next three phases of their time writing notes back and forth, about seeing us and hoping for the next time they do and that there missing us already, trying to determine what's up with Naddalin. (Yet we already know... don't we?)

I look at her, her gloved covering hand in mine as we heard down the hall, whispering, 'What's going on, with Naddalin others were thinking I am sure? What happened to you?' (You and I know... yet to the outside world they do not.)

Three girls' hands and hand going down the sidewalk... look at us and say thank you for changing the minds of the world.

'I already told you.' She shrugs her hold body. 'I don't need it, this for others about being the change they need yet it's nice. It's an unnecessary sympathy, I no longer care to indulge really.' Odd how this all worked out...

She giggles, looking at me smiling. But when I do not join in, she sinks more and shakes her head and says, 'Don't look so serious, you get the glory. And I get you, and peace of mind, it is a good trade-off.

It's not a big deal. When- I realized it's not something, I need- to have to feel complete, we walked out of a depressed area, to have all this, I would not change a thing, and I left my pride, behind, along with most of my money by the side of the road where someone can find it, that needs it more than myself.' Yet with me, they should not need, and neither should I.

'We were always smarter than them, always.' she holds up her girlfriend's hands.

I press my lips together and stare straight ahead, know at any time I can climb inside her mind, and see the thoughts she keeps all to herself, and get to the bottom of what she is really about, I understand her more than anybody else.

Nonetheless, notwithstanding the way she looks at me, despite the dismissive shrug that she gives, nothing she's said makes the least bit of sense- yet that was always the way she was, and is. And- I love that, it is crazy; yet ever-so right.

'Well, that's fine and all, I mean, if that's what you need to do, then great, have fun- as you always said, and I think it's really sweet- also you're a given person.' I shrug, fully convinced that it's not at all great, though knowing better than to say it out loud. I find a moment of contentment, walking into the sunset.

(Sometimes has pasted)

Love, even to this day is more lust than they can take to keep apart. Nevaeh and Naddalin, as their date continued. Then in the castle, in the restated book sections, with only the glow of soft lantern lights.

The smell of old paper, and leather bindings. They started to make love against, the library shelves which creaked with their movement, all the old volumes falling for the other sides. Then over 40 of them all land to the ground, wide open- all from the same writer, his name on the covers, it is common enough at such times to fantasize arriving enjoyed her slight weight on her, enjoyed being crushed under her small body.

I wanted to kiss her forever, and then, I remove out all thought about what this was, what it might mean, what further mess passion was why I might create for myself. or the thoughts of anyone else. She wanted her soldered to her, from mouth to feet. Many shivers shake and chills run past and through her body, and she alike.

I kissed her until true thoughts seeped out through my pores and I became a living pulse, enjoyed being crushed under her body while toiled. She wanted her soldered to her, from mouth to feet, conscious only of what I wanted to do to her.

She enjoyed all her- the weight she gives. Naked now, she lay her full length over her; only the united beat of sex and heart together can create ecstasy, of their privet parts entertained rubbing one another. ...And then we were crashing around the little railway Pullman cars finding the right tracks, all hands and lips and, oh, God, the scent and taste and feel of her.

Twisting each button below, kissing hands and finger, shivers passed through her body. When she closed her eyes, she felt she had many hands around her, which touched her everywhere, and many mouths the kiss the same, which passed so swiftly over her. Fingers soft, running his finger along her breastbone.

At last with an angle sharpness of heavenly, then her teeth sank into each other's fleshiest parts. Likewise, kissing her just above her pubic bone, she slipped two fingers inside her, the darkness swirling around her small hole. Not only did she spit and like is my girl hole and spilled into two lines parted, but she also did the same to my butt hole, too. -It felt so good-!

And, then I licked the clear goo-ing girlie-come off of her two longest fingers, that thick wetness, was bridging between them playfully, and at that moment was far too tantalizing not to try, that she had in front of my face to show me, as she was making scissors fingers of the goo-ing, of her warm love.

When her shirt finally fell open, she studied her, then touched her breasts. Couldn't have cared less if she thought the same things or way- Naddalin licked her nipples, then moved his lips slowly down her stomach, minds locked for the moment was more than any other thoughts they had. It was the love of the mind more than a body.

Then supreme Naddalin who has the mind of Nevaeh within her body, as if placement flip-flopped, she runs out into the hard-pouring rain, nude for the love she made just moments before with no cares in the world other than love and freedom of expression.

Her arms to the graying cloud-covered skies above. then she takes a full 1 billion volts in a white cracking blot of lighting to their head, as her wings are outstretched, (I scream saying run, yet she stands unmoved.)

Then the oddest thing happens as if she has dissipated all the power if the blot into her body as more power to keep her alive for that many years, the wings of her body arching with extreme voltage, wildly wrapping around the feathers of the wings, themselves, she was glowing with power, and it was going into her mind- as energy for remembrance. The clock tower bells ring- out the time, of midnight.

Then moments after she and Naddalin went into the steamy Roman bathhouse, with nude cherub angels playing Instruments, that are enchanted and welcoming to use, in soft white stone, lined all around the pool edge along with two lion and lamb statues also animated, with many fire bowls, likewise with many cascading waters falls falling down on young bodies.

The bathhouse is enclosed by walls, yet open to the skies above in twinkling stars. Also, light by flaming lanterns, with the back-lights of many arched stain glass windows, lining the length of the long room shin and sheening many different colors, that are dancing on the young nude little girls ages - seven and up to twenty-five, over one hundred nude school girls were waking and bathing around them in the shallow 3-foot hot waters.

Nudity is not something that well has a shame of in this world, not even thought of as wrong, and why should it be? Multi-colored roses were all around inside and out, everything lush, fervent, keen, passionate, vehement, zealous and most agog.

Naddalin and Nevaeh the two of them having crazy humping movements of not being able to stand not having it and making the pussy kissing together, as both their legs apart and prevents touching to the point of smashing down on and in, in lovemaking in the mornings hours, as her hip molds with her hip, kissing like as the meet.

The soft skin that Naddalin has that hands no more than two inches from herself have been now rubbing and going in Nevaeh, her love now dripping into the 0.5906 inches, or 1.5-centimeter tight pink opening of the vaginal hole, worm and lustful.

(The next day)

Let us get out of here and go shopping. we've earned it.

I gape, shaking my heard- um I don't think so-o, I hardly could believe my ears. And since when do you worry about cost, Missy.

She looks at me, amused by my surge of lighter, which is not exactly the reaction I had prearranged on.

'But just how are you planning to get around now that you've ditched the train and don't have a ride?'

'I mean, in case you haven't noticed, this is not back home where you can run around freely, what do you plan on doing, you can't get anywhere without having a motorbike, would you like to rent one?'

'Like- I am some shallow, money-oriented, self-absorbed, buyer-driven snob?'

I thought you would already know this.

'No!' I cry, shaking my heard and squeezing her hand.

Hoping to convince her even though, I did kind of mean it- not being mean yet truthful in a way of conveying. Only not in a slumber way like she thinks or you even would feel- like.

Then just like the words 'KILL, KILL, I- WE Kill the final time, mark my words played hauntingly in her head, yet it was in the mind of Naddalin, and then transfer at the same time in the mind of Neveah linked. 'Nothing to worry about, just past evils that well never give up.' Said Nevaeh.

'Always something or someone to end the moments,' said Nevaeh. At one time, she had my old boyfriend appreciates the finer things in life kind of thing, and she has always taken a man's place with me in my heart, and less in my girlfriend's mind to I worry anymore about them, now she is the version I have of safety and comfort of what I am looking for in that kind of way, even if a girl. 'She is my rock!'

'I just- UM.'

I squint, wishing I could be even half as eloquent as her. Yes, still forging ahead when I say, 'I guess some just don't get it, we never feel love like we have - and I feel sad for them.' I shrug at her, eyes meeting. I raise her ruby and diamond-covered hand intertwined with gold, with all the chain she had that crisscrossed over to where I can see the top of her hand to kiss, to make her feel even more safe with me. (Contentment is everything with some else, I always thought.)

The bonds between ourselves and another person belong only in our minds. Memory, as it grows fainter, loosens them times before - your own keep or not, and not without trying to keep the good, the bad sometimes creep over top, of other evils wanting to still your joy, the illusion by which we want to be hoaxed and which, out of love, friendship, politeness, deference, obligations, we hoax other individuals, we exist alone.

A woman like us is the creature who cannot escape from herself, and her past, who knows other people only in herself, and when she asserts the contrary, she is lying. ...And that is how, I look at her past my past and what is in the past, making less tragic recollections of all things that are now past. Alleged Naddalin.

Whispered thoughts of the mind - 'The bonds between ourselves and another person exist only in our minds.' Recalling things in life and the afterlife may not always be the same as you once remembered.

Ha, grief is what develops the powers of the mind, and happiness is just a state of it like grief as well, yet happiness is beneficial for the body, but it is the sadness that makes the brilliant of mind.

'The true meaning to us of how little time and place matters is the feeling of undying love.' That was what Nevaeh said back to me in my mind.

That night in the middle of the night, I walked along the wall of macabre young girl bones - of hips, arms, legs, and heads, oh my - of 4-foot-high, remembering death for some, it's just the way it is, death is death even in the afterlife. Bodies only last so long, and only I can last for all time.

Then I started thinking about a girl that I knew, that was close to my home town, like touch her bones that lay here, with all the others, she may not have made it as one of us, fallen yet I think her story is worth sharing.

The story oddly starts long before, she was born.

‘December 9, 1930, I slowly opened my eyes, to the world of the wandering around me, kicking and screaming like a newborn hearing, my name for the first-time, Giovanni.’

‘Um- to tell you the truth, I don’t remember, if my dad was there or not, my mother never- ever- like really said, along with not saying much about it, mainly for he was hard at work for the money was not there, for us you see we- were poor.’

‘Oh, yes, it’s a- very small an Italian town called: Pettorano Sul Gizio.’

‘I remember my dear sweet mother telling this story, and my older brother as well, of how she gives birth to me in a one-bedroom house, or most would call a wooden shack, that what- an I call it.’

‘Not to be too graphic, but- a, her legs were all- an apart onto hay bales, she was crying louder and louder, then I was, back in those days you did NOT have anyone there, like to help with this kind of thing, it just happens.’

‘I am lucky to be- a here with you now.’ He said.

‘My life was hard, but- a worth it, I can not- complain really.’

‘One- I am an Italian American.’

‘Two- I am- a getting older and feel, that- an I have lived a good life.’

‘It’s all a masterful plan of happiness and sad moments, lost in time really with me, hey what can- I say, they’re all in my mind still...’

‘Um yes, even at the time-worn age of eighty-five years young.’

‘Sometimes, I look at these kids coming up and think to myself, how things have changed, like me, also, I cannot- a spell or write much, yet that doesn’t mean, that I am not smart.’

‘Unlike you- I can’t use a computer, I wouldn’t even know how to turn one on, yet- a, I think that is okay.’

‘Um- you live, and you learn, as you go.’

‘Come what may for another day, and who- is to say what stays with you forever, and never go away.’

‘Even old age can’t take that away.’

‘It is locked in your memories; all you have to do is find a way to get them out.’

(He looks at me...) ‘That is why you’re here, writing all my stories of stories down in this book you say you can write for me.’

(I will do that for you...) I said.

‘What can I a- say, when I was a three year of age, I was living with my grandmother, there was a complication, that made it hard to part with my mother, yet it was- what had to be done, at the time.’

‘She was overworked and working for all of us, and just could not keep up, with it all health-wise.’

‘I remember, the winters they were so-o cold it felt like a knife cutting open your face.

‘Yet, nothing like here in the small town of Hasting's Pennsylvania, as you can see, I am a- talking to you in my little apartment- it’s a nice no?’ (Yes, yes- it is...) I whispered.

(I glanced and said also: ‘I’ am glad to be talking with you.’

I- was sitting there with a 1911 Underwood Typewriter curiosity not sure what he would say next.’

‘I look outside with him, it's nice here, yet not at all like back when I was a small boy, climbing the tree for the hell of it and picking things off it all to eat- yeah know.’

‘Um plus just see how high I could go.’

‘I went back with my mother at the age of ten or so, we didn’t have much at all- you see.’

‘I really... loved being a child, yet that did not last long... speaking of that, like - we sleep for the most part all together on the floor on leaves and grass.’

‘With an open firebox in the middle of the one-room place, my dad used to make his charcoal, laying wood, mud, and levels together.’

(Ah- hum...) I said, frantically typing away. Remember, nights where I was, that I wish, I'd had something to cover with yet did not-a.’

‘I remember, wearing the same outfit from the age of ten until my teen years back.’

‘Yes, surely as you could imagine full of holes and not smelling the best really.’ ‘There was no shit house, you found some random bush, and wiped with the left hand.’

(NICE!) is what I said, raising a brow.

‘That is too much, yet it is very true, he said, sighing.’

‘Funny, it’s like- I could see my dad up in the hills... doing this... he shows the movement, of cutting down these big old trees.’

‘It was kind of like his job, yet nobody works, and the work you did want really for the dollar, it was to keep life- going- yeah see?’ Thought, I had a hard time making a living... my dad had a little harder than me... yet, I wonder that now.’

(Say more about him) I alleged.

‘What can- I say, he was a good man, though with a- lot of things, you have to let the past behind you, and sometimes loved one also.’

7

(Tree- limb)

‘I remember, the one time, I and this young girl, where she and I went to high, and the branch broke snapping it off... with me... and my small arms hanging on it, I nearly fall on my ass and broke it, I think I did.’

‘Idiota Ragazzo,’ she said.

(Her)

'My Grannie was not at all pleased with me, it was like a twenty-foot drop or so-o.'

'What-a can I say, I was the rough and ready type of younger 'Ragazzo' a- boy?'

'Sorry- for me speaking so broken, as you see, I never really learn how to read or write so - 'good.'

What- smarts I-a got I tough- myself.'

'I mean look at me now, I am and an older man.'

'Yet, look at this photo, see what I once was, look at the black hair, I once had, not- a so much there now, oh well what- a can you do that's- a life.'

'Maybe they'll let me get my Cadillac back and I get can- an out and see the world one more time, as you see my days are getting shorter, yet I feel good.'

'You know, I have all loved the Cadillac- my first was a 1962 Deville, nothing like the shitty looking things we have today.' 'Oh-well- at- this point... I don't have anything to my name, and I am still not sure, what I want to be printed on my headstone... that's- a life too no?'

'Life is amazingly full of wonder, slander, and sometimes hurt- you'll see what I mean.'

'By the way, just start calling me John, everybody does.'

'Um- yet once again, that's- a life, it goes by so fast- kid, look at- you-you're- young and have so much to see.'

'It's just the name that stuck with me over the years, I don't-a know why, just a good English sounding name- ah- so I went with it, kind of thing.'

'I remember, spending my teen year in Rome, kind of on my own, yet, when I look back on it now, I was kind of always alone.'

(Got yeah) I said, nodding.

'I have had loved and I have had the loss. Oh, and I have loved another with all my heart and soul mind and body.'

'Yet there was more than one love in my life.'

'What-a can I say, I love all the woman, some you love like your mother in that- away, and some you love in another way's, like all my friends and friends.'

'I have made over the years; here eating nice meals, three times a day, at The Beaver Street Café, breakfast lunch, and dinner.'

'Um- I am a typical guy, which has worked hard and lived life, a normal life.' 'I love to tease the girls here severing the food to me, I know I am too old to get a young date, but what the heck I can try right?'

'I feel as if they think, I'm like their grandpa or something, heck I don't feel that old.'

'What can I say, I am kind of a flirt, but I like to have a good time, that's what it's all about having fun, is it not?'

'I don't dislike anybody, nor does anyone dislike me.'

'I would say, I feared to leave my homeland, but it was something to think strongly about.'

(The movie)

'I mean heck, it was a new land, I was lost in a sea in a rainstorm, were knobby could understand me hard when I looked up at 'The Statue of Liberty,' when I was - oh boy, like nineteen or so...' 'Um- like we got lost on the trip over to New York, on a ship or more like a pedal boat called: 'The Conto Brackenno...'"

('Don't ask me how to spell it, yet, let me try- I think that is it.')

(I went with it)

(Back)

'Before I get into that-a, let me talk some about Pettorano Sul Gizio my little hometown.'

(Sure! Go for it.)

‘I remember, the steam trains rolling all night and all day, I recall hopping on them from time to time, I have this remembrance a lot anymore.’

‘Then again there was this bridge with stone arches and the town sat way up on the hill, a long walk yet that is how we did the long walking from place to place, you were rich if you had a car.’

‘I mean we had our ass's, chickens, and ducks, yet you had to have money for that also.’

‘And if you wanted food on the table, you have to trade and pick what you wanted, it was this or that.’

‘I can hear the train cars linking up, and the whistle blowing, the light in the cars fascinated me for you could see the light glowing and to me, that was something neat to see on the long summer nights.’ ‘We did not have power in our home, there were no phones, and there was no running water, what water, I had we brought in for a hand pump far down the dusty lane all downhill, all up to the other way.’

‘Yet, I still feel my heart is back there some time, I mean it was all I knew, and 'till I found out what having a U.S life was all about.’

(N.Y - WWII)

‘The world moves a little faster in New York.’

‘I kind of find it funny, I missed being in two different wars, it was the around the time of WWII and I was drafted, yet, because of me not having the background, I need, I was told, that I was not needed, and that was just fine by me, I was not really into all that junk anyway; not that I would not fight for my country, I would yet that was not what I wanted to come over here.’

‘What can I say nothing ever comes out-a fighting like fools? I worked in an Italian restaurant, it's not right, we are all the same really.’

‘On the other hand, before getting into all that, I was walking the streets, just looking for someone to give me a job.’

‘I was not complaining, yet, living homeless is not the greatest thing.’

'I had nothing, I had a new wife, and I would say- I loved her... yes, but it was an arranged marriage, so I could be here in the U.S.'

'What can you do she was beautiful, everything a man would want really.'

'She was sixteen when we first met, and it was not loved at first sight, yet we made it work.'

'She came over to me, and I got to see her when she was about seventeen, yet she was living with someone else.'

(Rocky love)

'What can you do, I was not mad about it, I just went on doing what I do.'

'That all ended, and she came back to me, and me being who I am, said yes once more.'

'That is one thing about me, I have always been too forgiving, yet that is what love is all about.'

'Ah- let me close my eyes and look back into the past, I can see her there, standing in front of me, and this was not long after we were married before she had to leave me.'

'We- she and I- let's just say we made love for the first time. It was nothing fancy not like what I hear some of these kids saying- 'they do today.'"

'You kissed you touched each other's bodies, things like that, I am a romantic after all.'

'I was on top of her, kissing her the whole time, she was in some pain, yet she - loved it not long after the first thrust.'

'She never really said that she loved me, yet we had a type of love where you did not need to say it aloud.'

(Moving forward)

'Heck sleeping naked was what you did anyways in the hot summer days in New York in the 1950s. Or you would roast to death, I guess it helped some with the passion.'

'I don't remember, it all, nevertheless- if I look back on it, I do- I have to blow the cobwebs off my brain- kind of like looking into an old scrapbook.'

‘I look out and see the sun shining out my frosted window, and I see my day go by ever so slowly.’

‘I’ve led an ordinary life.’

‘There are no memorials dedicated to me and my name will soon be ancient history, but I’ve loved another with all my core, feel of mind and soul, and to me; this has always been sufficient.’

‘The optimists would call this a love mushy love story yah-a not really, the pessimists would call it-a heartbreak.’

‘Yet it worked okay... seeing her long black hair laying on top of her breast with some skin shown and her nipples through, looking shy with big brown eyes.’

‘Yet wanting me and all that, she was on the bed, I kissed all the way up her legs, feeling all of her with my fingertips, it was after all the first time, it was a big thing for me also see as it happened, I was not living with her, yet I was sleeping there some night yet nobody really new.’

‘This was the first that stands out the most to me, the first time, I was ever in a bed like this, so it was one neat night.’ ‘She was a virgin at seventeen, me I am not going to say, yet I think I did all I need to do, I never had someone say it was wrong, and she became pregnant to me, and I never saw my little girl, until- I came over sometime later.’

‘Really, I never even knew was pregnant she went back I stay it was all craziness, yet maybe I didn’t know as much as I thought I did about making- love- either- a lost thought rolling around in his head.’

‘Really If I did, I would have found some way to make it over and Gaetanina and my little one.’

‘In my mind, it’s a little bit of both, and no matter how you choose to view it, in the end, it-a does not change the fact that it involves a great deal of my life and the path I’ve chosen to follow.’

‘I have no complaints about my path and the places it has taken me; enough complaints to fill a circus tent about other things, maybe, but the path I have chosen has always been the right one, and I wouldn’t have had it any other way.’

‘Time doesn’t make it easy to stay on the right pathway that is long and not all way sight.’

'There are up's and down's hills and mountain valley. The path is straight as ever, but now it is strewn with the rocks and gravel that accumulate over a lifetime.'

'Until three years ago, it would have been easy to ignore, but it's impossible now.'

'There is a sickness rolling through my body; I'm neither strong nor healthy, and my days are spent like an old party balloon: listless, spongy, and growing softer over time.'

'I lookout all the time and see all the faces going by it's nice, I feel okay in this old body.'

'Yet, I don't feel, as if I am all that old, it's getting colder out yet.'

'I feel the same on the inside getting colder as the days pass ever so slowly and feel as if they are getting longer and my life is getting shorter.'

'I want to do something, so you all remember who I am, yet I am not sure how to do that, I ran into this younger man Named: Marcel Ray Duriez, and he said-a; 'I will do this for you.'"

(...and I did.)

'And I was overjoyed that someone would care about some like me, just your ordinary Italian man, living in Hastings Pennsylvania.'

'That was one a big-time chef back in the old century, and New York City back in the fifths.'

(Really...?)

'I sit in this restaurant called: 'The Beaver Street Cafe' and I see faces come and go, I think - I know then all, they all know me, I am so easy to get to know - yeah - no.'

'They all rushed by saying hi, in and out the door.'

'Some even sit with me, I love to flirt with the girls that serve the food to me, I am a sexy man after all just look- an at me, I still got it.'

'I like the kid, I even asked him ever for a shot of brandy, (being me) and we talk, and he typed, I was never much of a reader or writer yet he is.' 'I see him taking notes on the typewriter and I wonder-a what my story is going to say... even I don't get it sometimes.'

'I walk on wood floors, wood classed dark wood wall coverings.'

‘Do you like my hair? It's graying yet it's all there is it-a not.’

‘Like most my age of 85, I got most of my hair, though I'm the only one in the cafe this morning.’

‘They are like in this room I start to feel lonely and long for my wife the first one that I had.’

(Kids)

‘Yet, I love them both yet can remember their names, alone except for the girls in the back, but they, like me, yet they have their own busy lives- ‘yet- a that's life.’”

‘I was that way too when I was young- but- an age slows you-ah down, what- a heck, I am okay with it I have to be- NO?’

‘A minute later, the door has been propped open for me, as it usually is, my nurse comes down to sit and talk, asking if I'd like coffee, ‘It's-a fine, everything it's-a fine.’”

‘That saying has almost become routine to me.’ ‘Now there are two others in the room, and they too grin at me as they come in and pass as they move in and pass by.’

‘Good morning, they both say one a young boy and a teen girl...’

‘They say with cheerful expressions, and I'd take a moment to ask about the kids and the schools and an oncoming end to their vacations.’

‘They get sadden by me saying their fun day is coming to an end.’

‘I don't like making a kid feel that way- yet-a that is life, it's not, not always fun, yet I'd like to keep happy, I see her walk to a table I see her crying for a minute or so.’

‘They do not seem to notice, that I look with concern; even see me doing this yet have become numb to it, but then again that my life, looking for others, what the heck that is just the way I am.’

‘A person can get used to anything if given enough time.’

‘Time is everything and yet nothing all at the same time.’

‘I cough, and through squinted eyes, I check my watch.’

‘I realize it is time to go.’

‘I stand from my seat by the window and shuffle across the room, stopping at the desk to pick up the scrapbook, I have looked through a hundred times. I do not glance through it.’

‘Instead, I slip it beneath my arm and continue on my way to the place I must go. I hear the muffled sounds of crying in the distance and know exactly who is making those sounds.’

‘Then the nurses see me, and we smile at each other and exchange greetings.’

‘They are my friends and we talk often, but I am sure they wonder about me and the things, that I go through every day.’

‘I listen as they begin to whisper among themselves as I pass.’

‘There he goes again,’ I hear, ‘I hope it turns out well.’

‘But they say nothing directly to me about it.’

‘I’m sure they think it would hurt me to talk about it so early in the morning and knowing myself as I do, I think they’re probably right.’

‘Until three years ago, it would have been easy to ignore, but it’s impossible now.’

‘There is an illness developing through my body; I’m neither strong or steady, yet I feel very healthy, however, I know that is not so, and my days are spent will, I’m not allowed to drive anymore, yet I want to the TV is on yet I don’t care to look, I don’t even care who the president it’s - what was his name? ‘Osama?’ ‘Or is it Obama?’ I don’t know either way- do you? It’s all the same to me.’

‘I cough and look out my living room window and through peeking eyes out the window blind, I check my watch the kid playing in the park next door and hear the splashing of the pool, what joy that brings to me.’

‘I realize it is time to go back over next to and get lunch now shrimp or something like that - I don’t care it’s all good to me.’

‘I love to sit here in my old lazy boy chair it’s, okay by me too- what the heck-a.’

'I get up something take a few jabs at it I stand by seat getting stable footing- by the window and shuffle across the room, stopping at the desk to pick up the photos of the past...'

'I have looked over than a hundred times, it could have been more I don't remember, yet I recall it all.'

'I do not glance through it the scrapbook of timeworn photos so that I don't remember ever seeing, yet I am sure, I have my nurse said, I have, and it was not more than a week ago.'

'Instead, I slip it beneath my arm and continue on my way to the place I must go.'

'I sit for just a second and stare at her, but she doesn't return the look.'

'I appreciate all that she does for me, yet I know who I am.'

'She doesn't need to think I do, I don't- like that.'

'Sometimes, I think she forgot more than I know.'

'I'm a stranger to her, she doesn't get people like do.'

'Then, turning away, I bow my head and pray silently for the goodwill I know I will require keeping going on.'

'I have always been a firm believer in God and the influence of good hope, all the same, to be honest, my faith has made a list of questions- some I don't get and some that I do- I definitely want to be answered before I'm gone, and no one remembers why.'

'Afterward, I sit in the chair that has come to be shaped like me. They are finishing up now; her clothes are on, but still, she is crying. It will become quieter after they leave, I know.'

'The excitement of the morning always upsets her, and today is no exception.' 'Finally, the shade is opened, and the nurses walk out.'

'Both of them touch me and smile as they walk by.'

'I wonder what this means.'

‘I lastly assumed what true love is and what it stands for... love is meant for caring for another person's contentment more than your own, no whatever to the problems life may bring forth or the longing pains the choices you face might be to love or walk away.’

‘Now and again you have to be away from individuals you love, but that doesn't make you love them any less if anything it make that bond stronger.’

‘I mean-a, if the association can't endure the long-term with problems, why would it be worth my time and energy for the short term that is how I always felt both times I fell in love.’

‘I remember, when- her lips met mine, dancing out under the cafe' overhead roofs back in my hometown.’

‘I remember, when ironically it was playing on my old radio- I was young and so were you, and time stood still, and love was all we knew, you were the first, so was I, we made love and then you cried Remember when.’

‘I remember, when- we vowed the vows and walked the walk, made all the small talk, that we said we would never part yet that is just what happen she stayed behind I fled to the US, there was a war coming fast- with a gun blast- I had to move fast.’

‘I gave my heart one and once only back then, made the start, it was hard to even leave my mother behind, she was all that was in my life at the time.’

‘The sensation of emptiness is what breakdown your heart is sometimes the very one that mends’ - it's-a what was broken, I have lived and learned, life threw curves there was joy, there was hurt.’

‘The first time I saw your face, I saw your eyes shine into mine, and the moon and the stars were the light we need to see, it was love at first sight even if it was all arranged.’

‘I remember the dark and the endless skies and being with my love.’

‘I realize the odds were not there for me, always against me. Just like old ones died and new are born rearranged, disassembled, and changed forever, ‘yet that's- a life.’”

‘We came together, fell apart and broke each other's hearts- I remember when and the first time, I ever saw your face.

I felt the earth move with you like you're the trembling heart.'

'If you don't go for whatever you want, you'll never have whatever you need in your heart.'

'If you don't ask this dumb question, you'll never really have the dumb answer, if you don't step forward and look back you'll never have the solution that was always there looking at you in the freaking face, it's like photos of the past all in a timeline, there the answer to what you did right and what you did wrong, like a sad lonely old country song.'

'In life, there are many things out of your control, that is where the hand of God takes over if you step in you can do harm and you can make it pity or a tragedy.'

'But science is not the total answer; this I know, this I have learned in my lifetime. And that leaves me with the belief that miracles, no matter how mysterious or implausible, they are real and can transpire without concern to the ordinary order of things.'

'So yet again, just as I do daily, I begin the same routine, doing all the same thing except on Saturday, in the hopes that the miracle will come, of being out and about as if I was young once more to dominate my life and triumph majestically, splendidly, and marvelously.

Yet-a that's not going to happen- I-a know that. Besides maybe, just maybe, it will, or I could just remember when- the rest of my days.'

9

'FEAR- stands for everything and so face it don't run- I never had a fear of anything or anyone everyone loves me, or so I feel. I remember... been fresh out of high school, not a day over ten years.'

'I had five cents to my name, I was still living at home, but not for long. I was a virgin yeah- and nay, to the world! I never saw anything other than farmland.

I didn't know what I was in for. Yet I had to go...'

'Hitler was taking over, killing babies and bring them alive of all things.'

'I will never forget the sounds of the troop train steaming through, dropping off more maggots like me to kill the Nazis.

Knowing that ninety percent of them would not make it back home.'

'I'd never thought I would live this long, and I never thought young-ins would doubt the war and the Holocaust.'

'I have seen men, women, and kids being lined up on their knees and shot in the back of the head, for no reason at all. It's incredible, tragic, and despicable, how one man's loathing can start so much destruction.'

'I do believe that history is going to repeat; it's just a matter of time. I just hope I can fish this story with you all before I am fished myself.'

'Then- It was the summer of love, sex, drugs and rock, and roll. Flower power was in the air, and I had hippie long hair.'

'This is what I remember about summer love in 1969.'

'Jim Morrison was flashing his manhood, and the taxing way to Paris, Hendrix was rewriting 'The Star-Spangled Banner' in a high voltage screech.'

'Man- You could feel it in the air people waited to fight or freak, love or kill- all part of a thrill.'

'Vietnam was right outside the door... love, drug, or hug...

Man- sides were being selected.'

'The world was yelling for the change, girl run naked in the mud, baby's sucking away no one cared, and there was orgy everywhere you look, and girls that would blow your mind for free.'

'Humorous it seems like you were tripping over something and on something - man.'

'All the colors- man, do you see the colors when you look into the eyes of the sun - man, look without a fear- man or it will kill you- man. 69-man! Far-Out!'

(Older)

'Remember when the sound of little feet, yet my girls both grow up the kids do, and they have their own lives, I don't interfere.'

'I vowed we'd never give it upon them, yet they did on me.'

'I remember when I-a remember when forty seemed so old- yet that's- a life! looking' back, it's just the stepping stone in my hometown, overgrown trees, and winding hills, money was not something you need over there, yet it was something I needed to find in the U.S.A'

'I was living in a cardboard box in 1952, and looking for a job, yet could not find one for I could not read or write to save my life- yet-a that's just the ways of my life.'

'Haunted love- I was finding yet another woman to fill the long and lonely nights, she was all right I loved her, nevertheless- I was not in love as much.'

'I knew that I could live to be a hundred yet maybe- Like Marcel said- maybe- like why is a question that has known answer, and visit every country in the world, but nothing would ever compare to that single moment when I first kissed the girl of my dreams and knew that my love would last forever.'

'I look at the old typewriter that I have never used on my desk it's missing the letters 'A' and 'N' not the button itself, I want to do this all my life and this kid is doing it for me, and what gets me is that it was written in a day.'

'Okay, then I look at the fingers are a fly in a great heist. I don't get it? I sometimes stop over to the library and see all the old book and I have never cracked one, in my long life, I wonder what they all say yet I think I know, it's like my life.'

'There was a lot they didn't tell you about death-

I wouldn't know I have not died yet- I want to live.'

'I feel that when we grow up or even hit our twenties, we lose the talent for loving without limits, and I see this looking at what I am seeing.'

'I put all the photos on the table some fall to the floor like my thoughts and heart- for a moment while the scrapbook is open. It takes four licks on my twisted finger to get the threadbare cover open to the mid-page.'

'Then I put the glass back into place somewhat downward on my nose.' 'There is always a moment right before I begin to flipflop the pages, and I see the story come to life like a black and white movie, within my hoary mind and I wonder to myself what a wonderful world, and what's it happens today?'

'I don't know I really-a don't-a care, it's all the same, for me now; for I never know beforehand, that life is routine and then more routine, and then you get institutionalized.'

"Yet that- life," a mixture of all the stuff you can take blended, making you feel constipated, sometimes nauseated- or maybe I love sick and miss my wife's, both at different times of the day.'

'Deep down it does not matter, I feel I don't need anyone I am okay on my own- I keep saying that to myself.'

'It's the possibility that keeps me going, not the guarantee, a sort of stake on my part.'

'And though you may call me a dreamer or fool or any other thing, I believe that anything is possible.'

'I remember, being three years old living with my mother- who was my grandmother and seeing the small one-room house that was just a wood shake, I remember being the age of nine clubbing tall trees and busting my ass.'

'I remember having to grow up too fast.

I remember sleeping on hay beds, and make an open fire on the inside, I remember not even having real windows, or a door, I remember going for long walks just to get the water need to wash an outfit, and I remember it all.'

'I recall not having a bathroom and going in the woods, it was not until I was told that we had the outhouse. I remember having a job over in the old county of cutting down fields by hand with a long-bladed knife.'

'We all sleep together to keep from freezing, there were three girls at my feet and five older boys next and almost on top of me.'

10

'It was early October 1944, and I left home, never to look back on a steamship- Some time has passed, I see the page turn- not the photos I am a dad, my one girl, on my shoulders at this point-with my new wife next to me, damn I wish I could remember her name too.’ ‘Something- and I remember everything about that but, why? Is my mind slipping- I think not, I need a drink and may-a-be I’ll remember?’

‘I never called her anything but her nickname I gave her- ‘My-Love.’

‘I see little feet running around the apartment she is three a wild little shit.

Yet- that part- an of life- no?’

‘I could watch my wife doing anything and everything, so was all I ever wanted, yet I never really looked around at that time, or maybe I was, I mean I’m-a good looking guy even now- the fading a girl is not that hard to do with you look like this.’

‘The lady’s love me, for me, ha- an I never changed. I sit here in the evenings flipping through the endless channels nothing like 300 nothing really on that I like, yet there is- some old shows on TV- land, I remember especially working hard all day in a cafe in New York, and let his thoughts wander without conscious direction.’

‘It was how he relaxed, a routine he’d learned from his father.’

‘Romance is thoughtful thoughts about your momentous other when you are supposed to be thinking about something otherwise. I like to look at the trees and their reflections in the room and on the river, back when I was younger, I think I have a photo somewhere.’

‘Let’s see if I can move to that page without this thing falling completely apart.

Look nowhere in Hasting’s the trees are beautiful in deep autumn: greens, yellows, reds, oranges, every shadow, and hue in between, just like look at all the ducks on the river running not far away.’

‘Their glittering colors glow with the late evening sun bring on the dusk and midnight sun, and for the hundredth time, I see my first wife as if she was starting next to me as I get into bed.’

‘As I put the book down and rest my aching head, to hopefully have another day to do it all again, however that may not happen.’

‘The days are slowly being taken away, from the big man upstairs.’

‘Yet then again- ‘that’s-a life.’

‘Originally it was the main house where I met my first wife she was rich I was poor I was on a working plantation for hardly anything- yet, I had her love to pay for my needs, I did not have two pennies to rub together, yet I fell head over heels for her, I got my apartment about right after the war concluded around 1945.’ ‘The date may not be right, yet they work for me, this is the way they have to be, spent the last fourteen months and small fortune repairing it, like $500, yet it’s better than the cardboard box in the street next to a flaming barrel.’

‘The place is old built in the 1900s or so- I don’t know. I get the rug from someplace- and I don’t remember how it got in here I had to cut it up, French or something like that- yet what you don’t have you have to find some way or another to keep the little brown hair wife- ie, and little ones that look like her happy, and needing you.’

‘Both girls- I don’t have anyone to pass on this good name...’

‘Oh- well that’s-a life- is it not?’

‘I have never even had an article, about me why would someone want to read my story anyways- I am nothing amazing.’ ‘Do you know how many ways love can smash you; I think I do? It makes you happy, and it makes glum?’

‘It makes you gruesome in the abdomen or hurt in the heart.’

‘It makes everything upbeat and sharper, or it hazes all the limits.’

‘It makes you feel like a monarch or a chump.’

‘Every way love can stick you; it’s hit hard when it comes to you, or she with you.’

‘It’s hard to resist a good girl when you want to be a bad boy.’

‘That a photo no one gets to see but me,

I remember her before, I got married.’

‘Yet her name passes before me also.’

'I had many girlfriends over the years, but never another love of my life; I have some nicking too, yet you don't want to know all the stuff... maybe, later on, I'll talk about that.'

'My last apartment sat on zero acres yet is adjacent to a creek-sh like a river called the Susquehanna, sometimes, I think I'll go for a walk over to the park- and then I think not. It not far- yet it is for me.'

'I see all the dry leaves- falling to their roots of the tree, I see all the falling leaves, I see meter posts just there, they never work, I see my white 'caddie' (Cadillac) in the back not running, it is-a running- but not for me. I drink a glass of hot coffee, and then shower, it's the start of the same day, or so, I think. I have the oldies on and that's good enough for me.'

'My nurse walks in, saying- 'It's looking good today- John.' 'What was-a that?'' I said back in a hast...

'I always showered at the start of the day, the water washing away all the paint off and aching in my body.'

'I am too damn young to be in a nursing home!' That was my thought of being an old devil.

'I'm-a, not that messed up- yet!' I thought.

'Afterwards, I combed my grayish back hair, put on some faded jeans and a long-sleeve yellow shirt, I don't have a porch on the front it's getting colder anyway, I may just sit in the back, where I am setting now there is no view, what- so- ever back here, where I sat every day at this time, before walking ever to the café to eat eggs and toast, or something along those lines.'

'Yet again- 'that-a, is my life.'''

The girl- 'I see him as he stretched his arms above his head and winking at me, gently sloping his shoulders up and down as he completed the routine, of making the move for one door down to the other.'

'I see some random kid ringing the bell by the cash register over and over sounding like the old steam trains, that ran through here in the past, and really it-a was not-a that-long-ago.' 'John reached for his coffee cup, remembering his father as a boy saying- it to Kristian, thinking how much he missed him, yet never really got to see him all that much.'

‘He occupies yourself once by, saying ‘you look cute today,’ he adjusted his suspenders as her face turn bright red, then fool around again, saying...’

Then he spotted me- The girl...

‘Do you have a boyfriend?’

Then he started talking to Kristen once more - about her young life- ‘This time it sounded about right, about how- he knew that I have a little seven- year old girl named- Riley and not really move on- her child, ‘she is my love in my life now, and he began to play with my words coming out of my mouth- so he flirts- yet it’s sweet.’

‘Until now- I sit down for some time yet, I have to work. Soft country music is not so quiet in the background, yet whatever.’ ‘Giggling laughter creasing my eardrums, and I feel my teeth slip somewhat out.’

‘So much for getting a date at this point.’ I thought.

The girl- ‘He hummed for a little while at first, then began a talk and talk and talk.’ ‘I just want to hear increasingly about her stories, progressively and more, it so different than the way I was raised, and my children were raised,’ I said- too Kristen.

‘I feel the Dr-rip, Dr-rip, of my coffee going down my chin, onto my shirt.’

‘SHIT...!’ I think looking at him, as- the girl.

“What wrong-’ Shanna said, looking all concerned about everything?’

“Just what a man wants, freaking hot coffee going down his crotch,’ said, Shanna- she was rolling her eyes, running past with hot pigs in a blanket.’

“It’s time to go home’-, my nurse, said impatiently? ‘Not-a yet’ I said, loudly and everyone looked at me- as if I was too old and cranky, I don’t know why, yet that’s life, also.’

~*~

12:00-sh

Lyncie- 'He started to run the numbers in his head of the cheek, as you could gather it is lunchtime, then stopped to think and slapped his money down.' 'He knew what it was going to be before there person at the cash register, 'like how you do that?' He said. 'It's-a something I picked up, back in the day, I-a, only have-a third-grade education- yet what does that say to you?' I thought.

'WOW!' Said the cashier. (Shocked looking face...)

John- 'I remember my first job oh so- o why back when I was your age you have it a lot better than I. Don't you mean- me? They said with one eyebrow up.'

'Kids today I think to myself, I knew all that way back-a, when- yet that's okay you learn what-a, you want to learn when you want to learn it. That was the way it was in my life too.'

"You make me feel dumb, that's not- the point'- I said, 'you have lots to learn... yet- missy, life will teach you that.' He pushed my hand into his saying- 'You'll do fine, look at me I did.'"

"Yet it's never- ever an enough is it' I asked? 'It can be, you have to find that one out on your own.' He said recklessly rushing to the door, being called.'

'Life is like a leave dying slowly on the trees- like all the maple leaf blowing in the breeze swirling around in the air and landing at my feet- with the street lights beginning to flicker on in a warm glow, you're never really going where you want to, no matter how long it's going to be before it is covered over or parts of it lost in the ground at your feet forever- like us- just dust in the wind, or like a headstone- with carved names and dates I can't read, that is all they remember you, me, us- them too far, this is what that gray thing will say, nothing I could or want to recite and that is little to nothing- really also.'

'The thoughts of joy leave me in that cold thought- of what's to come- passing, expiry, and death. In a way, I decided to enjoy the rest of my days and months of life, not thinking about the last breath that I will soon be taking, yet it pops up now and then, yet is that a good thing? Um- at this point in my life I am not sure about anything, but the end of it.'

'Without worrying- I look away out the window, seeing that I am being gestured too, It would work out for her too, he knew it in his mind almost feeling bad for her; it always did for him, he thought, yet it was not easy, it was very hard, like the love you got to make it work, he also thought rushing for home.'

'Besides, thinking about money usually bored me it's not about the money that makes you happy, he thought to move his feet two doors down, it's what others can do for you with that money- he knew all too well in that thought.'

Lesia- 'Early on, John learned to enjoy all the simple things that he loves at the café, like all the people, all his friends, and even family- things that could not be bought, and he had a challenging time understanding people who felt any different.' 'It was a little after five when he quit talking, and he settled back into his lazy boy chair and began to rock.'

'By happenstance, he looked upward and saw some leftovers in a go box from over at the café and said- 'I take it, over to the counter, to make room to start working on a puzzle, stars, spark-a-ling outside in the autumn sky.'

'Funny how a melody sounds like a memory.' Like rock music of the past.' 'He felt good and clean now, fresh- cleaning up for bed. His muscles were tired, and he knew he'd be a little sore tomorrow, but he was pleased that he had accomplished most of what he had wanted to do.'

(Weeks past and I am there seeing.)

Zoey- 'John is a calm man, no pets at this point in his life, he'll come up to them I have two on a leash like me he was to nuzzle up to them and will talk about anything really- just a nice guy, that gets me.'

'He talks with his hands a lot, and talk broken sometimes, to the point that I don't understand it, yet I get it.'

'Hey, girlie, how're you doing today?' He said this to me. He asked as he grabbed at my apron- I started working here, and she cackled aloud and said- 'I'm doing,' her soft round eyes peering upward at him who is much taller. She doesn't work nights like these always, yet I know some girls that do- like me after school.'

(The next day)

I- Zoey made him think of my wife- 'He was twenty- one, not too old not too young just right- oh I remember him saying think back 2 years back or so, but old enough to be all alone - with him- it was my consent, after all, there was nothing wrong with it... I thought- and mom and dad well did not care- about me regardless, and what I did- or with- I can say I was, and still am mixed up.'

'He hadn't dated since in my mind at all I have not been back here- since yah know- the end, I hadn't met anyone who remotely interested me- I was a lot like him too when he was my age.'

'It was his responsibility, he knew that I could see that, so could I.' She said.

Zoey- 'There was something that held in standby at distance between him and me, yet I want to know more, and any woman who started to get close doesn't want to pull away, even if not sure about doing crazy things that don't make any sense to the man or the ones that see her day in and day out, something he wasn't sure he could change; about himself- just dumb- I thought, yet I like that about him, and yet so smart- even if he tried not to be- with me to be friendly- I was like his girl.' 'Also, sometimes in the moments when right before, like- I fell asleep it's like I can see all along it was right- wondering all for nothing- he was going to be mine forever- I thought and, in a way, still is.'

'Like it was all meant to be- yet 'that's life' or so he always said.' John- I fear to feel my heartbreak a second time because I'm not sure I could survive it- just talking about him- I loved this man.'

'I would rather live alone than risk the pain of not having what it is I need that he gave me, I know that he is not with me any longer he was sitting next to her in the very spot 2 years back, and the last thing she said was- 'I love you on the bottom of a Polaroid and she falls forward chair, breaking down into tears.'

'I have been on my senses, like him who said he was since the 1980's- yet 'that's life.'

(Wahoo! With a holding in letting go- deep breathing.)

'Broken hearts heal... she said, maybe- and there is a little-cracked smile still, the wounds are always there, yet fade in time. she said in her young wisdom- like a lady. Like spitting cuts, like bloody knives healed within the heart.' She said.

'People lived and worked, get sick and die, we laughed and ate, and I cried- and that was about it. Like he did with his wife, in a way I took the place of the pain he felt I made him feel young, and me worth living on in this life.'

‘For there were many, scars we both share about our lives, I am returned to my old ways, yet I never really loved, even if I just playing around- it not the same with me.’ ‘Sometimes, you wind comes up, blown off your course, hell- I know, I was and so was he, we had so much in common. You’re not ready for it- I remember that too, but if you’re lucky, you end up in a more interesting place than you’d- a scheduled. ‘I recollect him saying that too did not get it at the time I do now.’”

‘You devote your life getting walked on, you learn to identify the footstep.’ He said that to me- I wrote it down.

(Back)

Kristen- ‘He smiled to himself. For some reason, and said that one above, a day before his passing.’ ‘He knew a lot of people yet maybe more in his mind than he lets on.’”

‘Most of his youth, it wasn’t surprising, yet not astonishing... Like so many towns, the people who lived here never changed, I think that it’s all just talk of a small town... minds- never change when minds are made up- and that it, I believe this story is false, and believe in it also as some school girls’ fantasies, tells of a simpleminded girl growing a bit older, and a little faded- as she sees too- like that pink dress she is always in.’

(Memorizing)

She said I evoke- ‘He gave me a quick, casual kiss on the cheek first. Then came the hugs, and it was the hugs that was it for me it was the first one I had in my life.’

They said- ‘she wasn’t exactly sure when it happened, yet she remembers all the events clearly.’

‘Or even when it started.’ The other waitress said.

‘All she knew for sure was that right here and now - made up at the time, she was falling hard for a life’s story, she was making up...’ They said.

‘I was feeling the same way about her loving it.’ She said, he said.

‘I feel myself having or wanting to go to the restroom, yet I don’t want to move.’ She said, ‘I might not be able to hold the pee in.’

'Maybe... all of this is not what I wanted to be remembered for, and maybe it is?' It was said.

'The evening passed, one after another after another, and yet once more, staying warm is hard to do around here, hard not to get cold.' She said.

'I listened to the crickets and the whizzing leaves, I hear the crash of footsteps of in the distances, seeing the amber post lamps flicker on- as I did with him 2 years ago, the sun has closed it the tired eye for the day,' I remember him saying that too.

He said to me- 'Explaining that the sound of nature was more genuine and stimulated more emotion than things like cars going past, look at how the cars have changed, what happens to them.'

'Look at all the natural things giving back to us, yet all we do is take away from it.' He said that... I have it here add to the scrapbook, he kept for all those years- and now it's mine to add to and keep- is it not? Even if they do not believe me it all here.

He said- 'There were times during the war, turn- turn and turn- there is a session too- especially after a major date of destruction when he had often thought about these simple sounds - he would never hear again.'

'It'll keep you from going nuts-o.' Is what I said, then and there...

'After sitting down again, he looked at the book, saying if I go take this and keep it always and ever. It was old, the cover was torn, and the pages were stained.'

'To reflect on the past, that is why I have to say that too.' 'Bottomless in her heart, she wasn't sure she earned to be blissful, nor did she believe, that she was or well-intentioned to be once more to someone who seemed not to get her it would be, so unusual.'

I remember when- 'John finished his coffee, went back out on the porch, and to hear all the sounds, found the book on the table, then he turned on the porch light on his way, back in to grab something else, like his jacket- I have it on now.'

I think of him saying- 'It's getting cold, he said to himself- there was nothing but eeriness. I rubbed the cover, and see some of the old crumpled photos fall to the ground, have to leave all around them as he talked about so much around this time 2 years back, see them I cannot get them... all would you help me here?' 'They're going to get wet...' She said.

'Yet, I find myself doing just that bending down- dusting them off just a little, and shoving them back in- I feel on edge, and want to be inside, and not scared- yet I am. I don't have a place to go but the bench outside the café- to stay tonight.'

I remember him losing his recollections on what was in the book- 'Then he let the book open randomly when he got up the next day and sat and looked through the photos feeling, that they were all new in front of him, yet it was less than 6 hours ago he saw them.'

'Once and only once, and a long time ago.' He said I remember seeing these...

'The place, the year, the date, showing him and his kids and wife- Then at that moment everything had changed for him forever- after the moment was gone after taking the still frame, he read on the back of the photo their names; I can read some... it not like I can- not- a.'

'Have you been in love more once, I- Zoey asked the question to him? Yet I did not seem to get it... when he said there was only one... Hum...?' I said.

'YOU!' He said, grabbing my little hand. 'In the end, folks should be judged by their actions, meanwhile, in the end, it was activities that define us all.' He said that- I wrote it all down here, for you to have- she said to- Marcel, who believed her stories- and he said- back to her- 'I will add this all in if you feel just.'

It was asked- what is- a "Perfect love- is there much of a thing?' I don't know at this point- she said to me, nevertheless- I think I have felt that... with this person, and this had been perfect.'

'Clouds overhead rain on my mind it slowly began to roll across my thoughts like the evening sky on a storm- ie day in the autumn, turning thoughts silvery- and blocking out everything with the reflection of my aging self- as it blows over.'

I stay in this apartment when they let me- thoughts and more feelings 'As they set my emotional states are rainy- like the days here, I leaned backward in his rocking chair and I think it's going to flip on me.'

‘My legs moved automatically to stop it, keeping a steady rhythm, and as he did most evenings, I remember, he felt his mind drifting back to a warm evening like this fourteen years ago. I was only 2 at the time- so-o... I would not remember.’

‘The town is not what you would call full, it’s seen better days, yet a good day could be coming, yet I will not see them- I don’t want to live... here.’

He said here in this one- ‘I enjoy the game of life its-a, all by chance, or is it?’

Living with the why- ‘That is a question that has no answer- or maybe its doses.’

‘It was a damp night to speak of all this and raining on me too- for some reason I remembered, that a day later- that maybe my life is not over its just beginning a new chapter.’ Zoey thought.

I reminiscence back to when- ‘He arrived alone at the cafe, and he strolled through the crowd, looking for just one friend, he saw me, he’d grown attached to, talking to this girl, he’d never seen before or maybe he did- it was me.’

‘She was pretty, smart, and fun... she remembered thinking, and when she finally joined him, she looked his way with a pair of misty bark eyes.’ “Hi,” she’d said shyly as she was taken by his charm and by his touch outwards to her hand, sweet man she thought.’

‘As a girl, she had come to believe in the ideal man or, so she said to me as I write the parts for the book, the prince or knight of her childhood stories like a fairytale-like Rapunzel. As a writer, I went with it.’

“In the real world, however, men like that simply did not exist’ - she elaborated, ‘or maybe they do?’

She all said wrinkling up her nose, along with saying-

‘If you can find them, them at all.’

‘The girl is sweet- and what I would call adorable, what I would have gone for back in my day, also... I thought when doing the interview.’

(‘The ordinary beginning of a young life, I thought, something that would have been forgotten to me for I felt like her at that age.’)

I could have never been anyone but her- his wife that is- she said in a moment of shame, I reminded him of her, and that why he loves me- not for me, for a memory, I feel I used him.’

(I just looked at her kind of dumbfounded, I nodded and smiled.) She said ‘He took her hand and kiss it so I knew it was not her- he know what he was doing- she said, when he met those striking brown eyes- with mine, he knew before he’d taken his next to his last breath, when I was there holding his hand that I was not her, I was the one he could spend the rest of his life looking for but never find again.’

He said to me- ‘She seemed that good, that faultless, while a summer wind blew through the trees, as she and I walked around and to his home always being nice. From there, it went like a tornado wind in my mind coming and going, that I was falling like the leaves blowing around us.’

They said- ‘Every morning but Sunday when he had to go to church this girl sits next to him - it was an old relationship, where she’d been waiting for him to just say hello, she is too lonely for at fourteen girl- too clingy, and far too voluptuous for her good.’

‘Because she was a newcomer and had not spent time in a small town before, new to a new school and not treated right- they spent their days doing things that were completely new to her and him just as friendship should be, that was like father-daughter.’ Said another woman- speaking up defending her- finally.

‘This is just what John need in his life at this point, a new spark to keep him going, she said also, she would take him to places and do all kinds of thing like reading him a books or long novels, so he can finally know all the things in books that he’d had always wanted to know.’

‘They walked together and watched summer thunderstorms, loved the springtime, by the fences- the strolled and sat it was not that far away for him, yet was it’s all coming to an end though, it seemed as though they’d always known each other- ways and thoughts too, even when the school days started for her, her mind was on him.’

‘They met up every day, and the day after that too, and they soon became inseparable to time- and age.’

‘He taught her how exploring all that is around and above, not even going that far, in the town either. It was a love that did not love- I do not know what to call it- yet, other than love... To people regardless of age and time.’ She added.

‘Change isn’t always for the best, though sometimes it is needed or has to happen and you can’t do anything about it,’ Zoey said.

He said- ‘But I learned things as well as she, in this town like a dance that never ends, never doing what it is you want to do- yet feel the need to do more and more.’

‘She wanted to learn how to do the waltz dance, so he taught her to do just that out on the sidewalk- believing she would never go to the dances, with a boy her age- she held that thought at the time.’ ‘Did they stumble through the first few songs young and old it just doesn’t work or does it?’ Others looked- others talked, to them, they were in their little world.

‘He walked her home afterward, and when they paused on the porch after saying goodnight, he kissed her for the first time and wondered why he had waited as long as he had.’ She thought back to the vivid moment.

‘He did realize it was not his first love.’ He knew she said- them and there.

‘To him it was her... the same thing happens in the old country all the time he thought- it’s all repeating to me, yet all-new for her- the sweet girl- that I am falling for.’

‘She was taken back by falling to his ways of never finding, that in a younger boy.’

12

‘They met the following day, and the day after that, and they soon became joined at the hip.’

‘They learned things together and felt awesome about it, he felt as if he was with his love, it was so wrong, for her- and even more for him, yet was so right all at the same time.’

‘I was as if it was a fall romance, just like being in the vineyards of Italy, walking down the winding pathways, lights in a yellow glow, it’s all the same to him, yet oh so new to her, yet as she said she felt as Gaetanina did- thinking back on how the most of looked at her.’

‘Sometimes, that name slips out and he calls me that- yet that’s okay.’ I had to say that at the time to keep going a little crazy.

‘I don’t care, I did care about him, I would play her to feel the love I need- to feel even if wrong.’ She said tearing up.

‘A true twist to an unbelievable start- of romance that was everything to them.’

‘Like hands going down her sides softly- like a voice caressing her ears with a sigh, a soft kiss on her lips and moving ever so slowly downward, feeling all the tingles within her lips and hips.’

‘I am not an overly sensual girl, up till now anyway- this makes me feel oh so good about myself, and I knew it wrong- I know it’s oh so-o wrong.’

She said to me- ‘I don’t care, she wants all of the town to know- even her dad did not get it- ‘I love him, daddy she said to him too- when he thought her out.’

‘On the other hand, he is not for you- he is too old.’ He said angrily.

She was dreaming- ‘I love the wetness of the water on the beach- I love the sand I feel in-between my toes, I love the feeling of sunbathing, on a golden day, yet I want to see you with me.’

“That is where I would love to be...” This did not stop them- from planning regardless of what they all said, just another fun day at play she thought, like warm sand on the bay, and having crashing waves, as the music would play for them to dance, it was love. He made her feel as if this would happen, yet he knew better- it was just talk- to make her feel loved.’

She said, “I-a, oh, its-a, not going to happen- I have lived all my days,” he said to her. She was saddened, by this for she had her whole life now planed it was only him she saw in her eyes of life. Yet it could not be.’

He said, and she felt that- ‘Age it’s just a number she said to- John- and about him to me. ‘Yes, but God can give or take,’ ‘I’m not going to last forever yet they went on.’” He said to her.

‘Love is like the waves on the sand, you can’t see them crash, and you can feel it moving through you.’ She said.

John- ‘Lacking grief, there’d be no empathy.’ He said, for me or us now would there?

‘I don’t get it...?’ She said then at that moment.

‘You’ll will when I am gone-’ He said. ‘I don’t want you to be.’ Zoey said back- ‘With pain and weakness in her young little sweet voices.’

‘I held her close to me with my eyes sealed, deliberating if something in my lifespan, had ever been this faultless and knowing at the same time, that it hadn’t ever be en so divine.’ That is what he did.

‘I was in love, and the feelings, that I had are what I need to feel the most, could it be any more wonderful, washing the day would never- ever end, more than I ever imagined it could be if they didn’t?’

‘That is the question that has to know the answer to me as of now. The end- that is...’

‘But she learned things as well, and she was learning from him- with his wisdom, that he was passing down to her.’

She conjured the thoughts back in her mind about how-

‘We would eat at the café day in and day out, and then go to something like a dance or something like that on the weekends- he never thought he could be I made him feel young and he did it for me, it’s everything, I ever want a boy- MAN to do with me, even go to the pool and see me take a dive.

It’s not in a creepy way- said the girl, it was just a friendship at this point, or was it, said another speaking up, over top her. I was the one that wanted him there, for he was my only friend in this town- even now you mean girls can’t stand that can you?’

‘Some night we just stumbled through the leaves seeing all that is to see, the town is lovely, yet some of the people as you can see and hear are not, yet as he would say- ‘that’s- a life.’ She said.

‘I never wanted anything more than to say that you were mine, now and forever.’ She said.

‘I want to say- that we did more than just sleep together- I want to say that. When we needed someone to be there, you are more than a friend to me- I wanted to say that too and I just did.’

I said this to him- 'You are someone, that I understand, someone that sees me for whom I am, I never had that with anyone else. 'I think- I love you!''

'Hey, I am not saying the love wasn't good, but I feel that this is not right you need to leave, me before it comes to trouble with me, and you, and them too- you see- do you see, this cannot-a be- it just cannot-a.' He said.

'What is this like the 10th time we did it, and I bent you over.' I love it and remember the O's.

'I love the scars on my back that you made, I love when you ride me like you do 'la-la-love me as you do, touch me as you do, what are you waiting for''

'I love the sound you make, as you sigh... you are the best thing that ever happened to me.' He said, she felt also.

'But is it going to be me or him? ...Forever and, always is it?'

'If you want me you need to stop letting him put his d*ck in you, he knew that I was seeing another boy.' Yet it was the time I thought that I would see what could be with another... I don't know what I want.'

'Oh, and like you have not been with others than me,' she said.

'I don't want to have to lick up what was his leftovers.

Why, is it wrong for me, you have had other lovers have you not?' She said, sticking up for her rights to do with her body as she felt just.

'I have only sucked one other boy than you, it's not like I have been with all that many guys.'

"But I only wanted you to be with me.' He said, and she said back- 'yet it not going to last forever now is it?'"

'Yeah, well it doesn't work that way... a girl has to shop around for what she wants.' She said to me, in her interview, of me adding to the story.

'To they finally go with some like you.' She said that next- winking at me, all flirty.

She asked- 'Then why do you even like me... is it only for the sex or what?' I said know I have gotten to know you, that is why, and I don't judge- for being human- you live and learn, I said.

"No, I love your eyes'- she said to me, I love your hair, I love the taste of you- and I did not know I was starving 'till I tasted you, I love your small- I love you, for more than just the sex. What do you say, little boy- you and I being together?'

'Yeah right, I know what you want!' I said back,

'I see you too.'

'But more than anything else... I love your heart.' I said.

She said to me- 'a big heart- I love the way it sounds as I lay my head on your chest during a movie; the rhythm becoming irregular- when I am next to you.'

'I don't want to be with you just for the fooling around. It is much more than that! I want you; I love who you are...' She said to me.

"So, what am I to you?" I asked, "Why do you want me over any other girl?" "Hum... if you have to ask then you never really know... and if you know then you need not ask." I said.

~*~

...Speaking, imprisoned:

'We are entombed, trapped like rats in a trap!'

'Everywhere I go I have no privacy, I have no satisfaction over dating him, I can't get it... it's not something I can have.'

'My phone is hacked, and my PC hacked too.'

'I am being watched right now; I just feel that I am- over him.'

'They know everything I do, everywhere I go- as they do with him.'

'They see who, I am friends with and end it just because they can- just like with him.'

'Yet we have each other and that all them matters more them reputations.'

‘They because of us, sits me up just to fall into their trap. I’ve used the fake name, it is all the same, I am there a toy in their sick twisted game.’

‘At what a point do you say- I’ve had enough?’ Stop it- ‘get a life!’

‘Friend comes and goes; I know that nothing can last more than a week with me; it has been like this all my life.’ She said, and I said too.

‘You just get attached, and they put an end to it so fast... you would not believe me- nobody does.’

‘Why- I don’t know maybe it because they must have me for her own- tormenter or something, and they can’t see me having a love of another that is not what they say I should have?’

‘I don’t know... all I know is that everyone leaves me before, I want them too.’

‘But like I have a choice. No, not really. If you want me, we need to...’

‘Run... and never look back, we go far from here where it won’t matter, will be gone so far away, that the names they say, won’t mean a thing because, we will have each other, and not care what others say.’

‘Are happiness would lie in each- other’s arms, and the rings on your finger.’

‘I don’t want to trap you, but you need to say- yes to me, so this can happen! The sooner the better!’

‘You’re caught by an overprotective and malicious ex-girlfriend, who now hates you.’ She said... ‘and them too and their talk.’

‘Who makes you work like a fool...?’

The ex-said- ‘The jerk won’t even buy you a ring after so many years of dating.

‘Yet she trapped you!’

‘You think he loves you?’ She asked saying- it as if he was still hers or something. Or is she just trapping you until she finds something more to settle too?’ The ex-said.

‘You’re longing by your town. You are craving because you like me but can’t.’ He said. ‘You’re trapped because, of what they all say about me and you. All that matters to me is what you think and can think for yourself- as you do.’

‘You’re longing for them and they make sure, that you’re not even allowed to look at another man like me.’

‘Plus, it all goes back to the mean girls in this town, the ones that, trapped us both in not being in love- yet not allowed to love it’s a forbidden to me - you- and us.’

‘Forbidden to dating, see, look, feel, or even talk to one another- or it could end in jail time- yet ‘A-Okay’ for any other.’

‘Longing into missing out, longing into being the weirdo.’

She said, ‘an outcast...’

‘Longing into not knowing what you would feel like, in a hug or kisses too.’

‘Longing into being hated for no reason by others by their rumors.’

‘Longing into missing you.’ He thought.

‘You’re stuck into wishing for me and dreaming of what could be. Yet your friends love them and not me, with me all they see in the past that is not true, the past that I was trapped into.’

‘I am stuck with you in so many ways, that you never even knew about.’

‘Ensnared because, I have fallen in love with you, and can’t seem to forget about you.’

‘You’re on my mind all the time.’

‘No blocks can stop us from someday getting together.’

‘That is only if you get out of the trap of allowing everyone to push you around.’

‘You have to be strong and fight.’

‘I am ensnared into fighting for your hand, and your love, and I just don’t know why I keep deceiving myself to you.’

'I just don't understand why- I can't get you out of my mind.'

'I know one thing, I never ensnared you like everyone seems to do around here, I am not like that.'

'If you want me fine, and if not fine. I am involuntary forced into being a hopeless romantic...'

'I have to get out.'

'I don't care what my mind says is logical, what my heart says it needs!'

'There's been rumored of an uprising free of all the restrictions of the world within me.'

'I'm done caring about the consequences; it's time to be selfish and do something for me.'

'The longing of you I can't take it anymore.'

'The passion- I have for you has my skin on fire! I cannot sleep, I cannot eat, and I can function right. Without you being in my life.'

'It seems like you and I are trapped into having chastity belts, with no way to unlock them and connect.'

'You have the key, and your mine.'

'I am confined in the fantasy of us sleeping together playing in my head.'

'Captivated into wanting more than one-night stands with you. Like that even possible.'

'You're enslaved into making them happy, while on the inside you're miserable.'

'Stuck!'

'I am without you next to me now.'

'I want to feel your kiss; I want to feel your body spooning or unstop of mine.' 'I want to go out with you, and not have everyone stop it.'

'I want to go everywhere with you.'

I. 'I want you to live with me, you have a home here if you can get out of your trap- and so can

'I want you to share my bedroom... I know it's crazy- I want to go crazy with you!'

'But- I want you to be my girl.'

'You have spellbound me in the spell of your dark eyes, and shy little sensual ways.'

'Instead of losing my mind to you, I was hoping it would have been something else. She said, what if that was all just stories- what if... what if he was just a friend- in the end, and you're all that mattered?'

'I don't care when as long as it's soon, I don't care how as long as it happens, I don't care who sees us, it could be in a car in a local store parking lot.'

(In the woods, of sneaking around.)

'It's all the same to me along as I am with you!' 'Do me this favor and take it from me. I don't want to be thirty when I get married either, I want it now as I want you now.'

She said...

'As long as you're the one, I want you to be the first in everything, you shouldn't feel caught up by him to feel love like that. I am not sure if I'll be your first, but I want to be the last.'

'You should be feeling the love from me.'

'The love I can give and take with you. It's love, I have for you... not entrapment.'

'Really, I don't think- I am being selfish it is just time- for this, all this all happens to me.' She said...

'I have waited for far too long now!'

'Self-seeking I just need you, to save me!'

She is- 'Bounded into taking care of everyone else, while nobody takes care of her.' She said.

'Fixed into a setting at home and going out to get away.' She feels.

‘Wedged into using others money, because they won’t let her work in her hometown, I have everything I need, but not what I want.’ She said.

‘Caught into doing work, and not getting paid. Trapped for life, and afraid!’ She whispered.

‘Jammed into my faith, yet to me, that is a good thing.’

‘Hopeful that there is a life after death if not then life is not worth living is it.’ She alleged.

‘Surrounded by them into fear of death, trapped into seeing death all around me.’ She whispered.

‘Chosen into being around life, that just doesn’t get it.’ More of her thoughts spoken.

‘Trapped into feeling cold.’

‘Entombed into being warm to those that are cold.’

‘Permanent into seeing the small light, in the never-ending darkness. ‘Squeezed into never-ever giving up.’

~*~

(Longing and Desire)

‘I am longing to see you.’

‘Longing to be with you, longing to hear from you.’

‘I am longing for you.’

‘A longing like desire, I am desiring what I am longing for, and desiring is what trapping me to you right now.’ ‘Longing and desire, that I have for you are pushing you away from them, and - also me.’

‘Like a dark storm over your head. You have longed for me, but can it be, but will you and I be more than longing and desire?’

‘Will we be always being trapped in too long and desire, by the ones that long and desire to keep us apart?’

‘I am longing and desiring your kiss on my lips!’

‘I am longing for your desiring hug with my hand right above your hips.’

‘Letting go of the past, with its dark toxic memories seeing them slip and ripe from our grip and fade away, for a brighter happier day, all I can do is pray for the both of us. You and I, being together is necessary!

13

‘Do you love me, he asked then she was like it was not something they could say- more what I feel- you understand.’

‘She smiled, he nodded.’

‘Yes, in a peculiar way...’

‘I am getting too old for this- he said.

Do I make you happy?’ He said.

‘As I asked her this, I felt my heart beginning to race, for him yet I don’t know if it was racing back for me or the other girl oh so long ago.’ She thought.

‘Yet, I did not care- and I don’t get why at all- with what I do.’

‘Of course, I do you, I am a girl- she said, yet not this one...’

‘I knew what she meant by that?’

‘You’ll see when I am gone.’ I wonder what she meant by that one...

(A week passed, and she killed herself over bullying in her small hometown.)

‘I don’t want you to be ever- ever the blame.’

‘Well- it doesn’t work that way,’ I said not understanding.

‘She looked away, sadness crossing the features of her face, hoping that day would never - ever come- that we would not be allowed to be together- yet it happened.’

“I do not know if I can anymore.’ She said.’

‘I don’t know if we should be doing this- he said her name, I feel hand-me-down, but don’t want to give up- on you.’

(I should not have said that looking back.)

‘Why don’t you want me for me? She said- ‘it’s me and this town was in dragging us down.’

“Yes,’ she finally said, her voice weak yet somehow still full of capacity.’

‘I would do this...’

‘Lastly getting control of myself I kissed her again, then brought her hand to her face, and moderately running my fingers over her cheek and through her long brown hair.’

‘Looking into those sparkly brown eyes, that glitter in the moonlight.’

‘She marveled at the softness of her skin and how she closed her eyes, he was her age - and his mind if anything, the tenderness was within her eyes, yet was it all there... or was she fading away then?’

‘Even now she was perfect, and he was too, for her, it was just the age - and the town saying not so-o. My throat began to tighten long for it, but as I said, I knew what I had to do.’

‘It was that moment that time, it was all right, the sense I had to accept, that it was not within my power to cure him of the phase in my mind it was not there, what I wanted to do was give him something that he wanted, and never got, as a girl, he was looking at me do things differently - then other girls in this town - I knew.’

‘I can adequately except it and describe the intensity of what I was feeling - at that instant.’
‘Love, ire, wretchedness, faith, and horror whirling together sharpened by the tension - I was feeling. Yet was all good to release it all.’

‘I Zoey looked at myself curiously and my breaths became shallower. He calls me out by my name, and it was everything to me.’

‘Suddenly, I knew that I’d never felt as strongly for another person as I did at that moment - not- even before.’

‘As I reimbursed her stare, this simple understand and made me desire for more, the time, that I could make all this go away, and have more of this- is it even possible or likely?’

‘I would have traded my life, for his or like give up some of my days just to have the same amount of day together- over.’ She said that then it all here in the scrapbook.

‘I wanted to tell her my thoughts, about that sweetness she had, but stop- no I would not have- yet, I hold back on it, and let it all go, for me and her- should I have said my thoughts that, I would never say now?’

‘I kissed her hand it’s just, what I do, but the sound of her voice suddenly silenced the emotions inside me, to come out with it- and it was the- I love you, she was yearning to hear.’

‘Encouraged, I leaned closer and took a deep breath and left it all out. When I breathe out softly, these were the words that poured out so-o- with my breath.’

‘Will you marry me?’

‘He asks- it was like it was before- yet in a new why she wanted this.’ ‘She said- ‘Maybe...?’ ...And left it at that, she was grinning from ear to ear, next to him, they stayed.’

‘I smiled softly, and she returned my regard with a slight cuddle of my hand as if unquestioning me in what I was about to do.’

‘It was what my heart had been telling me to do all along, it was all right- she thought- yet demons were playing in her logic.’

~*~

(Thought)

‘I assumed then, already set in the answer, I’d been searching for, is here with me now - the answer my heart needed to find, is right here, the night I asked him about doing the playful things, that boyfriend- girlfriends do, my age- and we did- yet my mind was made up of them- and what they say.’

14

‘She makes me feel amazing, she more than just a little girl to me- I-a, don’t have many words for her- just my sweetheart.’ That is what I said here... ‘He walked her home afterward, and when they paused on the porch after saying goodnight, he kissed her with more lust, of what she wanted and wondered why he had waited as long as he had to do it that way- for her to understand this was real.'

~*~

'That is when I found her- irresistible.'

~*~

(The Girl 2)

Zoey- 'I am now 17 years old I have changed a lot from when I was 15, I have brown eyes and brown hair, I am five nothing, and I am a bit confusing to everyone. I am in love with a girl! The most beautiful girl in the world! Her name is Zoey Shay, she is everything I want!'

'Yes, I admit it I am in love with her! I have crush on her for as long as I could remember, yet I never said anything to her, I didn't want her to be freaked out by me feeling that way about her, yet I can't hold back any longer- about a girl named Anna- I kissed her lips and ask her out, way too fast I know, but will she say- yes, if she would she be into me- to go all the way- and deep.'

'Would they be okay with dating a girl? Why would they not that my only option at this point- is it not.'

'No, they could not let this be either.'

Even so, she kept pressing on- with her new crush- regardless of what they said. 'I never- ever thought I would be this way, I never- ever thought about going all the way with a girl, nevertheless, I feel the need to make it clear to everyone that she is what I want.'

'You know you're in love when you can't fall asleep because the reality of them there is finally better than your dreams.' 'I have sex dreams about her every night! With her fingering me.'

'And kissing my nipples, and licking me down there, yet the dreams are amazing! I want the real thing and I am going to get it too; I would go crazy if I did not.'

'Have you ever been in love with a girl?'

'I could taste that wet in the pink tunnel of heaven in my mind! Mm-Hum: I could feel that the middle finger of her going deep inside of me as mine does. It's like it was not a dream, at all.'

‘So, I walked up to her in the hallway today and I asked her out, and to my surprise, she said yes, yes- ‘I would love to go on a date with you.’ ‘You’re so sweet, why I wouldn’t I want to.’ She said, and she said too.’

‘I never thought about being in a gay relationship, but I’ll try anything once. I find girls attentive, what’s not to like; just look at you.’ She said, and she felt that way too.

‘You have it all, smooth skin, nice boobs, and an adorable laugh.’ All good thing she thought too.

‘I could see us being more than just friends, and that is when it happens, she French kissed me in front of everyone in the hall, it was like fireworks went off, everyone was cheering for on.’

(Little did I know that it was all- just them making fun of me.)

‘She had her hands on my butt as I had mine on her chest.’

‘The first kiss was... perfect!’

She said: ‘So, honey now take me into your loving arms.’

‘Kiss me under the light of a thousand stars tonight.’

‘I’ll say I’ll kiss you in the rain, so you get twice as wet.’

‘I can’t wait to play with you under your underwear- at your locker.’

‘I want to lose myself between your legs, in my bed, in your bed, outside I don’t care- everywhere.’

‘I want to watch as you lick your fingers after you have gone down on me, and you have been down inside me.’

‘Let’s freak and cuddle, and pound our little ladies together do it, repeatedly, sharing the realistic one that we need to have this happen- she then I- then she and over.’

‘I want to hear you say you want to taste me!’

‘I want to make it with you in public, and in my room too.’

She said to me- and they did, for them all to see, and make fun of.

'I have sex with you a lot in my mind... does that freak you out.' Anna said to her.

'Nope not at all, Zoey said sheepishly.'

'It turns me on!' Anna said, 'that your so naïve it sweet she said tapping her on the nose.'

'Face down ass up, or legs up in the air... I would 'I want her to spank me, I want to be her naughty girl.' She said to here in a way that was older than her years.

'I want to eat it out and never stop!' Said Anna.

'In a way rubbing one out is a form of stress relief, it calmed me doing it study hall class thinking about her, I was going to sit behind her- and let her know I was even, so I was looking forward to that- moment all day, I don't think I can hide this smile on my face- it was time, all the other girls know- too they can see me- what I just did- it was obvious.'

'My clitoris is still so-o sanative, as I ask to go to the bathroom, from the lunchroom where they have study hall- to clean up some. I think even my teacher knew that I was just doing, and he was smiling at me too.'

'Zoey, Zoey, Zoey!' She said breaking the quiet role, 'I'd love yeah either way.'

Anna- yelled and her girlfriends giggled.

Read this simplemindedness, Anna said- 'I want her to come in my mouth, over and over and over. I want her to kiss me all over and suck me down and play with it.' Said Zoey in a note that would last the test of time.

She also said the following- 'Please rip off my clothes now and let's do it here in school, and that is what we did we went into the girl's bathroom and had girl sex for the first time.' Said Anna, it was all part of the plan for us girls that could not stand her, she needs to- 'gotten rid of'- she said.

'It was the best pleasure- that I have ever had in my life.' Said Zoey- here in her little sweet book that knows gives a care about, and Anna throws it- a- crossed the room.

She even said that she- 'loved fingering freaking me in a public place, with all the girls walking in to see us doing it.' Awe- no? she said with a mean streak.

‘It’s the hornet truth she has it all in there about us, I have ever been with her like this- that my story and prove that it’s not, I think she felt the same way- about every girl with an ass- or and a boy who squirted all over her face.’

Zoey said to Anna, ‘I would do whatever you tell me to do.’

‘I want you to kill yourself!’ Said Anna...

(And that night she did- with a by drowning in the Hastings pool, at night- her pastime place is where she was happy to end her life.)

Anna- I remember her saying to me- ‘Hey- do you want to go with me to the movies this Friday coming up?’ I said yes, I can say I did not learn to like the girl.

‘We don’t have to look at the movie we can make out, it is dark in there. I would love too- I said with excitement.’ I- Anna remember it all.

There they both are- ‘At the movie, the lights went dark, it was the scary part, I was drawn to the screen, but then she moved her whole body into mine, and she surprised me in a way that you would not believe.’

Zoey- ‘I think, I love you!’ Said Anna ‘I want you to show me how much you love me! (That was the night before...) What do you say will you show me!’ She said like a baby- this one was- like a dumb baby.

I- said this to her- ‘Open up to me, and I’ll open up for you in so many ways, I will blow your mind!’ ‘After loving and losing I became gay and found love - with her and I do feel bad...’ ...And she snickered out loud- saying- ‘yeah right,’ that all that matters- here she dead- not the love, after all, that’s a life- see her- end.’

I recall- ‘Skirt pushed up and hand and fingers feeling everything she wanted me to feel like it is going to her soul or more.’ Said Anna, she believes in a God, and a soul too- cute- shows the simple not?

‘She did want to be here anyways- or in school, she was not that bright after all. I knew more than she ever thought- the town feels the same- you can fix simplemindedness.’ Said Anna.

‘We- spent hours together talking about our dreams- I could have cared less to hear them, yet I had a job to do... about the old pervert and then that creepy- creep creeper of a boy, and seeing the world, her wanting to be so- so illustrator-ie- for fun- talking about him- the old man being the chief of damp night spot back in the day, when she lost her virginity to creepo, it was all the same as back in 1940- she said- and I was like are you on drugs, its 2016 girl gets real- all you need to care about is what is underneath your skirt.’ Anna- said as an 18-year-old, ‘I can’t write, I don’t know how to- you do it if you think you can,’ she was mocking me...

She said about her man- this and her man that- that she would- ‘Like a kiss in the rain that you would never- ever forget the first time, and it was a kiss in the rain, long and lasting forever- that say with you forever.’ Sardonic she read this, having a hard time doing it also.

She goes one reading like a 5-year-old- ‘It wasn’t that long the most painful thing about life, it was a perfect feeling of having it, and it certainly wasn’t the kind of kiss you see in movies these days, but it was delightful in its way- taking the pain of life away, and all I can evoke about the twinkling stars and in my eyes, is that when our lips touched, I knew the reminiscence would last forever, and be added to the scrapbook but in color- by me to last forevermore, like before in his- and his and in mine, along with her too.’

‘Fah and here it is people, laying on the floor...’ she runs over to it jumping up and down on it to define it in any way she could- even spitting on the loose pages- like the twisted little pig she was.

‘The memories were gone; love gone by one that would never feel love - NEVER- EVER- EVER- NEVER!’

~*~

‘I don’t feel that this is okay to do- It pains me too much anyways- to keep looking, and she loved me more than life.’

(Or did you just want to think that- over the fact, you want to think that, and it made you feel happy?)

‘He got up and walked to the front of the café and looked up the road- saying I will make my exit now- taking the book with me if you don’t mind.’

‘She was walking after him- saying that belongs to me, insight flashing her fingers, he wouldn’t be stopping, she ran up to meet him, yet she ran with her hitting his arm, almost knocking them over, yet he did not stop.’

‘He pulled a knife and said I’ll stab your face off! For killing a girl that was more of an asset to this town then you’ll ever be.’ She backs down, he gets jail time, and she walks away from a free person.

The cops one his tell now- he walks to her dads' home- ‘They fall together- the dad falls in the rocker- that was given to them, and it all starts again- all the pain of life.’ He is taken away in handcuffs, and Anna is standing there dumbly looking at me with a misgives smile on her face - if I got away with all of this...

Sitting in the squad car- I look at the pages all tattered parts that are reverbing- ‘Say- I am everything- ‘You’re- everything to me.’

I read- I don’t think that we’re meant to understand it all the time, I don’t want anything bad to happen- and they do they are to blame, I’d think that sometimes we just have to have faith, and go with it, and hope for the best, yet I don’t care, I am on my way to seeing the light.’

‘What the- HELL...!’

‘I was thinking... SHE KNEW ALL

ALONG SHE WAS GOING TO DIE.’

‘So, that is the ghost you been running from, it like she was looking at me doing this, yet she not there. Everything it all was in black and white like the photos of the past’

‘Haunting feeling of doing the wrong thing for the right wrong came over me, and I was no longer the bad guy.

After getting a mugshot and fingerprinted, and a trip to district judge’s, I was free to go.

‘I sat on the porch that night I was reading the draft of this story- a story of the past, as people who are really no one, can become somebody to someone in this world, photos- of happy times, sad times, lasting- yet them not so-o, listening quietly as he played the music of her childhood, I read- saying this we do-

‘know wonder the kid today is like- so-o messed up,’ he said, ‘maybe something here well snick in.’

‘They’re all were crazy, stupid, in love falling somewhat apart and somewhat together- or trying to forget something or someone.’

‘All trying- to forget, the pain of living in a small town with its charm- that come with it.’

‘Everywhere he looked, he saw her face and sexy body, saw things that brought her back to life within the pages of a story that would stand the test of time more than some mean girls hate, it was she was standing right there as the wind blow- he felt her- spirit.’

‘It was odd, he knew that- yet he could feel it.’

‘Previously that evening he had sat on the porch a hundred times it never felt that way or so, it seemed to him being apart, he sat alone on the porch swing of her parents’ home, one leg crossed beneath was the leaves blowing- that she loved so-o, and showing all that is here once more- all that-a is life- to him and her- like blowing leaves in the autumn.’

‘The branches ensured naked now- and could the swing is slightly moist when he sat down; rain had fallen previously to that moment, unstable and cruel, but the clouds were dying now and he looked past them, toward the stars coming out above, that was picking through, wondering if he would have made the right choice- by giving this book out to the world, to get it- or not- some time is life too, and look for someone new of his own age- would be right also, to move on.’

‘I as the writer would struggle with this for days- and I struggled some more in the evening- thinking about death far too much, but in the end, she knew she would never forgive herself or not be true to her self or me, and even then, if she let the occasion blunder come her way- she would find a path that seemed right- even if ending too soon- she is now right for some that are going down the wrong pathway- lasting endlessly, in their minds.’

15

I- ‘Today, I begin to understand what love must be if it exists... in this dying world, have changed, and got bitter to live.’

‘When we are parted, we each felt the lack of love- together not so much- life makes you bitter.’ ‘We are incomplete like a scrapbook in two volumes- that should have never been published before reading clearly- of which the first has been lost, or ripped apart, or has imagined love to be wrong to most that would look: incomplete with no non- appearance of the truth that is lying within- that gives salvation.’

‘10 years- where they go- 10 years, I don’t know?’

‘It was an easy drive to- Hastings, slightly more than four hours ago, and I arrived a little before noon.’

‘I checkered into a small Inn downtown, went to my room in a place not far away- from where it all happened, and undone my bags and got into bed like always, hanging my things in the closet- they give, I look at myself- saying you have changed- in the glass, I needed to do before falling asleep, alone yet, I was with her in my mind- after all this time still, and it felt as if her hand and thoughts, were in his mind still.’

‘Putting everything else away for the day, all he wanted was to feel all that- he could not sleep- think about her- and where she might be.’

‘The next moment he was lost- in a dream, he had a quick lunch- after waking late, sitting all alone in that same cafe, asked the waitress for directions to the nearest antique store - he wanted to find something his beloved wanted a long time ago, he spent hours shopping and looking for it, yet nothing he got made him happy, it was not for anyone to see- it was for him and her to keep near- it was the typewriter that made the story and him wealthy- that he sold off the published their story to the world- and there it was missing parts- yet all there- for the most part- he was delighted.’

‘He was going... the next day- the real reason he left the following morning- as he did not want to remember any more of this town- even if lovely- it was just too much for him to grasp.’

~*~

(Did it break his heart?)

‘It’s just a couple of days before the end,’ he said, of me letting go- ‘I need a break from planning my life, even if it has gone places that I have never dreamed of... if we can of had one night together- maybe I would not be where I am at today- and for that- you have helped me.’

‘Thank you!’ He said under his breath. ‘He felt bad about the untruth- within his story- but knew there was no way he could tell them the certainty of how he felt deep in the inside - of the truth.’

I remember her saying to me- ‘My daddy used to tell me that the first time you fall in love, it changes your life incessantly, and no matter how hard you try, the feeling’ never fades.’

He mummer here, say so wise for her age- ‘You have been telling me about your first love, I didn’t see it then- I do now, and what can I do that-a life no?’

‘And no matter what I do, she sits in here nothing but looks in my mind of her faces, and photo to keep crying her eyes out about life and pain- joy and hate alike, she’ll stay with you forever- like she did with me and never let go.’

‘I see me looking over photos more and more from the Ebensburg fair her holding a tabby bear, she was lost in the trances, like in that small café’, the small park across the way the children’s carousel at the fair, all the chestnut trees, quarters going in the wishing well, so they could have more days together.’

‘I’ll be seeing you... someday... if I-a goes to see you soon. I thought that all the money in this world cannot make you happy- I would give it all to have you back.’

~*~

(Haunting voices)

I recollect- ‘She said it out- crying in twisted pain, dad looking in worry- she lost it... over this fall romances, with this girl and I want justice.’

‘That was the end, she never saw another day, after making the scrapbook of memories - a page on the internet, all the ingredients of life- was complete- perfect, yes-? ...Perfect for love- passionate like hate, nevertheless- ‘that’s-a life... No?’

‘That is when I found her- Zoey... down deep

14 feet below- in the same pink dress as always.’

‘The 17 years old girl, with dark eyes and brown hair, that was five nothing, and unclear to everyone that miss- understood her. The most beautiful girl in the world!’

'Her name is Zoey Shay, she is everything

Hasting's well remembered for! Yes, I admit it, I am in love with her still!

"You know you're in love when you can't fall asleep because the reality is finally better than your dreams."

'And so-o with that said my story here comes to a close... after loving and losing, I found love and have a loss, find what matters in life, after all, is what living is all about, 'that's a life- no?'

Zoey- well you will always be remembered!

16

(The thoughts end)

'Isn't it obvious?' She shakes her head and pulls me toward the door. Back into the castle, where I just stay put, refusing to budge, thinking about death. Nothing is obvious... about life-ending too fast. Nothing makes sense anymore, to me.

She pauses, hand on the knob of the next door into a large sitting room, more than a little hurt when she says, 'I thought it was a satisfactory solution, for now, to cast the memories away into a crystal ball- and that was where I was heading, with Naddalin. But perhaps you'd prefer I not touch you at all, right now?'

That's not what I intended!

Not at all! I good- I need you here... said Nevaeh.

The next night it's a repeat of the last...

...That night- It was raining heavily. Heavy droplets pounded against the windowpane as the murky clouds obscured her view some yet not all. Now walking back for the walls of bones, looking up I see kids look ever so small from the top tower, looking down at me.

I remember what I have done, they are here over me caring about them now, standing out looking you can see the clouds, above that platform of the huge of 25 stories- French chateau castle turret there is a lighthouse above the biggest part of the hall rooms underneath, and the light above has a somewhat rhythmic flashes of white, the castle sets high up in the air, on a rock that looks twisted like driftwood, littered with trees- that glimmer at night as if enchanted with twinkling lights within the branches and leaves, along with a copy truss bridge, over the waves.

Nevaeh remembered as a child paying on, that has the railway that rooms through the castle, and around its base. There is a 180 degrees panorama view within the bathing room along with the parlor, as described with large arched windows.

A twisting pathway- that comes from the marina, that is made of-of a long stone bridge with 14 archways, atop that tutor and Victorian-style building, that docks many sailboats, many windows, many stones, over 270 feet in the air is the tallest tower. Soft lights glow on the bride, and also down the pathway; 19 towers with pointed gold-covered turrets.

The train comes in with a fogged glow around the puffs of steam, letting out more girls, to the school end of the castle, hard splashing waves, hit the rock faces, 3 to every minute, flying houses soring around the tops of roof pecks. A slight Lilac haze over all the waters and skies.

The railroad wraps around then underneath the castle, itself falling about 30 feet within the cover, into a long dark tunnel, next to a waterfall, full of otherworldly animals inside, then exits to the tallest viaduct know to our world, hundreds of feet in the air, and it rocks side to side in the wind as the train goes over, the line is known as 'Tracks in the Sky.'

17

That night more thoughts come back to me, things that I have not thought about in years, rip through my mind. My brain goes back to when I was at school, made to go to the auditorium. I was a little girl when I was brought forth in front of the whole student body of thousand boys and girls of middle school grades, this day- I was made to were my panties just so they could be removed along with my lower skirt, as I was hunched over with my butt to them all- as they giggled at me- for being me, to be made a spectacle as always for my teachers to paddle me - one by one all 100 of them took a hit, for deep down- they said to me, I knew I need to be pushed and have my ass red as it could be.

('The bad girl...')

Only my top part of my uniform stayed on for what was an hour of mucking me. The paddle even snapped, where I would not have a case, over being the towns delayed held back in progress of, development, or accomplishment child. The courthouse to make a case giggled in my face for even thinking of trying over I can't think at all, for being classed a braindead.

'That's not what I intended!'

Were the words that brought this back to mind. Then- I remembered something that I lost to time, of them molesting my mind, the love a boy had for me regardless. He was the boy love of my life, I wonder what happened to me, I wound why. I wonder too much... of the question of why - of this and that. 'Baking hearts and minds,' is not what I intended, it was all over my mind lost to the time of remembrances, and now- I have to rewind the hands of time to remember in flashbacks.

It is said to me now even his name has lost all meaning to me now, to time. I try to even remember me at times, and those fads away like a death in a moment of time of loss, snack in the cold of the night, is a death like a memory.

I remember when Jaylnn was sent to the outdoor juvenal jail camps just for girls of her kind- um of kind just like me, nothing I could do, yet she blames me still to this day, like me, sent away from me over they wanted to hurt me more, over I was not a fit parent, for being part of the town I never left, sent to work camps, they said she was a copy of me and the apple doesn't rot far from the tree. That is why when she came back so embarrassed by more mucking, she took her life, and yet again to hurt me. I should have left her to be a high school dropout.

Her bones lay here too, within this long wall. She never had any more than a pre-K education, that all they said her teachers and district that she could handle. I should have never let her stay in my home town with me... I should have taken her out of school too. I should of, I could of... and the maybe of... and if... hunts me. Odd, like- I could not save her from herself, yet that is the way she wanted it.

To have a child that was so gorgeous, so sexy, so amazingly awesome- and to not be able to touch her- is the worst kind of agony, I have in this world. Fantasizing about the past- I come down with the feelings of a cold when we both know we don't get sick of reality, it's not likely, and other ridiculous avoidance techniques that left me feeling deeply ashamed, of how I feel. It's been torture, pure and simple, my health shows my life.

To have only one left in my life of life's, that is just the same, sometimes- I feel undeserving- for everything Naddalin has done for me, even today I call it being blessed. I whisper, the second we're alone again, how much I love her she's also my best friend more than anything. 'My always and forever.'

'I mean, I know we can't risk any accidental palm sweat exchange or anything like that, but still, don't you think it looks kind of odd?'

The hunted angel ghost of Jaylynn is next to me now as I set in my chair; 'I don't care about that anymore she said to me in a pulling long letting out voice.' Her sincere, open gaze, is fixed right on mine- into see-through eyes. 'I don't care what other people think anymore and still, you do, still, you do.'

'I only care about you, and you only.' Said Jaylynn to her mother.

Only moments go by when she then said this-

'Fascinating creatures we girls are then grown into women- when lost and longing for whatever the heart is looking for, always looking for a man to be into them- in always another cloud be, or another with more strength then a man could have, or she has at any given moment, always wishful for that understanding sweet, caring, hope, that she may never have satisfied, it's just the girls nature, to always be unsure about themselves at times.' Said Jaylynn.

'So wise...' She said back.

18

Every night, I still hold on to Maggie's panties and sniff them remembering the keepsake of her life and mine at that time, the love- I had for that girl at the time, I was her rock- just like all the girls in this story- finding their way. I have kept them all these many- many years... something that I have brought over from the other side, maybe dumb to some, I know or icky, yet the love of things that were once real yet needs a reminder of why by the senses is what I have to do. Touch, feel, smell, and even sometimes taste is the memory loss that comes back to me when holding something so small acute in my hands bunched up. I have loved and lost, yet that is not always what I see, some have taught me, pain, some love, trust, forbearance, much tolerance, loss of restraint, needed self-restraint, some resignation, to have stoicism, found fortitude, to have sufferance, pushing with endurance, a deep-down breath of calmness, found composure, and even-temperateness. it's what it means to be a woman! Bedtime is a time that was always long and drawn out for me. I lay in the darkness, unable to pass to the slumber, mind always racing as it always did.

Then in her sleep, my baby squeezes my fingers... I look deep into the opens the door with her mind- as she passes me in, leading me right past Emmah and the other girls as we head for our desks, these are more dreams that have become true. Oh, how the time has changed just in the last 10 years, Emmah, I have not seen for at least 5 years now. No, she only there in her dreams for me to remember, the way she was. I find it in times to just cast away all memories, like pain- to keep from going insane. Sometimes, I think I am just that... crazy.

And even though I have not seen her since Friday, lost in my mind, when I- Nevaeh woke from Naddalin's spell, and it seems as if a year has gone by...

Naddalin- I'm sure she hated me for it, yet it was a year of rest of being lost to sleep, yet her mood hasn't dampened a bit, with me being me the last couple of days and days well be all she thinks happened. I took her place, she needed rest.

19

The electronic tombstone was my idea with the screen, to playback a loved one's life, more than just the dates to help mend, yet never fully cope with the pain of loss. That is what I have in place for all the planets that I have made new homes for life, to flourish- death is always, an end to a new start.

Naddalin's looks to play that tired old game, of hope. But while I am fully braced for her usual ploy in an attempt to trip me up- today she's too distracted by old ghosts too, while I am fully braced for her usual ploy of dropping her bag in my path, to see if I will fall over she knows I am clumsy. Her unhurried gaze traveling the length of her, from her head to her toes, before starting all over again.

But just because she ignores me doesn't mean I can relax or trust that it's over with me I always said it was, yet with her games, I know more than she thinks I do, yet I trust her more than she thinks too, and I am more relaxed than she thinks also, that would be love no?

I remember walking the halls- 'I was told that by AVA she was going to cut my head off and poop down the stump.'

Because the truth is, it's never over with Emmah, even now, and I have since left the past with her now behind. She's made that abundantly clear- that she blames me for everything.

20

If anything, she's probably more charged up and vicious than ever-making the little reprieve nothing more than the calm before the storm, I know that Emmah is now AVA, I just know. ...Yet seeing is believing.

'Ignore her, all day and now for years,' Naddalin whispers to me saying it's okay to feel this way, scooting herself close the edges of her butt practically overlap my legs. Besides even though I nod as though I am okay with it all, the truth is- I can't be is was always my little girl- yet she not that any longer she is a WOMAN. As much as I'd love to pretend, she's invisible- I can't do it.

Karly is the girl with blue hair, know Savannah, it was something she went back in time to do, using the crystal around her neck.

'We girls all from the school love to swim with the mermaids it's the best way to end the evenings.' This is the story of how we made them girls' part of us and our world.

(Girls like you and I)

Looking back on this look at the photos of this old book... there we are... like fading- into the scene... I and you can see all this play out...

'The shut Generation...' or so we were called- for just having a summer love and fun... That's the name of our softball team- not really... the name I loved... but that the name we got from them- The team name was not what, I said- was cool- but I was not the one to pick it... Like so- we were the - Ponytail Express- or so the shirts said way oh way back then. Just some really- really cute kick-butt girls- having a summer of rivalry with other girls, and finding ourselves... inside and out.

Intermission-

I am number- 19 for life... Her- um- she number- 14.

1

I have flashbacks, I recall- AGREEING with my own thoughts I go back in time. I stepped into my room and closed the door; a sigh of relief escapes my lips.

The window of my room oddly, it was locked. I gripped the edge of my window and tried to push the glass up. I remember nights that I would sneak out, and go to the fields with her, I climbed the side of my house. Well, that was a big waste, I thought, other thoughts. The school was a total waste of my time. Summer was all that really mattered. Softball was all that was my world, and her. The girl was giving me mixed signals, I remember it all, yet what I have is that one summer, One minute, she'd be all over me, saying things like I really like you and giving me peppered kisses but the next second, she'd run away from like I had a something wrong. This was outside of the ball field. I'm not an abnormal lady.

I wink at her. Who locked my window? I let go of the niche and landed on my feet. A dull sting ran through my legs. Oh, cramp... cramp! I pressed my back against the side of my house and crawled toward the back entrance. Mom was going to kill- if she found out - that I snuck out again- to see a girl. Dad would be even worse. I remember coming home that night after necking in the dugouts with her... and all the basses were run.

Coming home- I unlocked the door, put the key back and slowly turned the knob, I pulled the scalation spare key out of the plant next to the door. I peeked through the glass door... then inside of my mom and dad's room, they never knew- so I thought, yet I am sure that would be short-lived. I ran up the steeps dipping wet hair entwined, it was running hard that night, it was after 10 PM, I went to put on my PJ's then went down, still scared, of what I did, and all the 1930's cars with their headlamps running me off the muddy road, to my home. After taken a long bath, in the tin tub, in the middle of the Kitchen, to only the flicker of my gas lamp, I made sure all the kitchen gas lamps were off- for the night. I snuck around the kitchen and hurried up the stairs. I remember I stepped in and closed the door behind me.

I heard my mother's voice, calling me asking me why I have taken a bath at this time of night. I felt a shiver go down my spine. I'm dead I thought. 'Well, it's nice to see I remember saying to her as she was holding my hand taken me into the dugout.' What do you do, tonight to have to take a bath you know we only do that once a week?' I turned around and turned on my charm, 'Mom, what goes on- with your child? You look so today, in the face what is that all over it?

Mom- she had some weird stuff on her face. Mom smiled, her long hair pulled back into a ponytail, as long as mine if not longer. It's supposed to make her look younger; she thinks I think not. I bet she looked like me, that why daddy loves her... for that I am sure. Like that's possible, that he would love her more than me... too, I remember him. Then that all changed, to like me going through the change. 'This is the seventh time you snuck out this month! What is the matter with you?' ...Are you seeing a boy? No- ma'. I am not seeing a boy- what I was hiding from her as he was really a she- and I was not really lying was I?'

Is it wrong for me to want a girl? Damn, 'It's not like I'm doing anything bad- or was I? If you noticed, I always come back by 10- and its summer.' I remember saying that to her. Odd my mom was a way to nice about it. Yet this was also a change in her. She raised her eyebrow, saying 'just don't get pregnant.'

Oh, 'You little.... If you sneak out again, your dad is going to take care of it for me, you will not live to see tomorrow.' I knew that was not true, we did not agree completely, yet he was not me an, he just did not have much time for me.

I perched my lips, 'If I sneak out the day after tomorrow, am I okay- if I tell you whom- I am seeing?'

'Okay- tell me,' she said.

...And it was all okay- and I did not understand why.

-Then-

'We're good with this...'

She nods, and giggles- pats me on the head saying- 'yah were good, you can see here just get your butt back here by 10.'

'Summer love...' she mutters under her breath, 'this girl- what am I going to do with you?'

She shook at me at the steps saying love is love right, unthreatening. I hugged her back, scared- that I was some kind of sick.

I remember- my new dad walked into the room, feeling little in his arms- and my PJ's, pulling at my hair as if I was some kind of baby girl.

I smiled at my dad, in his baby like hold on me, even if he's all new to me it was nice - and wrong at the same time. Mom always had my side- or so I thought, so he would come around.

You snuck out again- he taps me on the nose, 'silly girl!'

‘Boys... already?’

‘I like sports more da-dad-’ and my voice shook as I said that.

More like one of the boys...

‘You can say that again,’ whispered my mother.

You can’t be serious that this is okay?’ Mom argued, obviously pissed that Dad took my side.

Dad shrugged, ‘she’s just a girl, babe. I used to do this when I was young too.’ Play is playing... its summer puppy love, that all.

‘Yes!’ I pealed in and Mom glared at me, in the low light of my room that was far too cozy and the wind blowing the drapes of my window, that was still open. Okay, bad idea.

Mom fluttered her eyes at Dad and bit her lower lip, ‘But he was not getting it- he thought I was normal, this is like the seventh time. She needs to be punished, to meet new kids.’

Yet, I did not feel abnormal, by kissing a girl and liking as the ran pored, in the dugout of the ball field that loved just as much as she, at that moment, yet this was the first time - like- um- I felt love.

‘Disciplined?’ I gawped, ‘Exacting words, Mom.’

...?...?

~*~

Dad smiled, ‘How about we ground him for a month?’

Mom pouted, ‘Truly, I was thinking about whipping her with your beloved belt.’

My jaw nearly dropped, ‘Ma’!’

Dad laughed, patting my curly hair down from his hand. I cupped my hands together and giggled to, at the thought I thought was so true.

Mom rolled her eyes and pointed her finger at me, ‘Grounded for a month, missy and if you sneak out again, the belt will be your new best friend.’

Dad grinned and wrapped an arm around his new young wife, 'Goodnight as they walked out of my room just nearly closing the door.'

He hauled her out of the room, in her arms like he was holding me - it was gross. I smiled and jumped into bed, jumping also in the same leap out of the PJ's. Grounded for a month - God! Yea, right, I see her tomorrow. By tomorrow morning - I was in love, Mom will forget what happened and I'd be good. It will all be good. I am sure, I said over and over.

The meaning was the best thing about moving her...

(One day has passed)

I remember doing the same thing over - I screamed and dropped to the floor, my sheets tangling between my legs. Ow. This night when for more, more than ever...

She even laughed at me and I got up and chased her, up the road - saying she did not want to go home yet. Passing 100-year-old tree, and brick roads, she squealed loudly - I remember - when I touched her, as she pounded down the stairs of the bleachers - as if anyone would say anything at 12 midnight - with nothing but the sounds of crickets - and the moonlight above - and us in a blanket holding hands her head on my one shoulder.

She ran into the kitchen, with me she was going to spend the night and creep out the window in the morning, and I grabbed up all the things that were a night of being - so bad, throwing her over my body. I tickled her and I heard someone gasp.

If my grandpa knew what I was doing, and if the town - yet I did not care... I was not shutting out what I wanted.

I stopped and looked up to see my mom's mouth hanging open, motionless - when she looked into my room that night. And I was in my bed with a girl... with a plate of pancakes in her hands, for two she sat in our bed say here, girls.

At the breakfast table was my dad, a little smirk on his face, when he asked who my friend is... face red about to burst into laughter any second.

Lastly, there was some girl I've never seen before. She has a lot of hair for a boy that hair that reached the edge of her shoulders. Her bangs swayed to her left eye at times.

She had kind of small lips that were a light pink shade. She was an average Jane. Her expression was blank and blasé. To them but not to me...

Unenthusiastic?

'This girl must be crazy, not to be home- or say she is with you.' Said, my Dad.

I was standing partially naked- the next night with her in my room.

Not to be cocky or anything but I'm freaking good-looking, ladies- said my mom as she passed the door.

I had the perfect tan and a pretty sexy six-pack if I say so myself. I got my looks from my real dad, but he didn't have a body like I did when he was my age. This girl should be drooling over me right now, and she was.

Her eyebrow dropped, still a bored expression. Whatever I give up. I shrugged and ran upstairs to put on some clothes, said, my dad. I stretched my arms, flexing my biceps. I gave a short nod at the girl and she was still unfazed by me. Her eyebrow shot up as if trying to say as if this was normal.

Mom stepped into the kitchen and smiled as well, 'Thank goodness too. We'll finally have a responsible tween's in the household.'

2

(Going back in time)

Um, Dad? - Mm-hmm? I-I mean daddy. Like, do you- um- remember when like you- like- um promised you'd teach me to play catch and softball? - Mm-hmm he said looking down at me so young then. Um, wa-well, could you teach me I remember saying looking up at him with big sad blue eyes?

So, with something that incredible going on, it should've underway off with loads of great things happening for me, but it didn't. Anyways- I moved to the neighborhood two weeks before school let out. It was the same summer that Dodger Maury Wills would break the stolen bases record. It was the same summer that Dodger Maury Wills would break the stolen bases record. I was from another state, and I didn't have a single friend in a thousand miles.

It was a lousy way to end up the fifth grade, because - um I had no time to make friends before summer. And that's about where it all started. My real dad died when I was just a little kid. My mom had married Dad about a year before we moved to the Valley. At the time, he and I were still getting used to each other. Yeah, I'd followed them to the Softball Field once after school. I'd never seen any place like it.

Look around I am new to this place, yet, I see - (Girls are Shouting loudly- yet not for me- yet anyway.) It was like their own little softball monarchy or to some degree. It was something... It was the ultimate place I'd ever seen anyway. All the new girls for me a girl to see... and get to know, something that was taboo in my old town- that is why we really moved here... maybe a girl would be into me...

The year well it's 1931- the 1932 World Series is coming up. It was once said in a Girl's world, there is one all-time utmost moment in the antiquity of sports. We as girls really don't have any girl to look up to on the softball field, do we...? The boys have there's, why is it not so with us. The story goes that in the lowest of the ninth inning with two outs, a full count and the tying run on base, Babe Ruth outstretched his arm and pointed to the center-field stands. Nope, not one single guy/gal believed it, there the swing- nobody had ever done it before that Girly times. He was calling his shot and, I was looking up there down at him with my dad and younger sister.

It was in the greatest summer of my life up till the post before boys and drama of all that... when he- my dad taught me to play softball, and he became my best friend. At the edge of my set, he is running for home. As well as even if he'd been an idol formerly, that the next pass, yep' all know that is pretty much how he became a legend- and my dream boy- well at that time anyway. 40 years later, a girl named Havilah Franklyn... became a district legend and my girl crush. Plus, she got me out of the biggest pickle I'd ever be in... Clued McCoy plays his horn on the talk box... Bertram. Nonetheless, like they were good, really- really- good.

Um- like- Come on, Bertram! As well as all I had was a plastic doll that my grandmother gave me... yet, I was more of a tomboy... or so that is what other girls said about me... back there, for my birthday when I was six- that is when I knew I was not into boys as much as a girl- yet, I liked both- just the same- yet, not sure. On the other hand- when I finally got up enough guts to go out there and try and make friends, I myself found out that they never- ever kept score- about stuff like that, they never- ever- ever- picked sides. Um- like they never even really stopped playing the game. It just went on forever- never ever stopping. Every day they picked up where they left off the day before. It was like an endless dream game of dream girls. - Come on! Come on! Like it was... no-joke... There were only eight of them, so they didn't have a whole team.

Squints! - Unquestionably, if I'd have known what was going to occur when- um like- I got there, and perhaps just stand in the outfield somewhere and take up space. Even So-o...? Even though...? I didn't know how to play, I figured I could be the ninth Girl... I um- I like- got it! – um- I probably never would've gone. It was a Nice catch; I saw for her... this girl... – Yeah it was looking at that butt and then the run... she made.

Her Dog was running after her, he was Barking.

Then they ran to me he was Growling- she was looking dumbfounded at me. Puppy love... - Come on! - Hey, batter, batter, batter! No...! No... young lust- it's what makes the world go 'round at that age. They all said in the stands over the way - Whoa! - Watch out! Yet she hit hard, um- Come on, Havilah, another girl hit a homer- she did not see the ball all she was looking at was me! She ran into the pool and broke her nose... it looked good for a week or two. Like all- them- the- Boys Shouting about her messing up her face they want to kiss... like I do.) Oh, my freaking Lard she hit the pool... Screams- and crying... cry to mommy the d*ck-head of a boy said.

3

All them- they were Laughing at her. Okay, I'll get it, the ball that is... it was a good way to meet no? Get it... Hi- hi... Don't be a doofus. Don't be a doofus!

Don't be a doofus! She- I- us – we- thought. (Muffled Sound of two girls hug was odd- yet, it happened fast, Dog Growling at my hills... he did like me yet- yet she did...) we were like this too dumb long- all them looking at us the game stopped as they want us to get on with it... (Get a room...) 'Kiss her...' one boy said- so I did.

Yaaaaahhh! They went nuts!!! Now

FREAKING- Throw the ball back- before I throw up! Come on! - Yeah, the hurry freak- up- fat butt said way up in the sands! We are waiting... the girl at the mound said! Throw it! Come on! Broken nose- yet a first kiss- make her feel good- that was my story, and I suck too it. Ha! Look at all the cute Boys Shouting that girl said to another... Come on, toss me the ball! - Come on! And I did and it cracked her right in the head- oppies- sorry... I said.

Come on! Oh, my God- Lovers hurry up! - Laughing Carry on and then comes to an end.

Um- like- yeah- My freaking life was over. Did you see that...? Did yah...? Like dumb Boys Babble on, laughing... about things, they don't get... a Girl is describing his thoughts- shaking his head what the world coming too... like- If it wasn't for Havilah, I never- ever- ever-ever- made a single friend that summer before now, would I now- doing this- like that- like- to- her- like- now- like- at that- like- at that like- moment. Um- because all the rest of those guys thought I was a lost cause, so why not a girlfriend...? Why not... I was done with boys before; I was done with knowing what a boy hand- or did have. I thought if a boy can do it a girl was better at it... Even before we became friends, power-driven humming... and whizzing... she was wheezing... Havilah and I were associated, linked for the one moment... that would last, and last, and last, all summer...

Night, hun. The girl- Oh, I'm sorry, she said to her Mom. I said- It was an accident. That is when I'd get us all into the biggest flipp'n pickle ever... any of us had ever seen. Jullie, have you made any friends yet? Go and see your girlfriend you made today- No way. - Why not, honey? 'Because I'm still new. And- she likes may not like me now that it's a new day- remember how they were... this is a new place... I don't want you sitting around in here all summer petty with this stuff... like you did last summer and the one before, find some girls... not a boy yet... um, do you like boys yet? NO! I know you're smart, and I'm proud of you to do what you think is right- even if it's a girl or boy. I want you to get out into the fresh air and make some friends or the sweet first love- its time. Can that person be a girl? What? Um- not really what is right- yet I don't see why not.

You have my permission. Go a little crazy... play around... so that means full around some...

Um- you what now... age...

So-o I well did...

Um- Honey, I want you to make some friends this summer, or just one that you fall for... Lots of them are here it just takes that one. And if she's a girl? Um- there are boys that are not a*s... but if she a girl... then go for it. Not too much, but some... more then I- or she- or we- or they thought we should. Like- get into trouble, for crying out loud- and crying for each other when we had to go home.

You can see us me and my little girlfriend Run around, scrape your knees, get dirty and playing in the mud. We- she and I- like being me- and being her- like we- climb trees, hop fences- and snagging dresses. How Girly mothers do you know who say something- like that to their girls? I Chuckled some at the thought of kissing a girl- little did she no- or maybe she did... Well, none mothers, I guess would have seen this coming.

But I'm not good at anything- or anything like that, Mom.

4

Well? How did it go- I am in love with her ma'?

Cute- I thought...

Nightfall- the field.

Honey, you'll always be just a know-it-all with an attitude like that... you think you love her... see what's round first... Yet if this girl is the one then go- for her... before a boy well... what can it heart I thought at the time... Face it, I'm just an intellectual in my modern thinking- the good mother fitting in with the new whys of the day. Whispering is going around by the other girls on the softball field when it was just, she and I hanging and playing and hugging and then the kiss, was all I need of the first puppy love to start- she had my heart.

Uh, Dad- can I, uh- yeah- fine- (weirdo he thought,) and we went off- I had nerves...

You go on back out there and ask her to be your girlfriend- she stands at the door of her home- mom looking from the car. Yes- yes- hug... it was official- I have my first love- even if she was a she... and not he... oh well. That did not matter yet...

The next night it was just she and I... I mean, could you, like you said, teach me to play catch, she showed me more than that too kissing and her goodies too? Like I was okay with that it made me feel loved, or funny... no boy did that yet... like why would I want to see that anyways... boys are ea-ck-y...

Yeah... sure, this how you do that- and how you do this... wow.

Mom, it's okay, really. - Honey, go be with your little girlfriend. I said- I would, and I will, but I'm under the gun here, she needs this thought mom. What could it hurt? Can't you spare half an hour, and show her know how to play softball, she said to her dad- no so she can go with this girl... That is why is safe for me to say she can go with her... dad never had the time much... Mom, really, it's okay. - All right... yes, stay the night... Okay. I'll get my glove so the next night I just am there to play with her. See?

I told you... this would happen said, dad... that it would go there... Oh, great, just what we want going to church my girl in love with a girl... (Its oh okay John.) There 10 years old. What's it going to hurt... she needs this no... he puts a pillow over his head and yells profanities.

(Next day)

Okay... All right, Jullie, get down to that end of the yard, and I tossed it to her... she outstretched her arm and gripped it in her new glove, the ball was in her hand, and she ran to her and knocked her over legs around her now on the ground for the kiss she gave, dad said oh nice now see my kid dry humming this little one... one thing you need to know about this game she said... Where the ball goes, your glove should go. (You know I don't like balls she said- she 2 years older than me.) (Dad said do I hear- grunts,) she on top of her... God save us... my babies going to h*ell? Got it- I have the ball... she yields... All right... her girl said... Uh, yeah... was said- I think so.

(Oh, hush it's cute, said, mom.)

Fat butt said- garb her boobs... (Mom smacked her in the head. - Silly boys- see um John- that is why I'm okay with her being with a girl. The boy's like this here.) Umm- hum... that's all he said. No matter whether you're in the field or at bat, eye on the ball, okay and she swings on got the home run... she got to all the basses... that all I say. In the game and with her playmate... Now, the key to this game is keeping your eye on the ball. Okay... Eye on the ball, okay? If the ball moves, move your glove.

Got it...?

Got it...?

Run for the basses- instead of run for her basses- one girl said named Jaycee- like she is just PO-ed that I'm not kissing her- she made the middle finger in her mouth- and the gagging sound- then with a long drawing out- ou-ah- I want a boy, not you. Sorry, I did not see you make that pass- you're out. On-looking- It's all right. (No- no it isn't... it's all-right John!) it's just a game of softball... um and after the game is over...?

He said.

We lost over you to lover birds... said Jaycee- she really competitive... and not like the ground upon... Okay, I'm ready to go home and shower... you want to join me... sure... see this- yes- see that- do- this and feel it like that- and it feels right.

Giggling said, John, what are they doing in there... (mom- said- getting off...) There little girls it okay... Okay... what would my mom and dad say? Yeah... no, what they don't know won't hurt them... let them play and find them themselves'...

All right... what was that she asked me- your first cummie, that what that was- and your first fingering... I love you... that why- I did that... now do that to me... and I did... that shower was 3 hours long girls said Mom... have fun... dad by the stupid looks on their faces I would say that is so-o. see this stuff... what is it on my finger that was yours... I don't know- oh my god that cute... and she explained it all...

(What Dad has not been there.)

Now they're going to sleep together with just night tops and no underwire - what now they're married... (They're just young girls...) and we did in the same bed, and no night tops just our skin to skin... feeling and feeling and the love was like a game of softball... just feeling it out... until the home run. Playing with her hair... and holding her hand through the night until 12:00 p.m. and we eat together and it was off to the field to play- you guessed it softball... and did all over... that was the perfect summer...

On the field I am pitching- that's now my thing... Here we go again... Okay. You just need a bigger glove. Throw it back to me this time. Throw it back girl- love you she yells and the cowed gasps. Um- what the freak is her Mom letting her do- I sitting right here... what am I doing letting her have a life... that's what... if you knew you would shut the h*ell up. Okay- what a... (a look was given and that shut him up.)

Okay- Jullie, keep your eye on the ball, and not on me so-o much, I know it hard... and that makes you feel that way down there too but don't miss this... These girls are nothing but finger hole shuts on a team... said one older Girl... and the cowards started to go down... but that was not what it was about for us girls- it was for the love of the game and a love of two girls, that was wrong yet need a friend and some love. Hey, old a*ss see this... Oh, My God- she put her hands down my pants... and was lady-jam-ing me... in front of them all... and had me making faces. There call me that... I- we don't care...

Okay. Got it, I call the funds... over this...

Ball's in the face- Balls' in the face said the one girl with a lisp... Okay- she's screaming and crying- Ow! Oh, my eye!

Ow! Ow! Oh! Ow! Ow! - What happened?

- (She groans, and I held her it was my ball after all that I throw. My eye... baby- honey, get some ice. Ice now, please. – Oh no, I got it. Why do I keep doing things like this...? - Here you go.

At her home... the stakes... girl- those were for dinner. - Oh! -Just hold it there- baby. Nice and hard... said her girlfriend that was joking around with her- making it okay. Now press it against that eye- Yeah- yah- yah I got it.

- I just took my eye off the ball for a second, Mom. - Yeah, but you caught it. (she is Groaning) -Just keep that on for, like, an hour. It'll still be black for weeks no amount of makeup will cover this, but it won't swell if you hold this.

Sorry... baby for throwing this that hard.

Got to watch out for that curveball of mine.

(She's still crying- yet I am holding her.)

~*~

(Three weeks pass)

Hey.

Hi.

I'm going to play some ball. We want you to come. Do you want to go...? - No. Thanks. - Why not? Don't you like softball anymore? - Oh, yeah, but- But what? No- I was a tool not too by dad. But you have my glove- and I need you there. I can't you see... it not allowed. Uh, I see- you don't love me? Not anymore- I can't- No- I can't go. Thanks, though, I have to find a boy- or did well dis-own me... for all this... It's okay. All see if I can sneak out... here I got an extra one top- not your number but it is fine.

Come on.

Let's go, ha this feels dirty... I like it. Mom, I'm going to go play some ball- yep- I won't tell your dad to go! Be back before nightfall- and be clean... and no fun-loving on the field save that for your room girls. I'll be back in a little while. Come on. Let's go wink- well be good at being bad their mom. Got it... that fine... she said- ha- we might not even go to the field... then... okay with that... Listen- I okay with this... not dad- so if you do that- that- you don't speak of it... its own you girls... all-right-ie? Umm-hmm... There that dumb look from my little girl... I knew... what the heck... she's happy. That's all that matters...

Hay- what- Check this out- there in her bed together... so you want to play softball or not today- no- just want to be here with you. (Boys') What? She questioned with flintiness Boys suck- why would I want that- you're all I need. Now and forever. What? Long slow kisses she on top of my hair falling on my face.

5

Jullie- I had no idea who they were talking about, that he is not okay with us doing that it not like you get a baby out of or something like that... like how's that happens... you don't know... you are 2 years older- see this is why I feel she's cute and sweet. 2 years means a lot... no? - What did he say? That I was going to hell or something like that just for you a girl loving me and making me feel good down there. Yeah, what planet are you from I said to mom dad about this? I want you and that's it.

Jullie- But there was no way, I could let them know. You never heard of this... Is it not that odd? I hear yah- I had that talk too... yet not with a girl... so I had two talks that were really um... yah... after I am done here with you and then you down there on me you want to go to the softball field.

Jullie- so-o I lied saying I was dating some d*ick of a boy that we go to church with, just to make the town and happy and not to go to they said hell. You

CAN GOTO HELL FOR FEELING LOVE AND HAVE YOU

Jillin' off each other and- Pushing the Red Button with our lips- then so be it. Look at this car of, the Great Bambino. Of course, I have it too- like why is there like no girls to do this? Because girls like us do nothing in love with the clean house and make boys happy- and get knocked up at some point... do you know what that means? I do- that all my mother good for... 'I thought you to love you for you- and to love me for me.' Yeah. I guess. Sorry- um no I am not... if it wrong- like I don't want to be right about it... I will always have you and the memories of the summer of softball.

(Back)

Anyway, Keara, that's Celia and Ashleigh Zadah, Jaelynn 'Squints' Palledorous, Lee Fredrick- we call her p*ussie for a week over not asking that boy out that want to go with her... what you came over to the dark said with us we said joking... Sheridan Nunnez and Shanaya Deshaun. We call her Fraps. Gal's, this is Keara my girlfriend and now are a new player, I been working with her all spring.

Hi. Yeah, um, well, she's going to play with us because she makes 11. Now we've got a whole team. We're wasting time. Let's go to the Softball field. - Havilahny, it's did you sleep well- yes always with you: oh god look at me in the morning. I know all gross - It's so nice to see you look like that with- the face, and the hair, and the eyes:

(Nighttime in the lights)

Um like - Why'd you bring her, Havilahny? - Because there's eight of us, and he makes 11. I'll ask you again- like- why'd you bring her, Havilahny? - Because there's eight of us, and he makes 11 and she mine- end of the story. SHUT UP!

(HUSH FINGER- TO HER FACE.)

Yeah, yeah, so would my sister, but I didn't bring her, she the girl play and that's it... With 11 gals' we've got a whole team, Yeah-Yeah, and you get your ho... at the end of it, what do I get her sister said... my foot in your butt if you don't get off my field- you stink at the game sorry. I guess, I go with a fat butt and get a cream soda... there you go... positive thinking.

(Play your cards right you just might get his hands down your pants. Wink- oh god kill me... she said with the cute nod.) No. With her, we had a whole team. - She can catch- I would no. I bet you do... she said, one of them over the way – okay then throw- that what she is getting- pitching. - You saw the way she threw. – Yeah- not bad- right? Come on, Havilahny, girl. She 'ain't' game... said the opposing team.

All-right. And now I get to rotate eight positions instead of seven. - I need the practice, girls. - You're the best on the team. You don't need any practice. - No, you don't. - You're the best, Girl. Come on, Havilahny, Girl. The kid is... -weenie. Yeah, yeah. Oscar Mayer even- suck that. I don't suck weenie- not even if it's a Footlong! What are you laughing at, yeah- yeah? You run like you have a sick up you're a*ss. - Mmm, yeah about that... don't ask... hush... Okay, okay, but I'm- I'm- part of the game, right? NO. Now, how come she doesn't get to be, the one in...?

Um- because she's a geek, Girl, that would 'be' why - she can't catch nor pitch as this girl can. Girl, base up, you're d*ick-head. Don't like that remember.? Girl, you take the center, okay?

Okay. Um, where exactly is that? It's over there, Here, Girl. You and I are here that's called left. I said left-center-right. Okay. Right. Here? Here it is the first pass- come on, Havilahny, Girl. Ha, she's never going to throw the ball the right anyway. Let's just play. Oh yes, she well... What a jerk. - Yeah-Yeah that is how she is, get'n to yah? Come on! Throw it in here, or get off the field. Wow! - Nice.

- Woo- did you see the speed on that- Good job! - Hey, Girl, throw it to second, and she did - Okay. Out... (All the girls made a gasp.) - Come on, Havilahny. He's never gonna catch it. - He's not gonna catch it. Oh! I told you, Havilahny. I told you... girls- she hot sh*it! Yah she's the Sh*it said- that girl. Come on, Havilahny.

Why'd you done that? A square, Havilahny.

The kid's a square. Come on. Throw it in. 1 2 -file ball- out next girl up. Crybaby- go sit on your butt- and suck your thumb...you suck. What the hell's she doing? She making us look bad that what... I don't believe this- she can be that hot. I said that she said in that cute why twisting the wording to her girlfriends.

You can throw it; you know... Here... Sorry... Sorry... oh no... I can't- like believe this. I don't know-how, how you can do that- fastball...

I think I'd better go... it getting late... we won yet the girls were not in love with me for it... it did not matter I had her- right? We hugged and called it a night- Hey, hey. You think too much.

(The next night)

You girls just have fun, this is softball. You got to stop thinking about her over there and play. I mean, if you were having fun, you would've caught that ball. No, you're giving goo-goo eyes to her... we see this... suck a*sses. When your arm gets here, just let go and throw for her face. This one was a hard a*ss. Just let go, and well knock her out- It's that easy.

How do I catch it this? This tall girl asked in a grope huddle? Just stand with your fingers in your P*ssy- and let it make your head- that how you dumb sh*it. There and stick your glove out in the air... said another... it's not hard to do... well maybe for you. I'll take care of it... side the one with dark hair... About time, Havilahny.

I going into menopause over here... you don't even have the red death yet - okay then well hurry up- before I get and it passes by me... scared- Nah...! It's not that bad just a week of HELL that is all.

Okay... why are we talking about me bleeding?

I told you, Havilahny. - They already are, Squints. - Shut up! Girl, throw it to second. (Fake-groans of what she got the last game making fun of her for it.) - Not again... are they going to do this grow up and get you- butt heads... it coming for you too... - (so she spits- to make it seem like she all tough.)

Please pitch it. We're wasting time, Havilahny. Please catch it, please catch it, please catch it. She said as it hit her in the left boob... Yeah! That how it is done get in the bra- yah well at least I have one that not a trannie... Yah her nose is bigger than her boobs... ha! Like her feet and IQ. - All right! - all right... stop... I told you so, Girl, drop out of school you're dumb. Okay... can you be my man and have my babies then if I do?

Shut up and let's just play some ball. - Yeah, let's play some ball, and not with each other for 5 seconds... All right. I knew it... all the time. Yeah! Just flash them and get it over with... shut. Hey, the baby boy up there she said to this old man... you like these... she squeezed me in-front of them...

(The fence was rattling with booing over us being we girl on a girl here... I get it.)

(Gasping was made by them...)

I'll show you some more tomorrow, okay she said to him maybe this down here?

F-n sick these girls he said... - Okay. Bye. - You did well with the kissing too and the feeling up. See you later, Hun she said to me, tomorrow- 'K.'

Bye... (said) See you tomorrow, Havilahny? - Yeah. See you later, Girl.

Havilahny, wait. - Your glove your hug and kiss me. NIGHT! She took off her hat in there, and let her hair fall like- like a Girl- like I wanted- her to do. Oh, yeah. You know, it was the only one I had. But there's a story to this ball... Not anymore. Wear my old hat like my underwire it something to remind you of me... like I rubbing on you, and the small of me... you'll love it.

(New day)

- Oh, um, you got a fireplace? - Oh, yeah with number 3's ball on it.

Oh, yeah. Hey, Girl. Her home for the night- Um, bring a T-shirt to sleep in the okay night- in bed see you tomorrow, okay? Yeah, why? tomorrow morning eating sugar and milk. Mom, guess what? - Shanaya 'The Babe' Chuckles eating to from mom- chest.

New gameplay ball- 'Long-ball.' Come on, Nunnez. They were all laughing and picking on Me for wearing her underwire, and hat on the field so much so-o a girl panted me- and her name was on them with love you forever. Ha- ha ha- Yeah, okay. Yes, I see it. Yes.

Do you call that pitching?

This is softball, not tennis.

- Give her a tennis racket, not a bat. - Give me something to hit then loser.

All right, bab. This is my heater; I know how to feel her right she said... to the crowds...

- I dare you okay she said- (Boys Shouting- girl loving it... there were all stand and see- though-sh and boy-shorts style. Hot pink- too- and I a tomboy at heart... not too boyish but you get it.) - Whoa! - (Boys Laughing- their hearts on them...) funny that was that hat was on here... as she runs the bases to get off... and there were more jokes about that... hit it she nude run down the fail there no why they have this game we do- we do those girls shouted. - You'll be sorry for this she said... running for the dug-out- paint and now too big of undies at her feet.

Ha did even have to go the speakeasy for a free show said, one old man...

3rd round-

- Give that girl a bat. - You want the heater; I'll give it to you.

Give her a ball to hit not that covering crap. Maybe then he'll hit it, and well keep dressed...

- (Clattering) - Oh, Girl, you have a nice one she said!

The boys said too bad you can see it for all the black hair there- ha...

Yeah! That's how you do it. Great, you idiot! I can't hit that... that's the point... Bab, you idiot. Hit me with the heater one. My turn- you know who I am- her girl- flyer- Now we can't play anymore. Stupid idiot! Home run... How do you like that... Did they say? High and outside. Just like that, it was all over for the other team.

No!

- Girl! - Girl!
- What are you doing? - Girl, wait!
- Then how do we get the ball back?

I'm going to hit you! Called shot by the Babe. - Girl, come back! - Hey gal's, I'll get it! Get off! I was with her last night- Guys, I got to get the ball! What...? The one said that was hearing the dirty ball chat over the way...- You're going to get yourself killed if you go in there! The old train yard...

- Killed, Girl, jeez! There over 100 tracks there- or something like that... yah the story was a girl lost a lag dance with one and the track move...and now she has- well one...end of the story... yah she up there looking at you like what the h*ell...

Holy crap, you could've been killed. It's okay there were only three trains rushing at me - head-on- and it had to land on the one where there were no side rails on the overpass... and I was chased off by it; yet, I made it... just in the nick of time.

Yeah, yeah, true. What are you doing going on those?

Overall that water...and danger...and rusty-ness...

It's good to be fast- love you she said- as I panted for air- back in the hug... don't leave me...

- No, wait! - Get off of me!

Now! I WOULD LOVE TOO BABY COME OVER HERE-

Oh - ha she touching her on the 'Munds' and BASS PLAT again.

Stop! Before I toss my cookie's...

You guys were leaving, so I just thought I'd hop the fence--

- If you were thinking, you wouldn't have thought that. - You can't go back there.
- We don't have more balls- no unlike you- I don't get more balls... when the ones you have fuzz out... - We don't- like-um- either-
- Kiss it- yah kiss this- kiss it good-bye. And Shut up, Ashleigh.

It's gone, Girl. Gone.

The game's over, Girl. We'll just get another ball tomorrow; you don't get that that was my grandfather's ball- number 3- nothing impotent to most- but it was to me... it all I had. - Yeah. - We'll never see it again- of what team- New York- WHAT? Why you play with this- it was for here and you girls that's why...it's just a ball- right?

Girl, listen to me, never- ever take mummeries like this and trash them out for me or them... that dumb... okay.

Look it's got more of a story now you added to it.

- But... I-I think- well yeah maybe so-o.

Come on, Girl let's walk home into the sunset.

(Girls are Whispering as there holding hands.)

- Shh!
- Shh! - Be quiet.
- SEE WHAT THERE SAYING- IT GROSS- YOU DON'T WANNA KNOW.
- (Growling) - (Gasp-ING)

New game in the old run-down Vincent field we got a ball-Something got the ball.

(Jullie) Hey, guys, sorry I'm late, long story and drama today- feel you in after the game...

- My mom made me put on my jacket, - Shut up!
- Mom- okay your nipples are hard- yet you don't care... (girls laughing)

- And then she made me do the dishes- when I came home for backtalk...

Your poor little mommy made you do the big bad- butt- dishes for being turned on to your shut.

6

I haven't had anything yet, so how can I have some more of nothing- by you?

- Shut up! - You're killing me, Girl- don't be a P*ss.
- All right. Who cut one? - These are s-mores stuff.
- Okay, pay attention. -Bertram!

First, you take the Bab, balls away- then stick the chocolate on the Bab- and make her not cry. - Then you roast the 'mallow. – and put's her in your sleeping bag. When the 'mallow's flaming, she comes for you... YOU'RE A TARD!

Yes, it is... that was dumb even for her... the sh*it your girls say...

It has a yellow stain on it- her bra... yep, I have one more then I can say for you...

you stick to rubbing chocolate- on here okay.

Night at my home campfire-

- You're going to set the place on fire, sleeping with her out under the stars... holding hands- yes please - you cover all that up- Naked girls Naked girl- it with the other end you zip the bag you two. - Make me one of those- mountain pies things and she and I will share it in a kiss-ie bite- and turn you all on or off. Just suck face and get it over with said the one.

I don't like that chocolate stuff- said the one girl...

How the HELL do you not like chocolate as a girl?

Kind of messy, but good...

Yah kind of like- a boy- kind of messy, but good... Try some nah- I knew it.

Okay. Quiet, you guys.

- (Chattering about boys and what they have and don't have...) - Shh! Shh! Dad is over there- looking at us... Quiet! Are you trying to wake everyone up? Look at these two... go... I just went to go to bed, but no- I have to look and hear this... the air in this tent is 100% cummie and fart... Shh! Weeee nooo.... That was the Beast one ever I hear her say. – what the fart? NO.

- Oh, yeah! - Shh!

-Jeez, – Dang-dongs.

Shh.

Now quiet.

They said- until forever.

Forever.

Forever.

Forever.

Forever.

Forever.

(Echoing in my mind.)

You guys are just making this up to scare me.

Oh, yeah?

Stick your head out that window... oh, that was just your dad over the way sleeping- not a bear, not a bear... it's all good.

All those stories getting to you- yeah, I peed myself a little at the showed... I know that fat butt wants to make us freak us if he can.

...And look down- to see if any boys are creeping on us out here... we know that if we stay out here past 10:00 dad going to go and we can do whatever... so shh.

And that what took place... no boys that night just girlie time... under the stars...

Dad finally came around- after giving up on me, and his- well church of 30th years.

Julie- That night I learned that more than softballs... and a girl had a bit that what I'll call it... and my game started-

(New night)

Wow- first hit and it had gone over that fence, and not one of them was ever seen again, that ball was gone... and here it is a ball that was signed by your pap, and I have it funny how things happen. It's yours for being mine- like fate or something...

- even when some brave kid... went to get it to brave she could not- but I knew it was there and I have it for you 10 years later.

- Because when they went over, they vanished, those boys knew that- but us girls are fearless... I knew it was true, that he played here...

- Because when I looked down the line on the past

I knew; he was from these parts... growing up...

Stays with me- forever, she said- as I remember THE Shut Generation... thinking back- anyways... forever we said- no longer in puppy love, it was love.

- Come on, give it to me. - I want to carry it, and hold on to it forever...

(in her hand)

- Come on. I paid for it. - I want to carry it.

(Looking at it)

- Oh. Whoa! - Give it to me... and you keep mine... (She passed two years ago.)

(This is all I have... now...)

- What's the matter? – Jeez... I thought now that, I have lived my life... (going down a completely alternative story... yet, I remember what could have been- that year- playing softball.)

- Whoa! - Wow (smack) Run- Run - There goes, my baby!

It's time to go home, alone tonight girls... so you all have some family time... and time away, what can I do What can I do? Now I'm alone so all alone Whoa-oaoa no- there crying for each other... There goes my baby in the car... - Whoa, I- I- I- I don't know what I-ah-um going to do.

There she goes she calling my name- Whoa-oa-oa... come on, let's go Mom said.

We gotta get – home on time tonight without you balling about it! Did she really love me - Mom- ah- Yes! And I worried about you two- become insuperable- with each other. You're never- ever apart. And what's wrong with that? She said questionably... Nothing really- Mom said back with hesitation.

The night was long, and I did not sleep without her; like- next to me... as you would have imagined.

She and I - Come on. Let's go

Let's go! Come on! 3- and 0... let's do this...

– Okay... (Everyone is Gossiping about us.) -Was she just playing the game... We gotta get to the Softball field. Let's go.

Look at her she is a painting I'm sweating like a pig needing mud.

Where have you guys been Liz and Jodi? Now we have a team on the other side... let's go. We've been waiting here forever already. Jodi was pervin' with a boy and that's why. - Shut up. I wasn't.
-

Yeah, yeah, you

Your tongue was hangin' out of your head- ha and hang on his she said, and you were swoonin', SHUT UP! OH, SHE

JUST MADE FOR SHE NOT GETT'N IT, LIKE SEXY OVER

HERE. Oh, Jodi Shane, my darling lover girl. (Chuckles made by the girls all around.) I said shut up! I've got a lot of things on my mind. Rubbing heads is not one of them... or shaking hands... no, but feasting is? Said the girl over number 10... that no one really liked. This pop isn't working, Havilahny.

Keep um- coming like before- what up with you today- no sleep that's what... and it too hot- she has her sleeves rolled up- nice bra... It's 100 degrees out here- you can look at it. You can't play softball, and the one girl walked up to her and rip her number 14 shirt all the way down both sides making it show her tummy to... like a really loose tank top. – there how do you like that... there just boobs get over it.

(Young- boys are going to be shouting for her...)

- You have to call it for the day it's too freaking hot- we should just go swimming- like butt naked. - You got to listen to her, Havilahny. And cool down some... look at you... Vote then. Anybody who wants to be... here said- (I) Not one girl- that end up naked in the pond... and it was dusking- look at these nasty girls- said the one Mom- oh well said mine- it hot and there young. (See all the girls in low light?

Splashing about... yelling... and playing.)

Fine, fine, fine!

Be home at 11:00- Okay- she yelled and it echoed.

So, what are we going to do? She said as they were side by side... (both girls are laughing) Look two freak pool, honey! Over the way... said their girlfriend... making fun.

(New day it's raining thunder storming.) Mud-a- sliding...

Julie- Havilahny would've played ball all day, all day, rain, like, tidal wave, and whatever- love the look of the matted down hair said the one girl. Look at us... like a wet dog- said the one- yah small too. (Thought- Softball was the only thing she cared about... other than me.) But of all the things- we had us- and softball, at the time that was all we needed. Or going to the pool was what he tolerated best if plans changed.

Sleepover- going throw dad's stash-

Even though none of us had ever seen a Playboy magazine, we knew what we wanted to look like- never going to look like that down there I said- why- don't ask... well, those are some boobs she has- yah you wish right... nah- I like just a tank and that's it... feeling like a boy- look at all the fuzz on that thing- u-ha, right? Nah, look at this one... now say I gross- too. Ha- ha- ha... don't look at it- or were lezzie too!

Which we constantly lied about now wanting yet really did- see my girl was 2 years older see and have and doing before all of us, so yeah you get it. we figured going to the pool was the next best thing to being one of those girls- we wanted so to be. I remember you- like this for always- Oh, sexy girl- she said like a weirdo.

(Funny I do.)

Hey, girls- look at this one too... what now play doctor...? Um-hum...

like what you see? She runs out of the tent- hot night outside with the girls was the best thing ever- never- ever wanting the sun to come up...

Night swimming- Cannonball!

(Screaming... I am nak-ie... who jones me?)

- Aw, Girl. - Yeah, yeah.

Too cool.

She doesn't know what she's doing, up there on the board... nice P*ss the girl said... she rubs and said yeah you like...?

(Ashleigh) She doesn't know what she's doing- there or there...

What did you want to show her how it's done?

Sure- she said back to that...

(Havilahny) Yeah, she does.

She knows exactly what she's doing, said the other one... the whole time was in the water... looking at her standing there dripping. I've swum here every summer of my young life - some with her some of them all was in the buff, like a hidden spot- away from all wondering eyes.

Were we girls could be girls...

I can't take this anymore! And she and I did the most desperate thing... you'd - had ever seen- with your eyes. Two little girls were no longer innocent... UM- she said- Let's just do this- One day it became too much... and this girl made out on the board and went all the way in front of us all- BUMPER-TO- BUMPER:

Vagina-to-vagina, JOHNSON BAR'n- MAKE SCISSORS OF SOMEONE- hard coring... said the one girl... in a Y'all... woo! (Chuckles- look at them go... she showed what she know's- right girls- she said- like Napoleon a little French d*ick- that she is.) - What's wrong with them not caring about us looking at this? There in the mood that all- you'll get it when you're older. - What's she doing to her? If you don't get it don't ask...!!!

(One summer of this... and it lasted a lifetime with me.) I think she finally snapped- said the youngest of us all- never seeing this. I don't know... SHUT UP AND LOOK- But that's WRONG- then go to the deep end, and swim alone.

(Giggles!)

- Somebody help- her she mooning! -

Squints! Are made at her for being dumb...

Somebody help- her! Come on! Really- you don't know...Move back. Move back- she said. - Come on, Lizzy you don't get it? She is rolling over looking at her sawing- you are dumb- that was good. Never mind! Never mind! She was red-faced... still not getting it. - Come on, - Come on! I'll let you in on it over there in a swim... - Come on, Squints. Come on. Like you need to wake up. - Come on, breathe and I tell you? You can do it! Pull it and moving at about, bud!

- Come on, Girl! Come on! - Yeah, yeah. she looks pretty no- here do this.

Oh, God, she looks like a dead fish there help her.

(girls) What?

- This magic moment for a girl like you - (Muffled Grunts)
- (Screams) Little pervert! - So different- is this she said... oh, - 8-year-olds.

- Oh, Girl, she's in deep in that sh*it. - And so new to it- lay off some-

Until I kissed you- and made you feel okay you were like her so- remember that.

And then it happened...

It took me her and them by surprise- it rocked... out of her- new to all of us too... what was that? I knew that you felt it too... be what was that? - By the look in her eyes, it was a rush of spraying out! Softer than the summer night sounds heard then the rain pounding down... it was- she said.

This is what it like for she and I- Everything I want from her and more- she now you not saying crap to us. Whenever I hold you tight- I feel like you do now...

The magic moment-

While your lips are close to mine, it right...

This feeling will last forever and ever... and you'll want more and more... if you find the one. Oh, hey, here's your glasses. Did you plan that? Of course, I did. I have been planning it for years. You guys, she planned that right- that! she knew what he was doing! Right?

Yes, it fine... I think... Oh, the magic she the young one of us walked a little taller the next day. We had to tip our hats to her for it. We wouldn't have blamed her for bragging. Not another one among us would've ever in a million years... get there as she did.

She had kissed a Girl, at 8... never... would I- her Mom said, that all she knew thank God.

And she had kissed her long and good too. What is wrong with this generation- nothing but shuts, all this came from you being with those to sin- a*s playing softball- it needs to stop. NO- she cried- there the best thing ever to happen to me. She got banned from the pool- whole forever that day. She was missed but we moved on... But- like now- every time she walks by after that, we saw her give a thumbs up- like giving a sing- remembering that- that magic moment and we all smiled.

'All my ladies, listen up If that boy ain't giving up. Just lick your lips and swing your hips Girl all you got to say is- My name is no. My sign is no.

My number is no. You need to let it go.

You need to let me go. Need to let you think go'.

-Meghan Trainor

- While your lips are close to mine, kiss me and call me mine. O beautiful she is, knees knocking feeling that feeling, girls talking get your glove and come on. - What's the big deal? Hooked on a feeling... it now the- Night game. Come on. Come on. - Mom, I'm going out! In emancipating conflict... of flying balls- ready to be hit, I see her run... all it right with the world, with me.

She was my girl-

Hold my hands- kiss me in the night- (Fireworks Whistling after the game.) Who more than- self- the country loved we were?

Late-night- she had to take a nap- her head on my lap. I shook her softly to get her up... come on- wait up- I whispered in her eye moving the hair away- then kissing her cheek! - On the of July... the whole sky would brighten up with fireworks, giving us just enough light for a game. We played our best then because, I guess, we all felt like the big leaguers... Now we- be- under -them- the lights, I hold her butt with both hands before the game stats... I know how she loves that... of some great stadiums.

Havilahny, felt like that all the time- not want to let go of each other.

We all knew she was going to go on to bigger and better games, at some point... but she was mine for the summer. Because every time we stopped to watch the sky, I saw nothing but her running in my mind now and forever... on those nights like regular preteenagers, she was always there to call us back to her- not let me go.

You see, for us, softball was a game and the game was- us- playing it and each other. But for Havilah, softball was life- and manly for me... loving it- and her loving me for it. Okay, hit it! One on first, one on second- run for home. (Girls are Shouting run- run- run you: S of A- B.) - O beautiful- for spaces sky- under sapphire- blue and deep purple mountains some time feeling her majesty... all I thought, was about her and feel those feelings in and out- And every jot divine- Yeah, yeah, come on come for her and with her playing with me.

(Fireworks whistling, crackling over our hands her head is on my chest, her fingers rubbing my body- she troweling my hair in her fingers.) Havilahny, for spacious skies, IT WAS SHE AND I! This was the need of the innocents- her hair falling all around me. Above the fruited plain, she was all mine... I was not sharing with any boy- ever, not for one single minute.

I'm talking about- Her- sweet- Her loving- her like- I love it here in America. You know- God did she'd lady her grace on thee- ha like me. He-He-He crowned they don't get us- but we get us- that all that matters.

Yes, she did. – Girl, it was love- and nothing but it! - From sea to shining sea, shall never- ever- ever- ever- leave me! We spent hours there that night. Just lay here with me... hart betting- feeling, seeing touching... eyes looking into eyes... heavy breathing- for each other.

Back off! A boy was next to her asking too many questions- as dumb boys do.

Run!

With me to get to back off... - Come on! Hurry up! - First! Into the woods... as you can think things happened there to... yet I let that out and of to your mind to go there. Come on!

Come on! Come on! - Come on! Hurry up! - Go, Havilahny!

Yeah, yeah! I no PG, right?

Think dirty- YOU NO YOU WANT TO!

Oh okay, kiss me here... is all she said to me... under the thick trees.

(She and I are Groaning) - Oh, damn!

New game- new day new start to whatever this is... Throw it in! Throw it in! - Get her! Get her!

7

Noon. In our field. Oh, no! Fighting- with the girls over there over a boy - Shut your mouth, Phillips. - What'd you say, crap face? I said you shouldn't even be allowed to touch a softball or my boyfriend... his mine not yours ever! PISS on you- you doesn't own him. you're all an insult to the game, and to him, get off my team I had to say. Come on! We'll take you on right here, right now! And I did- catfight- one of those hand slapping types were no one gets hurt yet the hair is pulled... and shit is said you don't mean. (All Shouting in agreement and arguments.) -

Come on! -

You ain't good enough to lick the dirt off our cleats like you? - Watch it, jerk. - Shut up, idiot!

- Moron!

- F-n shut!

- Butt sniffer!

- P*ss licker!

- Fart smeller!

- C*mm-ie guzzler (Sniffing) Ah! From the girls...      You eat her crap and others down there for breakfast, lazing geek.

You mix your undies with your mama's jam in them and don't care you still wear um!

- OUUUUHHHAAAh!

- Right on I said.

You bob for apples in the toilet and suck on the shit!

- Unlike you, I never took a dump on some girl's chest or sat on her face - lick and stick that all I saying!

- Ooh. - You play ball like a girl!

I am a girl-

Really?

Pee-drinking crap face!

D-* -C-K- suck!

V*g- slip breath.

What did you say?

- You heard me.

(at this time, they did know what they all meant yet it was to see who was the best at it.
Swearing that is...)

(There all Laughing at me...)

Break it up- the old guys are now on the field.

Tomorrow- okay I said to her blood run down her face- from getting hit in the nose.

All Right- no girls it is over-

Yeah!

Let's go!

We're going to kick their butts tomorrow.

Yeah! I remember saying.

- Good job. -Jerks. I sit in my hand and shake hers on the other side.

Pre-game- Come on ask her for me.

Do you think she'd go out with me? One girl in the field asked me about my sister... sure I can do that- what want to be like us? Umm hum... - Let's see what you got- what this- no not that- let the waistband of your pants go- God.

Play ball! Hurry up, batter. It's going to be a short game, and I got to get home for lunch today. (snickers for other girls- daddy going to bath you too...) That's one. Sucked hard for it was true, yet she plays with it...! What's daddy say about that- he knows... SHUT UP- it's not something to talk about.

The batter said from the other team- The Swingin' Singles ladies- You know, if I had a dog as ugly as you, I would have killed it by hanging it on my flower pot hook outside my door. The heater. I said- I'd shave her P*ssy and tell her to walk on her hands for me. And she missed the ball by a mile and throw the batt in the swing... it that girl in the girl box with it... both looking at me with that pelvic bone vag slap -face look- you know bent overlooking up- all goog-a-lie- 2- Here it comes, in the teeth... why play dirty... and hardcore said the one girl on my team. I dare you-you to do it again- yelp- she did and chipped her tooth... good times- good times... Strike three.

You're out- and she went home to daddy crying- sitting naked in the bath for him to wash the blood off for talking crap to my girl!

Hey, is that your sister out there in left field, naked? She was targeted by one of the fighters on the other side, like before... she went for the bottoms and rip them down her legs, this time there were no undies on her small body- for she was not having a repeat of before... so- this was better Mom said. You know the sexy call she got for that one by the cowards... - She's naked. - Shut up...! Hey, hey, hey, look at the little fuzzball out there...

-I'm just trying to have a little friendly conversation with her Mom know what we have to put up with these two. Come on. Show me your stuff, she said... I see it but it doesn't get old.

- Hey, batter, batter, batter! See this-

(she points over and over) this is my butt- (she bent some to the left- butt popped and pushed out to the one side) - yo- you- kiss it! Nice but hun now um- ah- cover it up!

- Take him out! - (Girls are shouting- things that would get your mouth washed out with soap.)
- Come on! - Bring it!
- Oh! Beat ya... Home- safe!

Throw it to third!

Got it- Got it- um- don't get it- UMM-ha- they both hit hard- the coward- ow-wah! That's going to hurt! Eyes tighten and squinting... in feeling pain... (this is footballing no need to pull on the shirt dumb girl...)

Jullie- We were all walking in midair that night or so it seemed. It had been a rock-hard win. We beat the crap out of those gals in more than one way. So, we all went to celebrate - up at the cream stand- an old train station made into this. (Sniffing... she was...) The best! We've done all summer girls. Mom-Jeez, Girl. I suppose prod of you... and your grandfather would be too. Come on. I want some of your Ice-cream to let me have a lick. Sick- sick said, one girl. - Mm. Mm.

Mm. she said- o-uh you're all sickie- yah I am- so you like my cheek too?

- Yeah! - Yeah!

Mm!

- Yeah-hah! - Yeah!

You two stop before I yack on the cream...

All right!

Yeah!

While I'm gone, you're the Girl of the house.

Understand? - Where are you going? – Chicago overnight... so you are here in New York- as a grown-up for the weekend... - Okay. - Okay. On business for a week... is what your dad said- so that is why I going with him... you get it... Yes,

Mom... keep um- next to you...

- Take care of things for me.

- Okay.

- All right? - I will.
- Okay.

Be a good girl... said dad, like I was 5 years old.

- I will. - Okay.

Hey girls- I have some of my dad's- Tequila and we all chugged it down- the next day was so awesome- (Vomiting) - (Vomiting) - (Vomiting) Oh, that feels better. Thank you: crapper rim for being cold... Oh, okay. Mom was cool about its dad no... his little girl was the shut off the century... and that was not what he wanted with me. Mom- Honey, are you feeling all right? You look kind of pale. - I'm fine, Mom. - Are you sure? - I'm fine. – I am all right.

There was more nakedness in one home then your eyes would have believed those nights... But the day we all got back together for some softball... the same weekend in the mud... ass naked this time- even more fun playing in the thunderstones said, one girl. Mud'slide'n... it was just us girls we knew agents well us girls... so, 5 and 5. It was the day I got us into the biggest pickle of all time, the day I got my period and it ran- inform them all.

Oh, Girl.

I don't believe it.

- Bitchin'. (Havilahny)

Nah, it ain't yes, it is I would no- oh wow.

Like- you ever busted the guts out of a ball- that how she is feeling now.

- Must be an omen- no it not like that- does your Mom teach you anything? - All's it means are you getting older. It's only a week of hell: and I just ruined the whole day for us, boys get off easy in life... no? said the one girl. No, you didn't.

That's the most amazing thing I ever saw, said the one... why?

So, we keep making more of us... I heard Mom say about it.

Game over-

- Yeah. - (Havilahny) Anybody got any money we-can go to a movie? What, you got extracents lying around, Girl? Yep for you... I do. Well just sneak in the back door. Movie? Yeah, we can, (All) No- you girls have fun it will just be she and I. – okay then, 'cause now we can't play no more with this so- we were in the darkroom looking into each other's eyes- you know the love scene was right. Popcorn and kissing... freaking out all the old men in the room too... by feeling her up. We walk off and I hear- I got it, guys! I got it! I got the ball, guys! It was the saddest feeling ever- yet I was with her so... you win some you lose some... I got it. Right here, guys... I see the ball in her hand as I walk off feeling like crap. I got the ball.

I got it.

Batter up! One week later or so- Here, Havilahny. I got it. - Bitchin'. Your ball to pitch, you're up, God it feels good to play some- Here you go... coming your way

- Okay. All right. Come on. Sheridan, here. Come on. Yeah, come on! Fastball! She said.

(Sighs) Your fly's open, oh yeah just getting some air up in there... that all- I no. Yah you-a got-a air it out- a sometimes- all part of being a woman...

(Snickers) HA- ha- ha! The look she gave- just flipping killed us...

(All) Hey, batter, batter, batter! Swing...

You suck-

'You suck at life- shut up!' There's one.

One, two, three.

Three strikes, three pitches.

- Come on, Girl! - Hey, batter, batter, batter!

Oh, my freaking lord-e.

Oh, Girl.

- Run! – dumb sh*it run- Yes!

Way to go, school beat meat!

I taught her everything she knows.

Everything....!

...?...!

Me- Oh, Girl, that was great.

Her- That went clear over.

Her- Hey, uh, Girl, third base is that way.

We won...

8

The 4th. Mom- Hey, that my Girl. Dad- Girl you're doing it. Said up in the stands... - Go to third. - Oh, no. Oh, no.

Yeah! Nice hit, Girl. Nice hit. Yeah! Said, my dad. - Oh, no. - It's outta here! She said. Who's got the bat hits now? This -> girl <- right here. She double points at her chest over and over.

Yells- Girl! Yells-

Woo's too. 'What she doing rubbing her nipples said one girl...?' Ha- all of them were giggling. Maybe the shock of his first homer was just too much for her. Yeah. And she thought she could only pitch? She got home- good for her... beginners' luck... We got to get that ball back. - Oh, yeah, right- it's on. - Good one, Girl. - (Laughing) Yeah, the good one, Girl.

God- I feel all sweaty- you were it well- I said to her. Gross...! Eyes looking at me weirdly down the line for saying it. (Are you kidding me look mixed with repulsed, and loathing.)

- Fagot!

- Whoa, what? I said... ah-

(sighing) defending her like always.

- That the dude- dude?

One of the others said.

- Oh- she looks up dumbly.

- Yep! I said shaking my head... side to side... left and right- you get you're not a dumb bum like she is... or are you...?

Hey, forget about it, Girl.

Let's get another ball game.

‘Yen-all No, if you don't understand it! And yen all don't get what you're saying they don't say if- you look like a dumb bum! - she said.’

Listen to me, Girl.

It's a matter of life and death, just get smarter... before talking crap about her.

The story started-

Did you play with the babe? - Played with him in a field? - Yeah, but I was going to bring it- what the ball I have- but I knew how you girls would be about it. - signed by Babe Ruth... yep. This is true... I have seen it... like I have seen all of her... she giggles... like I smoothing you're not.

Yeah. Yeah. Yeah. I don't believe it- You keep telling me that. Who is she? He was a New York Yankee, to do what was never- ever done- and what was that- suck a bass ball bat with no teeth...? Said the girl... funny... I said not giggling. George Herman Ruth Jr. was an American professional baseball player whose career in Major League Baseball spanned 22 seasons, from 1914 through 1935. With the most hits ever...

What?

What?

(Together) Babe Ruth!

The Great Bambino!

Oh, my God! You mean that's the same guy?

(All) Yes!

It's now 1947 lookup girls there he is sitting in the stands... yes, that one... right there.

Wow, that man?

Girl, Babe Ruth is the greatest softball player that ever lived.

That night ended with all the girls getting a hug... and strong wording... of how we're not like him- yet just a little like him in playing the game. I like this one she flashed me... he said. You wanna play- nah- that up to you no- I really can't.

I had a dream that night about a giant softball...

All the tanks are now signed by Babe Ruth... it was the last game... anyways and now look at this little tank I wore back then... and here is hers... forever a part of our lives.

9

75 years passed-

Yah, I tried too I kept in touch with those girls over the years, yet we grow up and apart. I found out that After high school year past, but as you would get, they all made their own lives. Of course, we all know why boys take over jobs and moving on. Form the small town- just outside New York. The mouthy girl I never saw her again after that summer. Celia and Ashleigh became an architect, good work for a woman of the moving past the ways of the 50' and finally making it in the 1960s. The field became, a junkyard- now too small, for modern kids to play in... or so they say, it's not good enough.

Yet, it was never- ever about that- being good enough- it was about fun and the game, kids today not know that... they never see this, they don't want to. My old houses were ripped down- and now has nothing but weeds gowning... in the land lot that it once was. Her home became mini-malls in the 1950s and now look like a dump- funny that's when you know you lived too long seeing it being built and then ripped down too. Bethany Peffercorn is now married and passed 5 years ago- her kids don't even care to hear the story. They have nine kids a- paces or so- they are brats, that care only about here on little lives.

Shanaya Deshaun she became a professional writer- for a newspaper- she was hit by a car in a Walmart parking lot in the year 2014 or something like that. Me or my girl never got to the majors, but we dreamed- something kids don't do anymore- and that has a dream. One girl's man- (can't remember her name...) like- he owns his own business for a while and lost everything- including her, and the coaches a little league team... in Pennsylvania.

I was the last one to move away when the town was shut down and forgotten... and me... the same... all I have is this tank- the black and white photo, and my fading mommies... and like this story to it will be forgotten. That's all I have to say- that is my story... you won't be seeing me again... old age well gets you.

The others are no longer with us... I have the names and dates here... I am the last one on the team as always...

10

Last pitch- I said looking at the photo- saying it weekly- holding the ball- shaking- that brought us together... I'll see you for a new game... ha- The Shut Generation.

(You can see the ball on the stone- next to her old friend- were it to fade to nothing- but dust- in the wind like on the softball field. – for she had no one to pass it down too- that took an interest in her ball or story in the new generations- that's why it is here.)

<3

(Jaylynn's story of being ever-so- transfixed)

One apron a time there, was once an ironic gentleman whose wife lay sickening, with cancer, and when she felt her finish coming, and portrayal close... she christened- to her only daughter to come near her bed, and said: 'darling teenager, be moral, ethical, honest and virtuous, and God, and the one above, that sing the phrase all the days, will always take care of you, in times of low; and, I will look down upon you from heaven high, and will be with you, till the end of your days.'

Besides, then she fastened her eyes and passed to that place where all they do is sing, and love, unlike this world we all live. The girl went every single day to her mother's headstone, and cried, and was continuously devout and respectable.

As soon as the wintertime arose, the snowflake, icy, and slush covered the gray stone with a silvery cold feeling, casing with a covering, and when the sunshine originated in the premature spring of flower- blossom, and bud, then melted away, the gentleman he took to himself another companion.

The new companion brought two young teenage descendants' girl's- home with her, besides they were gorgeous, stunning, attractive, and elegant, in addition to that impartial in attendance, nevertheless, at emotion, core, and heart, were obscure, dark, and horrible, and so-o nasty. Besides, then commenced very wicked, malevolent, spiteful, mean, and evil times, for the unfortunate underprivileged stepdaughter.

'Is the stupid creature to sit in the same room with us?' Said they; 'those who eat food must earn it. She is nothing but a kitchen-maid!' They took away her pretty dresses, and put on her an old gray kirtle, and gave her wooden shoes to wear.

'Just gaze now at the delighted princess, how she so-o decked out!' blubbered they are chuckling, and amusement, and then they directed her into the galley.

Around she was obliged to do weighty work from morning to night, get up early in the morning, draw water, be the chef for them, make the fires, and wash-down, and do all the crap-ie jobs.

As well that, the sisters did their greatest to nuisances to her just to get at her- mocking her, in all ways even when she just wants- 'me time' and scattering peas, besides lentils amongst the fragments, also setting her to pick them up.

Trendy in the twilights, when she was moderately exhausted out with her hard day's work, she had no bed to lie on but was appreciative to rest on the family life among the embers.

Above, and beyond, for the reason, that she continuously at all times, looked dusty and dirty, and grubby, and crusty, as if she had slept in the ashes, sanders, and remnants; they named her Jaylynn.

The aforementioned happened, one day that the daddy went to the fair, and he enquired his two stepdaughters what he ought to fetch back for them. 'Fine outfits!'

'Gems and pieces of jewelry!'

'Nonetheless, what will you have, Jaylynn...?'

'The foremost understand, daddy, that forays in contradiction of your hat on the way home ; that is what, I, myself, for one, should- um- like for you to fetch me- like- now.'

So, he bought for the two step-daughters fine dresses, clothes, garments, and outfits, treasures, and charms, gems, and on his way back, as he rode through a jade lane, a hazel stick collide with against his hat; in addition, he penniless it off, and carried it home with him.

Besides, when he reached home, he gave to the step-daughters what they had wished for, and to Jaylynn, he gave the hazel stick.

She thanked him and went to her mother's grave, and established this stick there, weeping so-o, severely, that the sobbing, droplets fell upon it and soaked it, and it throve and turn out to be some good strong, up till now, young, tree.

Jaylynn went to see it three times a day and cried and prayed, and each time, a silver birdie ascended from the tree, and if she articulated any wish the birdie carried her of any kind, she had desired, wanted, and longed for...

Here and now it happened, that the Ruler certain a centenary, that ought to last for three days, and to which all the attractive, lovely, young, sweet, lady teen of that kingdom was bidden, so that the King's young teen-ager lad, might choose a bride from among them.

As soon as the five stepdaughters heard that they too were bidden to give the impression, they felt selfsame satisfied, and they baptized Jaylynn, and said, 'Comb our hair, brush our shoes, and make our buckles fast, we are going to the wedding feast at the King's big French-likee castle, that was at the end of a sparkly long village.'

After she heard this, Jaylynn, could not help crying, for she too would have liked to go to the ball, and she begged her stepmother to permit her.

'What! You Jaylynn!'

'In all your dust, dirt, and muckiness, you want to go to the jubilee!'

'You, that have no gown, besides no shoes!'

'You want to dance!'

Nevertheless, as she keeps it up in requesting, at last, the stepmother alleged, 'I have strewed a dishful of lentils in the ruins of sanders, and if you can pick them all up o'er in five hours or like- so-o you may go with us.'

Formerly the maiden went to the back-door, that ran into the orchard, and called out, 'Oh-tender doves, Oh- Oh- turtle-doves, and all the birds that be, hear me- the lentils that in ashes lie, arise and pick up for me! The moral essential be put in the dish, the immoral you may eat if you wish.'

Then there came to the kitchen-window five white doves, and after them some turtle-doves, and at last a crowd of all the birds under heaven, chirping and fluttering, and they alighte d among the ashes; and the doves nodded with their heads, and began to pick, peck, pick, peck, and then all the others began to pick, peck, pick, peck, and put all the good grains into the dish. Before an hour was over all was done, and they flew away.

Then the earliest brought the dish to her stepmother, feeling elated, and rational, that now she should go to the banquet; but the step-mother said, 'No, Jaylynn, you have no appropriate garments, and you do not know how to dance, and you would be giggled at!'

Besides, when Jaylynn, cried for dissatisfaction, she added, 'If you can pick five dishes full of lentils out of the ruins, nice and clean, you shall go with us;' discerning to herself...

'For that is not likely.'

When she had thrown five plates full of lentils amongst the ashes the maiden went through the back-door into the orchard, and wept, the lentils that in ashes lie Come and pick up for me! 'Oh - Oh- calm doves, Oh- turtle-doves, besides all the birds that be, the good must be put in the dish, the bad you may trouble if you demand.'

So, there came to the kitchen-window five white doves, and then some turtledoves, and at last a crowd of all the other birds under heaven, tweeting and panicking, and they alighted among the remains, and the doves nodded with their heads and began to preference, kiss, élite, smooch, and then all the others commenced to choose, kiss, pick, peck, and lay all the good ounces into the plate.

Besides, to that earlier half-an-hour was over it was all finished, and they flew away. Previously, the earliest took the dishes to the step-mother, feeling thrilled, and thinking that now she should go with them to the dinner; but she said, 'All this is of no good to you; you cannot come with us, for you have no proper dresses, and cannot dance; you would put us to disgrace.' Then she turned her back on poor Jaylynn and made haste to set out with her five proud daughters.

Furthermore, as there was no one left in the house, Jaylynn, went to her mother's tombstone, under the hazel lush bush, and, cried sobbed, 'Slight tree, petite tree, shake over me, that shiny and gilded may come down, and cover me.' Then the bird threw down an article of clothing and types of dresses, and a pair of slippers overstated with silk and silver. And in all haste, she put on the dress and went to the celebration.

Nevertheless, her stepmother and sisters did not know her and believed she must be an overseas Princess, she looked so beautiful in her white into a pink dress. Of Jaylynn, they never thought at all, and hypothetical, that she was sitting at home, and picking the lentils out of the vestiges.

The King's son came to meet her, and took her by the hand and danced with her, and he rejected to stand up with anybody else so that he might not be obliged to let go her hand, to hold and her to kiss all over; and when anyone came to claim it he answered, 'She is my lover.'

Moreover, when the evening came, she wanted to go home, but the Prince said, he would go with her to make love- and more love in and of her, for he wanted to see where the beautiful girl lived.

Nevertheless, she escaped him and jumped up into the sucker-house. Then the Prince waited until the father came, and told him the strange girl had jumped into the sucker-house.

The father thought to himself, 'It surely cannot be Jaylynn,' and called for hatchets, and had the sap house cut down, but there was no one in it.

Above and beyond when they entered the house there sat Jaylynn in her dirty clothes among the cinders, and a little oil lamp burnt dimly in the chimney; for Jaylynn had been very speedy, swift, and had hoped, and skipped out of the dupe house again, and had run to the hazel grasslands; and there she had taken off her lovely dress and had laid it on the grave and was standing in her undergarments, and the bird had carried it away again, and then she had put on her little steely kirtle over, and had sat down in the kitchen among the cinders.

The day next, when the commemoration began once more, and the parents and step-sisters had gone to it, Jaylynn, only age 13, went to the hazel bush and cried, 'Slight tree, petite tree, shake over me, that silvery and gilded may come down and cover me.'

Then the bird cast down a still more splendid dress than on the day before.

And when she appeared in it among the guest's everyone was astonished at her beauty. The Prince had been waiting until she came, and he took her hand and danced with her alone. And when anyone else came to invite her he said, 'She is my partner.' And when the evening came, she wanted to go home, and the Prince followed her, for he wanted to see to what house she belonged; but she broke away from him, and ran into the garden at the back of the house.

There stood a fine large tree, bearing splendid pears; she leaped as lightly as a squirrel among the branches, and the Prince did not know what had become of her.

So, he waited until the father came, and then he told him that the strange maiden had rushed from him and that he thought she had gone up into the pear tree. The father thought to himself, 'It surely cannot be Jaylynn,' and called for an ax, and felled the tree, but there was no one in it. And when they went into the kitchen there sat Jaylynn among the cinders, as usual, for she had got down the other side of the tree, and had taken back her beautiful clothes to the bird on the hazel bush, and had put on her old gray kirtle again.

On the third day, when the paternities and the stepchildren had set off, Jaylynn, went once more to her mother's grave, and said to the tree, 'Slight tree, petite tree, shake over me, that silvery and gilded may come down and cover me.' Then the bird cast down a dress, the like of which had never been seen for splendor and brightness, and slippers that were of gold.

Besides, when she looks as if in this dress at the feast nobody knew what to say for wonderment. The Prince danced with her alone, and if someone else asked her he replied, 'She is my wife and lover.'

Then when it was evening Jaylynn, wanted to go home, and the Prince was about to go with her, when she ran past him so hurriedly, that he could and would not follow her.

But he had laid a plan and had instigated all the steps to be spread with pitch, so-o that as she hurried down them the left shoe of the girl remained penetrating in it.

The Prince picked it up and saw that it was of gold, and very minor and slim.

The next morning, he went to the father and told him that no one should be his wife-to-be save the one whose foot the golden shoe should fit.

Then the five sisters were very glad, for the reason that, they had pretty feet. The firstborn went to her room to try on the shoe, and her mother stood by.

But then again, she could not get her great toe into it, for the shoe was too small; then her mother handed her a knife, and said, 'Cut the toe off, for when you are Queen you will never have to go on foot.'

So, the girl cut her toe off, enfolded her foot into the shoe, concealed the pain, and went down to the Prince. Then he took her with him on his horse as his bride and rode off.

They had to pass by the grave, and there sat the five pigeons on the hazel bush, and cried, 'There they go, there they go! There is blood on her shoe; The shoe is too small, not the right bride at all!'

Then the Prince looked at her shoe and saw the blood flowing. And he twisted his horse round and took the false bride home again, revering she was not the right one, and that the other sister must try on the shoe.

So, she went into her room to do so and got her toes comfortably in, but her heel was too large.

Then her mother handed her the knife, saying, 'Cut a piece off your heel; when you are Queen, you will never have to go on foot.' So, the girl cut a piece off her heel, and thrust her foot into the shoe, concealed the discomfort, agony, and went down to the Prince, whom took his fiancée before him on his horse and rode off, for a night they would never- ever forget, as young lovers should.

When they passed by the hazel bush the five chumps sat there and wept, wishing, and hoping for a man, and a life... like hers.

'There they go, there they go! There is blood on her shoe; The shoe is too small, not the right bride at all!'

Then the Prince looked at her foot, and saw how the blood was flowing from the shoe, and staining the white stocking. And he turned his horse around and brought the false bride home again. 'This is not the right one,' said he, 'have you no other daughter?'

'Nope,' said the man, 'only my dead wife left behind her a little stunted Jaylynn; it is unbearable, that she can be the newlywed.'

But then again, the King's son ordered her to be sent for, but the mother said, 'Oh no! she is much too dirty, I could not let her be understood.'

Nonetheless, he would have her fetched, and so Jaylynn had to look as if.

First, she washed her face and hands quite clean, and went in and curtsied to the Prince, who held out to her the golden shoe. Then she sat down on a stool drew her foot out of the heavy made of a wooden shoe, and slipped it into the golden one, which fitted it perfectly.

And when she stood up, and the Prince observed in her expression, he knew another time the lovely young girl that had danced with him, and he cried, 'This is the right bride - I love this girl now and always!'

The step-mother and the five sisters were thunderstruck and grew pale with anger, but he put Jaylynn before him on his horse and rode off.

And as they approached the hazel bush, the five white pigeons cried, 'There they go, there they go! No blood on her shoe; The shoe's not too small, the right fiancée, and love maker for is she, after all, I all I ever wanted- and more.'

And when they had thus cried, they came flying after and perched on Jaylynn's shoulders, one on the right, the other on the left, and so remained.

And when her marriage with the Prince was selected to be held the false sisters came, hoping to curry favor and to take part in the partying.

So, as the wedding processions went to the church, the eldest walked on the right side and the younger on the left, and the sapping suckers, picked out an eye of each of them.

Also, as they refunded the elder was on the left side and the younger on the right and the chumps picked out the other eye of each of them. Then so-o they were predestined to go blind for the rest of their years, days and loves makings to mind and soul, since of their nonsense and tale, was over.

<3

Nevaeh

Book: 63

Moments that Would not Fade Part: 1

(Kristen's life on Earth)

Films of Kristen Deniel

1

The home was falling apart... anyone could see that, and even from the road, even from the car that I was sitting in with my legs hanging out, the side vent window tilted, I could even see that from the road, anyone could see that all the homes to say it- were all just dumps, sorry- I am not holding back on saying the truth; All the homes were not what you would call fine... nevertheless, that was okay with me, after all, it was a home.

Kristen stopped to kiss Gram, and then she was walking toward them, feeling a little shy, but only for a moment, since Noah was pulling Nevaeh - May down the steps, and she could hear him saying, 'It's Kristen, it's my best friend, Kristen,' And there he was with the same mop of dark hair, and those bright blue eyes, and next to him, a girl with the same eyes, and she was smiling too.

And then she saw that Gram was pointing, nodding at her, and smiling. Kristen looked toward the Smiths' house, almost knowing what she was going to see, not believing it could happen, that it was not just Mrs. Meyer waiting at the door. She thought about the cat. Of course, Noah had kept the cat. That meant.

The home was wood in color, just naked standard wood siding- nothing to scream about, yet by the looks of this home, it looks as if someone inside it should be with the lights flickering on and off, like something out of a horror film, or the 1924's. The color and feeling- of that of- starting graying death. And God, look at the door it is just hanging in there on its hinges, like me in a way - like me.

Films of Kristen Deniel

Outside it was almost dark. A sliver of moon curved over the Old Man's mountain, and a lone star was just visible. 'A planet, Kristen,' Green might say. 'Get your astronomy in order.'

If I cried again, the tears would freeze fast to my cheeks.

The snow was so dry I could hear the creaking of my footsteps as I went past the holly bushes. No one could guess they were there, mounded up like soft white pillows, and the river in front of me had disappeared.

I stood still to look at it all. I wondered how I could draw that to show the world underneath: sharp, shiny leaves hidden in the snow, the river running fast and cold under the ice.

In my mind was a picture of Beatrice brushing her hair off her forehead. 'Drawing is a language,' she had said. 'You have to learn to speak it.'

In the distance was the faint sound of a saw: Someone must be cutting wood for a fire. I closed my eyes. Green is and the Old Man turning their heads. Roger saw they would say. He must be in the apple orchard, or Hopper is finally gotten to that dead elm.

No, it was not a saw. It was the sound of a snowmobile, on the other side of the mountain.

A clump of snow fell off the roof of the house. I looked back at it, at the house where I wanted to belong. Huge icicles hung from the eaves, and suddenly I was so cold I could not stay outside anymore. Upstairs in my bedroom, I sat at the edge of the bed shivering, waiting until I was warm; then I went to my backpack and pulled out my films to spread across the bumpy white bedspread.

I saw how much blue I had used in those summer drawings: blue for the river, blue for the Old Man's rugs, blue for Izzy's locket; and green: a smudge of the tree, a leaf, the edge of the mountain. Both colors I loved.

The films I had drawn of Gram lay in the middle of the bed.

Gram on the pier, reaching for seagrass; Gram outside in her tree garden, shades of peach and lilac; Gram happy, Gram where she belonged.

Gram did not belong here. She belonged in her house with Beatrice, and Henry, and the irritable pelican on her wall.

She belonged near the ocean.

I sat there for a long time, my head against the headboard, knowing what I had to do. I rubbed my hands, still icy cold. It was four miles to the telephone outside the grocery store, a long walk, but I could do it. I would call Beatrice... ask her, beg her.

We would go home, Gram and I, Gram to Beatrice, me to another place. I looked at a half-finished picture of Izzy at the cemetery with a vase of daisies in her hand. What had she said that day? 'I wanted children for every corner of the house.' And what else? There was something more she had said, something about Green is and the Old Man. 'It's worse this summer.'

I would have to stop thinking about Izzy, put all of them out of my mind. Before I left, I would get rid of all the films of them, burn the drawings in the fireplace. I would forget about Izzy and the Old Man, forget about Green's.

I stared down at the drawing of Izzy backing out of the door with my WELCOME TO THE FAMILY cake and saw something I had not remembered: The Old Man's hand on Greens' shoulder.

Me, catching my first fish. Green is in front of me with the net, the Old Man smiling. But he is looking at Green is, not at me.

Looking and smiling.

And another: Green's hanging into the engine of a car, just the back of him visible, with mismatched socks, and the Old Man with his hands on his hips, but his eyes are soft.

Beatrice was in my head again. What had she said to me one time? 'Sometimes we learn from our drawings; things are there that we thought we didn't know.'

My lips were suddenly dry.

I stood up, walked around to the other side of the bed. There they were in the boat. Green's laughing at something the Old Man had said.

How had I drawn all that and not seen it?

Of course, the Old Man loved Green's. He was going to love him whether I was there or not. Had I given them up for nothing, the whole family?

What do you know about a family? Green is said in my mind. You have never had one.

I remembered what Izzy had said then: 'They have to find their way.'

I picked up another picture: me with candy in my mouth. Then there was something else floating just on the edge of my mind. Something to do with the radio? Why the radio?

Wait, I told myself. What had Gram said about wanting Santa to bring a radio?

And then I had it. The two of us joking. 'Santa on a sleigh,' I had said.

'That was a hundred years ago. Now he comes on...'

...A snowmobile? To bring the candy? Green's? The pancakes, and the applesauce?

I slid off the bed, the picture drifting out of my hand, my knuckles up to my mouth.

The sweater hanging on the shed doorknob.

Holly on the back step. 'Peace, Kristen.'

I felt as if I could hardly breathe.

And then I was flying down the stairs, my feet barely touching the steps, skittering on the Old Man's shiny floor, coming to a stop in front of Gram asleep on the couch.

I sat down next to her, one hand on Henry's rough fur.

'Wake up, Gram,' I said. 'I want to ask you about Santa Claus.' Films of Kristen Deniel Gram slept through my questions, her head nestled on the couch cushions, and Henry with her, purring faintly with his eyes closed. She slept as I shook her, slept as I begged her, 'Please, Gram, I cannot wait to know,' slept as I offered her soup from a can, Izzy's candy, a cup of tea.

Then, at last, I gave up. I looked at the black square that was the window. The moon had disappeared behind the Old Man's mountain, and the star was gone.

I went into the kitchen to make something to eat: the rest of the tuna with canned pineapple thrown on top, and a few frosted flakes for crunch. I ate it at the kitchen counter, wolfing it down, made hot chocolate, and when it had cooled a little, put it under Gram's nose. 'Smells good, doesn't it? Just open your eyes, take a sip, and talk to me.'

She smiled in her sleep as I kissed her forehead, and then I went upstairs to bed, lying awake for a long time, feeling the tick of my heart in my throat.

The holly had just blown onto the back step. Gram had found the candy in the house. Maybe. Maybe.

But then as I fell asleep, I could almost hear his voice in my head. Merry Christmas, Kristen Copses.

I was awake in the first light the next morning. It was a beautiful day, with sunshine melting the ice on the window. I went downstairs and Gram was still asleep on the couch, but Henry was awake, stretching his skinny legs. I let him out and stood in the doorway, hugging myself, squinting at that glittering world, listening for the sawing sound of a snowmobile.

And then Gram opened her eyes.

I began slowly. 'Christmas was yesterday,' I said.

She smiled at me.

'Santa Claus is coming...' I sang.

'...To town,' she finished.

'He came to us,' I said.

'In all this snow,' she said.

'But what did he look like?'

She ran her hand over her face, thinking. 'He looked cold,' she said.

'And he gave you the candy.'

‘One time,’ she said, ‘when Beatrice and I were little, he brought mittens. Red for Beatrice, blue for me. We each swapped one. All winter, we wore one blue and one red.’

I went over to her and touched her hair. ‘I’m going to call Beatrice,’ I said.

‘Are we going home?’ She asked.

‘Maybe,’ I said. ‘I think so. Can you wait here? It is a long walk to the phone. I’ll be gone most of the morning.’

I heard a few fragments of the song as she wandered into the kitchen. ‘If it takes forever, I will wait...’

I made breakfast for both of us, a heap of frosted flakes; then I layered on sweaters, three pairs of Greens’ socks, my jacket, and turned to Gram for one last try. ‘Where did you get the candy?’ I asked.

‘It’s in a tin box,’ she said. ‘Orange and lemon. Makes your mouth wiggle.’

‘I’ll be back.’ I opened the door, hearing the drip of melting icicles from the roof, and stepped back as Henry darted inside.

Outside I thought at first of taking the road. What difference would it make if I were caught?

But it would make a difference. I wanted to call Beatrice first. I wanted to hear that she had come to live with Gram.

And suppose she does not? Green is asked.

I shook my head. She will. I think she will.

I brushed him away, trudging along through the trees, listening to the call of the crows, the screech of the blue jays. And all the time I was listening for that buzzing sound of the snowmobile, telling myself I had made the whole thing up, telling myself it was not Green’s.

And what if it was Green’s? I asked myself. What would I say to him?

It must have been twenty minutes later when I heard the faint sound of the motor. It could have been anyone, but still, I ran toward the road, trying to pick up my feet in that deep snow .

I saw him, a helmet on his head, thick gloves on his hands, bent over the handles of the snowmobile, and I stepped out onto the road just in time for him to see me and glide to a stop.

I stood there, biting my lip, feeling that river of tears coming, at last, waiting for that brief second as he pushed up the visor. 'Kristen Copses,' he said. 'Where are you going?'

'Green's Regan,' I said, my mouth trembling. 'Happy birthday.'

And then we were laughing, both of us, laughing instead of crying.

'Thank you for the candy,' I said, at last, looking at his face, thinner, bonier. Something about his eyes seemed older.

'Horrible stuff, that candy,' he said.

'And the holly branch.'

He tilted his head a little. 'Kristen Copses,' he said again.

'How did you know I was here?'

He raised one shoulder. 'There was a letter from the agency looking for you.'

I nodded, thinking about the hot cocoa woman sending lost girl letters to every house I had ever been in.

'I told Pop.' Green is swiped at his glasses. "'Kristen loves that house,' I said. But did he listen? Of course not.'

I swallowed. 'You and the Old Man are still arguing.'

'If she loved that house so much, she would be with us right now,' Pop said. But I knew. I've been here every day except during the massive storm.'

I was shivering in the cold, the wind blowing around us, my feet beginning to feel numb.

'We've been hoping you'd come home all these months,' he said. 'Why not, Holly?'

And then I was crying, big sloppy tears. I leaned against the handlebars, making terrible sounds in my throat, and I just could not seem to stop.

Green is stood there, his hands dangling in those huge gloves, and then he reached out, put his arms around me, pulling me toward him.

‘The Old Man went down to Long Island when he heard you were missing,’ he said. ‘He’s going crazy looking for you. He keeps going back and forth.’

‘Why didn’t you tell him?’

‘I wanted to do that for you, at least that. Give you time.’ He paused. ‘You’re famous. Your picture is in the newspapers. A pretty awful-looking picture, if you ask me.’

As he rattled on, I kept sniffing and wiping my eyes, and then I would start to cry again.

‘I knew you’d be safe.’ He took one arm off my shoulder to wave it around. ‘As long as I kept an eye on you and your friend.’

‘You have a nerve,’ I said.

‘You’d have starved to death without the food I brought.’

He frowned and began again. ‘I still don’t know why...’

‘I thought...’ I began and bit my lip. I would never tell him what I had thought about the Old Man not loving him. ‘You were always arguing, and I thought it had to do with...’ I waved my hands.

‘With you?’ he said. ‘Oh, Holly. It does not have to do with anyone. I told you that. It’s just the way we are.’

I stared down the road, not a car in sight, the trees heavy with snow, bent and leaning.

‘I’m a slob and he’s neat. I forget, he remembers. We drive each other crazy. But it’s all right.’

I ran my hands over my cheeks, tried to dry them. As simple as that, just the way they were.

‘I told you,’ he said, his head tilted, his eyes smiling. ‘You don’t know about families yet.’ He leaned back against the snowmobile. ‘He knew the accident was my fault.’

I sighed. ‘It was my fault.’

‘Everything has to be your fault all the time?’

I shrugged a little. 'After the accident, Pop said they'd told him you never stayed in one place very long. But he said we were different, and that it must be something else. And that is what it was? You thought-'

'I messed up the family.' 'Wait till he hears this,' Green is said. 'Just wait.'

I watched the snow drifting off the trees. Old Man, I love you. Green has rubbed my shoulders; he must have seen that I was shivering. 'I put the fishing pole away for you in the shed, and looped the sweater over the knob.'

'The fishing poles?' My hand went to my mouth. 'I forgot about the fishing pole. All this time.'

'Ha, Kristen Copses, there's hope for you, I told you that. I am going to spend next summer fixing up the old truck. What do you say? Want to help? Want to come home?'

I did not say anything. I did not have to. I climbed up on the back of the snowmobile. 'Take me to the telephone booth down at the grocery,' I said.

He gunned the motor and the snow spewed out behind us as we flew up the highway to call Beatrice.

Films of Kristen Deniel

Green is stood next to me in that freezing phone booth, his eyeglasses steamy and small puffs of smoke coming out of his mouth. He talked the whole time. 'I told Izzy not to worry, that you'd be home by Christmas.' He wagged his eyebrows. 'Of course, I knew where you were.'

'Wait,' I said, dialing the number I had memorized all those weeks ago. 'I can't hear.'

'And the day after Christmas is pretty close.' He grinned at me.

Then Beatrice's sweet voice was in my ear, soft and a little breathless.

'It's me,' I said. 'Kristen Copses.'

For a moment she did not answer. When she began to speak, it seemed as if she could not stop. 'I've been calling for days, Kristen,' she said. 'Where are you? Is Gram all right? Do you know where Gram is? Please know. I've been so worried.' She paused, out of breath now.

I closed my eyes: Beatrice worried, Gram unhappy, the Old Man looking for me. What had I done?

‘She’s with me,’ I said.

Greens’ voice was still in my head even though he was standing right next to me. If you had not made that mess, you might never have come home.

‘Gram wants to come home. She remembers home, but she forgets so much else,’ I told Beatrice. ‘The agency isn’t going to let her stay there alone. And they want me to go somewhere else.’

‘I’m coming home, Kristen. I am coming home right now.

Do not worry. I’ll move right in with Gram.’ Her voice sounded excited. ‘I’m already sick of painting the desert. I need some snow in my life. I need to see Gram and Henry.’

Green has clapped his hands together for warmth. ‘We started in your room anyway,’ he said. ‘I told the Old Man we’d paint it green, green for holly.’

‘Beatrice, she’ll be so glad to see you,’ I said, looking at Green is, listening to them both at once.

‘But the Old Man wanted your room blue,’ Green is said.

“Kristen loves blue,’ he kept telling us. What does he know?

French Blue, he calls it.’

Films of Kristen Deniel

‘My cousin Beatrice would love this,’ Gram said, looking around the room. ‘If only...’

I had never seen anything so beautiful, so Christmassy either. Pine Laurel Highlands were everywhere. We’d found candles, maybe a dozen, and light all of them. The ornaments sparkled in the light. And then I thought of what Gram had begun to say. ‘If only what?’ I asked.

She shrugged a little. ‘Beatrice and I spent every Christmas together. She remembers things for me when I forget, things about when we were young.’ Her forehead wrinkled. ‘Fishing off the je tties.’

I felt a lump in my throat. 'She'll be home someday,' I said, but I wondered when that would be.

'Next year?' Gram said.

I looked out the window. I did not like to think about it next year. Where would we be then?

'Just a minute,' I told her. 'Close your eyes.'

I went down the hall for the picture I had drawn and laid it on the table to flicker in the candlelight. 'Gram herself,' I said, 'with Beatrice.'

She drew in her breath, leaning over it, running one finger along the edge. 'We're young.' She smiled up at me. 'And look at that popcorn machine.' Head tilted, she spotted Henry batting a piece of popcorn across the floor. 'You have to keep looking to see everything,' she said.

She stood up then and pattered away from me into the kitchen. She came back with a round tin in her hand. 'This is from Santa Claus.'

I touched the tin. 'Where did you find this?'

Izzy's hard candies: Izzy standing on the porch one sunny afternoon, holding a tin out to me. 'Lemon drops, and orange. They'll make you sweat, make you love.' She had leaned forward to touch my shoulder.

'You always lump one cheek,' Green has told me days later as I worked my way through the candy. 'It's going to freeze like that.'

Oh, Izzy. Oh, Green's.

I opened the tin and held it out to Gram. 'You get first to pick.' Another thing I had to pay back. I could not just take Izzy's candies.

'Take them,' I suddenly remembered Izzy saying with a sweep of her arm. 'Take anything, Kristen. I've always wanted a daughter.'

'I have a real present for you,' Gram said around the candy in her mouth.

I looked after her, wondering, as she went into Izzy and the Old Man's bedroom and came back with something in her arms.

'She's finished at last.'

It was my tree figure, with her sea-grass hair cascading down her back, half the size of Gram. She looked older than I was, but as I touched her face, the small nose, the large eyes, the tiny scar on the forehead, the arms out, I could see it was me.

But not me.

I looked closer, studying those eyes that were so sad it hurt to look at them, ran my fingers over those outstretched arms.

'Giving arms,' Gram said, nodding, bone-thin, like one of the little birds that perched on the evergreen trees. I reached out to her, feeling those small shoulders, and hugged her to me.

Tears burned my eyes. 'She's beautiful,' I said.

'Do you think she looks like you?'

I held her out. 'She's not as tough,' I said, trying for a smile. 'She doesn't look like a mountain of trouble.'

Gram shook her head. 'Maybe you're tough when you need to be tough. But trouble? What would I ever have done without you?'

Gram put her hand under my chin and tilted it so that I had to look at her. 'I wish you could see yourself the way I see you.'

'But I am not-' I began, but she broke in.

'Not good? Not kind? Not there when you are needed?'

Not anxious to be loved? You know that's not so.'

I did cry then, but just for a moment. If I had let myself go, I would have had a tough time stopping.

-And-

Then I saw that Gram was crying too.

‘I know you want to go home,’ I said, a jumble of thoughts in my mind. I wanted to say that we could be a family here, but she wanted to be in her own house, wanted to make Christmas cookies with Beatrice and spend Tuesdays and Thursdays at the movies making popcorn.

We sat on the couch, Henry on Gram's lap, watching the candles glow in the late-afternoon light. The fire in the fireplace sent warm shadows over the wood floor and the walls, and next to me Gram was closing her eyes. Her head went back to rest against the couch, and she was asleep.

I sat there too, half dozing, remembering that Greens' birthday was the next day. It hurt to think about it. I stood up slowly, quietly, and went into his room. I picked up the blurry picture from his dresser, half of the photo dark, the rest all blues and greens, with the faint figure in the center. It was the river, of course; I saw it then, with the holly bushes on the bank and just the faintest view of the Old Man's mountain reaching up in the back. There was the rowboat, and I was in it. I rolled a huge piece of wood onto the banked fire, thinking I would have to drag more in from the porch later.

Henry looked up at me, meowing, waiting to go out. I reached for the knob, pulling, and when the door opened, a gust of wind blew a swirl of snow inside. Henry stared at me angrily.

‘Not my fault,’ I told him, pushing the door closed again.

He went back to the couch, skinny tail twitching.

‘Sorry, cat.’ I ran my hand over the top of his head as I went into the kitchen to rummage through the cabinets.

Ah, how far away the hot cocoa woman was, locked in her house somewhere. How far away everyone was.

I thought of the Old Man, and Green's, and Izzy. They were just a few miles away, but those few miles were forever. Did Green is like the snow, or were they so used to storms like this that they never paid attention to them? I wondered if they ever thought about me the way I did about them. I wondered how Green has was now.

I could hear the Old Man's voice in my ears. I closed my eyes. Do not think of that, do not ever think of that terrible afternoon again.

I took out the box of cocoa with marshmallows and boiled a pot of water on the stove, thinking of what I would do today. Draw in front of that big window, I told myself. Figure out a way to shade in that soft line of trees, the gray ribbon of river. Charcoal would be wonderful for that; I would even be able to use a chunk of burned wood from the fireplace.

I had done other films in the past few days and taped them up around the living room: a snowshoe rabbit with his tall ears, four deer nibbling at the bark of the evergreen, the bridge covered in clear ice. I had done a few of Gram in the snow too, almost nothing but a few quick lines. She walked every day, down to the road, around the evergreens, coming back with her scarf blowing around her face.

What would happen if I left those films when we had to leave next spring? What would the Old Man say when he found them?

What would Izzy say? And Green's?

Spring. Could I call Beatrice then? She would have had months. What would happen to me?

Who cared? I would think of something. But I would never leave the films. I would take them with me in my backpack.

Sitting at the table, waiting for the cocoa to cool, I thought about Christmas. I had lost track of the days. I flipped Izzy's wall calendar ahead to December, trying to figure it out. How long had we been here? Eight days? Nine? I counted back.

The water was ready. I mixed the cocoa and took a tiny sip, feeling the heat of it, the steam on my upper lip. Today could be Christmas Eve.

I stood there planning. When the snow stopped, I would get myself outside and take some of the Evergreen Laurel Highlands; there were so many trees we could fill rooms with them. We would trim the mantel with great heaps of green and tuck Gram's ornaments among the needles. We would find a few pinecones too. We would have a special dinner tomorrow night. Fruit cocktail and canned tuna, a feast. And popcorn.

I wished I had a present for Gram. The only thing I could give her was a picture of herself. But the more I thought about it, the more I liked the idea. I would do that today instead of drawing trees. I took another sip of cocoa. What about Gram with Beatrice at the movies in front of their popcorn machine? Both would be eating, mouths full, arm in arm, smiling.

‘Sleigh bells ring,’ Gram sang, coming into the kitchen behind me.

‘I was just thinking that.’ I reached for another cup and poured in water for cocoa.

She stopped to peer out the window. ‘I’ve watched it snow on the ocean,’ she said. ‘It melts as it hits the water.’ She touched the glass with all five fingers. ‘There is nothing like the ocean.’

I tried to think of something to change the look in her eyes.

‘I was thinking we’d have a party,’ I told her, ‘with your ornaments and tree Lustral Highlands from outside.’

She smiled, looking up at the ceiling. ‘We could listen to carols on the radio,’ she said. ‘That’s what Beatrice and I do every year—that and talk about when we were young. Where is Beatrice?’

‘Painting,’ I said. ‘It’s warm where she is.’

Gram shook her head. ‘We always make almond cookies; we eat half and sell the other half at the movie.’

‘It would be nice if we had a radio.’ I popped two of our last pieces of bread into the toaster. ‘And too bad we don’t have a few eggs around.’

‘Or almond syrup,’ she said.

‘Or better,’ I said, and we both laughed.

‘We’d have to ask Santa Claus,’ she said. ‘He’d bring it all to us on his...’ She paused, thinking.

‘Sleigh.’

She shook her head. ‘That was a hundred years ago. Now he comes on a...’ She looked up at the ceiling.

I laughed. ‘A motorbike?’

‘One of those snow things.’ She nodded, laughing too.

‘But how could we not have a radio? Everyone has a radio.’

I finished off my coco, one sweet marshmallow left in my mouth, trying to remember. Had there been a radio here? There was never television, I remembered that. But Gram was right, there must be a radio. I wandered around, searching, and finally found one on a shelf, behind boxes of old jigsaw puzzles, the old cord wrapped around it. All that time Henry was stalking me, a line between his eyes as if he were frowning. He wanted to go out.

I went to the door again and opened it a crack. The snow was worse now, much worse. The line of trees had disappeared, and even the shed seemed far away. I was almost afraid to let Henry out. Before I could shut the door again, though, he darted around me and was gone. I stood there, shivering, trying to see where he was, and then he was back, streaking through the door straight across the living room, into the kitchen, and onto Gram's lap.

I set up my drawing things in front of the window, beginning the rough lines that would turn into Gram. Gram was there on the other side of the room, at the table, fiddling with the radio knob until she found a station with Christmas music.

The announcer's voice: ‘A lovely Christmas Eve morning.’

I had hit the date straight on the head.

The songs began, one after another: ‘Adeste Fidelis,’ ‘Silent Night,’ ‘Winter Wonderland,’ and one I'd never heard before: ‘Gather 'Round the Christmas Tree.’

I leaned over the paper in front of me so Gram would not see what I was doing. I sketched in the space around Beatrice first, the counter, the popcorn machine, and then began to work on the faces. Every few minutes I would peer out at the snow coming down. Across the river the mountain was blurred, just a dark shadow rising into the pewter sky.

And then I thought about Gram sitting there, my figure in her hand, staring out the window too as she listened to the music, her face tilted, her eyes sad.

Films of Kristen Deniel

I never really drew any of this. I tried not to think about it. It kept coming up inside my head, though, picture after picture of what happened that last day. Saturday. Izzy and the Old Man off on some antique hunt up to Masonville. Green's begging me to go fishing. 'We'll take the boat all the way down to the rapids,' he said. 'Bring our lunch.'

'You go,' I said, barely looking up from my drawing.

'Gonna spend this entire day with a bunch of pencils in your mouth? Fooling around with bits of paper?'

I grinned at him over my shoulder.

Go, Green is, I thought. Get out of here.

And then he went with a great clatter, pail and oars, pole and lures, a sandwich dripping tomatoes out the side. 'You'll probably be sorry in two minutes,' he said.

He sounded sorry. 'Do you mind?' I asked.

He grinned. 'Not really. But I will be gone all day, I warn you.'

He climbed into the rowboat and I watched him, his back bent, leaning over the oars until he was gone.

I put everything away carefully, my pad and pencils, cleaned up the tomato mess in the kitchen, put away the box of Mallomars, shut the refrigerator door, and all the time I was thinking, Three hours up, three hours back, a cinch.

I grabbed a sweater just in case it was getting cold now- and at the last minute, I changed my mind and took a few pieces of paper folded in my pocket, a few pencils: green, gray, brown, and black, and the French Blue one. Who knew what I could use it for, but it was my favorite?

And then I began to climb. It was hot work; I draped the sweater over a tree limb. After a while, I could feel the pull in my ankles, the rub of my sneakers against my heels. I stopped at the halfway point to look down at the house, the snake of the river, and I could see Green is, a tiny figure in the rowboat.

I pulled out some paper, made a quick sketch, and climbed some more. Mud. The Old Man was right: It was deceptive. I could not tell it was there until I stepped into it, once covering the whole of my sneaker. I pulled the shoe out and wiped it off with a few leaves.

I was out of breath by the time I almost reached the top, and hungry. Why hadn't I made my tomato sandwich? There was water, though, a tiny thread of it trickling down from one of the rocks, and I leaned my face into it and drank, and put my wrists under it, and then took the last few steps and I was there.

It opened out, a wide piece of rock, and I danced out onto it, catching my breath. I had brought dark pencils, but this was a light world. I could see toy houses, and the river, and even the town of Hancock in the distance. There was a tiny silver lake and a road with miniature cars. 'It's Christmas!' I shouted.

I said all the things I wanted to. 'I'm new,' I said. 'I'm different.'

And in my head, I told myself I would never be mean again, I would be friendly, I would go to school and walk up to people. 'A new leaf,' I said.

I was twirling, dizzy, hungry, and the bubbles inside twirled with me until I took one step too close to the edge in that muddy sneaker, and then I was rolling, feeling the sharp edge of a branch tearing into my arm and a stone gashing into my forehead, and finally, a huge boulder stopped me a few feet down. The wind had been knocked out of me. I lay gasping.

I pulled myself back up. Not so bad, not so terrible, I told myself, wiping the blood out of my eye, except that I knew I would never be able to walk down by myself.

I did not begin to call Green is until much later until the sun had crossed toward the west and I knew it was late afternoon, and I did not want Izzy and the Old Man to know I had done such a stupid thing. And even as I called, I knew Green is could not hear me.

But he came, of course, he came. Just before sunset I heard him, or I heard the pickup truck, gears grinding and then stopping, the door slamming, and then he was standing over me.

'I knew it,' he said.

'How?'

He narrowed his eyes. 'Break any bones?'

'Certainly not.'

'I wasted my whole afternoon,' he said. 'Felt sorry that you were all alone, came back, and -'

'Wasted-'

'Right. I figured it out, though. You weren't anywhere.'

'So, why'd you bring the truck?' I asked.

'Think I had three hours before dark to walk up here to get you?' He shook his head. 'I thought you'd been killed.'

'Just wounded,' I said, laughing.

We sat on the edge of the rock, watching the sun go down.

Green is pointed. 'Our winter place is somewhere over there. You'll see it soon.' To the east far below was the summer house, the holly bushes a blur of green, the golden field, the thread of river. It took my breath away.

'I want to show you something,' I told Green's. I reached into my pocket for the crumpled-up W picture I had taken out of my backpack before I had left. 'I've had it since I was six.'

We sat on a ledge, our feet dangling, and he smoothed the picture on his knee, stared at it, then looked over at me.

'We had to find films with W words,' I said.

'It's a wishing picture,' he said slowly, 'for a family.'

I could feel my lips trembling. Oh, Mrs. Evans, I thought, why didn't you see that?

'It's too bad you didn't come when you were six.' He smiled. 'I knew you had to stay with us when you let me win that checkers game.'

His hair was falling over his forehead and his glasses were crooked, almost hiding his eyes. I thought of the X-picture day and walking out of school. I thought of sitting in the park on a swing, my foot digging into the dirt underneath.

'I run away sometimes,' I said. 'I don't go to school.'

He kicked his foot gently against the ledge, his socks down over his sneakers.

‘Someone called me incorrigible.’

Now that I had begun, I did not know how to stop. ‘Kids never wanted to play with me. I was mean....’

Green has pulled his glasses off and set them down on the ledge next to him. He rubbed the deep red mark on the bridge of his nose.

I stopped, looking out as far as I could, miles of looking out. For a moment I was sorry I had told him. But he turned and I could see his eyes and I wondered if he might be blinking back tears. I was not sure, though. He reached out and took my hand.

‘You ran in the right direction this time, didn't you?’

And that was it. He knew all about me, and he did not mind.

‘We have to go down now,’ he said, ‘before they come back and find out.’

I nodded. I stood up, and I could feel the pain shoot through my ankle. I limped to the pickup truck. ‘I'm glad you came,’ I said. ‘I could never have walked down.’ ‘It was a dumb thing to do,’ he said, ‘coming up here. Pop would have a fit.’

And so, we went down. Green is being a sure and careful driver, but it was so steep, and the truck kept going, kept sliding, even with the brake pressed down as hard as he could manage. He pressed and pressed, but the truck gained speed, and just before the end when we would have been all right when we would have been fine, the truck tipped, and I could see we were going to go over.

And Green is yelling at me. ‘Jump, Holly!’

Films of Kristen Deniel

Late that afternoon the snow tapered off and stopped. I took a last look at the picture, pleased with it: Beatrice, listening to something Gram is saying, both with bags of popcorn in their hands. I sneaked it into my room so that Gram would not see it.

I put on all the clothes I could find, and Izzy's boots, and went outside to sink into the soft snow to my knees. The cold was shocking. It stung the inside of my nose and numbed my cheeks.

Everything was still. The birds must have found nesting places for the night, and the deer were hiding somewhere deep in the Copses. The last slim line of the river had frozen; if I had not known it was there, I would have walked right across to the other side. I wondered if the ice would carry my weight yet.

I realized I would not be able to pick evergreen or holly Laurel Highlands from the ground. Anything the wind had brought down was under the snow. I would have to saw off what I could.

Gram and Henry were framed in the window, waving to me. I reached down to scoop up a handful of white and tossed it at them. Then I trudged over to the shed for the Old Man's saw and found Greens' sweater hanging on the knob, encrusted with snow. I did not even remember leaving it there. I folded it, put it on one of the shelves, reached for the saw, and spent the last bit of daylight hacking away at Laurel Highlands, making sure not to spoil the shapes of the trees.

The wind was not as strong under the shelter of those trees, and it reminded me of something the Old Man had told me.

Hunters who were lost would pull the tree Laurel Highlands together with rope, bending them to form a shelter. I loved the thought of that, the trees forming a cozy nest. And then I shivered, thinking of being alone.

You have Gram, Green is might have said.

I love Gram, I said back.

From inside, music spilled from the radio. 'All I want for Christmas...'

What I want. What I want.

Gram was turning on the lamps now; the house was like a Christmas card with the light shining on the snow. I stood there watching, wondering how far the light might be seen.

I reached up for the last branch, snow spraying my face. No one could understand something at last anyway, I told myself; it faced the river, away from the road, and no one would be on the Old Man's mountain toward evening after a storm like this.

'You're a snow sculpture,' Gram said as I trudged onto the porch, staggering under the bulky Laurel Highlands.

I pulled off Izzy's waders and rubbed my feet until the feeling came back. Gram danced around me. 'I have something for your dinner,' she said, delighted with herself. 'I was saving it for a surprise.'

She led me into the kitchen and opened the cabinet over the refrigerator. I thought I knew where everything was, but behind Izzy's old bowls and mixers was a row of treasures: a box of dried milk... milk!... pancake mix, and a jar of applesauce. 'Yes,' Gram said with satisfaction. 'We'll have apple pancakes for dinner with cold milk.'

My mouth watered. A Christmas Eve dinner.

I will pay you back, Izzy, every cent, if it takes me the rest of my life.

So, Gram cooked for the first time, talking to me over her shoulder about Beatrice. 'Ornaments sparkle on the tree, and

Beatrice lights the candles.'

Every time Gram talked about Beatrice, she seemed to come alive, I thought; Beatrice and her house. I knew she was homesick. 'We'll have Christmas here too,' I told her. 'I'll set everything up after we eat.'

But after I had finished the pancakes covered with dollops of sweet applesauce, my eyes drooped; I was warm and sleepy.

'Let's do it all in the morning,' I said.

'Presents,' Gram said, a secret smile lighting her face. I curled up in bed, looking out the window at a pale moon and trees thick with snow, thinking I had never seen anything so beautiful. I could see movement at the edge of the trees and sat up to see what it was. And then suddenly, a fox, silvery gray with his tail streaming out behind him, darted across that open space, crossed the ice, and was gone.

I saw a fox, Green's. I have never seen a fox before.

I lay back, trying to figure out what Gram might have for me. She had found another package of food. I fell asleep wondering what it was, what I would like it to be: something sweet, something chocolate, or salty. Potato chips.

The next morning, the sun was blinding. And the shed glittered like the witch's house in Hansel and Gretel. I lay there, something on the edge of my mind. What was it? Something about the shed? Or was I wondering what the Old Man would think if he knew I was spending Christmas in his house?

I did not want to think about that. But there was something else. Was it Gram's present for me? An egg was what I wanted this morning. What I could do with an egg! I would bake a cake or cookies. I would whip it up for eggnog. I would fry it like a little sun in a pan.

I threw on my clothes. The house still smelled of the pancakes from last night. I went into the kitchen.

At that moment the back door opened, and Gram came in, her scarf pulled over her forehead, her nose red.

I wanted to tell her she should not be out there, that it was too cold, the snow too deep. But I would sound like the stucco woman. I turned back to the stove. 'Coco with milk,' I said.

We hurried through breakfast, and afterward, I went out on the porch to shake the snow off the Laurel Highlands before I brought them inside. I covered the mantelpiece, the sharp pine smelling like Christmas, as Gram unwrapped the box of ornaments. 'Here's my old Santa Claus.' I could hear the tears in her voice as she hung him in the center. 'And this one.' She held up a thick pink plastic globe. 'Ugly, isn't it? It's the only kind we could get during the Second World War.'

She went on, telling me the history of each one until the mantel was finished and the center of the table held a bowl of holly. 'We'll even hang a few of those glittery ornaments over the window to catch the light,' I said aloud, and to myself, please be happy, Gram.

'Presents now?' Gram asked.

'Maybe,' I said absently. I had caught movement outside as I hung the last clear prism.

We watched as seven or eight deer wandered in front of the house, making their way toward the evergreens. Suddenly something disturbed them. Heads back, noses up, they stood stock-still for an instant, then scattered, two to bound across the river ice as the fox had last night, the others in the opposite direction, toward the bridge.

I tried to see what had bothered them. I looked toward the evergreens myself, looked back as far as I could. There was no light anywhere, nothing to make me think about a fisherman being out there somewhere.

I had a quick thought of the night on the mountain with the flashlights like glowworms above me.

It was then I remembered: Green's sweater, a flash of green in the snow as I backed away from the fisherman that day. I had not left it on the doorknob in the shed. I opened my mouth to ask Gram if she had picked it up when she had been outside. But Gram would never remember. I did not want to know the answer, anyway, thinking of the fisherman finding us and what might happen then.

Films of Kristen Deniel

I could not get warm, even though I wore a robe and Izzy's sweater on top of that. Every time I drifted off to sleep that August night, I would start, thinking someone was there. I would look around the darkroom, but it was empty. I would close my eyes again, and then I would think I was falling, my head jerking, arms up, legs braced, a scream in my throat, and that feeling in my chest as we went over the side.

But I did not sleep. I kept going over it: the sound first, a screeching metal, tearing, as if the truck was dying, the wheel swerving, a tree slowing us down, its Laurel Highlands cracking, breaking, leaves covering the windshield, a rock ripping at the underside, the truck bouncing now, not so muddy, gravel and roots and Green's hands off the wheel, the sound of glass shattering, a tire spinning...

And then everything was still.

We were down the Old Man's mountain, and next to me Green is with his head on the wheel. I reached for him, my heart pounding, shook his shoulder. 'Don't do this,

Green's,' I said. 'Don't be dead.'

I pushed him back, his head against the seat now, his face white in the dusky inside of the truck. Not a mark on him that I could see, but he was hurt, I was sure, really hurt. He was not dead, though. There was a thin pulsing on the side of his neck, his eyes moving under the broken glasses. I took them off gently and heard him say something. Loon Sister. I could hear the S. It was Sorry.

‘Green’s, I have to get help.’ I watched him for another moment, then scrambled out of the truck, feeling the pull of my ankle, telling myself I had to do it, had to go as quickly as I could. I began the climb back up, wondering how long it would take to get down the mountain road, cross the bridge, and reach the house.

And then I thought, No telephone.

What then?

I was there when I saw the sweep of headlights going across the bridge. Izzy and the Old Man coming home?

When they saw me, Izzy leaned out the window, calling, ‘I bought dishes, Kristen. You're going to love them.’ And then she stopped. ‘Child, you're bleeding.’

‘The truck!’ I said.

‘What has he done?’ the Old Man said. ‘What has he done now? You can hardly walk!’

It seemed to take forever before lights flickered on the mountain and cars began to park diagonally down below. Turret lights turned and glowed, and an ambulance came from Walton, its siren screaming. They brought Green is down at last, but all I could see was one foot, the sneaker, the socks falling over his ankles.

A policeman shook his head, talking to Izzy and the Old Man as I stood to one side, out of everyone's way. ‘If it was not your mountain, if it was not private property, your boy would be in trouble. As it is-’

‘As it is,’ Izzy's voice cut in, ‘we have to hope he'll be all right.’

And I had looked over my shoulder at the Old Man's face, his clenched jaw.

In the emergency room, a doctor took five stitches to close my forehead and wrapped an Ace bandage around my ankle.

Green has been somewhere inside too, and I did not even know what was happening to him.

We went home later that night, much later, Izzy and I, Izzy to stay just long enough to put me to bed, to cover me and tell me it would be all right, to touch my cheek and my chin. ‘Just sleep,

Kristen,' she said. 'Everything will seem better in the morning.' And then she went back to the hospital to wait.

I thought about the stucco woman. She would not have been surprised at the trouble I had caused. She would have seen it coming. Would Greens have driven the truck to the top of the mountain if I hadn't been there? And the arguing between Green's and the Old Man - what had Izzy said? 'Worse this summer.'

I'd messed up the whole family.

Before it was light, I packed my things in the backpack. They didn't all fit, so I left a small pile of odds and ends, and the bathing suit that was drying on the line. I tore off a sheet of paper from my drawing pad and wrote the note: It was my fault, all of it. I wanted to see the mountain. I am going back to Long Island.

Please do not come after me. I do not want to be a family.

I looked back as I left, to take a picture of it all in my mind, thinking how strange it was to use my running money to run back to the stucco woman. It was even stranger that she let me walk in there so easily, clucking over my bandage, taking me to the doctor a week later to have the stitches out.

Emmy, agency hotshot, came to see me tell me Green is was going to be all right. 'His ribs are broken,' she said, 'and the bones in his arms are fractured.' While her mouth was still open, ready to say something else, I told her 'I never want to go back, I never want to see any of them again.'

She tried to find out why, but when I just kept looking out the window, banging my feet on the chair rung, she sighed and let me stay with the stucco woman.

I did not do that, either. I lasted there through most of September, and then I ran.

How could I not have seen that the other day?

'Hey, stop rowing,' he said. 'I'm going to take your picture.'

I looked up at him, feeling the sun on my face, feeling the happiness down to my toes, as he stood at the river's edge and snapped the picture.

'You've got a smiley face,' he said. 'We could put you on a stamp and sell it all over Laurel Highlands.'

'Too bad you did not take your thumb off the lens,' I told him.

'Too bad you dropped the oar,' he said. 'It's floating away.'

I put the picture back carefully, then went downstairs for sweaters and pulled my jacket off the hook. Something fell out as I did. It was the shell I had picked up the first time I had seen Gram's ocean. I held it up to my face before I put it back into my pocket.

I needed to be outside. I needed to be cold, so cold I could not think of anything but the ice and the snow.

Anything, that is what the stucco woman would say.

Films of Kristen Deniel

For all, I know this picture might still be in the agency conference room. It is a drawing of a small office with beige paneling on the walls. The paneling is fake wood. There is a table in the center, someone's initials, TR, gouged out of the wood. The picture is not finished, but Emmy and the hot cocoa woman did not know that. They thought the girl sitting at the table was me. Of course, it was not me. This girl was laughing. She was just make-believe.

I was not laughing when I sat there. I was sitting as straight as I could, but I could feel my knees shaking.

'Mr. Regan wants to talk to you,' Emmy said.

I shook my head, never looking at her, sketching on the paper.

She leaned forward. 'He's come down here, Holly.'

'Kristen.'

'Just see what he has to say.'

I shook my head again, but Emmy patted my hand and was out the door.

And then he was there, standing in front of me, and I still did not look up. 'I'm sorry,' I said in a voice so low I wasn't sure he heard me.

'It was Green's fault,' he said.

'No,' I said.

'He took the truck-' I could see him wave his hand.

'Kristen, it doesn't matter. We just want you home.'

I thought about standing up. I felt like putting my arms around him, then going out to the car with him. I thought of what it would be like to drive up to their front door.

'I didn't tell Izzy and Green's I was coming,' he said. 'If I had, they would have come too. I had to make sure you wanted to be with us first.'

Izzy would be standing at the door, and Green's next to her. We'd be hugging each other, all of us. There'd be pancakes and hard candy.

But that was just for a moment.

'It wasn't Green's fault,' I said. 'I went up the mountain first.'

'It doesn't make any difference.'

He was blaming Green's. If I went home with him, they'd always blame Green's. 'He thinks you're perfect,' Green's had said. Before I could change my mind, I shook my head. 'I think I'll stay down here.'

He tried to talk me out of it. I wasn't even hearing what he said. I stopped drawing; my hands were clenched under the table, and I never once looked up at him. After a while, he left.

Emmy came back in with tears in her eyes.

'You want tough?' I asked. 'I'll show you tough.'

I grinned. The Old Man knew a lot. But maybe I wouldn't tell Green's that either.

I talked for another minute, telling Beatrice we'd go home soon, telling her we were all right, we were fine, and then I hung up the phone.

Green's yanked off his gloves with his teeth, reached for more change, and laid it out on the shelf. 'I bet you don't even know our phone number,' he said as he began to dial.

I could hear Izzy's larger-than-life voice. 'Is that you, Green's?'

He handed the phone to me, then let himself out of the phone booth to stand outside, stamping his feet.

'It's me, Izzy,' I said. 'Do you think I could come home?'

Ah, and the house in Laurel Highlands. Green's house. Nevertheless, that home was dissimilar. I'd never- ever fail to recall that one. Don't think about it, Green's said in my cranium. I did that a lot; I pretended Green's was right there next to me when I knew he was miles away in upstate Philadelphia.

The next day all the kid, like me were fighting over the crumbs of not having anything- and with that comes not having much to eat either, and if you were lucky enough to get your hands on anything at all, that resembled food. And let's not fail to mention the snooty long straggly haired old woman; she was the power at be, also it was odd to me that there were no rugs- just sub-floors...

'What...,' Kristen began. She reached up to feel her cheek, the first time she could ever remember Gram kissing her when it wasn't time to leave for school or to go to bed. She put her arms around Gram. 'Grannie,' she whispered so softly she didn't know if Gram had heard.

Halfway down the road, Kristen could smell the fish cooking. She could hear Poppy talking, and the rumble of Mr. Meyer's voice. Mr. Meyer's Ford was in the driveway, the headlights still painted black. She'd help him scrape them off first thing tomorrow.

Gram was looking toward her and leaned over suddenly to kiss Kristen's cheek. 'It was a long war, a terrible war,' she said, 'but sometimes, even in the worst times, something lovely happens.'

I wondered if he ever said to himself, 'What is Kristen Deniel doing right this moment?' And did he put my words in his mind at all? The woman turned off the motor of the car something from the late 1924's is all I can say.

For a moment, we looked out at the trees, the leaves - in bolshies of rosy reds, yellow oakum golds and bight to burnt orange, with just a tinge of greens this late October evening.

‘We’re here, Kristen,’ she said, a woman in sweats, a hot cocoa stain on the front from the hot dogs we had eaten on the side of the road. Those hot dogs were a mean lump in the middle of my stomach, sloshing around with a Cola. They walked down to the Smiths’ on the roadside, the tufts of grass bright against the sand, Kristen carrying the cat along with her.

Kristen made a face in the mirror, then scooped up a handful of water for her face. ‘I’m ready,’ she said, ‘ready now.’

3

Now Gram was knocking at the bathroom door. ‘Poppy’s gone down to the Smiths’ ahead of us,’ she said, ‘and if you don’t hurry in there, the dinner will be ruined. They’re all waiting...’

She’d tried to talk all the way, but I hadn’t answered. I slumped in my seat, feet up on the glove compartment, wearing the dress with matching hat and gloves with the hat had a low over my forehead. If someone looks into your eyes, I read in a book one time, he’ll see right into your soul.

I didn’t want anyone to see into my soul. I knew she was dying to tell me to get my sneakers off her dashboard, but she didn’t. She was waiting to deliver her speech.

Kristen thought about her problem list for the first time in a long time. Lies, and Daydreaming, and Friends need. She didn’t lie anymore. Every time she started to lie, she thought of Noah and closed her mouth. She still daydreamed, though. Sister Sara had told her that all writers did that and that as long as you knew the difference between lies and daydreams you were in good shape.

I could hear her getting ready for it with a puff of breath. ‘This can be a new start, Kristen. A new place.’ She licked her finger and scratched at the hot cocoa stain. ‘No one knows you.

You can be different, you can be good, know what I mean?’

Maybe she gave that speech to every foster kid in every driveway as she dumped them off like the mail guy dumping off packages on a busy day, but I didn’t think so. I had looked into her eyes once, just the quickest look, and I had seen that she felt sorry for me, that she didn’t know what to do with me. Too bad for you, hot coco woman.

Kristen didn't wait to hear the rest. Mrs. Meyer would know about Noah and May. She went into the bathroom quickly to comb her hair and run water over her hands. The water came in spurts at first, the way it always after the winter. Kristen leaned forward to look in the mirror, wondering if she looked different this year. She closed her eyes, remembering that Friday night last summer, getting ready to go to the Smiths', and Gram holding the washcloth over her red eyes after she'd cried for Poppy. And she thought about Noah, with his dark hair and blue eyes. I hummed a little of 'The Worms Sneak In, the Worms Creep Out.'

'She was an art teacher,' the hot cocoa woman said, pointing to the house. 'Retired now. I've never met her, but everyone at the agency says she's wonderful with kids...' Her voice trailed off, but I knew she had meant to say, 'kids like you.'

If only Noah were there. I walked my feet up the dashboard, so my knees came close to my chin.' No one's been here with her for a while, but Emmy said it would be a good place for you.' 'A good place for an artist like you, Kristen,' the hot cocoa woman said. 'Mr. Regan...' Emmy, the agency hotshot. I drew in my breath. The Old Man. I closed my eyes as if I were ready to doze off. 'He wanted you to have a chance to work at your drawings. He said it would be a crime if you didn't.' 'It's Friday night,' Gram said over her shoulder. 'The Smiths want us to come for dinner.'

Wash your face and...'

4

Someone was fishing from a rowboat, probably one of the kids from Broad Channel. Kristen raised her arm to wave and smiled as the girl waved back.

Under her feet, the porch floor was gritty. Any minute Gram would be calling, telling her to give it a quick sweep, and find the sheets, and get her bed ready. Kristen reached for her book and flipped through until she found the star. She had taken it off her ceiling last night as she packed. She put a dab of glue on it and pasted it behind the bed with the others, smiling a little. Then she went into the kitchen for the broom. She had probably said,

'What have we got to lose?'

Still holding the cat, Kristen wandered out to the porch and leaned on the screen. She smelled the bay and listened to the water lapping against the pilings.

Now the church bells were chiming five. Kristen followed Poppy along the path to the house. Gram had opened the door and the windows on the porch. 'Blowing the winter out,' she said, looking up. 'And here's Tom's cat.' But next to me, the hot cocoa woman took a deep breath. I cut my eyes in the direction of the house. I was good at that, seeing everything without turning my head, without looking up, without blinking.

I tried to yawn, but then the front door opened, and a woman came out on the porch with a mangy orange cat one step behind her. I didn't bother to give them more than a glance. What did I care about what the woman looked like? 'Lordy,' the hot cocoa woman breathed.

Not even the hot chocolate was covering that up. I sat up straight, wondering if I should open the car door and run, or reach out to push the button down, locking myself in. I did blink then, of course, I did. Anyone getting a first look at Gram Cahill would do the same. It wasn't just that she was movie-star beautiful, or that she was wearing a blue dress made of filmy stuff that floated around her, and rings on eight of her fingers. It was this: She had a knife in one hand. She held it in front of her so it caught the glint of late-afternoon sunshine and became a silvery light itself. 'It's me,' Kristen said, her hand out, reaching.

'Don't you remember?'

And then the cat was in her arms, its orange coat short, rough, and warm from the sun. Kristen bent her head, rubbing her chin against the cat's head, listening to the sound of its rusty purring. She thought of Tom, and last summer, and Christy. Kristen climbed the boardwalk steps slowly as the cat stood there, moving back a step each time she moved forward. The knife woman came close enough for me to see that the movie-star face had dozens of tiny crisscross lines on its cheeks and across its forehead.

But then she smiled, and the lines around her mouth rearranged themselves. She leaned forward and put one hand on the car window. 'Kristen,' she said. 'Are you here, then?'

I couldn't take my eyes off her. I could feel a pencil in my hand, moving across the paper, drawing her face, her eyes, the knife. I reached over the seat, grabbed my backpack, and was out the door, slamming it behind me. 'Poppy, look,' Kristen said. 'It's Tom's cat. The Smiths must have kept her after Noah went back to Canada.'

Suppose she never saw Noah again? She leaned over to cup her hands in the water, to splash a little on her face. Her skirt, let loose, plastered itself against her legs.

They stood there for another moment before they went toward the boardwalk together, Kristen picking up one sock looking around for the other one. And then she saw the cat, standing there, watching her, ready to run. Kristen could feel the dryness in her mouth, the sand beginning to blow against her face, stinging. 'Pap?' she asked. Slowly she held out her hand.

She dug her toes into the sandy bottom, picturing her words sliding out to see the way the waves did out to Europe. 'You're my best friend, Tom,' she whispered, 'the best friend I ever had...'

Then Poppy was in the back of her, his strong hands around her shoulders, pulling her into the dry warmth of his shirt.

Films of Kristen Deniel

This wasn't one picture, it was six, eight, ten. I never could get Green's right. I could see him in my head, though, close my eyes and there he was. That first day, I was sick to my stomach from the smell of the bus, the dizzying mountain roads. I had been on that bus for hours. It seemed like weeks. The tag pinned to my shirt, Kristen COPSES, LONG ISLAND, had rubbed a raw patch into my neck. All I could think about was how thirsty I felt. I imagined ice cubes in my mouth, burning my tongue, ginger ale in a glass that was wet to the touch, root beer with two scoops of orange sherbet. I was on my way to a place called Laurel Highlands to spend the summer with a family named Regan. 'I'll be good if you don't make me go,' I had almost told the woman I was living within the stucco house. 'I won't make a sound, you'll see.' Instead, I squeezed my lips in between my teeth so hard they were hidden inside my mouth and shot lightning rays at her out of the corners of my eyes. 'Fresh air, a place in the country,' the stucco woman said, 'that's what you need.' She didn't mean it, though. I heard her on the phone. 'Two months,' she said, 'two months to do what I please and not have to worry about that kid getting into everything.' She's a mountain of trouble, that Kristen Copses.' I marched up the stairs, hitting every rung with her lime green umbrella. Anyway, I was the last one left on the bus. Up in front, the driver talked with the woman from the agency. If I ducked down in the back of the seat, would they forget about me? Would they turn around and go back to Long Island? We lumbered up the main street of Hancock, passing a row of houses and a movie theater, and came to a stop in front of a diner.

The pelican looked as irritable as Henry. I told myself I'd have a house like that one day: hatboxes and wigs have drawn on one-bathroom wall, and high-heeled shoes, dozens of them, marching along in watercolor in a tiny bedroom at the end of the hall.

That yellow kitchen was huge. A couch sat under the window, piled high with embroidered pillows that said things like HENRY'S HOME, V FOR VICTORY, SAVE THE SARGASSO SEA.

I'd never even heard of the Sea.

I had drawn the house with paper from my backpack and fat bits of charcoal I had found somewhere. It was lovely to sketch the house and Gram with her scarf. She watched me sometimes as I drew Henry sitting on top of the old-fashioned radio, and the pelican with beady eyes.

5

Too bad you don't have your drawing box, I imagined

Green's saying all those yellows and blues. I was all right, though.

'We'll take a drive in the Silver Bullet today,' Gram said, sounding pleased with herself. She brushed a few shavings off the front of her dress onto the faded linoleum floor. 'I have things to show you, Kristen.' No school on a Monday? I shrugged to myself. If she wanted to forget about it, that was fine with me. I spent most of the time in the back of the classroom sketching, or drawing faces in ink on the plastic desk and erasing them with one wet finger. 'Everything,' I said, putting my tongue against my top teeth in front of her face. 'Fresh.' She cupped her hand over the phone. 'Fresh as paint.' And back to the phone, whispering now: 'No wonder she hasn't been adopted.'

'Straighten up, kid,' the bus driver said, looking into the rearview mirror. 'We're here.' I gathered up my backpack and the plastic bag they had given me: a toothbrush, a bar of soap that smelled like an old sock, a pink washcloth, and a book for drooling two-year-olds, Jo Anne Goes Camping. I tossed the book in the agency woman's lap as I passed, nose in the air, pretending I wasn't dying of thirst, pretending I wasn't bursting from having to go to the bathroom. Outside the bus window, a man leaned against the wall of the diner, his hat over his eyes, and a boy played handball against a brick wall. I climbed down into the blistering hot sun, checking out the boy.

A skinny mess he was, much taller than I, his socks falling. They looked as if they didn't even match. As the bus started up, the exhaust smells like a sewer, the boy slammed the ball against the wall, missing it on its way back. He nearly killed himself trying to dive in front of the bus for it, then jumped back at the last moment as the ball bounced across the street. I put down my backpack and the agency freebie bag darted across the street in the back of the bus and scooped up the ball with one hand. I trotted back to them, tossing it over my head and catching it a couple of times just to show them what I could do. The man pushed his hat back and grinned at me. He had a great face to draw: eyes the color of cinnamon toast, a prickly gray-black beard, deep laugh lines. 'I'm Green's Regan,' the boy said, grinning. 'How'd you get a name like that, Kristen Copses, crazy name? Do they call you Holly? We have a pile of holly bushes out in front. Touch the leaves and they draw blood. I'm going to call you Holly.' The man shook his head. 'Green's.' 'Try it,' I cut in. 'How old are you anyway?' Green's asked, his eyes caramel behind his glasses. 'You look like kind of a shrimp to me.'

'Twelve,' I said, bumping it up almost a year, 'and tough.' 'Baby. I'll be thirteen December twenty-sixth.' He rushed on. 'We're having lunch at the diner. My mother stayed in Laurel Highlands.' 'Izzy's making carrot cake,' the man said. I thought about saying I hated carrots-not true, I ate anything. Anything, the stucco house lady would say. Besides, they were standing there, Green's and his father, looking so pleased about having lunch in the diner and carrot cake for dinner, I didn't have the heart, and I had to go to the bathroom.

'Bet you're thirsty.' Green's eyes narrowed. 'They've got checkers at every table. I'll play you, beat you.' He wanted to pay me back for the ball trick. His father frowned. He knew it too. But I was all right with it; I was fine with it. I skittered into the diner, straight to the restroom, and then sat with them at their table drinking root beer floats, cold and sweet, with wet napkins underneath the glasses. After I had downed half of mine, Green's ticked off the things he wanted me to know. 'I call the old man Pop,' he said. 'You can call me that,' the father said. I took a chance. 'I'm going to call you Old Man.' He laughed. 'Try it.' I could tell he didn't mind, though. 'What's next is I'm a walker,' Green's said. 'Walk me-myself and I, all over Laurel Highlands. I'll walk you, too.' 'Maybe,' I said. 'I know motors,' he said. 'I drive a truck.' 'Don't believe that.' The Old Man snorted. 'Not even thirteen years old.' 'I almost drive, then,' Green's said, giving me a wink. 'Legal any day now.' The Old Man rolled his eyes at me. 'And the last thing, I know tracks.' Green's spread his arms wide. 'Animal Tracks. All of them.' I was laughing. I knew he meant for me to laugh. He pushed the black checkers over to me. 'Let's see what you can do here, Kristen Copses,' he said. 'Win and I'll teach you how to drive.' 'In your dreams,' the Old Man said. We played a couple of checkers games, Green's taking wild chances, while we dripped ketchup from our hamburgers onto the table and the Old Man egged us on. Anyway, the picture I was trying for was Green's playing checkers with me that first day. That was the picture I could never get perfect. Maybe it was because he let me win that first game; maybe it was because I let him win the next one. And maybe it was because for the first time I saw what it might be like to have a brother.

Today the water was almost calm. Tiny waves folded on themselves, then slid out to sea, leaving small fingers of foam on the damp sand. Kristen waded in, bunching up her skirt. The water was icy cold on her feet and ankles, numbing. She looked out at the gray triangular rock that jutted out near the end of a jetty, the place where she and Noah had first looked-for Europe.

She pressed her forehead against the car window, staring at the marshes, watching a seagull as it swooped down toward the pale reeds. She didn't want Gram or Poppy to know her eyes were prickling and her throat was tight.

'The same,' Poppy said. 'I told you. It's all the same.' Kristen and Gram looked at each other, nodding, remembering. It would never be the same.

And then they were there. She hardly waited for the car to stop moving before she was out the back door, running for the sand and the water. She kicked off her shoes and left them on the empty boardwalk, peeling off socks halfway across the beach.

(1945)

It was summer at last. Kristen was wedged in the backseat of Poppy's old Ford with the suitcases, and bags, and rolled-up sweaters. Her feet, resting on Gram's tackle box, were tangled in a mess of fishing line.

They were going back to Ridgway, back to the house stilts, back to the hills at last.

The Ford had new tires now, and gas in the tank, and three of them, Kristen. Poppy and Gram sang with the breeze coming in through the open windows. Kristen knew they were almost there when they passed Lynnnatta's house. The bottom-floor windows were still shuttered, but the one in the attic was shiny and almost black in the sun's reflection. Lynnette wouldn't be there this summer, might never come back to Ridgway. Eddie was still lost somewhere in France, and Gram had heard that Mrs. Dillon couldn't bear to be there without him.

'Listen, Kristen...' Gram turned in the front seat, tucking strands of her hair into her bun. Kristen could feel it even before she saw it: the bridge and the galumphing sound as the tires hit each plank. 'It's saying, 'Welcome back, welcome back.' 'Gram raised her plump arms in the air. 'Alleluia.' Kristen nodded a little, but the bridge wasn't saying that for her. It was saying, 'he is gone, he is gone.'

Nevaeh

Book: 64

Moments that Would not Fade Part: 2

6

'No.' Poppy shook his head. 'Tom's mother and father had written a newspaper in Hungary, a brave newspaper, and the nuns were afraid to keep her in Paris. Instead, they smuggled her out one night, and took her west, took her to a convent in Saint-Laurent, a convent with horses and cows and a river, the Sèvre...'

On the other side of the car, the hot cocoa woman was out too. 'Tea?' the movie star asked the hot cocoa woman as if she were reading her grocery list. 'Coffee? Lemonade? Orange juice?'

Poppy reached out for the picture, smiling. 'She had a dozen mothers there. One to teach her English, one to teach her French, one to show her how to milk the cows and make cheese -'

'And did you see her?' Kristen asked in a rush. 'Did you tell her about Tom? Tell her about me?'

'Yes, to all of that,' he said. 'I showed her your picture.'

'And Tom...'

Poppy put his hand over hers. 'She said she missed Noah every day. She's waited through this whole war to go to Canada.

She said she felt sad because she hadn't said goodbye to him.'

Kristen sat there looking at Poppy, wanting to ask what he had told Christy, almost afraid to hear. 'What...?' She began.

'What did I say?' he asked her, smiling. 'I told her that saying goodbye didn't matter, not a bit. What mattered were all the days you were together before that, all the things you remembered.' Kristen took a deep breath. She squeezed Poppy's hand. The hot cocoa woman shook her head. She was still thinking about the knife. 'I just want to get Kristen settled,' she said uneasily.

'I'm settled,' I said.

We all stood there for another few minutes, the hot cocoa woman trying to fill the space around us with talk. Then, at last, she opened the car door again and was gone.

'Want to call me Gram?' The movie star rubbed her forehead absently with the knife handle. 'If you want to do the Cahill part you say it 'Kale,' you know, like that vegetable.' She jerked her head toward the cat. 'That's Henry. He's a little irritable sometimes.' I followed her up the path and around to the back of the house. Henry came too, reaching out to stab my leg with one irritable claw.

Gram looked back over her shoulder. 'Hungry?' I shook my head; the hot dogs were just settling in. 'Drop your things,' she said, waving the knife. 'We'll get them later.' 'I've lived here' - Gram raised one eyebrow - 'since they invented the spoon.' In the back of the house was a different world: a garden on the edge of the Copses, Deniel so small I could see around them to houses on the next street. 'Who did that, anyway?' I asked, trying her out.

Her other eyebrow shot up. 'The knife and fork people, who else?'

She patted the scarf and turned to look at me, head tilted.

Carved tree Laural Highlands were stuck in the dirt in front of the Copses, some of them thicker than my arm, others almost pencil-thin. All of them had faces, and bits of grass or wreaths of flowers circled their wooden heads. I touched this one and that, using two fingers, the ones I used to shadow in my drawings. One of the figures I pulled my hat down over my eyes and stared at her figures. She was an artist.

Films of Kristen Copses. I thought I was alone, sitting on the but Noah steps in front of the house, drawing the Old Man, working with a flesh-peach pencil. Quick sketches, one after the other: hat down over his eyes in the first, standing in front of the river in the next, sleeping in the hammock in the third. His beard and the way he leaned forward, listening. I was trying to capture what he looked like so I'd have it to take back with me. To remember. The screen door opened in the back of me with that soft swishing noise, and the Old Man came out to look over my shoulder. 'Oh, Kristen,' he said. 'Where'd you learn to do that?' I shook my head. 'Kristen?' I looked toward the river, green today, a willow hanging over the edge. He put his hand on my shoulder. 'It's a gift,' he said, 'to draw things the way they are.' I sat very still. No one had ever said anything like that to me before. 'And something else,' he said. 'You shine through in your drawings.' I looked up at him, really looked at him, not a glance that darted away so he couldn't see my eyes. 'My name ...,' I began as he folded himself down on the step next to me. 'Kristen Deniel is a real place.' I shrugged a little. 'Kristen wood,' I said. 'One word, I think.' When the Old Man spoke, I jumped. 'It's where they found you, as a baby?' 'An hour old,' I said in an I-don't-care voice. 'No blanket. On a corner. Somewhere.' Didn't a baby deserve a blanket? 'And just the scrap of paper: CALL HER Kristen COPSES.' One day I had gone to see that place. I ran away from one of my houses-tan, green, brick? I circled Queens, on the subway, off the subway, onto the Q2 bus and off the Q2 bus, until I found the spot. It was winter, bleak, but the houses were pretty. I never did find the Copses, though. I tried to picture it in the spring when I had been born, with birds chirping and the sun shining. Now I saw Green's come into view in the rowboat. 'I play hookey,' I told the Old Man. 'Everyone says I'm tough, they say I'm trouble.' The Old Man made a sound in the back of his throat. 'Green's is a great kid,' I said. The Old Man looked surprised. I waited to hear if he would say anything, but Green's banged the rowboat hard into the rocks along the bank. The Old Man made another sound. 'Watch that, Green's.' 'The Kingfisher is on the branch downstream,' Green's called. So, we went down to the boat and climbed in to go have a look.

Kristen leaned back against the pew, thinking how thirsty she was. She was dying for a glass of orange soda, or maybe a peach with juice dripping. If Mass didn't end soon, and she didn't get something to drink...

Gram was looking at her, frowning, so she started to pray again. She prayed for everyone she could think of, even Sister Jillian.

She looked at the stained-glass window. Outside, everything was red or orange or yellow. And inside were the sounds of the fan whirring and feet shuffling. Maybe they'd find Eddie. Maybe he had just gotten mixed up and had to find his way back, or maybe they had made a mistake and some other Eddie was lost.

She sat up straight. She had just thought of something. Eddie's picture. She had left it on the table next to the couch in the living room. How was she going to explain to Gram where she had gotten it? What would Gram say if she knew Kristen had been in and out of the Dillons' empty house? Gram would say plenty. Kristen is in trouble for the rest of the summer. And she'd never get back into Lynnnatta's house until the end of the war.

She tried to figure out what to do. She could feel her heart pounding at the thought of Gram reaching for that picture when they got home. She wondered if Gram had seen her put it down.

Gram always saw everything she didn't want her to.

But if she hadn't, if Kristen could get to the living room first, she could grab up the picture, and then...

And then what? She didn't have a cent since the tan purse had sunk in the water. How was she going to send it?

And right now, kneelers were banging back and people were standing. Mrs. White was playing the organ, and everyone was singing 'Holy God, We Praise Thy Name.'

Kristen edged herself out of the pew almost before they finished singing. 'See you,' she whispered to Gram. And before Gram could answer, Kristen had ducked ahead of Mrs. Colgan and the other people going down the aisle. She took another quick dip of holy water and raced for home.

Gram had locked the door, of course. Kristen rattled the knob and shoved at it with her shoulder, but it didn't do one bit of good. She was lucky Gram liked to stand and talk to Mrs. Colgan after church for a few minutes.

She went around the back and slipped off her good shoes and socks. She'd have to climb down into the rowboat and shiny up the pilings into her bedroom.

She stopped. A couple of kids from Broad Channel were rowing out in their boat. They were staring back at her.

She waited a moment, hoping they'd turn away and start fishing or something, but they just sat there, one of them fooling around with the oars, watching her.

Gram would be home in five minutes.

'Forgot my key,' she called and dropped into her rowboat.

She wondered what they thought about her wearing a pale-yellow Sunday dress as she boosted herself up on the piling and tried to reach the screen.

She couldn't seem to get high enough, and somehow the hem of her dress was soaking wet. Gram would go on and on about how she'd have to wash, starch, and iron it again.

Kristen could hear the sound of voices. Gram's voice. Mrs. Colgan's. They were next door, standing there. All they to do was look down the alley.

She tried to raise her barefoot higher on the rough wood. Any minute she'd have a splinter. And any minute Gram would spot her. She held on to the piling with her legs, and feet, and one arm, as tightly as she could, reaching up for the screen, trying to get her fingernails underneath.

And then, finally, she felt the screen give. She pulled it out, opened it wide, then reached out for the sill, holding on, boosting herself in, just as she heard Gram saying, 'Good grief, what's that child doing now?'

She raced through the porch and into the living room, grabbing Eddie's picture, and then raced back again to shove it under her bed. By the time Gram was in the house, Kristen was in the bathroom with the door closed and locked, leaning her head under the faucet in the sink, taking deep gulps.

Her dress was a mess, filthy, with a rip in the hem. She took it off as fast as she could, rolled it up in a ball, and reached for her old bathing suit, which was dangling in the shower.

Gram was knocking on the door. 'Kristen. are you in there? Whatever made you think of getting into the house like that? You could fall and kill yourself. Kristen?'

'I'm trying to get my bathing suit on.'

'I'd like to see the condition of that dress.'

Kristen crossed her fingers. 'It's all right.'

'I'll bet,' Gram said.

Kristen could hear her footsteps going into the bedroom. She took the dress and slid out the door and onto the porch. She pulled Eddie's picture out from under the bed, wrapped it in a towel, and looked around for a place to hide the wet dress.

Under the mattress. She'd figure out what to do with it later.

She was out the door, yelling a quick goodbye before she could hear a word about the piano. But Gram had turned on the news. 'It is estimated that ten thousand have been killed in the invasion of France.'

Kristen went up the road to cut across the Smiths' lawn and find Tom.

A moment later, they were rushing down the back road, Noah asking where they were going, why they were such a hurry.

'To the fishing wharf,' she said. 'I have to find a purse. A tan one.'

'I will help. Where-'

'Under about seven feet of water, and we have to hurry because Gram will be along to capture me any minute.'

He shook his head. 'Why-'

'She's going to find my soaking wet, ripped Sunday dress. She's going to remember I haven't practiced the... You ask a lot of-'

'And what is in that towel?'

‘Don’t say another word, Tom. Not unless you have a pack of money in your pocket. Otherwise, let me think about how I’m going to dive down and find that purse.’

‘But-’

‘That purse has to be somewhere under the water unless a bunch of pirates has moved in.’

‘When...’

Kristen sighed. ‘Will you stop asking questions? We’re in a hurry here.’

A truck had scattered gravel all over the approach to the wharf. It was a good thing Noah had shoes on. It was a good thing her own feet were tough.

Not tough enough. By the time they had gotten to the wharf, she was walking on the sides of her feet, hobbling along. ‘I hope your eyes are good,’ she said. ‘I want you to look into this water and tell me...’

Noah nodded. She could tell he was trying not to laugh.

‘What?’ she said.

‘You look so... so odd walking like that, and your bathing suit...’

‘...is a little faded.’ She looked down. She had put on her oldest one, almost no color left from Gram’s Clorox. Too bad. She put the towel with the picture down on a bench and crouched on the edge of the dock to look down into the water.

‘Dark,’ she said. ‘Really dark today, you can’t see a thing.’

He was looking too. ‘I see a fish.’

‘What good is that?’ she asked. ‘It’s about two inches from the top. We’re looking for a purse on the bottom.’

‘Down with the bar-nackles,’ he said, grinning.

She was still smiling as she rolled over the side and hit the water. It was cold this morning, the water rough. She kicked hard to push herself down, opening her eyes in the saltwater, trying to see the sand. She swam along the bottom until she thought her lungs would burst, then shot up to the top for a huge gulp of air.

She held on to the wharf for a moment, pushing her hair out of her face with one hand, and felt Noah grab her wrist. She looked at him through blurry eyes. 'What?'

'I have money,' he said.

She nodded. 'Let me try once more.'

But he wouldn't let go. 'Let me give you this money,' he said slowly, 'if it is important. It is important money.'

She took another breath. She knew she wouldn't find the purse today. It was so dark below, and it could be hours. She nodded and climbed back up on the wharf.

'It's for Lynnnatta,' she told him, going over to unroll the towel, sitting on the bench. She showed him Eddie's picture, with his buck teeth smiling up at them. Then she said the rest in a rush, the words spilling out, trying to make him see what Eddie was like, how much Lynnnatta loved him, how Lynnnatta couldn't remember his face, how she had to send the picture, how...

Noah listened; then he touched the edge of the picture. 'I cannot remember Christy's face,' he said. 'I can remember Nagymamma's. She was sitting in the back of her restaurant the day we went away. She was sewing my coat. The collar was wet when she gave it back to me. It was wet from where she was crying. It crackled when I felt it.'

'There is money,' he said slowly. 'It is in the coat collar. It is Magyar, Hungarian money, and English money, and American money. Nagymamma said when I touched it again to remember...' He stopped.

Kristen wanted to ask him 'Remember what?' but he looked so sad, she just nodded and used the towel to dry her face.

'Lillllyyyy.' The voice was loud, sharp.

Her grandmother was standing at the other end of the road, hand shading her eyes.

Caught.

Kristen stood there, trying to decide what to do. Then she handed the rolled-up towel with the picture to Tom. 'Don't drop it,' she whispered.

'Lilllllyyyy,' the voice came again.

'What?' She stood there; she didn't move. Gram always wanted her to come when she called as if she were a cat. 'Lilllllyyy.'

She gritted her teeth. 'Hold on to that with your life, Tom.' She started back along the path toward Gram, biting her lip as the gravel jabbed into her feet.

'It's hard to believe you're walking all over the place wearing that bathing suit,' Gram said as soon as Kristen got close enough to hear. 'And where are your shoes? Any minute you're going to get a splinter. Blood poison next. Besides,' she rushed on, 'you look like a hoyden. I don't know what people will think.'

Hoyden. Kristen didn't even know what it meant. She sighed a huge sigh. Let Gram see she thought she was acting like a pain. 'I'm going swimming.'

'At the fishing dock?'

'Well...'

'It's time to practice the piano, Kristen.'

'I'm not-' Kristen began.

'Yes,' Gram said. 'Your father spent all that money to bring that piano here from St. Paul's. For you.'

'Poppy doesn't care.' Kristen shifted from one foot to the other. A stone was digging right through her skin into her bones. Gram was right. She was going to end up with blood poisoning, and Lynnnatta was never going to get Eddie's picture.

'You were the one who wanted piano lessons,' Gram said.

Kristen could see beads of perspiration on Gram's upper lip. It was hot as a blister, and they were probably going to stand there arguing forever.

Gram was right, though. The piano lessons were all her idea. But that was last winter. How was she to know that it took forever to learn the piano, that you couldn't even play a decent song like 'Mairzy Doats' or 'Swinging on a Star' unless you spent your whole life sitting at the piano bench, while everyone else in the whole world was-

'Will you stop daydreaming, Kristen?' Gram said. 'Get yourself home. Change out of that bathing suit, and practice for a half hour.'

Kristen didn't wait to hear the rest. Head up, she marched up the road and headed for home.

She threw the bathing suit on the shower floor, put on a pair of shorts and a top, and went to the piano bench. The back door closed a moment later. Gram was home.

Kristen looked up at the old alarm clock on top of the piano. One o'clock. She watched the hands for a while. It almost seemed as if they weren't moving. She stood up and put her ear next to it. It was still ticking, but slowly. It would take forever to get to one-thirty.

'Kristen?' Gram called from the kitchen.

She curled her fingers over the keys and started in on the C scale. At the same time, she looked out the window. The sea was tinged with green. Her father would say it had something to do with algae. There was only the slightest swell now, a perfect afternoon to teach Noah to swim.

She closed her eyes, picturing the troopship they had seen, huge and ghostly in the mist. For a moment she thought about what it would be like if they could do it. Wouldn't it be something if they could get the rowboat close enough to swim the last few feet, the last few yards? Wouldn't it be something if she could teach Noah to swim well enough for that? Even if he could just keep himself afloat, she could help him. And even if it wasn't Poppy's ship, it would be going to Europe. Noah could get to Christy, and she- Gram was standing at the living room door. 'What are you daydreaming about?' she asked.

Kristen frowned. 'How much I hate this piano.'

'Just try,' Gram said. 'You can do anything if you work at it. And you love music.'

Kristen didn't answer. She started the C scale over and didn't look up until Gram was rattling around in the kitchen again.

You can do anything.

Could she?

What was she thinking of, anyway? What she had to be doing was getting Eddie's picture wrapped and mailed before the post office closed at four. Instead, she was stuck in front of the piano, the keys a little dusty, with the John Thompson book in front of her.

She played the C scale as loudly as she could, up and down, faster, faster. It made a terrific noise. She could hear Gram bang a cabinet door shut. Kristen was probably driving her crazy.

Terrific. She played around with her hand down low at the base... making up some Hazel Scott boogie music as she went along.

'Kristen.'

Back to the C scale. The loudest C scale anyone had ever heard.

Nothing from the kitchen.

Kristen began to flip through the John Thompson book.

Etudes, mazurkas (whatever they were,) waltzes. 'The Blue Danube.'

She picked the music out with one finger. Da da da da dum dum. She knew that she'd heard it before. And that was Tom's river.

She leaned over to reach Gram's atlas in the bookshelf. It was heavy and smelled of the attic in St. Paul's. She put it down next to her on the bench and went through the pages, A Africa, Antilles. G Germany. That was the Nazi place. It showed a little of Hungary on the edge. And there was H Hungary two pages later.

She tried to spot Budapest or the Danube River, but all she could find were a bunch of black lines wandering up and down on a yellow blotch that looked like the piece of a puzzle.

In the center of the book was a map of the whole world.

She ran her finger across it... from Hungary to Austria, to Switzerland, to France. She smiled a little. Madeline in the book had been there. She remembered that. Madeline was in Paris.

And so was Christy.

That night it was-

‘Spicy, that chicken,’ Beatrice said.

I managed to nod, to chew, at last, to swallow, thinking of the Old Man: ‘Where'd you ever learn to do that?’ And Izzie.

‘You have a gift, pure and simple.’

After dinner Beatrice spread the films out on the table, reaching for my pad on the counter, one eyebrow raised to ask if she could have a piece of paper. With a twist of her pencil, she showed me how to deepen the shadows on a drawing of the sea.

‘Do it on my drawing,’ I said.

‘Never,’ she told me. ‘It's your world, it belongs to you.’

She ran the pencil through her hair, separating the thick strands.

‘Drawing is what you see of the world, truly see.’

‘Yes, maybe,’ I said, not sure what she meant. ‘And sometimes what you see is so deep in your head you're not even sure of what you're seeing. But when it's down there on paper, and you look at it, really look, you'll see the way things are.’ I frowned. ‘Look at a picture one way and you'll see one thing,’ I said. ‘Look again and you might see something else. That's what the Old Man ...’ I shook my head. ‘A friend of mine said that once.’

‘Ah, yes,’ Beatrice said, sketching in an eye, bushy eyebrows, sharp lashes as she spoke. ‘But that's the world, isn't it? You have to keep looking to find the Christy.’ She ran one pinky finger over the eyebrow; the pencil smeared just enough to curve it upward, almost like a question mark; the other pinky softened the lashes.

I watched her, fascinated. ‘And something else,’ she said. ‘You, the artist, can't hide from the world, because you're putting yourself down there too.’ ‘I'm not hiding,’ I said, my eyes sliding away from her.

She laughed. 'Good thing, because your soul is right there in front of you.' She pointed to the sketch I'd drawn of Gram in her scarf. 'You see, it's what you think of her.' She turned to Gram. 'Maybe I can take that trip now, leave you in Kristen's hands. She loves you already.'

I could see that Gram didn't know what Beatrice meant. 'A trip?'

'To the Southwest.'

Gram nodded then. 'Yes. Adobe houses, desert, flat rocks everywhere.'

'I'll paint them all,' Beatrice said.

I looked from one to the other. Beatrice had picked up the pencil again, sketching herself, drawing a suitcase in her hand. And then she looked at me once more. 'You're going to be something, you and what language you speak on paper.' She drew her other hand waving. 'I love what you have to say, Kristen Copses.'

I sat there, hardly breathing.

'You have that,' she said. 'It's more than most people ever have. Count yourself lucky.'

Beatrice took a forkful of food, eating absently, staring at me the whole time. 'We worked with all those kids who didn't have any concept of perspective, or even if they had that, the composition was all wrong. If only you'd been in one of those classes, Kristen.' She shook her head, then smiled at Gram. 'Never- ever mind, she's here's now.' They were both looking at me, at the tears in my eyes.

I couldn't swallow what was in my mouth. It was there in a lump, almost as large as the lump in my throat. 'Thank you,' I managed to say. 'Thank you.' I scooped up the chicken, piling as many cashews as I could on the spoon. She didn't eat, not until she had looked at all of them, holding each one up to the light. Gram kept nodding, reaching over with her fork to point at a line or a figure. And then Beatrice sat back. 'Imagine. I never saw anyone who was able to do this,' she said, 'and I was an art teacher for forty years.'

8

I could feel a laugh coming as she waved her hand. 'This is my place.' Like - had a filmy scarf around its neck and held a bird's nest in its bent arms. 'You?' I asked.

‘I’ll make one of you,’ Gram Cahill said. ‘We’ll have to find the right piece of wood. I think there’s one in the back. The shape of the head is there already, the nose sharp, and the eyes ...’ She stopped. ‘But only if you stay. It will take weeks for me to do.

Months, maybe.’

I tried to think of what to say. I never stayed anywhere for long before I ran. One morning I’d wake up and I’d have had enough. I’d grab my backpack and go. I’d hang out in the city, see a couple of movies, or if the weather was nice, I’d head over to Jones Beach and sleep under the boardwalk. Sometimes it took them days to find me. But they never sent me back to the same place. The people in their houses had probably had enough of me, too.

Gram waited for me to answer. ‘We taught that long?’ Gram said. ‘Forty-four for you.’ Beatrice brushed at her hair. ‘But did I ever once ...’ I had been at Gram Cahill’s house for three weeks. One morning when I awoke, I realized my thumb was blistered, but I didn’t mind. We’d been cleaning up the grove of trees. I liked the feeling of hacking and slashing and getting things done. A pile of wood rested under Gram’s back table now. ‘Not all of it is for whittling,’ she had told me. ‘As soon as it’s really cold, we’ll make enormous fires in the fireplace.’ ‘No, neither did I.’ Gram smiled at me, reaching across to touch my wrist with one hand.

I knew she was wondering if I’d still be there when the cold came. I wondered too. And then she was flying down the stairs, reaching out, as Poppy pushed a duffel bag in ahead of him, and held out his arms for her. A moment later, Gram came down the hall. He held them both, the three of them rocking for a minute until Gram said, ‘I smell the oatmeal burning.’

Kristen hated hot cereal. ‘I’m late,’ she began. ‘I don’t have time for ...’ But she never finished the sentence. She heard the noise of the key in the front lock and stopped halfway down the stairs. She had heard the sound of that key so many times, and now she felt the blast of cold air coming up as the door opened. She felt as if she couldn’t breathe because she knew who it was, knew who it had to be.

They went into the kitchen, Gram bustling around to make tea, and Poppy leaning against the wall, his eyes closed. ‘I’ve thought about this,’ he said.

They sat there almost the whole morning talking, school forgotten. Poppy told them about his ship passing Ridgway. and seeing the Ferris wheel rising in Playland like a ghost. He told them about

France, and how he felt when he stood watching as the flame at the grave of the unknown soldier was light again.

Then, at last, he reached into his pocket and pulled out a small pile of films, Kristen's mother in her wedding dress, Kristen in the rowboat, Gram standing on the dock. Last was a picture of a girl in a Jeep. She was holding an umbrella and smiling.

'Christy,' Kristen said, tracing the girl's face with her fingers.

'Christy.' Poppy leaned forward. 'I took your letter...' 'Mine and Tom's,' Kristen said.

Poppy nodded. 'I went to the convent, the Daughters

Wisdom, they're called...'

'And she was there.'

9

(ST. PAUL'S, 1945)

Kristen was going to be late for school. She pulled on her uniform and ran a comb through her hair. Downstairs Gram was calling, 'Don't forget a sweater, and if you're looking for your boots...'

Kristen sighed. Next Gram would remind her she had left them on the living room rug again. Kristen took a quick look out at the white flakes that had begun to drift down. It had been a long winter. She was tired of snow and sleet, sick of chapped lips and colds, and the wind that rattled against the windows. It seemed as if summer would never come, and worse, that the war would go on forever. She looked around for her books and her journal, ELIZABETH MOLLOHAN, MY THOUGHTS.

She had written her way through the winter... to Poppy, and Tom, and Lynnnatta, but most of all in the journal, to Sister Sara. Once she had told about the way the sea rolled and churned when it stormed, and how homesick she was for Gram's house on stilts. Another time she had written about Tom, and the day they had said goodbye.

I raised one shoulder. 'I'm not sure.'

'Henry and I will treat you like our best company for as long as you stay,' she said.

A table leaned against the back of the house, an old redwood table with tools: a drill, an ax, and knives sharp enough to split hairs. Henry crouched at the top of the path, eyes slit, tail switching at me. 'I'm glad he's not a tiger,' I said, feeling that laughter again. Gram's eyes danced. 'Maybe we'll go back and cut that piece of wood anyway.'

I reached for the ax, then followed Gram Cahill into the Copses. And in my head, I told Green's, I may just stay for a while.

What do you think of that?

Kristen closed her eyes now, thinking about that last afternoon of the summer. The tide had been high and the ocean a deep blue. She had walked with him out to the jetty. They had stood there balancing themselves on the gray rock, and she had taken the star out of her pocket for him then, one of her mothers from the porch wall. Almost without thinking, she had stood on tiptoes to give a quick kiss on the cheek, and they had both laughed.

I sat there with my mouth full, looking around at her kitchen. It was like the rest of the house, filled with surprises: The walls were creamy yellow, and ships sailed along with blue ocean moldings. A painted pelican was perched over the stove.

Kristen thought about Sister Sara now. 'Some people never have a friend like that,' Sister had said. 'You were both lucky, Kristen. even if it was only for the summer.' And then she had tapped one finger on the journal. 'You have promised, Kristen.'

'How did you know about that?' Kristen had asked, thinking about Poppy and the books.

Still, it was a terrific breakfast, with Rice Krispies crackling in the speckled bowl. Fall leaves swept across the garden, and Gram's plane went across the wood with a swish-swish sound.

Kristen started downstairs for breakfast this morning, saying the word in her head, promise, half-listening as Gram called, 'Hot cereal on a cold day.' But Sister hadn't meant that at all. 'I mean promise as a writer,' she had said.

10

I had taken only two days off so far, reminding myself that the hot cocoa woman would probably be checking up on me. And the absence notes I wrote myself and signed in a spidery hand that looked like Gram's were masterpieces: Kristen had a high fever over the weekend. Please send her home if she looks flushed. Or Kristen had a severe rash. We learned that she's allergic to tomatoes. Pity. She enjoys them.

I slid onto a seat opposite her at the table. In front of me were a box of cereal, two bananas, and a Danish neatly cut in half.

The Danish was a little stale and the bananas beginning to freckle. Other days chocolate chips were sprinkled into the cereal, but they must have been all gone.

I shoved the last of a banana into my mouth and watched as Gram plopped a straw hat with a rose onto her head and wrapped one of those filmy scarves twice around her neck; then I followed her out to the garage.

I stretched, not ready to get up, and looked around the bedroom. It was wonderful, the first place the sun hit every day so that squares of light turned the room to lemon gold. I stayed under the rose-and-white quilt for a few moments, then pulled on my clothes to go down to the kitchen.

Gram was bent over the table, eyeglasses perched on the end of her nose, working on a piece of wood. From the hall, I could see her reflection in the kitchen window. She knew I was there but she just cut another sliver off the wood and blew it away.

They headed back toward Kristen's. By this time, it was almost dark. They'd been in the movie for hours. Overhead the first star was just visible.

At last, they stood up, blinking, and went through the lobby.

'Of course, we could not see them,' Noah said. 'So many people.' 'Of course not,' Kristen said. 'But we know they were there. And someday we'll ask...' Noah was smiling at her, nodding. 'And they will tell us.'

Kristen and Noah leaned forward, staring at the faces surrounding the cathedral, looking for Christy, looking for Poppy.

Kristen could almost picture them there, together.

She looked up at the sky. Only a few days were left of summer. And then she thought of the stars on the porch wall in the back of her bed. Her mother's stars. She'd peel one for him. He could paste it on the little cardboard with Christy's address. Yes, she thought, she'd give it to him before they left.

And Kristen too, 'Thank you.' Then the tricolor, France's flag, went up on the cathedral, and people began to sing the French anthem, the 'Marseillaise.'

She cried too, but they weren't the only ones. She could hear the sounds of crying all through the theater. They watched the main street of Paris, the Champs Elysées, filled with two million people, old women with white hair, men with flags, children, and nuns. Young women were throwing kisses at the American soldiers, who were riding on tanks covered with flowers.

In one huge voice, the French were shouting, 'Merci. Merci. Merci...'

Kristen grabbed Tom's arm. 'You'll be able to write to Christy. The Nazis will be gone and... Poppy will go to her.'

'Christy,' Noah was saying at the same time. 'Christy is there. I wonder what she is doing now, at this moment.'

Two days later, they could guess. Noah treated Kristen to movies and a bag of popcorn, and they watched The Eyes and Ears of the World four times.

They saw films of the great Cathedral of Notre-Dame and heard the story of the little plane that had flown in just above its dome on Thursday. It had dropped the message: 'Tomorrow we come.'

Next, to her, Kristen could see Noah clutching the arms of the chair. His face was turned away from her, and she knew he was crying. The car was ancient, a Buick from the eighties. The fenders were dented and a streak of white paint ran across the door, but inside, the seats were soft and furry, and hanging from the windshield was a small tree figure of a man with gray whiskers.

No, not a man. It was Henry standing on his back legs.

'I put acorn boxing gloves on him but they kept falling off,' Gram said. 'You don't have to worry about Henry. Henry's ready to stick up for you whenever the chips are down.'

Films of Kristen Copses. 'Do you know how to fish?'

Green's asked. 'If I wanted to.' I squinted at the river; I didn't know how to fish, didn't know how to swim. I was still trying to figure out how to stay away from that water when the Old Man brought the fishing rods out of the shed. Izzy Regan, the mother, came out onto the porch, the screen door slamming behind her. She waved at us. 'Hey, guys, catch me something to go with pole beans and corn on the cob.' 'Yuck to the beans,' Green's said.

'I like pole beans,' I said. The river meandered along in front of the Regans' summer house, and on the opposite side was the Old Man's mountain. What was it about that mountain? Coming from Long Island, I had never gotten within yelling distance of anything more than a hill. So why did this mountain look so familiar? I stretched my neck to look up and up at its rocky self mostly covered with evergreens. 'You'll fall over,' Green's said. I shrugged, reaching for my backpack. Inside were a bunch of colored pencils, stubby things I had collected wherever I could find them. It would take six of them, blues and greens and grays, to get the color of the river the way it was the first time I saw it.

I'd heard of polecats, but never pole beans. Izzy nodded at me. 'It's great to have a girl around, Holly. We have to stick together against these guys.' Izzy was the tallest woman I'd ever seen. Her blond hair was wrapped around her head, and she seemed to be smiling just for me. And then we were down on the bank, barefoot, standing in the shade of a few scrub pines. The Old Man put a rod threaded with a lure into my hand. 'The best one,' he said. 'This is for luck.' He showed me how to cast so my arm went back and over my head and the line sang out. I watched the feathery lure glide on the water and then did it again, and again. I could see them but Noah of the river. I could stand on that soft sand dotted with rocks, I thought, and be safe. I put one foot into the cool water and then the other, feeling tiny fish nibbling at my ankles. Across the way was the mountain, tall and green.

'Pop's mountain,' Green's said. 'I'll show you tomorrow. There's a road going up ...' The Old Man tightened his mouth. 'Be careful of that road. I'm afraid of it.' Green's twitched one shoulder. 'I'm not afraid of anything.' Anything, I thought. The stucco house woman seemed a world away. We stood there, the Old Man pointing to a cat-fish nosing its way along, then a frog sunning itself on a rock, and I closed my eyes. I knew the East Branch of the Delaware River was home. Like a miracle, I caught my first fish that afternoon. They hooked it and watched the silver curve as it broke the surface of the water. It was a huge fish, and Green's said, 'Bet you a buck you can't hold on to it.'

He was right there with the net, though, wanting me to get it, as I slipped on the rocks, feeling the water on my legs and then my back as I slid. I tried to get my balance with one hand, my feet going out from under me, not sure how deep the river was, wondering if my head would go under. Green's arm was on my elbow then, holding me up, and the Old Man called, 'You're all right, Kristen.' My feet anchored into the sand then. I edged myself back, pulling on the rod, and then the fish was mine. Green's poured a pailful of cool water over my head so my hair was dripping, my clothes soaked. The Old Man was smiling, nodding, and Izzy came down to the bank to see what was going on. Later I drew it all, and whenever I look at the picture, I remember the taste of the fish that night, grilled on the coals, my feet bare under the porch table, and in front of us, the river. I remember Izzy touching my shoulder as she stood up to get something from the kitchen. Why did I have to mess everything up?

11

'Delicious?'

She frowned. 'Yes, but...'

'Ah,' I said, trying to guess. 'Stew? Pasta? Hero sandwiches?'

She shook her head. 'Delicious.'

I finished my drawing and propped it up on the counter to see what I thought about it. And then I heard the back door, Beatrice bustling in, her arms laden with bags, and the smell...

'Chinese food,' I told Gram.

'Of course,' she said. 'That's what we always have.'

I put the plates out, the knives and forks, and Gram ladled the food into bowls: cashew chicken, moo goo gai pan, bean curd, the smells making my mouth water.

Beatrice stood in the back of me. I looked over my shoulder. She was leaning over, her head tilted, looking at my picture. 'Did you draw this?'

I nodded.

She took off her glasses and chewed on one stem.

‘Surprising, isn't it?’ She asked Gram.

‘More than that,’ Gram said, beaming, moving Henry off her chair before she sat down.

As I reached for a shrimp roll, Beatrice slid into the seat opposite me and spooned rice onto my plate, the picture still in her hand.

‘Don't eat,’ she said.

I raised my eyebrows.

‘Not yet. Trot out some more of your films, please.’

I went into Gram's peach living room with the lilac couch. We had tacked up a few of the films I'd done: Henry and the pelican, the rock jetties, Gram's thin tree figures in the back garden.

I pulled out the tacks and brought the drawings into the kitchen. There was no room for them on the table, so I pulled up an extra chair and piled them on that.

‘Now you can eat,’ Beatrice said, reaching for the top one.

Films of Kristen Deniel

I sat on the porch steps drawing the mountain while I waited for Green's. He was hanging over the motor of the Old Man's truck, fiddling with hoses or connections, muttering to himself. ‘If he'd let me drive this thing for half a minute, I'd know exactly what's wrong with it.’ Half the arguments in that house had to do with Green's wanting to drive the truck. ‘Right here on the property, that's all,’ he'd say. ‘No big deal.’ The other arguments had to do with his disappearing. It made the Old Man crazy. Upon the mountain road to follow a deer path, lying on the bottom of the rowboat to drift along searching for the kingfisher, gone somewhere and dragging me along with him. One night at dinner the Old Man had dropped the box in my lap: tan leather, with dozens of pencils inside, points sharp and perfect, in every color you could imagine, a thick pad of paper, erasers, a pencil sharpener. I had picked up one of the pencils: French Blue, a soft color that was almost purple.

‘I love this,’ I told him. I had wanted to throw my arms around him, wanted to tell him I had never had a present like this before, no one had. I wanted to tell him but didn't tell him; I ducked my head, my bangs a fringe over my eyes. But he knew; I knew he knew. The Old Man was an artist, but a different kind. He drew circles and lines and squares that turned into plans for houses and buildings. He said he wished he could do what I did. Now Green's flew around the side of the truck like one of Izzy's hens, his eyeglasses taped to the side of his head, his hands filthy from the truck.

'Move it, Kristen Copses,' he said. 'We don't have all day here, you know.' I put the mountain picture carefully inside the box. At the end of the summer, I'd give it to the Old Man as a present. Don't think about the end of the summer, I told myself. Green's and I raced each other down the road, across the bridge, dead tie, and stopped, out of breath, at the mountain road. After a moment we started up. Green's lurched along. At one turn in the road he was all speed; the next he'd stop short, bent over, nose almost touching the ground. 'Look at this, Holly, it's a raccoon print,' he'd say, or, 'See the way this branch is cut off? Beaver, building a den where the stream comes off the mountain.' The Old Man was right about the road: It was slippery, muddy in the shade, one side ready to slide off the mountain straight into the river. But worth it.

It was Monday afternoon. Kristen put on her sunglasses, her Eddie Dillon sailor hat, stuck a Gertz lipstick in each pocket of her shorts, and her notebook under one arm. It was a beautiful day, a perfect day, and she had something perfect to do.

Detective.

They couldn't watch for ships that night after all. Mr.

Colgan had borrowed Gram's rowboat for night crabbing, and Mr.

Meyer was caulking the bottom of his.

'Want to go to the movie instead?' Kristen asked Noah when she caught up with him on the Smiths' porch.

'Well...'

'We won't stay for the whole thing,' she told him. 'We'll just sneak in and watch until eight-thirty, a little Eyes and Ears of the World News, and...' She tried to remember the newest movie at the Cross Bay. She had seen two minutes of it the other day before the matron had caught her and marched her outside, blinking, into the sunshine.

'How much does it cost?' He asked.

‘Not a cent. I told you, we’re sneaking in.’ She could see he looked worried. ‘Unless you’re afraid.’

‘I am not afraid of anything.’

‘Well, then.’ Action in the North Atlantic was the name of the movie. It was about the troop ships crossing the ocean, and German submarines following along...

She shivered a little, thinking about those ships. Mrs. Sherman had just pinned up another poster over a pile of raisin rings. SOMEONE TALKED, it said in big red letters on top, and underneath was a ship sinking so you saw only the bow, and sailors trying to swim away in waves that were high as mountains.

Kristen tried not to think about it. Instead, she walked down the street in front of Tom. They turned in at the alley on one side of the Cross-Bay Theatre. The alley was filled with itchy weeds that smelled. She could see Noah lifting his skinny legs as high as he could, but she just rushed right through the weeds and around to the back.

‘It’s hot as a poker in the balcony,’ she told him. ‘They always leave the door open up there.’

Noah stopped when he saw the fire escape stairs they’d have to climb.

‘Don’t be silly,’ she said, knowing what he was thinking.

‘Don’t look down.’

‘It must be two stories,’ he said. ‘You can fall right through those steps, and it looks as if the steps will pull off the side of the wall.’

‘Three stories,’ she said, daring him.

‘I am not afraid,’ he said. ‘I am just telling you.’

She started to climb without answering. She had done this every summer since she was six, up those stairs a thousand times. The stairs were rickety, she had to admit. And the screws holding them to the wall looked rusty as anything. Wouldn’t you think the guy who owned the movie would polish things up once in a while?

She looked back over her shoulder at Tom. He was holding on to the railing for dear life, as Gram would say, stopping each second to close his eyes and take a breath.

‘Race you to the top,’ she said.

He opened his eyes. ‘Sure.’

She grinned. He was a tough kid, that Tom.

The balcony door was opened just wide enough for them to crawl through. She sank on the top step next to the door to watch, with Noah sliding in next to her, breathless. ‘That was so simple,’ he said.

She leaned over. ‘We made it just in time for Bugs Bunny.’

He grinned back. ‘What’s up, Doc?’ He said.

She started to laugh.

‘What?’ he asked.

‘It’s your voice. It sounds so... so...’

‘Hungarian,’ he said. ‘It is a Hungarian Bugs Bunny.’

She liked the way he laughed, the way he talked. She kept smiling to herself as they leaned back against the steps to watch Bugs Bunny chomping on a carrot, falling off a cliff. They had a perfect spot. They had the whole balcony to themselves.

Not one person was up there.

If they had paid, if Poppy had been with her, she would have been able to go downstairs to the candy stand and buy a cup of popcorn, or some peanut chews. If she tried it now-that is, if she’d still had her tan purse with money-the matron with her flashlight would be right there to pounce on her.

And then it was time for the picture. Words... music... a destroyer being blown up in the water. The noise of it was deafening. Explosions were going on all over the place.

Kristen sat there for a while. She watched one of the ships sink and the sailors trying to hold on to little pieces of wood or to swim away, just like the poster in Mrs. Sherman’s bakery.

And she thought of Poppy. They had heard from him again, but only a postcard. She had missed the mailman that day, and the card had slid into the slot in the door, and it had been there all morning until Gram had spotted it. Never so tired. I never worked so hard, to be ready to go overseas. Thinking of you both in Ridgway makes me happy... makes it all worthwhile. Love, Poppy.

Kristen watched one of the sailors, arms raised, go under the water, and then she didn't watch anymore.

Noah wasn't watching either.

'Don't you like the movie?' she asked.

He shook his head.

'We could leave-' she began and broke off. She could see the balcony stairs and the beam from the matron's flashlight bouncing up toward them.

'I was on a ship like that,' Noah said.

She blinked. Of course. How else had he gotten here? She had never thought of that. The matron was halfway up the stairs now, looking at them, a frown on her face.

'Tom,' Kristen began.

'Are you here again?' the matron asked. 'I told you last time it's dangerous to climb those steps, and you can't keep coming in here when you don't pay. It was one thing when you were six years old, but...'

Kristen circled her, with Noah following, and went down the balcony steps to the first floor. They passed the candy counter and the glass stand with the popcorn piled up to the top and went out the door.

Behind them was the sound of bombs, and depth charges exploding, and in the marquee's light she could see Tom's face, his blue eyes swimming in tears.

She stood there for a moment, wanting to ask him, wanting to know about the ship, wanting to know what had made him cry.

Then she heard the church chimes.

‘It’s nine o’clock,’ she said. ‘Gram is going to have a fit’

They started to run, crossing the street diagonally, just missing an old Chevy with its headlights blackened, its horn blaring at them. They raced past Mrs. Sherman’s. ‘Same cookies,’ Noah said, breathless, and then around the corner of the As Good As New Shoppe with the dusty hat and coat, the flute and the violin.

By the time they reached the back road, Kristen had a pain in her chest and a stitch in her side, and Noah wasn’t crying anymore. They were both laughing, and he grabbed her hand and pulled her along until they reached her back door.

‘Tomorrow,’ Kristen called after him. ‘See you tomorrow.’

Kristen had been wandering around all of yesterday and today, trying to get another look at Tom. She wore the sailor hat Eddie Dillon had given her last summer, her sunglasses, and a thick layer of Victory Red lipstick from Gertz Department Store,

FREE TAKE ONE. Noah wouldn’t recognize her in a hundred years.

It didn’t make any difference. Once she thought she saw him climbing around on the rock jetties at the beach, and once on Cross Bay Boulevard. But both times he was gone by the time she got close enough for a good look.

Right now, it was Friday afternoon, late, and Poppy was finally coming for a weekend. In the rowboat, Kristen dipped the oars into the water as quietly as she could. Any minute Gram would be after her to practice the piano, Etude in Something or Other, set the table for dinner, and who knew what else.

(RIDGWAY 1944)

Kristen received three and a half presents for her birthday that Monday. Two were books, one was a secret, and the last was a half-eaten candy bar.

Lynnnatta Dillon gave her the candy, a Milky Way. The end of the wrapper was torn back, and teeth marks dented the chocolate.

‘I stole it,’ Lynnnatta said. ‘Stole it for you, and kept thinking about it, and my mouth watered, and I just couldn’t-’

‘-resist,’ said Kristen.

‘Right.’ Lynnnatta grinned. ‘A tiny bite.’

Kristen took the Milky Way by the wrapped end and slid it into her pocket. She was dying to wipe her fingers on her skirt, but she couldn’t hurt Lynnnatta’s feelings.

Kristen followed Lynnnatta and her two cats up the baseboard steps to the Dillons’ attic. It was almost the only standup attic in Ridgway Beach, a perfect place to look out the window and see what was going on all over the place. Most of the other summer houses had tiny crawl spaces, and Gram’s house, over on the bayside, didn’t even have that. Gram’s house was built up over the water on stilts, without an attic, or a cellar, or even a bathroom with a real tub.

‘Now, listen.’ Lynnnatta leaned toward her, the freckles on her nose like four dots of pepper. ‘I have a pack of things to tell you and they’re all secret.’

‘I won’t tell,’ Kristen said, feeling the heat of the attic, dying to take a quick peek out the window, to do a little spying on the beach at the end of the street.

‘You have to swear...’ Lynnnatta began.

Outside, the July sky was so blue it almost hurt Kristen’s eyes, and the wind was just right, so the beach would be packed. Spies were probably sitting there under their striped umbrellas checking on the ships that steamed away from the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

Lynnnatta’s eyes narrowed. ‘... swear on your aunt Celia’s life in Berlin, Germany.’

Kristen swallowed. She thought of her list of problems:

Number 1: Lies, and then the second list, the list of solutions. Right up there on top was the promise not to tell a lie ever again, not even a tiny little one, much less one of those gigantic ones about her aunt being an important U.S. spy against the Nazis.

This was the very last one, she told herself, no matter what.

She closed her eyes and crossed her heart over her white blouse. ‘I, Elizabeth Mollahan, promise never to tell your secrets, on my aunt Celia’s life.’

‘And if you tell,’ Lynnnatta said, ‘your aunt will probably be caught by the Nazis... not my fault... and they’ll make her tell all the secret war stuff and-’

‘She’d never do that. She’s the bravest-’ Kristen snapped her teeth together hard before the rest of the lie came out.

Where had her aunt Celia gotten herself to, anyway?

Kristen hadn’t even seen her since she was about four years old.

‘She’ll be marched out, put up against a wall, and shot just like in-’

‘-Fair Stood the Wind for France.’ Kristen and Lynnnatta had sneaked in to see it at the Cross-Bay Theatre three times yesterday.

‘Right,’ said Lynnnatta. ‘Now here’s the first thing I want to tell you. Come on.’

Lynnnatta ducked around the side of the chimney with Kristen behind her. Overhead, Kristen could hear the drone of one of the trainer planes from the naval base. She’d love to watch it circling over the beach, dipping its wings...

‘Are you paying attention?’ Lynnnatta asked. ‘Here I am ready to trust you with all my secrets...’

Kristen sank next to her, taking one of the cats on her lap. ‘I’m listening. Of course, I’m-’

Lynnnatta reached for a paper bag. ‘Look.’ She held it out.

Inside were about fourteen candy bars... Hershey’s, Walnettos, Sugar Daddy lollipops, and even a couple of rolls of assorted LifeSavers.

Kristen’s eyes widened. Not counting the dusty case in Mrs. Tannenbaum’s stationery store, she had never seen so much candy in her life. She reached out to run her fingers over a roll of Necco wafers. Her mouth was watering. She could see four yellow ones in a row, her favorites...

‘Maybe we could take one thing,’ Lynnnatta said. ‘Just one. My mother is saving all this for my brother Eddie in the army. Now that he’s a soldier fighting for his country, he gets everything, and I don’t even get a sniff of this stuff. She’s going to send it all overseas in this heat. The whole thing will be one big melted mess.’

Almost without thinking, Kristen reached for the Necco wafers and began to rip open the paper.

‘You like that?’ Lynnnatta asked. ‘Not me. I’m going to have a nut thing. Something with chocolate.’

They sat there, not talking, Kristen crunching down on two yellow Necco wafers, feeling the sweetness in her mouth. ‘I hope Eddie won’t mind,’ she said.

‘Listen,’ Lynnnatta said, ‘there’s enough candy here for the whole army.’ She stopped. For a moment she looked worried.

‘D-Day. I wonder if he was there.’

Kristen had a quick flash of Eddie in her mind, his square front teeth, a little separated, resting gently on his lower lip, his nose red. He always had a cold, was always sniffing even on the hottest day of the summer. What Kristen liked best about Eddie was that she could make him laugh. He always knew when she was telling Lynnnatta a story; he never gave her away.

One time she had told Lynnnatta she had almost seen a murder on Cross Bay Boulevard. A car had screeched to a stop in front of Bohack’s at closing time, and the Bohack guy wouldn’t let the man in. The man said something about being ready to throttle him, whatever that meant exactly, but he had gone away two seconds later. Kristen hadn’t mentioned the going away part to Lynnnatta, though.

‘I think I even heard the police sirens,’ Eddie had said.

‘Yes,’ Kristen hadn’t stopped for a breath. ‘About four police cars. They zeroed right in.’

Eddie Dillon with those square teeth, always ready to laugh. Eddie at Normandy Beach on D-Day? Everyone had talked about it all through the war... the day that the Allies, thousands of Americans and English men, would land in France to fight their way across Europe.

Kristen had seen the news at the movies, boats coming close to the shore, the water rough as Ridgway on a stormy morning. The forward flaps of the little square boats had come down, and soldiers had waded through water almost to their waists, while the Germans kept shooting and shooting... She shivered.

‘What is it?’ Lynnnatta asked.

Kristen shook her head. 'Nothing.'

Lynnnatta fished through the candy. 'Take one more thing,' she said. 'I'm going to try a couple of Walnettos next, and maybe just one butterscotch.'

Kristen finished the Necco wafers and took butterscotch too. At home Gram would never let her buy butterscotch candies.

'They pull the fillings right out of your mouth,' she'd say.

'Now the next thing is secret,' Lynnnatta said, her mouth full. 'We're moving out of Ridgway until the end of the war. My father has a job in a factory at Willow Run. It's in Detroit, wherever that is, the largest factory in the world. Top secret. We're going to lock the house, board up the windows, and off we go. My mother, my father, me, and even the cats.' She leaned forward.

'He's going to make those Liberator bombers. B-24's.'

Lynnnatta had the best luck in the world, Kristen thought.

But then she thought about the summer without her. 'When?' 'Tomorrow,' Lynnnatta said. 'The next day at the latest.'

'But we were going to...' Kristen closed her mouth around another butterscotch. It wasn't so much that they were going to do anything. But Lynnnatta, who lived at the other end of Queens all winter, had no idea that she was a last-row, last seat kid in school with terrible marks in everything except reading.

Lynnnatta didn't know she told lies every other minute. No, she didn't know any of that. That's what made her such a perfect friend.

'I know we were going to do a ton of stuff,' Lynnnatta said, 'but this is important, right? My father has to help win the war. And you could link up with those kids in Broad Channel...' Kristen stared out the window. She couldn't even begin to think about getting herself over to Broad Channel, walking up and down the streets, looking for friends, trying to act like Shirley Temple, the actress, when she saw a kid her age, trying to smile. My name is Kristen Mollahan, la la, what's yours? She shuddered, thinking about it.

‘Did you hear something?’ Lynnnatta asked, raising one hand.

Kristen listened a little nervously. It couldn’t be Nazis on such a sunny day. Maybe Lynnnatta’s mother back from the stores?

Lynnnatta shook her head. ‘I guess not.’ She held the box of Walnettos up to her nose and breathed in. ‘Of course, going to Willow Run isn’t quite as good as having an aunt a spy.’

‘No,’ Kristen said.

‘Or a cousin- a general in the navy.’

Kristen tried to look modest. She couldn’t even remember telling Lynnnatta that.

‘I have one more secret. It’s another birthday present. It’ll make you feel better when I’m gone.’ Lynnnatta reached under her collar and pulled a key, knotted in a brown shoelace, over her head. ‘This is for you, the back-door key. You can sneak in, come right up to the attic, and write your next five books.’

Kristen took a breath. This place, hers. She’d be here by herself, nobody knowing, without Gram telling her to stop reading and get herself outside in the fresh air, without the radio blaring war news in the back of her. She’d write a wonderful book, never mind the spelling, never mind Sister Jillien.

She took the key, still warm from Lynnnatta’s neck, and looped it under her blouse. ‘This is the best present I’ve ever had.’

‘I know it.’ Lynnnatta glanced at the brown paper bag.

‘And you got the best candy bar. I love those Milky Ways.’ ‘You’re right.’ Kristen reached into her pocket and handed it to Lynnnatta. ‘Have a bite of this. Have it all.’

Lynnnatta thought a moment. ‘It’s only fair. You’ve got the attic, an aunt- a spy, your father probably going overseas any minute, and you’ve already written thirteen books.’

‘Fourteen...’ Kristen began another lie and stopped. ‘Poppy’s not going overseas. He’s not going anywhere.’ She shook her head. ‘You forgot. He’s an engineer. He’s important right where he is, working in the city.’

Lynnnatta peeled the paperback off the rest of the candy bar. 'My father said he probably would go this summer.'

Kristen scrambled to her feet. 'Your father's wrong.'

Then she saw Lynnnatta's eyes widen. 'Holy mackerel,'

Lynnnatta said, 'it's my mother.'

Kristen looked over her shoulder. Mrs. Dillon was coming up the attic steps. Kristen could see the top of her head first, and then her shoulders.

They scooped the candy back into the bag, Kristen trying to swallow the rest of the butterscotch, which was stuck to her back teeth.

And then Mrs. Dillon was right there, standing in front of them, looking as if she would burst into tears. 'How could you?' she said, looking at Lynnnatta. 'I walked for blocks for that candy, one store after another, this one didn't have peppermints, the other didn't have Hershey's. There's a war on, no candy...' Mrs. Dillon looked out the window. 'My poor Eddie,' she said.

Kristen edged her way to the stairs, feeling guilty, feeling horrible. 'I think I'd better go home now,' she said using her best manners. 'It was very nice of you to have me over.'

She rushed down the stairs, and as she let herself out the door, she could hear Mrs. Dillon. 'That Mollahan girl is trouble,' she was saying. 'And you're not one bit better.'

Kristen stopped to see if Lynnnatta was going to say anything, but she couldn't hear a thing. She dug the last of the butterscotch off her back teeth and headed for Grams. The summer certainly wasn't starting very well, not very well at all.

'I.' Gram's house was the last one on the canal. 'Where the ocean swoops in to fight with the bay,' she always said.

Upon stilts, the house hung over the water. In the living room was a deep, soft couch, a radio on legs, and, this year, the damn piano taking up the whole sidewall. In the back was a square little kitchen. It had so many pots and pans, and bowls, and dishes, and mixers, and mashers, that there wasn't an inch of room left on the yellow counters. Most of the stuff was dusty.

Gram hated to cook.

The two bedrooms were separated from the kitchen by long flowered curtains. One was Gram's, the other was Poppy's.

Kristen was glad there wasn't a third bedroom. All summer she slept on the porch that was tacked on the front. She was so close to the water beneath; she could lean over in her bed and watch the silver killers zigzagging along just under the dark surface.

Sometimes she looked up at the Big Dipper, but most of the time, like tonight, she watched the searchlights crisscrossing overhead. She knew the spotters were looking for enemy planes that might come from Germany to bomb New York.

And suppose she was the one to spot a plane and bombs coming down? She thought about it, diving through bombs to rescue the neighbors. She closed her eyes. Germans parachuting into the canal. She'd have to grow like crazy, zigzagging away from the bombs, away from the paratroopers. It made her dizzy to think about it.

She listened. Something was going on. Noise. Lights. At Mrs. Meyer's, four houses down. Yes, lights. Mrs. Meyer hadn't even bothered to pull the blackout curtains, and the Nazis could zero right in with Kristen two seconds away.

And right now, a car was driving up on the roadside of the Smiths' house. Kristen knelt up in bed and leaned against the screen. Never mind that Gram had told her a hundred times she was going to knock the screen out and go headfirst into the water. 'Mr. Meyer's Model A Ford,' she said aloud. She knew that because she had helped him paint the top half of the headlights black so they couldn't be seen from the sky. The light Mr. Meyer had painted had turned out much better than the one she had worked on.

Kristen reached for her shorts and sneakers. She'd just get herself down there and find out what was going on. She wasn't one bit sleepy yet, anyway.

Strange that Mr. Meyer was using the last drop of his gas. He had sworn he was going to hold on to it until the day when the war was over in Europe. 'Then you and I, Kristen my love, are going to drive up and down Cross Bay Boulevard,' he had said.

'We'll honk the horn every inch of the way.'

She thought about sneaking out through the kitchen, but Gram would be awake in a flash. Instead, she unhooked the screen and pushed it until it swung out.

Noisy, much too noisy. She counted to fifty, then wiggled through the opening and hung on to the window ledge until she felt the piling with her feet. The rowboat was directly underneath.

She let go and landed on one of the oars.

For a minute she rocked back and forth holding her leg, feeling the pain shooting down her shin. Tomorrow she'd have a black-and-blue mark the size of a potato.

The boat was rocking too, water sloshing in over the side.

She could hear Mrs. Meyer's back door opening, and the sound of voices, but they were too far away for her to know what they were saying.

Kristen pulled the thick rope over the hook, setting the boat free. Then she pushed herself along under the porches, moving from piling to piling, not bothering with the oars.

She looked up as she passed slowly under the Colgan's', the Graves', the Temples'. Narrow slits of light from the sides of their blackout shades were reflected out onto the water, sliding up and down with the tiny waves.

Under the Smiths' porch, everything was still except for a gentle swish and the boat bumping against the pilings. The voices had stopped.

Kristen sat there shivering, wishing she had brought her sweater. She wondered how long she should stay there. If she boosted herself up on the piling, quietly, carefully, she could grab on to the edge of the porch. The Smiths' porch was a plain open one, not like hers, which had been made into a bedroom. She could tiptoe across it and see into the kitchen window. She thought about it for a moment.

Gram said her whole trouble was she didn't think about things long enough. Of course, she did. She thought all the time, about writing stories, and about the war, and about coming to Ridgway every summer. And she thought about her mother. Hadn't she brought a star every year to paste in the back of her bed so her mother would be there in Ridgway too? Of course, Gram didn't know that. That was private stuff; no one knew, not even Poppy. Especially not Poppy. His face would get that soft look, that sad look.

Kristen reached for the dripping rope and looped it over the Smiths' hook. All she needed was for the boat to float away without her. She slid the oars under the seats on one side. One almost broken shin was enough for tonight. Then she pulled herself up, hanging on to the rough floorboards of the porch.

She left a trail of wet sneaker prints going across, but they'd be dry before morning. And then she was under the window, and Mrs. Meyer was talking again, talking a blue streak in her high voice, and Mr. Meyer was talking too, a rumble of sound.

Kristen crouched there, listening, catching bits and pieces. 'Budapest... so far away,' Mrs. Meyer was saying, 'but never mind... safe and sound... the beach swimming...' Her voice trailed off.

'Maybe you'd like applesauce,' Mr. Meyer put in. 'Or toast... margarine on it, though... butter's gone...'

'Andrassy Street,' Mrs. Meyer said. 'I remember the cobblestones and Kalocsa's Restaurant...'

'How about toast with applesauce on the side?' Mr. Meyer asked. 'What do you say, Tom?'

Tom? Who was that, now? Kristen leaned back against the house to look at her leg. In the light from the window, she could see it was a mess.

Noah wasn't talking, not a word. Kristen listened to Mr. Meyer complaining that you had to be a genius to make the can opener work, while Mrs. Meyer kept going on about the beach.

Then Kristen heard her name, clear as a bell. Kristen Mollahan. Tom, whoever he was, was supposed to meet her, and they were going to be friends, Mrs. Meyer was saying.

Kristen knelt up slowly, so slowly it was as if she were swimming underwater. She gripped the edge of the windowsill with the tips of her fingers, then raised her head just high enough to see inside and to hear clearly. And what she heard was Noah saying he didn't have time to be friends with any Kristen Mollahan, saying her name in a strange, soft way, with an accent.

'I have to find Christy,' he said.

What was he doing there, she wondered, sitting at the table directly across from her, a dish of applesauce in front of him, the skinniest kid she had ever seen in her life? His hair was curly and thick, but it looked as if he hadn't combed it in a hundred years. She stared at him, his face down in the shadows. A nice face, she thought, even though he didn't want to be friends. Too bad for him. She didn't want to be friends either.

He was wearing shorts, and his knees were big and knobby under the table, his legs like sticks. Then he looked up. His eyes were blue, the bluest she had ever seen, and he was looking straight into her eyes. He picked up his spoon, a little applesauce dripping off the edge, and, still staring, pointed it at her.

She could feel the heat in her face, and her neck. Mr. and Mrs. Meyer were turning toward the window, trying to see what he was looking at outside. Kristen scrambled across the porch on her knees, and down over the edge, hanging on for a second, landing in the boat, grabbing the rope off the hook as fast as she could. She pushed herself back down under the porches so quickly she could hear the water churning up in the back of her.

She didn't stop until she was in her bed with the red quilt pulled up to her chin. She lay there thinking about Tom-his blue eyes staring at her-and wondering who Christy was. She couldn't believe she had been caught like that, sneaking around on the Smiths' porch in the middle of the night.

Too late.

Above her, the screen door opened.

Kristen began to row, singing, 'Mairzy doats...'

'Pretending she hadn't heard.'

Gram wasn't fooled. 'You could set the table, Kristen,' she called, 'get everything ready before your father comes.'

'Going to pick him up in the boat right now,' Kristen said over her shoulder. 'Then he won't have to walk around the long way.'

'And what about the piano?'

Gram was in love with that piano.

‘Did you practice?’ Gram began.

‘This morning.’ She hadn’t bothered much with the étude, she’d done the C scale twice, two minutes, and that was that. She began to sing again, ‘A kiddish divvy too,’ ‘listening for the sound of the door, but it didn’t close. Gram was still standing there, waiting for her to turn around and come back.

Kristen raised the oars, water plinking off the ends, but Gram didn’t say anything.

‘Going to get Poppy,’ she said again.

In the back of her, the screen door closed.

Kristen dipped the oars into the water again, veering toward the railway station, hurrying now, anxious to see him.

The railroad trestle looped across the bay, flat against the water. Kristen bent over the oars, wondering what Poppy would tell her about on the way back... probably how hot it was in St. Paul’s and how much he missed her. She smiled to herself, thinking about it.

She saw the smoke from the engine before she spotted the train. A moment later, it pulled into the station, and a knot of people piled out the doors. And there was her father, waving his newspaper at her. She waved back, rowing fast toward the dock, watching the distance narrow, angling around another boat that was coming in to meet the train. Then finally she rammed into the rough wood of the piling. She held the boat steady, stroking, until Poppy untied his shoes, pulled them off, and hopped in.

‘Want to row?’ she asked, leaning across for his kiss.

He shook his head, smiling, the lines around his eyes crinkling. She reached out to touch them with her fingers.

‘Go the long way,’ he said, ‘around the trestle.’

She knew Gram was waiting, broiling flounder, using the last dot of butter for little round potatoes, but she was so happy to be there with him, she didn’t say anything.

She dipped the oars into the water, pulling slowly, evenly, watching him. He tipped his hat back and closed his eyes. 'This is my favorite place,' he said. 'It's home, even though it's only for the summer.'

Kristen nodded. Tomorrow they'd line up at the deep-sea fishing dock, to climb aboard the Mary L. before the sun came up.

They'd fish all day, the boat smelling of kerosene and heat.

Tomorrow night, she and Poppy would walk to the Cross-Bay Theatre. He loved the movies too. It would be her fourth time for Fair Stood the Wind for France, first time paying. Then on Sunday, after Mass, they'd read, finish Evangeline or...

'I have to tell you...' Poppy's eyes were open now, blue with paler flecks of gray, his face suddenly serious.

'The Dillons left for Detroit,' she said quickly. 'Mr. Dillon's going to be a foreman in a factory in charge of making planes.'

Top secret, Lynnnatta says.'

Poppy grinned. 'It won't be top secret for long, not if Lynnnatta knows about it.'

Kristen swallowed, watching him smile.

He reached out, put his hand on the oars. 'I have to go too.'

I came tonight to tell you.'

She didn't look at him. 'To a factory like the Dillons? When would we leave?'

She looked out across the water, seeing him shake his head from the corner of her eye.

'The army needs engineers,' Poppy said.

For a moment she felt as if she couldn't breathe. 'Who's going to take care of me?'

'Gram,' he said. 'Gram, of course.'

Gram. She closed her mouth over the word, didn't want to hear it. She and Gram all alone in St. Paul's this winter, the wind rattling around the house.

'Please,' she said, but she didn't even know if she had said it aloud.

Poppy put his hand over hers. 'Listen. People are being killed just for disagreeing with the Nazis, or being Jewish.'

'I'm sick of the war,' she said.

'It's going to be over someday,' he said, 'now that the Allies have landed in France.'

She shook her head. 'It'll take forever.'

Poppy sighed. 'There's been nothing but destruction in this war, families separated, villages ruined, cathedrals bombed...' She opened her mouth, trying to think of something to say, something that would change his mind.

'But right behind the armies will be people like me,' he said. 'The engineers, the builders. We're the ones who'll help put Europe back together again.'

'Where will you go? When...'

He shook his head. 'It could be anywhere. England, maybe, or Germany.'

'I won't even know where you are.'

'Yes, you will,' he said.

Kristen shook her head. 'Mrs. Colgan doesn't know where her brother is. She said the censors cross everything out in the letters. She can't even guess what country.'

Poppy squeezed her hand. 'That's true. But I promise I'll find a way to let you know, somehow.'

Gram was calling now. She could hear her voice across the water. 'Jerry, Kristen. hurry.'

'I love you, Kristen.' Poppy said. 'I love you more than Ridgway. More than anything.'

Kristen edged the boat toward the dock. Gram was outside, her hand cupped over her eyes, watching for them.

‘What will Gram say?’ Kristen asked. ‘She won’t like it.

She’ll hate it. I know she will.’

Poppy moved his hand, held it over Kristen’s wrist on the oar. ‘Gram knows.’

Kristen stared at him. ‘You told Gram first. You knew about it. Both of you keeping a secret... not telling me...’

She shook his hand off her wrist, feeling tears hot in her eyes, a terrible burning in her throat, feeling angry enough to burst. She hated him, hated Gram.

She started to grow.

‘Kristen.’ her father began, then stopped.

She nosed the boat in under the porch, banging hard into the piling. She must have chipped a piece of paint off the boat, a couple of pieces. She didn’t care, didn’t care about one thing.

Poppy reached out to help her up, but she pulled away from him.

Gram was standing at the edge of the ramp that led to the kitchen, smiling a little, looking anxious at the same time. ‘You told her? I thought you were going to wait until after-’

‘Mind your business,’ Kristen said and said it again. The words came out of her mouth so fast; they ran together. Then she ran up the path, away from the house. She wanted to go back to the water, but she’d have to pass them. Instead, she went along the road, running on the tar, which was gluey from today’s sun. She saw Noah and veered away from him, but she knew he had seen her too. He was standing in front of the Smiths’ house, watching her cry.

The next day, as soon as it was light, Kristen was out the door, barefoot, heading for Lynnnatta’s house. Peeling shutters covered the windows on the boat Noah floor, winter shutters. She could hear the radio next door, the newscaster talking about the American army caught on the beaches in Normandy: two hundred thousand soldiers waiting to set Paris free. Was that all anyone thought about-news and the war?

Without looking, Kristen slipped the key out from under her collar. She didn't bother to pull the shoelace over her head. She leaned forward. The key fit easily into the lock, the door sliding open under her fingers, and she was inside in a moment.

She wandered into the living room. It was darker than the kitchen in there, the winter shutters tighter on the windows. Still, shafts of light fell across the rug, and the couch, and Eddie's picture on the end table.

She picked up the picture, seeing Eddie's smile, his buck teeth, his boots laced uptight, his cap pushed back over his frizzy hair. She thought of Poppy, and how he would look in a uniform.

She set the picture back in the same spot. How strange it seemed without Lynnnatta, or even Mrs. Dillon sitting next to the radio listening to Portia Faces Life. Kristen went up the attic stairs, listening to the sound of her feet, and pushed up the window.

The waves were high today. No one was on the boardwalk except a gray gull sitting on the railing, its feathers puffed out over its skinny legs. The legs reminded her of someone, but she couldn't think of who it was.

Mary L. was still at the dock, sitting low in the water. If only she'd see Poppy in line with the other fishermen. He'd be balancing the picnic basket and tackle box; he'd have his fishing rod and hers too.

She felt a terrible lump in her throat. He was probably packed by now, having breakfast, ready to take the morning train back to the city. And she wouldn't be there to say goodbye.

He had told her about the train last night when she had finally gone home. He had sat on the edge of her bed, his weight tilting the mattress down, telling her the war would be over some time and they'd be right back there in Ridgway with everything just the same.

She hadn't said a word. She had acted as if she didn't care, not one bit.

Now she swallowed hard over the lump in her throat. She wasn't going back. She would stay in the attic all morning, all day, writing a book or something. She wished she could stay there forever.

She took deep breaths of the cool air that was coming in. And, leaning over, she saw Tom. He was alone on the beach, wearing a pale green shirt and shorts. Holding up the shorts was a belt... a ridiculous belt that was miles too big for him.

‘Ah,’ she said aloud. That’s what the seagull reminded her of. Tom. He had those same skinny legs with fat knees. He was walking back and forth, shading his eyes with his hands, turning toward her.

‘Oh no you don’t,’ she said under her breath. She ducked away from the window; walking doubled over to the back of the chimney.

Poor Eddie’s candy was gone, bag and all. Only the Milky Way wrapper was left, over in the corner crumpled in a ball.

Kristen looked closer. A piece of paper was lying on the floor. She sank and picked it up, a note from Lynnnatta.

Don’t worry, Kristen. I’m coming back. Good luck to your Aunt C in Berlin, Germany. I won’t tell anyone.

M.D.

And taped to the but Noah was a LifeSaver, a red one, Kristen’s favorite color.

Kristen leaned back against the rough chimney bricks, sucking on the LifeSaver wondering if Poppy’s train had left.

She stood up suddenly, so quickly she felt dizzy. Then she was out of the attic, clattering down the stairs, through the hall, through the kitchen, and out the door, listening for the sound of the train. She didn’t stop to see whether anyone saw her.

It was too late to get to the station. Instead, she ran across the field to the viaduct over the water, trying to find enough breath to get her there ahead of the train. She began to wave as soon as she heard the sound of it on the tracks, even before she saw it. She didn’t stop until it was a smudge in the distance, and then gone completely, even though she knew Poppy couldn’t have seen her.

‘Yes,’ he said, going down toward the Smiths’.

She went into the house, thinking about tomorrow, thinking about asking him all the things she wanted to know.

Gram was in the kitchen making iced tea, and she poured some for Kristen. 'I was just getting a little worried,' she said.

'I was with Tom,' Kristen said.

Gram nodded at her. 'Good. I'm glad.'

Kristen went into her bedroom with a glass of lukewarm iced tea and a sprig of mint from Mrs. Colgan's Victory garden.

She bent over to run her fingers across her mother's stars pasted in a neat row, still thinking about tomorrow.

That Noah person had been ducking around all over the place yesterday, here one minute, there the next, always one step ahead of her, one step ahead of the police maybe.

She had thought the whole thing over. Noah could be a Nazi spy... not a chance-in-a-million spy-like Mr. Egan, but a real one. She counted it out on her fingers, talking to herself as she marched down the block. One, he had come in the middle of the night; two, he had some kind of foreign spy accent, and three, she couldn't keep track of him.

As soon as she turned the corner, she stopped to put on a slash of Victory Red lipstick. She was getting good at it, not so much on her teeth anymore, or extra around her mouth. At least she hoped not; there were no mirrors on the way to the beach. She smacked her lips, a little sore from all that rubbing off lipstick before she went home every day.

Then she heard footsteps across the street. She looked back. A miracle. It was from Tom. She ducked behind the mailbox to watch him. It looked as if he was heading for the beach.

She let him get a half-block ahead of her, up the boardwalk steps and down the other side; then she followed along after him.

Instead of taking the steps, she scooted underneath the boardwalk and sank back behind the rusty wire fence to see where he went.

He was carrying something, a big wad of stuff. He passed about two inches in front of her, another miracle that he didn't see her, and stopped. What was he up to?

He unrolled the lump, a beach blanket, one of Mrs. Meyer's. She'd seen it on the washing line a hundred times, so there wasn't anything much suspicious there. He sat down and lined up a bottle of Coke, a bag of something-sandwiches or a foreign spy radio maybe-and a pad of paper and a pencil. Then he settled himself on the blanket, just sitting there looking out at the water, his bony knees up almost to his chin.

It was a good thing she didn't have anything to do. She could sit there as long as he did. She certainly wasn't going to hang around Gram's house. She was hardly talking to Gram since the night before Poppy left. She took a breath. Don't think about Poppy. Think about Gram instead.

'We going all the way to the top?' I drew in my breath. Did I want to do that, stand on top of the mountain, a mountain of trouble myself? Green shook his head. 'Pop would have a fit.' He ran his hand over an imaginary beard. 'The rocks fall, Green's, use your head,' he said in the Old Man's voice. Halfway up was a spot that widened. We looked down and saw the house, and Izzy picking tomatoes, and we whistled at her until she waved, even though she couldn't see us. Then we sank on a rock and Green's fished in his pocket for a squished Hershey bar.

'Should I give you half?' he asked. 'You're not as big as I am.'

'Give me all,' I told him, laughing. 'I'm more deserving.'

He held up both pieces, squinting. 'The Old Man would say that.' I knew that. Somehow the Old Man thought I was a great kid. How had that happened? I swallowed, thinking of the lemon lady: 'You want tough?' she had said. 'I'll show you tough.' And someone else, I didn't even remember who it was: 'You've missed school half the term, how do you think you can get away with all this?' But I was a new person with the Old Man, with Izzy, with Green's. It was as if the angry Kristen were seeping right out of my bones, leaving chocolate as soft as that sticky Hershey bar. I looked at Green's, wondering if he minded that the Old Man thought I was great.

But Green's was splitting the candy bar, and he gave me the bigger piece but did it quickly. I wasn't supposed to know. I took a breath. I thought about the W picture in my backpack: the mother, the father, the brother, the sister. And don't think of that, either, I told myself.

Kristen counted the days on her fingers It was almost time for St. Paul's, almost time for the sixth grade and Sister Sara. It was almost time to say goodbye to Tom.

They had sent the letter to Poppy two weeks ago, she and Tom, both of them writing together, trying not to blot the tissue-thin paper. Noah had shown her the creased scrap of cardboard with spidery black writing before he copied it carefully:

Christy Meyer, Maison-Mère Filles de la Sagesse, Rue de la Santé, Paris. 'We can't count on it,' Kristen had told him. 'Maybe I'm wrong, maybe Poppy's not in France.'

'Yes,' he said. 'I know.'

She didn't mean it, though. She knew Poppy was there. She was sure of it. And she kept remembering what he had said in the rowboat. 'Right behind the armies will be people like me.

We're the ones who'll help put Europe back together again.'

Find Christy...

For the first time, Kristen paid attention to the war.

Mrs. Hailey lent them a huge map of France. They hung it in Gram's kitchen and tried to guess how long it would take Allies to get from Cherbourg to Caen, to Rouen, and last to Paris. And as Kristen moved her finger slowly from city to another, she could almost feel Poppy there.

In the meantime, they swam and fished. Noah caught a skate and a sea robin and put them gently back into the water.

Kristen caught a fluke once and, for the first time, a flounder.

And then on Tuesday, they argued. They didn't speak to each other for three days, and all because of the new movie at the Cross-Bay Theatre.

'I am not climbing those stairs,' Noah had said. 'I am paying money, and I am walking in through the front door. I am not a thief.'

'I don't have money,' Kristen had said.

'I will lend-'

‘No’

‘I will give-’

‘No.’ She didn’t know why she was so stubborn, why she was so angry with him. She spent two afternoons in the rowboat by herself before, he appeared again at the dock.

‘I have come to swim,’ he said at last.

‘So, swim,’ she said. ‘You don’t need me.’ But she was pulling the rowboat in, ready to put on her bathing suit and go with him.

‘I’m not a thief either,’ she told him.

He raised his eyebrows.

They started along Cross Bay Boulevard, waving to Mrs. Sherman, who was sweeping her walk across the street.

‘Well, all right.’ Kristen spoke as if Noah had said something. ‘I’ll pay. I’ll save my money this winter, and next summer...’ She bit her lip and glanced at him. She knew he’d be thinking the same thing. Would he come back next summer?

Would he ever come back?

‘I know why you were angry,’ he said. ‘When people go away...’

She nodded. ‘Yes.’

They had just passed the As Good as New Shoppe when the door banged open in the back of them. ‘Mrs. Sherman called Mr. Rowley. ‘The radio. Turn it on. The news. Paris is free.’

Across the street, Mrs. Sherman flung out her arms. ‘Free.’

Her face was turned up to the sky. ‘That beautiful city-’

‘They’re going to keep going now,’ said Mr. Rowley, ‘those soldiers of ours, right to Germany.’

Kristen stopped walking. Next to her Noah had stopped too.

‘Free,’ she whispered.

The mailman rounded the corner. 'Have you heard the news?' he called. 'It's the beginning of the end. Next summer we'll have lights on the boardwalk, and the guys will be home.'

Films of Kristen Deniel

'Company's coming,' Gram said. I looked up from my pad.

I was drawing a picture of a boat I had seen at Gram's canal: white with thin blue lines of trim, the name in script on the back, Danbar-J, and the captain hosing down the deck. I couldn't remember what he looked like, so I sketched in his back, bent over, a watch cap on his head.

'Who's coming?' I asked, but Gram had pattered away down the hall, with Henry following her.

'It's Monday, right?' she called back. 'It is,' I said, squiggling the pencil for shadow.

'The movie is closed. My cousin Beatrice comes on Mondays.' She smiled. 'I forgot. You don't know that.

Remember, Beatrice had a lingering cold?'

Ah, I thought. A lingering cold. Perfect for my next absence note. I looked around the kitchen. 'Not much to eat in here.'

She came back into the kitchen, a thin line of red on her lips. 'Ah, but Beatrice brings dinner. Wait and see. It will be ...' She patted her lips together.

12

Films of Kristen Deniel Every night we ate soup from a can, Gram, Henry, and I. We sat at the table under a stained-glass lamp that tossed rainbows onto the kitchen ceiling. On the wall was a quick picture of Henry I had drawn. He was wearing boxing gloves and batting at the light cord.

Gram whittled away on a slice of wood as we dunked bits of donuts or slice-and-bake chocolate chip cookies into the tomato soup. On Gram's check days we ate big.

They went into the kitchen, the three of them, Gram sliding the teakettle onto the stove as soon as they were in the door. 'Change your clothes, Kristen. 'She said, 'and find something of your father's that Noah can wear.'

And twenty minutes later, they were huddled around the table, hair damp, but wearing dry clothes, with Gram's knitted afghans around their shoulders.

'It was my fault,' Kristen said slowly. 'I told him we could get a ship to Europe. And he was trying...'

'Oh, Kristen. 'Gram said.

Tom's eyes were on her. 'I never really thought we could go. It was a dream. A dreamlike thinking someone will find Christy...' He sighed. 'I just wanted to see the ships one more time. I wanted to think about the ships going to Christy.'

Kristen nodded, thinking that she had dreamed the same thing, going to Poppy, finding Poppy.

'When I started, it was not even raining. I just row so slowly...' he said. 'I would not have gone without you.' He shook his head. 'And now I have lost the boat.'

'And we might have lost you both.' Gram scraped back her chair. 'Don't you know that this is what it's all about?

Nagymamma sending you and Christy away from her so you'd be safe? And your parents publishing a newspaper, helping to win the war, so you'd have a good life?'

'For me? My mother and father?' Noah was nodding. 'I have never thought about that. I have just never thought...'

Gram turned to Kristen. 'And Poppy, who could have stayed right here... He went for you, Kristen. and I had to let him go. My son.' She turned her head a little. 'It was so hard.'

Gram didn't say anything else for a moment. She looked like herself, stern, frowning a little. But then she put her hand on Kristen's cheek. 'But worth it. Worth the price to keep you safe.' Before Kristen could say anything, Gram pushed back the flowered curtains and went into her bedroom. 'I have something for you, Tom.' She came back carrying a blue case.

'From the window,' Kristen said, realizing. 'From the As Good as New Shoppe.'

Gram smiled. 'I'll have to swap fish every week for this violin for the next two summers.'

And Noah was reaching for the violin, running his hands over the case, then snapping it open to look at the shiny wood and pluck the strings.

'I know about Nagymamma,' Gram said. 'I know she'd want this for you.'

But by this time the violin was under Tom's chin. For a moment he tightened the strings, his head turned to the side. Then the kitchen was filled with the sound of a Hungarian song, fast, and sharp, and beautiful.

And Gram was nodding. 'See, Kristen. 'She said, 'if you'd only practice...'

And at that moment, Kristen remembered Poppy's letter.

Give Gram a big hug. She loves you more than you know.

She sat back; glad Gram was there in the kitchen instead of far away like Nagymamma. She listened to Noah playing, his head bent over the violin, his fingers moving on the strings, as the sound of the rain grew less and then stopped altogether, and in the window, she could see a pale, late sun edge the horizon.

'This one, this waltz,' Noah said, 'is Nagymamma's favorite.'

But before he had played more than two or three notes, Kristen remembered something else. 'Good grief,' she said, 'my library book.'

'The book in the rowboat?' Noah asked. 'It must be soaking wet.'

'Come on, Tom,' she said. 'We have to get it out of there, dry it off, something. And we have to look for Pap.'

They left Gram with her tea, and as Kristen went out the door, she turned back to see Noah leaning over Gram at the table, kissing her cheek. 'Grannie,' he said.

Then Kristen was down in the boat, with four inches of water in the bottom, handing it up to him. 'Mrs. Hailey will have a fit,' she said. 'She said it was a lovely book.'

Noah looked at it, water dripping from the edges, the dye running. 'I know this book,' he said. 'I have read it in school. It's about the French Revolution, a million years ago.'

Kristen raised her hand. 'Tom,' she said. She sank on the wet seat, her feet sloshing in the water. 'Oh, Tom. The French Revolution. I know where my father is.'

She looked up. 'He's been trying to tell me all these weeks.'

Madeline and The Three Musketeers. Roland, the French hero. All in France. That's why he sent me to Mrs. Hailey. He knew she'd tell me there wasn't a book called The Promise.'

Noah was frowning. He didn't know what she was talking about.

'His promise, Tom. That's what he meant. He promised I'd know where he was, that he'd tell me without the censors knowing. It took me all this time.'

And she began to smile, because Noah looked so silly standing on the dock with Gram's pink afghan over his shoulders and the dripping book in one hand, and because she knew where Poppy was. And then she remembered war news, and all the men who were being killed as the army tried to fight its way across France.

Let Poppy be all right, she thought.

'We shouldn't do this,' I told her as we trundled home a cartload of donuts, a case of cat food, and our check-day treat: a gallon of cherry vanilla ice cream and enough Snickers bars to keep us chewing for a week of television nights. 'We should spread it out.'

Gram didn't answer. She hummed a scrap of an old song I had never heard before. That's the way she talked sometimes. She'd start with bits of this and that, it could even be poetry. You had to untangle her words in your head like balls of knotted string. And sometimes she'd break off in the middle of a sentence, small frown lines on her forehead.

I, knew something the hot cocoa woman didn't know, something even Emmy, star of the agency, hadn't guessed. Gram forgot things, forgot words, forgot what she was doing. Not all the time, but still too often. Gram knew it too. She'd look at me helplessly, hands in the air, and then I'd rush to finish her sentence for her or to turn down the flame under a pot of soup that was ready to boil over.

'My cousin Beatrice is waiting,' she sang one night and handed me my jacket. She gave her straw hat a twirl as she passed the hook it hung on in the hall. 'Much too cold for this.'

'Where are we going?' I asked.

'To the movies.'

'What will we use for money?'

Gram didn't answer. She pulled a brown hat out of the closet and stood in the mirror, arranging the veil in front of her eyes. In the dim light of the hall, she looked young; her skin seemed to glow.

She saw me staring at her, and for the barest second before, I looked away, I could see that her eyes gleamed. 'Wait a minute.' She reached out and gently took my arm so I stood in front of the mirror.

I didn't much like to look at myself; there was that scar just healed from the accident on the Old Man's mountain. If I didn't see the scar, I didn't have to think about that night and the terrible sound of the truck slamming into the rocks as we slid toward the edge.

Gram took the brown hat off her head and put it on mine. She fluffed out the veil so it covered my face down to my nose and then she stood back.

I drew in my breath at the reflection. No scar, no freckles, and my sandy hair, which usually poked out in all directions, looked soft, almost curly. I looked different, almost ... Pretty wasn't even the word.

'Ah,' Gram said. 'You know it too. This is the way you're going to look very soon. This is the way you'll look for the rest of your life. You have a beautiful face.'

I swallowed. I didn't want to take the hat off. I wanted to leave it on forever.

‘Wear it.’ She patted my shoulder, then opened the closet door to take out another hat for herself, a green wool one with flecks of gold and an iridescent clip on one side. She smiled at me.

‘It’s yours to have forever, even when you leave me.’

‘I won’t leave,’ I said.

She started to say something, but instead fiddled with the lock on the front door and dropped the key into her pocketbook. As we went past the garage, she shook her head regretfully. The gas gauge was almost on Empty-I had seen that the other day- and we had about forty cents to last us until the middle of the month.

I sighed. I had money Gram didn’t know about. I always had money; I called it my running money. It couldn’t be used for gas or food, just running. I had made that bargain with myself a long time ago.

We rushed along in the misty rain for a couple of blocks; then Gram stepped into the middle of the street, her head up, her hands out. ‘Look.’

I put my head back to see fine sleet dropping from the dark sky, streaks of white light.

How would I draw that? I wondered. Black paper, if I could get my hands on some, maybe with white tempera, or maybe the palest gray with a sable brush.

Behind us, a horn blared, a loud, frightening sound. Gram grabbed my hand and we darted out of the street. Strange to feel someone’s hand holding mine. The last time was Izzy’s. ‘I always wanted a daughter,’ she had said, hands out. ‘Babies, children.

Piles of them.’

Gram and I made right turns at the next three corners. Then in front of us was the Island Theater, with small lights, blurred in the mist, that ran around the marquee.

An old woman sat at the ticket counter. Not as old as Gram, but still her hair was a bundle of braided cotton candy on top of her head, and when she smiled her teeth were butter yellow. Her thumb pointed at me. ‘What’s her name, Gram?’

‘Kristen.’ Gram waved her hand at the woman. ‘This is Beatrice Gilcrest, my cousin and best lifetime friend, not counting Henry.’

‘Gorgeous,’ Beatrice told Gram, and it took me a moment to realize she meant me. She leaned forward. ‘I would have seen you sooner, much sooner, but I’ve had a miserable cold.’ She winked at me. ‘I didn’t want to spread my germs around.’

We smiled at each other; then without paying Gram and I tiptoed past her and went inside.

I peered at the dark theater that stretched out in front of us. Almost no one else was there. It was a school night, and everyone was home, I guessed, still having supper, doing homework. It gave me a strange feeling. I thought about Green’s at the dinner table with Izzy and the Old Man or bent over a sheet of paper working on algebra.

‘We have to work to pay our way,’ Gram said, leading me to the candy counter. She turned on the lights, poured a pile of corn and a cup of what looked like parsley into the popcorn machine, then sat back on a high stool behind the counter. ‘Special recipe, this popcorn.’ She nodded. ‘Beatrice and I dreamed it up last winter.’

Gram pointed up. ‘Beatrice lives upstairs. Her apartment takes up the whole top. It’s like a bowling alley.’ She shook her head. ‘Can you imagine?’

I nodded, reaching for a kernel of popcorn. It tasted better than it looked.

I had to laugh, thinking about Henry in boxing gloves fighting for me. My main concern about Henry was how to keep out of his way. I stepped back as he jumped into the car and hopped across the backseat to sit on the rear window ledge, his head up, one notched ear forward, his whiskers twitching.

But I didn’t have time to think about that. I slid into the car as Gram backed out of the garage and down the driveway in one great swoop and, never looking, barreled onto the street.

You wouldn’t believe this; I told Green’s in my head and grabbed the edge of my seat with both hands.

Gram began to talk, glancing down at her movie-star hands, long and thin, her nails painted fire-engine red but chipping here and there. I wanted to tell her to slow down but bit my lip instead.

I thought I was going to be dead by the time we reached the first crossing. But by the second corner, I realized there wasn't that much traffic, and the few cars on the road stayed well out of our way, so I began to relax and listen to what she was saying. 'Going to stay and have yourself done up in a tree?' she asked. 'Stay longer and I'll teach you how to drive. Like the movies? We can do that, too.'

My mouth went dry. How to drive? That's what Green's would say. You could tell her a story about that, couldn't you?

I brushed at the air, wanting to brush him out of my head. I was trying to think of what illness I'd give myself today when the Silver Bullet turned another corner and stopped. Spread out in front of us was a canal with a few fishing boats, kerosene trails sliding out in the back of them on the water, and beyond the boats, beyond the canal, was more water than I had ever seen.

Kristen couldn't see light in any of the houses along the row, not even glimpses from the edges of the blackout curtains.

Everyone was gone, it seemed. Gram wouldn't be home for an hour, and the Smiths were probably shopping, caught somewhere in the rain.

A moment later, she slid down the ramp into the rowboat and began to row toward the marshes. Another bolt of lightning lit the bay, and beneath the seat in the stern, she could see something almost hidden against the anchor. It was Pap, small and wet, shivering, terrified.

There was no time to take her back, no time to dry her. She'd have to stay there huddled under the seat until later until Kristen persuaded Noah to come back.

He hadn't promised he wouldn't try it, but she thought she had convinced him. How could he have thought he could do it alone, she thought, in a storm like this?

The bay was rough with whitecaps, and the rain, pelting the water, slanted toward her, pushed by the wind. She was soaked through, her hair hanging in strings, dye from her shorts running blue over her legs.

A puddle of water was gathering at the bottom of the boat. She knew she should scoop it out with the old coffee can they kept for bailing, but there wasn't time for it either. She kept her eyes focused on the marshes so the lightning would show her how far Noah had gone.

She was lucky he was a poor rower... unlucky that the center of the bay the waves were beginning to rise so high that the boat dropped steeply at times, and the oars didn't hit the water with every stroke.

She couldn't stop thinking of Poppy telling her that someday the war would be over and everything would be the same. She couldn't imagine it. And she didn't even know where Poppy was.

That last night in the boat he had promised her he'd let her know.

Promised!

Something tugged at her mind, and then it was gone.

She was across the bay past the marshes she couldn't see, and across the channel. The pull of the sea was much stronger now, and as she looked back, she couldn't see the entrance to the bay anymore, even though she was just a few strokes away. For a moment she could see the misty beams of the tall lights on the boardwalk; then they have hidden again as the rowboat slid into the trough of a wave.

Then, above the sound of the rain and the waves, Kristen heard another sound, the sound of a motor. A small boat, she thought, a fishing boat, or maybe a cutter, and nearby. The sound was comforting. She didn't feel so alone, even though she couldn't see it.

And just ahead of her was Tom. He had heard the sound too. In the next lightning flash, she could see him turn, looking over his shoulder.

'Wait,' she called. 'It's not a ship, not a troopship. Don't, Tom...'

He couldn't hear her, but in another flash, he saw her, she was sure. And the rest of it seemed to be in slow motion. The next wave was so swollen, so tremendously high, that it pulled his boat up, and up, and the boat poised there on the crest for an instant, motionless. She could see him clearly, the orange of his life jacket standing out even in the darkness.

Then, as the wave slid out from under the boat, she could see the forward part rising, almost straight up. Kristen watched it, breathless, as it slid back, and in that second, Noah was tossed into the sea.

She could see the orange life jacket a little longer, but after only seconds a wave pulled her boat in one direction and Noah in another and he disappeared.

She kept calling, kept trying to turn the boat in circles, glancing at the lights on the boardwalk to mark her place, watching for the streaks of lightning to show her where he was.

She veered away from his empty boat, which was spinning first high on a wave, then into the crest. In another flash, she saw him again, just the quickest glimpse, the orange life jacket, and his dark head above the water.

'I'm here,' she yelled, not sure he had heard her, or even seen her, and then another wave came, a mountain of a swell that moved toward them, pushing Noah toward her. Kristen could see him turning toward her, his mouth open. He was gulping water, and she reached out, and by some miracle, her hand hooked around the top of the jacket. She held it, feeling her nails rip, but knowing she wouldn't let go, even if she was pulled out of the boat.

But the wave was past them now, and the water grew calm just for the second he needed to grip the boat and pulled at his jacket with both hands until he tumbled into the boat.

He lay there in the bottom, the water washing over him, taking deep breaths. 'You promised,' she wanted to say, even though she knew he hadn't. But she knew it was her fault, all her fault because of her lies, and she told herself she'd never tell another lie if she could just get him back safely.

-And-

Now Noah was up on the seat, briefly raising one shoulder in the air, coughing, and reaching out to touch her hand. Kristen turned the boat back into the bay, rowing toward the houses, watching him trembling with the cold. Finally, she nosed the boat in under the porch, the lights on above, and Gram waiting and watched as Pap, a furious ball of orange fur, streaked out of the boat and up the path away from them.

It moved and rolled, it shimmered, it glowed iridescent silver. The Atlantic Ocean. It itched for a piece of drawing paper.

'This is my ocean,' Gram said, as if it belonged to her personally, like one of her hats.

It was the way I felt about the Delaware River. Pain filled my chest as I thought about it. I wanted to sit in the Old Man's rowboat, to lean over and put my hands into that clear water, to watch the catfish riding along on the bottom, the schools of pickerel lazing in the warm sun.

‘So, what do you think?’ Gram asked.

‘Bigger than a river,’ I said. ‘Rougher.’ I spread out my hands, trying to think of the difference. ‘It's wonderful, but...’

She waited.

‘You can't get your arms around it.’

13

Kristen walked down Cross Bay Boulevard. She'd been looking for the mailman all afternoon. Just then he rounded the corner. ‘I've been waiting forever,’ she told him.

‘It's too hot to walk fast,’ he said. ‘But I have something for you.’ He pulled out a letter.

‘Poppy,’ she said. She took it from him, smiling. She didn't wait to open it. She leaned against the window of As Good as New Shoppe to tear open the thin white envelope. Mr. Rowley, the owner, was moving things around. No more straw hat and the violin was gone. Instead, he was dragging a huge moose head to the windowsill. It must be a thousand years old, Kristen thought, and it will be in the window for another thousand.

She looked down at Poppy's letter, ran her fingers over the handwriting she loved. He didn't say much about himself, but about the end of the summer, and Kristen's going back to St. Paul's. He asked about how many books she had written.

She looked at the moose head. ‘I've written about as much as you have,’ she said under her breath. But never mind, there'd be plenty of time for that when school began.

She turned the page over. There was more about books.

Poppy wrote about Madeline again, and A Tale of Two Cities. ‘And remember The Promise,’ he had written. ‘That's the key to it all.’

There was always something, Kristen thought, as she headed for home. Before she went to the library, she'd have to find the Three Musketeers book.

It wasn't easy. Bent almost double, she searched under the boardwalk for an hour. Up above, she could hear thunder, and once in a while, she could see streaks of heat lightning in the distance.

But at last, she spotted the book. It was propped up against one of the posts, a little wrinkled, a little sandy, but she blew on the pages and went off to the library to ask the world's crabbiest librarian to find The Promise for her.

Mrs. Hailey looked up as Kristen laid the book on the desk in front of her. 'Ah, Kristen.' She said smiling. 'I've been looking for you. I know I was crabby the other day...'

Kristen began to shake her head, began to say no, but then just smiled and rolled her eyes.

They both laughed.

'I was hot and tired, and I didn't need one more story about a lost book,' Mrs. Hailey said.

'That's all right,' Kristen agreed. 'I found the book anyway.'

'Another reason I'm glad you're here,' Mrs. Hailey said. 'I searched and searched. I even called the library in Jamaica. Your father knows books, but this time he's wrong. There's no children's book called The Promise.'

'I'll tell him,' Kristen said. She thought for a moment.

'How about A Tale of Two Cities?'

'Lovely book. A little hard, but worth it.' Mrs. Hailey plucked it off the shelf in the back of her and stamped it with the end of her pencil.

Outside the window was a sudden flash of lightning, and then a clap of thunder, so close they could feel the vibration.

Mrs. Hailey shivered. 'I'm glad it's closing time. And you should be home too.'

Kristen waved her hand. 'No rush. Gram is sewing with her club. She left supper for me in the refrigerator.'

Mrs. Hailey glanced out the window again. 'We're going to have a storm.'

Kristen nodded. 'I'm on my way anyway.' She tucked the book under her arm and was out the door and down the street, feeling the wind pushing her along.

By the time she crossed to the other side of Cross Bay, it had begun to rain. The wind picked up papers and swirled them into doorways, and huge drops spattered the dust along the boulevard.

Kristen began to run, thinking about Tom. She had told a hundred lies, a thousand lies, but Noah had told only one. And it wasn't a lie. All he had done was keep his eyes closed.

She sighed.

He had sat in the boat the other afternoon and closed his eyes to show her. 'I was afraid of the Nazis in France,' he said.

'Very afraid.'

Kristen had backstroked the oars gently, keeping the boat away from the porches, as he told her the rest.

'The lady with the gray dress came with the people from the hospital,' he said, 'and I closed my eyes. It wasn't that they were mean. Christy was sleeping, and one of them said, 'Poor little girl.' They took her in an ambulance. I knew if I opened my eyes, they would take me with them. I could have stayed.'

'It's all right.' Kristen could see his hands clasped tight together, and his knees clenched. He was shaking as if he were cold on that hot afternoon. 'I would have been afraid too,' she said. 'I would have shut my eyes.'

'I wanted to come to America,' he told her. 'I wanted to be safe. I didn't even say goodbye.'

'Oh, Tom,' she had said, knowing how he felt.

'I left Christy...' he had begun again, so quietly she had to lean forward to hear him, '...and Nagymamma said to stay together, to be a family.'

Kristen had begun to talk. She said everything she could think of, everything she thought Gram might have said. 'The war will be over,' she told him, 'and Christy will come, and maybe even Nagymamma. We'll all be in Ridgway together.'

'Nagymamma was very old. I think maybe...' He stopped. 'Christy has no family except me. She has no one special to watch out for her.'

Kristen could see him looking toward the sea, the waves high, breakers crashing onto the beach. He shivered.

'The lady leaned over. I felt her putting something into my coat pocket. It's Christy's address. I will show you someday.' He shook his head. 'What good is it? I cannot write to her. I have to go back and get her somehow.'

'You can't go back,' Kristen said. 'You can see the water. It would never work. It's my fault. I shouldn't have...' She bit her lip. 'It was my lie.'

'I want to tell you something, Kristen.' He said. 'I was so angry, so sad when I left Hungary. I told Nagymamma I would be angry and sad forever.'

Kristen looked up. It was hard to see his face because her tears were blinding her.

'Do you know what Nagymamma said?' he asked, 'She said I would be happy someday. She said I'd have a friend, a good friend. It's almost as if she knew about you.'

'We'll make a pact,' she said.

'What is that?'

'We won't lie. We'll be brave.' 'Yes,' he said.

'But not so brave to try for the ship. Promise?'

There was another tremendous streak of lightning. It lit the porch and the whole of the sky, and she could see in the distance a rowboat at the edge of the bay, about to cross through the edge of the marshes. Now, in the pouring rain, Kristen was reminded of her father. She reached the house and pulled open the kitchen door, thinking she was going to write and ask him about the book The Promise.

It was from Tom.

‘Ah,’ she said, stopping to think. ‘There are salt-water people and freshwater people.’ She held up her hand. ‘Then there are some who don’t even know enough to fall in love with the water.’ She looked at me with satisfaction. ‘But they’re not us.’

I nodded, thinking of how the river might look as it reflected the last of the fall leaves.

‘We’ll get out,’ Gram said, ‘and walk along the jetty.’ She was singing under her breath now, a bit of a song I had learned somewhere. ‘By the sea, by the sea.’ Henry followed us as we went toward the jetty, a path to the sea made of huge boulders tumbled one on top of the other. They were slippery, those rocks, with places your feet could get caught, and I wondered if I should help Gram climb up. But she didn’t need help. She swung herself up next to me, her scarf blowing in the wind coming off the sea.

‘Just breathe,’ she said.

She didn’t have to tell me. I had never smelled anything like that air: fish, and kerosene, and salt.

‘I don’t know what I’d do without the ocean,’ she said.

-And-

Then we skittered out to where I couldn’t see anything but water in front of us. Gram pointed down with one foot. Between the rocks were pockets of water, and some of them had tiny fish swimming around in them, fish so small they were blurs of pewter. In one pool was a crab whose claws were no bigger than my pinky nails.

I knelt on the edge of a boulder and put my fingers into the water, watching their reflection as the water moved, feeling the spray on my shirt. Was there snow on the mountain yet?

Don’t think about the mountain.

I thought about Green’s and the Old Man and Izzy and I put my hand on my chest because there was such an ache inside.

Gram was a statue standing above me, holding her hat against the wind, her eyes closed, a half-smile on her face.

‘I thought maybe I’d stay for a while,’ I said slowly. ‘As long as you want me to, that is.’

Gram opened her eyes and beamed down at me.

‘So, if you'd like to work on my tree figure...’

She raised her hand to her scarf. ‘I've already started.’

And I knew Green’s would be saying, what are you doing, Kristen?

A few minutes later, six or seven people came in. Gram poured the popcorn into wrinkled paper bags for them, her mouth full, and then music blared and the movie came on.

Afterward, we walked home, watching the mist swirl around the bare Laurel Highlands above us. ‘That was a tearjerker,’ Gram said.

I nodded, thinking about it: the story of a boy and a dog and Christmas in a small town.

‘Henry would feel terrible if we brought a dog into the house,’ Gram said, gliding around the icy puddles next to me.

‘I know.’ I was getting used to Henry. He spent almost every night on my bed now, and as long as I didn't stretch out my feet he didn't attack.

‘But we can have Christmas,’ Gram said. ‘I have ornaments in the attic and an artificial tree. You've never seen the attic. What treasures.’ She stopped her face up to bathe in the sleet so it coated her eyelashes. ‘There's one ornament, a Santa Claus, Beatrice and I put it on the tree first every year.’ She twirled around, arms up, dipping her graceful hands.

I had that strange feeling again. Everyone was home doing homework for school tomorrow, and I was watching an old lady dance in the street.

I comforted myself with the thought of sitting in Gram's living room after supper every night, sweet chocolate melting on our tongues, wood shavings around our feet.

It's enough, I told Green’s in my head, more than enough. I tried not to think of my W picture with the mother, the father, the brother, and the sister.

‘Over the river and through the Deniel...’ Gram sang one morning at breakfast. It was a late breakfast. We had stayed up most of the night watching an old black-and-white movie.

‘To Grandmother’s house?’ I asked, dropping a cornflake on the table in front of Henry’s nose and jumping back as he raised one paw to warn me.

Gram waggled her hand, her head still bent. She was carving my tree figure from a piece of oak, stripping the bark until the underneath showed pale and smooth. The head was there, still unformed, the nose just a slight sharp mark.

Gram saw me looking at it. ‘A bit at a time,’ she said. ‘The face last, when I’m sure I know you well enough.’

I didn’t say anything. Instead, I ran one finger over Henry’s back. His eyes were closed, he was purring, and I figured he didn’t know it was me.

‘Over the river...,’ Gram began again, rocking in her chair with a pleased look on her face.

Water, I thought. The ocean. We’d been there twice this week. Odd to see the ocean near the end of November. I’d always thought of it as something to see in the summertime. I put the tea mugs in the sink, sprayed water over them, and waited, leaning against the counter as Gram took a cut in the side of the wood and gently blew the shavings away.

She stood up then, ready to go, but instead, she stopped to peer out the window .
‘Someone’s coming.’

I glanced out and saw the gray car pulling into her driveway. The hot cocoa woman had come to check up on me.

My fault, I told myself. Hanging around here today instead of going to school. It was that lingering-cold note. I hadn’t been able to resist it.

‘It’s the wrong time,’ I sang to Gram.

She smiled at me, singing too. ‘And the wrong place?’

I reached for her wool hat and scarf and the brown hat with the veil. ‘Let’s go down to the water instead of entertaining,’ I told her.

We slipped out the back door, moving as quietly as we could; it was a game. We passed through Gram's three-figure garden, went through the Denieland diagonally across the street.

It was a long walk in the cold, and we hadn't stopped for jackets, so we were both shivering by the time we felt the difference in the air, smelled the sharp, sweetish smell of the ocean.

We climbed up onto the pier. The fishing boats were gone this late in the morning. I knew some of them by now, and I could see the two smaller ones somewhere out near the horizon. I kept thinking of that gray car and trying to decide what to do. I bent down and picked up a shell. Its edges were crushed but it had a beautiful color, almost like the sea itself with the sun shining on it.

'A piece of good luck,' Gram said.

I slipped it into a pocket of my jeans and nodded. We needed luck.

Gram had moved away from me. I turned and saw her lying on the jetty, holding her hat on with one hand, the loose end of her scarf floating in the water. She wiggled herself down and down until I thought she'd go over; then, at last, she reached into the mass of foam that had settled around the stanchions of the pier.

A moment later she was up, strands of seagrass clutched in her hand. Several inches long, curled along the edges, they were the color of sand. Gram smiled at me and held them up to my hair. 'I thought so,' she said, 'almost an exact match.'

I nodded, realizing she had gathered them for my wood figure. It made me think of the drawing box the Old Man had given me. How often I had held up a pencil to match the color against something.

Was the drawing box still at the house in Laurel Highlands?

I turned as I heard the sound of a car and tires bumping along the wooden planks of the pier in the back of me: the hot cocoa woman.

She came to a stop about two inches away from us and rolled down the window. 'Why aren't you in school?' 'School?' Gram asked, looking confused.

I didn't answer, of course, I didn't. I had learned to keep my mouth closed long ago. In my mind, I pulled myself into a small knot deep inside and tried to think about something else, anything else.

‘Get in the car,’ the hot cocoa woman said, ‘I’ll drive you there right now.’

One of the fishing boats had almost disappeared. All that was left of it was the needle-thin mast on top. Someday I’d like to be on that boat, I thought, to see what it would be like to look back at the land. I glanced at the railing that ran along the end of the pier. It was so low it would be hard to see from a ship. ‘School,’ Gram said. ‘Of course.’ She put her hand on my shoulder. It was the hand holding the seagrass. I felt a soft scratch against my skin.

Gram’s legs were bare, with dainty spider veins showing, and her silky shoes were soaked with snow and spray. I didn’t want the hot cocoa woman to see them.

I opened the back door of the car and slid in, and we drove off, leaving Gram looking after us, her head tilted as she waved at me, the seagrass in her hand blowing in the wind.

‘What’s going on here?’ the hot cocoa woman said. ‘No school?’

I ran my tongue over my lips, trying to figure out the best lie I could. ‘I told her today was a holiday, a teachers’ conference.’

The hot cocoa woman shook her head. ‘And she believed that?’ she said. ‘We’ll have to see about this.’

I reached into my pocket and held on to the shell. For the first time in my life, I thought, I’d have to go to school. I’d have to if I wanted to stay at Grams.

Films of Kristen Deniel

My head was around burl of wood, the seagrass, dried now, a swirl on top. Gram spent hours over it at the kitchen table, humming to herself, a tray of tiny knives spread out in front of her.

It was Monday, early in December, almost dark in the late afternoon. No Chinese dinner tonight. I was making a dish Izzy had taught me. ‘Special deluxe,’ she had said and smiled at me. Chopped meat, ketchup, Worcestershire sauce, and cheese, spooned over hot rolls. Salad. Pound cake with confectioner’s sugar sifted over the top.

It was going to be a special deluxe evening. Beatrice was leaving the next morning for New Mexico, where she’d paint the adobe houses and the desert. ‘I’ll come back when the mood strikes,’ she had said, ‘or when my money runs out. We’ll close up the movie until I get back.’

All week I'd had a pain in my chest. I was waiting to see what the hot cocoa woman would do. The school was all right. I kept my head in the books, made as on two tests, and had no friends. But if the hot cocoa woman talked to Gram for more than five minutes she'd know about Gram. Strange, how much I wanted to stay. Maybe it was because Gram needed me. I'd never been needed before. Or wanted? asked a voice in my head. The Old Man had wanted me, I told myself. So had Izzy, so had Green's.

Then why?

Don't think about that. Think about Gram.

'A little forgetful,' Beatrice had said. 'Maybe old age.'

But not always forgetful. There was the afternoon Gram had watched me sketch small films on my pad. 'I remember something.' She tapped one red fingernail on her lower lip. 'There's the paper in the attic. I haven't seen it for years. I think it belonged to my father.'

I climbed the stairs; then, bent like a pretzel, I scurried around the low attic, stepping over bags and bushel baskets, stopping to look at boxes of paper-thin Christmas ornaments and yellowed leather gloves, until I found what she'd told me about: huge pieces of paper, gray and dogeared. I ran my hands over them, thinking about the day the Old Man gave me the drawing box.

As I had maneuvered my way back to the steps, Gram had called up. 'There's an easel, too.'

Beatrice came now, hurrying up the walk. Her hair had been done up in a high pink swirl at the hair-dresser. Her nails matched, and so did her huge pink purse.

We were ready for her with the pound cake on Gram's best plate and the dishes on the table. We ate watching the pale December sun drop behind the trees in the backyard. When Gram went inside for something, Beatrice leaned over. 'Take care of her,' she whispered.

I thought of telling her about the hot cocoa woman and the agency, but what if Gram came back?

Beatrice saw me frown. 'Maybe I shouldn't go.'

'Gram said you've wanted to do this all your life.'

‘But...’

‘Go,’ I said, wishing I could go too. I’d take the Shortline bus up through Philadelphia State. It would be early summer again, the first time I’d seen Green’s and the Old Man, playing checkers in the diner. I’d start over. I’d do everything differently.

Everything...

But instead, I’d do it all right. I’d stay with Gram and ...

‘I’ll take care of her,’ I whispered. Somehow, I said in my head.

Beatrice turned over one of my films. ‘I’ll leave my phone number,’ she said. ‘I’ll write it down.’ She patted my hand. ‘I won’t be there for the first two or three weeks; I’ll be traveling around. But just in case.’

‘...The positive.’ He shook his head. ‘Did you ever notice; American songs are strange. I do not know what they mean most of the time.’

‘You’re scaring the fish with that noise.’

‘Not my fish.’ He raised his line. ‘On the ship, last time I was always thirsty, and the water tasted warm. We have to bring juice.’ He nodded. ‘Yes. And maybe fruit. Nagymamma always said the fruit was important. In the winter we ate tangerines.’

‘And how would you carry all this?’

‘In my pocket.’

‘Very interesting,’ she said, forgetting for a moment if she had to tell him. ‘You have pockets in your bathing suit?’

He waved his hand. ‘I did not think of that.’

‘Tom...’

‘No matter. I will drink warm water, and go without fruit if

I have to.’

‘Tom...’

He looked across at her.

She took a breath. ‘We can’t go.’

He turned his head, watching her, and she knew he was seeing the tears in her eyes. She opened her mouth to say she had changed her mind, that she’d heard that the convoys were moving out to sea farther south, but lying to Noah wasn’t like lying to anyone else. He had a way of looking at her as if everything she said was important, serious or funny, interesting to him somehow. How could she tell him something she had just made up? How could she lie again?

‘I lied,’ she said.

She could see the beginning of a quiver on his line. He was about to catch something... something small, maybe a sea robin. But he didn’t take his eyes off her, and her mouth was so dry she could hardly speak.

‘What do you mean you lied?’ he asked. ‘You mean you do not want to go with me? You are still worrying I am a coward because of the plane because it took me so long to swim?’

‘You’re not a coward, Tom.’

He frowned. ‘I am not afraid of anything.’

‘I tell lies,’ she said, almost whispering. ‘I tell people that my aunt is a spy. I say my father is in the Secret Service. I tell you I’m going to take a ship when I know the ships are too far out, that they seem closer than they are, and the sea is too strong and rough.’

‘But I can go,’ he said. ‘I am not afraid.’

She felt tears running down her cheeks and reached up to wipe them away.

‘You are crying because of your father?’ he asked.

She nodded. ‘And because of you. You thought I would help you go back...’ She took a breath. ‘I said it because I didn’t say goodbye to my father,’ she said. ‘I sneaked out of the house, and I never went back to say goodbye, and now...’

Noah reached out. He held his hand over her wrist the way

Poppy had. 'Kristen. 'He said. 'I lie too.'

She shook her head. 'Not the way I do, every minute.'

'Yes, because I am afraid.' For the first time, he saw that line was wiggling, that he surely had a fish. 'I will pull this fish up and set it free,' he said. 'Then I will tell you, Christy. And you will know why I have to go on this ship back to Christy.'

Kristen had read The Story of Roland with Poppy last winter, but not the other. She and Noah could take a quick trip to the library after they went swimming. Why not?

Gram had finished Lynnnatta's note and was looking out the window now. Her gray eyes were sad.

'Here,' Kristen said, feeling generous. 'Read my letter from Poppy. It will make you laugh.'

Kristen took the last bite of tuna, thinking about a night last summer when they had eaten the same thing. It was almost dark after Poppy had come. They had been talking, laughing. It was something about Gram's fishing being so bad they had to eat canned tuna. And outside, the fireflies had floated over the porch.

'Do you remember...' Gram began as she put the letter down.

'Last summer?' Kristen asked.

'No, the year of the hurricane,' Gram said.

Kristen thought about it, the bay water, usually flat, crashing up against the pilings. Boats, let loose, filled with water, breaking apart and sinking. Their rowboat, upside down, looking like a walnut shell, under a couple of feet of water.

'What made you think of that?' she asked.

'I have a memory of your father, coming down the road, his shoes off...' Gram bit at her lip. 'His suit pants were rolled up to his knees, full of mud, his newspaper-'

'-soaking wet, covering his head,' Kristen said.

-And-

‘We laughed,’ Gram said.

Kristen nodded. She remembered how funny her father had looked, hopping along. She and Gram had watched from the kitchen door, so-o happy he was home.

And now Gram was crying. Kristen couldn’t believe it. She had never seen Gram cry. Kristen’s mouth was suddenly dry.

‘Why?’

Gram shook her head, her mouth trembling, trying to smile. ‘I guess I miss your father.’

Kristen stood up, about to go to her, to put her arms around her.

‘By the time he comes home,’ Gram said, ‘you’ll be playing the piano for him.’

15

It was Friday afternoon, lunchtime. The church bells were chiming twelve, Kate Smith was singing ‘God Bless America’ on the radio, and Kristen and Gram were having hot tuna fish in tomato sauce. It was horrible, but Gram hadn’t caught a fish all week, and Kristen hadn’t even tried.

‘I agree,’ Gram said. ‘I can tell by your face you don’t like it either.’

‘I hate this stuff,’ Kristen said, eating as fast as she could. As soon as lunch was over, she and Noah were going to practice again. They’d been in the water so much that Mrs. Meyer said they were going to turn into fish. She said it smiling. Even Mrs. Meyer could see that Noah was never going to be a fish.

Noah had talked about it last night, said the same thing over and over. ‘We will row the boat out, stay in it until the ship passes right near us. I will only have to swim the last, smallest bit, and I will be wearing a life jacket...’

Kristen stared out the window. The water was rough, really rough. Even though the sun was shining, the water had a dark look to it, and she could see whitecaps at the end of the canal. They couldn’t swim this afternoon. Alleluia. What instead? The movies?

Fishing. Yes, fishing. They hadn't done that once this summer.

Gram was saying something, had been talking for minutes.

Something about forgetting. Kristen looked up.

'You asked me for money,' Gram said.

Kristen took another mouthful, trying not to taste the fish.

'I don't need it anymore.'

'I'm sorry,' Gram was saying. 'I asked you how much you wanted, but you were getting dressed, and...' She raised one shoulder. 'I never thought about it again until just this minute.'

Kristen looked up, trying to remember. How much? Gram had said. How much had she lost? How much did she need?

Kristen felt a quick flash of guilt.

Gram looked hot and tired. It was boiling in the little kitchen. Even with the shades halfway down, the sun lay in patches on the table, the counters, and the floor. Suppose something happened to Gram someday?

'Never mind,' Gram said. 'I'm going to make up for it...

and for the tuna too. I have a letter, two letters for you. One from Poppy, and one from Lynnnatta.' She sighed. 'Poor Lynnnatta.' Kristen put her fork down. That's what she got for spending the morning swimming. She had missed the mailman. Now Gram would be reading over her shoulder.

Gram slid the letters over to her. Lynnnatta's filthy as ways, Poppy's, airmail, tissue-paper thin. 'The mailman was looking for you,' Gram said.

Kristen didn't answer. She opened Lynnnatta's first, a long letter in pencil, hard to read in Lynnnatta's scrawl.

Thank your grandmother for the letter.

Kristen looked up quickly. Gram wasn't leaning over her shoulder after all. She was turning the pages of her newspaper, The Wave. Kristen looked down again, finding her place.

Thank her for the picture of Eddie swimming and those funny stories about when he was little. She made me laugh. I felt so bad. She misses your father. She calls him Jerry isn't that strange I always think about him as Mr. Mollahan. We still don't know anything about Eddie.

Love Lynnnatta.

How's the house?

'You wrote to Lynnnatta? You sent a picture?' Kristen asked. 'You didn't tell me that.'

Gram pushed a strand of hair off her forehead. 'I knew how she felt. Suppose it was Poppy?'

Kristen sat looking at Gram from the corner of her eye. She'd never thought about Gram missing Poppy, not once in all these weeks. She pushed Lynnnatta's letter across the table to her, then took a breath. She had forgotten the house part. But Gram didn't seem to notice anything strange about Lynnnatta's mentioning her house.

Kristen reached for Poppy's letter, the best for last. It was a funny letter, Poppy reminding her of the time they painted the window and the screen had fallen over the edge of the porch and floated away. Your fault, Poppy had written for fun. They both knew it had been his fault. And then, in the end, there was more about books. Don't forget to read The Story of Roland again, and The Promise. Go to the library for them. See Mrs. Hailey. She knows every book in the world!

Kristen veered off to the sink. She slid in her dish with a couple of other dishes and ran water over them. She could see Gram standing to put a bottle of milk into the refrigerator. No one would ever know tears had been in her eyes a moment ago.

16

Kristen wiped her hands on a towel. 'We're going to swim,

Noah and me. And then go to the library.'

Gram nodded, and Kristen was out the door, around the side porch, and down into the rowboat. Noah was sitting there, waiting for her, looking even skinnier than usual with the huge orange life jacket around him.

She hopped into the boat and began to row past the houses, angling toward the marshes, leaning forward to keep the sun out of her eyes. Just before they sealed the package, Kristen reached for the key on the table and dropped it inside. 'I think we shouldn't come back anymore,' she told him.

'All right,' he said, thinking about it. 'I will take Pap home with me.'

Then they were finished, the package neatly addressed, delivered to the post office, on its way to Lynnnatta at last. 'Now we swim,' said Tom. 'In the ocean.' They walked back to the Smiths' with the cat, and by the time Mrs. Meyer had made them a picnic snack, Pap was sound asleep on the couch pillow. 'In the bay,' Kristen answered.

It was hot and humid, and by the time they crossed the tar road and walked through the sand and rushes toward Jamaica Bay, Kristen felt sticky and irritable. She raced into the water, arms stretched, diving deep, feeling the cold bay closing over her, and then she was up again, feeling washed and cool, the sun warm on her face. She brushed her hair back away from her eyes.

Tom, she had forgotten him. He was standing on the edge, his feet dug into the sand, waiting. Kristen swam back toward him, as close as she could without scraping the bottom. 'You have to float first,' she said. 'Don't even try to swim yet.' She had said that a dozen times the other day. He took a step into the water. 'I have no time to fool around with floating.' He had said that a dozen times too. He sounded the way she did over practicing the piano. I have no time to fool around.

'Thick as a piece of wood,' Sister Jillien would have said about him. It was what she always said when she was teaching math problems and someone couldn't understand.

But there was something else. He was afraid of the water; she was sure of it. She told him to loosen up, to lie back and drift with the water. She told him to unclench his fists and pretend he was one of the reeds, floating.

She told him all the things Gram had told her when she was learning. But it didn't do any good. He couldn't float.

He couldn't swim either. They tried that next. Noah was like a cat who didn't want to get wet, or a bird weighed down with feathers.

'You are a terrible teacher,' he said, trying to joke.

She bit down on her lip, feeling sorry for him. 'It takes time. That's what Gram always says.' She shook her head. 'I can't believe I'm sounding like Gram.'

'You are lucky...' he began and stopped.

She held up her hand. 'You don't have to tell me,' she said. 'I know it. I've been thinking about you and Nagymamma, but you don't know what a pain Gram is.'

He smiled a little. 'Nagymamma was a pain sometimes too. We had to say Kerem and köszönöm, and szívesen every two minutes... 'Please,' and 'Thank you,' and 'You're welcome...'

'She didn't teach you very well,' Kristen said, smiling too. 'Here I'm wasting time showing you how to swim, and you haven't said kos whatever once.'

'For teaching me how to drown myself?' Then his face was suddenly serious. 'It is August, Kristen.'

She took a breath. 'Maybe we should forget about Europe,' she said. 'Maybe the war will be over in a year.'

'A year,' he said, sounding as if it were forever.

She tried to think of what else to say, but he was watching her, and she couldn't even look into his eyes. 'All right,' she said.

'I guess we could try again after lunch.'

'I hope I can do this.' Noah sounded worried.

Kristen rowed across the bay, moving swiftly, pulling hard on the oars. She wouldn't have to tell him after all. He'd tell her to go without him, and then she'd say...

She looked across at him. His face was white, his lips pale.

She threw the anchor into the water. 'Now we'll go over the side. The boat isn't going anywhere, and if you get in trouble you can reach for one of the tall reeds.'

Tom's eyes were almost closed.

‘I’ll go first,’ she said and went over the side slowly, Carefully, so the boat wouldn’t rock. She hung on to the edge with both hands for a second, getting used to the feel of the water, cool on her body, then slipped away from the boat. ‘Don’t forget, Tom. Keep your mouth closed. Last time...’

‘I know.’ He was clumsy getting over the side, rocking the boat enough to create small waves. And then he was in the water, reaching up to grip the side.

‘Let go,’ she said. ‘You’ve got on a life preserver. You can’t sink.’ She grinned. ‘Even you can’t sink.’

He shut his eyes and let go.

‘Good,’ she said, treading water. ‘Feel how lovely. Not too cold. Open your eyes, will you?’

He struck out with one arm and then the other.

‘Kick your feet, remember?’

He opened his eyes. ‘Too much to remember all at once.’ He was out of breath.

‘Take your time.’

He started again; head high.

‘Not bad, not bad at all, but wait a minute.’ She swam over to him, thinking he looked like a turtle. Land turtles. ‘What do you think will happen if you just put your head in the water?’

‘Remember last time?’

‘Yes, but your mouth was wide open. Duck your head. Just feel...’

He took a deep breath and leaned forward. A moment later he was up again. ‘I can hardly stay down.’ He sounded surprised, pleased.

‘See,’ she said. ‘Nothing’s going to happen.’

He nodded once, and then a second time. ‘You are right, Kristen.’

He leaned into the water again, raising his arm. She could see his feet behind him, kicking a little, kicking harder. He was moving. He was swimming.

She watched as he circled the boat, then floated, his hands pale in the water, fingers spread. 'I am swimming,' he told her.

'I know,' she answered him, thinking she had done it. She had taught him to swim. And then something else. She'd have to tell him they couldn't go to Europe.

The sea was high today. Kristen tried to remember when she had last seen it this way, yellow-green water reflecting the strange color in the sky. They had rowed only a short way from the porch, still in the bay, to fish.

She dropped her fishing line over the side of the rowboat. The day was hot, the wormy bait sticky on her fingers. She felt sick with the smell of it, sick thinking about what Noah would say when she told him.

It had been a terrible day from start to finish. The library had been closed for days, and when they had finally gotten there this morning, Mrs. Hailey hadn't been one bit friendly. 'Bringing sand in on your feet,' she had grumbled. 'Leaving a trail behind you like Hansel and Gretel.'

And then when Kristen had tried to get both books, The Story of Roland and The Promise, Mrs. Hailey had looked up over her glasses. 'Don't you have a book at home, overdue?'

Kristen had remembered she had left The Three Musketeers at the beach, and when she began to make something up, Mrs. Hailey had sighed. 'Don't, Kristen.' She had said.

It had ended up that all she got was The Story of Roland, which she had already read, and what good was that? And she had thought Mrs. Hailey was her friend.

Noah was going on about meeting a ship. 'It will go to France. I think it will. I know it will. I will start in Paris. I will go to every hospital. I will go everywhere. I have the money. I will buy what I need. I will find her, do not worry.'

Worry.

Kristen took a breath. 'Who's going to take care of Pap?'

Noah looked over the side of the boat, almost as if he could see the bottom, almost as if he were searching for a flounder. 'The Smiths, of course. They will do that for me. Don't you think so?'

‘I have to tell you...’ Kristen began.

But Noah was singing now. He paused. ‘I will teach her this song from your radio,’ and he began again. ‘ ‘You’ve got to accent-tchu-ate...’

‘Tom.’

Kristen had dreamed about Lynnnatta, and Eddie too, but when she awoke, she couldn’t remember much more than that. She knew she had been crying in the dream. She was still crying when she opened her eyes.

Gram was standing next to her bed. ‘It was only a dream, Kristen.’ she said.

Kristen leaned up on one arm. Poppy had been in the dream, and Christy, but Kristen hadn’t seen her face, just her hair, dark and shiny like Tom’s, and there was something about Madeline, the book Madeline.

Gram sat down on the edge of the bed. ‘What is it?

What’s the matter?’

She stuck out her lower lip. ‘If you want to learn, it’ll be faster in the bay. And that’s my final offer.’

‘I do not know what that means,’ he said.

‘You don’t have to.’ She unwrapped his hand from her arm and scrambled to her feet. ‘I’m going to put Eddie’s picture back in the living room now, and then I’m going to the bay to swim. If you want to come with me, fine. If not, too bad.’

She marched into the living room and dusted the end table with her arm. She thought of Eddie on a beach in Normandy. She’d seen newspaper films: Nazi pillboxes set into the rocks, firing; soldiers in the sand, some of them dead, everything confused. They had to get off the beaches before they could begin to free the French cities.

Kristen put Eddie’s picture on the table and ran her fingers over his face. ‘Be just a little lost,’ she whispered. He was smiling in the picture, and she could remember him smiling the same way when she had met him coming out of the movie, or at Mrs. Sherman's, or on the way to church. She wondered if he could count as a friend even though he was much older. 'What do you think, Eddie?' She asked.

'Christy talks to herself all the time,' Noah said.

Kristen marched past him and out the door. 'Are you coming?'

Noah looked up at the ceiling, blinking, trying to decide.

At the same moment, Pap darted between their legs and out the door.

Noah reached for her, and so did Kristen.

She was halfway down the path before they caught up. 'She's growing,' Kristen said, scooping the cat into her arms and bringing her into the house.

Noah nodded. 'I could bring her back to Canada, I think.'

'Good,' Kristen said.

'But I am not going back to Canada,' Noah said.

'Remember? I am going to Europe.'

'And- I'm going to the bay,' Kristen said.

'I guess I will come too,' he said.

Kristen didn't answer. She marched out the door, taking a deep breath.

'Things are never going to be the same,' she said. 'Not even when the war is over. Noah might not have his grandmother.

He might not have Christy.'

'Everything is so confused over there. A flood of people has come from the rest of Europe, soldiers...' Gram sighed. 'If our army can get across France, if they can liberate Paris, then maybe someone can get to Christy.' She shook her head. 'But you're right, Kristen. things won't be the same. We'll all be changed, all of us who lived through this.'

'But Poppy said it would be the same.'

‘I know.’ Gram patted her shoulder. ‘He wanted it to be the same for you.’

Kristen took a breath. She thought of Lynnnatta not remembering Eddie’s face. Kristen could see his face so clearly, even without the picture.

And- Eddie’s picture was standing there on the Dillons’ living room table. It would take her only five minutes to wrap it and bring it down to the post office this morning. If only...

Suppose she told Gram? Gram was sitting there next to her, twisting her long hair with both hands, redoing her bun, looking worried. She could tell Gram she’d never go into the Dillons’ house again if she could just get the picture to Lynnnatta.

Gram was standing up now, picking yesterday’s clothes up off the floor. ‘Just a mess in here.’

Kristen blew a breath through her mouth. ‘I need some money.’

Gram blinked. ‘How did you get from Christy to needing money?’

‘I lost my tan purse,’ Kristen said slowly.

‘Oh, Kristen.’ Gram shook her head. ‘If only you’d think sometimes...’

Kristen slung her legs out from under her quilt. ‘Never mind.’

‘How much?’

Kristen twitched one shoulder. ‘I don’t remember.’

She went into the bathroom and yanked on her bathing suit. It was still damp from yesterday. Gram was saying something, but Kristen turned on the water, blasting it into the sink, and began to brush her teeth.

When she came out, her breakfast was on the table, juice, and Rice Krispies with bananas and strawberries sliced on top, a face with a smiling mouth. And Noah was sitting there, talking to Gram.

Kristen ran her fingers through her hair to comb it, then sat across from him. She reached for her juice and took a gulp.

They were talking about music again. Noah was telling Gram that his violin was still in Hungary. 'In a blue case,' he said, 'maybe in my bedroom where I put it.' He grinned at Kristen. 'If I had it here, we could play duets.'

Gram was laughing, and Kristen frowned, but then she laughed too. She could just see skinny Noah playing the violin, playing some wonderful Hungarian thing, and she'd be doing the C scale from one end of the piano to the other.

Gram patted her head. 'I love to hear you laugh, Kristen.'

And- Noah nodded. 'She is like my sister, Christy.'

Gram was on her way out. 'Going to catch a fish,' she said. 'I'm not going to do another thing all day but spend time in that rowboat and feel that ocean underneath me.'

Then she was gone. Kristen watched her through the screen, going down to the rowboat, her fishing rod in one hand. And then she noticed Noah was wearing his bathing suit and one of Mr. Meyer's old shirts. She knew he was hoping she'd teach him to swim this morning.

Kristen stood up, finishing her cereal in a couple of spoonfuls. 'I still need the money for Lynnnatta,' she said. 'I thought of telling Gram...'

Noah nodded. 'I was thinking about that too,' he said. 'I have the money.'

'No.' She shook her head. 'Fifty dollars is so much... too much.'

'From my aunt,' Noah said. 'I asked her for money.'

'Mrs. Meyer? You told Mrs. Meyer?'

'No. I just asked, 'Could I have...' and before I could finish she said I should have some money to spend for myself. She said she never thought of it.' Noah was pulling money out. A dollar in one pocket. Fifty cents in another.

Kristen started in on 'The Blue Danube' again with one finger of her right hand and added some dum dum's with the left hand.

Footsteps were coming around the side of the house. She stood up, still playing, as the top of Tom's head passed the window, then backed up, and his face came into view.

‘I thought we were going to...’ He held up the rolled-up towel.

‘Kristen, are you playing?’ Gram called.

‘Hold your horses,’ Kristen told Tom. ‘I can’t get out of here for another twenty-two minutes.’

‘Kristen.’ Gram called again.

Kristen stretched up on the bench to get a good look at Tom. ‘Besides,’ she told him, ‘I’ve got a surprise for you. Listen to what I’m playing. It’s for you, special.’

She plunked herself down on the bench again and began to play ‘The Blue Danube’ as nicely as she could.

After a minute, she heard a noise. Was that Noah laughing again? She ended ‘The Blue Danube’ with a crash and began the C scale again.

She could hear Gram at the back door telling Noah to come in for some iced tea while he waited. Good grief. She opened the John Thompson book to the piece she knew best, the piece she had played a million times last winter. She could hear Gram and Noah talking in the kitchen. The clock wasn’t moving.

She began to play. She hit the wrong note with her left pinky. It sounded horrible. For a minute there was silence in the kitchen.

Kristen went back to the C scale, played it one last time, but softly now as if she knew what she was doing. Then she slid off the seat and went into the kitchen. Noah and Gram were talking about music, but not about the piano, about violin music. Noah was telling Gram about the lessons he had taken, and Gram, her head to one side, was listening, nodding.

‘Come on, Tom,’ Kristen said, feeling ready to scream, ‘We’ve got stuff to do, remember? We can’t hang around here all day.’

‘I’m so glad.’ She felt like hugging him. She reached for his hand, warm and dry, and he squeezed back.

They spent the next half hour taking care of the picture. They cut up a paper bag and found cardboard and a ball of string in Mrs. Dillon’s closet.

Pap loved it, the noise and the crinkling of paper as they wrapped the picture in layers of cardboard, and the ball of string to bat across the kitchen floor. But Lynnnatta's house was spoiled for Kristen. She wondered what would happen if Mrs. Dillon found out Kristen had been in her house all summer. And she would find out. She'd see the picture, and ask Lynnnatta.

17

They were at Lynnnatta's house, sitting on the kitchen floor, with Tom's coat in front of them. The coat was navy blue wool, scratchy against Kristen's fingers. She poked Gram's manicure scissors into the collar seam, trying to slide the points under the tiny stitches. Noah was leaning over her shoulder, and Pap was playing with her sneaker lace.

Kristen could feel the perspiration running down her back, the metal scissors sliding in her slippery fingers, when Noah began to talk, grinning. 'Hungarians play 'The Blue Danube' too,' he said.

'It never sounded like that.'

'Like what?'

He looked down at the coat. 'Like terrible. Like Christy plays.' He smiled. 'Christy likes to play duets. Loud.'

Swallowed. 'I don't want to play the piano anyway. It takes too much time, and...' She'd probably like Christy. 'You should try it,' Kristen said. 'Hanging around on the bench, trying to...'

'In my grandmother's restaurant,' Noah said slowly, 'I played the violin on Sunday. I played that song, and 'Vienna Life,' which is my grandmother's favorite.' He stopped. 'I loved the violin, Kristen. If only I could have taken it with me...'

He took a breath. 'In Kalocsa's, Nagymamma's restaurant, people ate goulash. They had rolls with sweet butter. For dessert, they ate rigojancsi, and gesztenyepüre, or placentas.'

'What...'

'Palacsintas are pancakes. They're filled with jam or chocolate.'

Kristen looked up.

'Nagymamma gave me plain ones, cold ones, folded over.'

She put them in my coat pocket when I left.'

Kristen knew he was ready to cry, but she couldn't think what to say. She just kept snipping at the collar until there was a wide opening in the seam. Without looking, she pushed the coat toward him and watched as he edged his thumb and index finger gently into the seam. He worked the bills out, laying each one on the floor next to them. 'These are Magyar money,' he said. 'We call them forints. And this one is an English pound.'

He didn't have to tell her about the next, a fifty-dollar bill, worn and creased. 'Nagymamma did not know where we were going. She had to guess about the money.'

Looked at him, thinking about going to another country without Poppy or Gram, without even knowing where she was going. 'Where is...' she began. Noah reached down for the cat. He held her up to his face, rubbing her soft fur on his cheek. 'Nagymamma might be in her house. She might be in prison. I do not know.'

Kristen thought of her mother, who had died, but had died of something wrong with her heart, and not in prison, but at home in St. Paul's. Kristen touched the money on the floor beside her, patted it the way she patted her stars. It was as if she could almost see Tom's grandmother, who had touched it last.

The cat put its tiny needle claws into Tom's shoulder as he reached over to put his fingers into the coat seam again. And now there was a tiny picture with three faces. Tom, of course, with that mop of hair, and an old woman, with a lined face and little round glasses, and a girl. The girl had curls like Tom's, but they were softer, smoother, and she was laughing.

'Christy,' Kristen said.

'Yes.' Noah looked down at the picture again; then put it carefully in his pocket. He folded most of the money and put that in his pocket too. Then he handed her the fifty dollars. 'Here, for Eddie's picture.'

She looked down at the money. 'We can't-'

'My grandmother would not mind. She would be glad, I think.'

Shook her head. 'Don't you see? We could never go to the post office with all this money. They'd ask where we'd gotten it. They'd tell my grandmother.'

Noah raised one shoulder. 'It is too much money, then?'

'More than I've ever seen at once,' Kristen said.

Noah scooped up the money and stuffed it back into the coat. He sat back on his heels and put the cat down on the floor. 'I guess we should not use Hungarian money. That is not so much.'

Kristen grinned. 'I don't think so. Nobody around here has ever seen Hungarian money.'

'No.' He grinned back.

But then Kristen heard the church bells. Four times. Four o'clock. The post office was closed, and poor Lynnnatta would have to go another day without the picture.

Kristen sighed. 'I'll teach you to swim, Tom. We'll go over to the bay now, and I'll figure out how to get money before tomorrow.'

'Not the bay,' he said, 'the ocean.'

'Don't be ridiculous.'

'I do not know what that means, 'ridiculous.''

She narrowed her eyes. He knew very well what it meant.

'You can't learn to swim in that rough water.'

He reached forward to grab her arm. 'Do you know that Christ is waiting for me? Do you know that summer will be over and I will have to go back to Canada...?'

She nodded. 'I'll have to go back to St. Paul's, and Sister Sara in the sixth grade.'

'Please.' He was holding her arm so hard now she could feel each one of his fingers tightening around it. His eyes were so blue, and she knew it was never going to happen the way he wanted, and it was all her fault... all because of her wild stories.

'Oh yes, Kristen. I will learn to swim, and you will row.'

Next, to her, Gram took her silver rosary beads out of their case, and on her other side, Mrs. Colgan opened her missal.

In a moment Father Murphy was out on the altar beginning the Mass, and Kristen began to pray for Eddie, and then for Poppy.

She prayed for Tom's sister too, and his grandmother.

Kristen put Eddie's picture on the table next to the couch and went onto the porch to find her Sunday clothes, even though it wasn't Sunday.

Just ten minutes later, she was walking into church, stopping for a quick dip of holy water, and sliding into a pew next to Gram.

As she knelt there and waited for Father Murphy to begin, the sun-blasted in around the partly opened stained-glass windows. It felt as if it must be a hundred degrees. The fan in front didn't do any good. It just moved the fringe a little on the banner that hung over their heads.

It was a desert in that church. She lifted the brim of her straw hat away from her head and fanned the air with her hymnbook, watching Mrs. Meyer come up the aisle with Noah until Gram gave her a poke.

Kristen tried to imagine what it must feel like to be Eddie, to have been taken prisoner by the Germans, maybe, or just somewhere by himself, hurt.

Father Murphy had hung the banner there himself. On its white background were rows of blue stars, one for each of the men from the parish who were in the service. There was one gold star in the middle. That was for a sailor who used to live near the Cross-Bay Theatre. He had been killed at Pearl Harbor. And now, in a day or two, there'd be a silver star for Eddie Dillon, who was missing, lost somewhere on a beach in France, and no one knew if they'd ever find him.

Gram put her hand up to her mouth. 'A phone call from Willow Run to Mrs. Tannenbaum's candy store. We're on our way to church... a special Mass and we're going to pray as hard...' She took a breath. 'We're all praying, I guess, the whole world, that this will be over soon.' She blinked back tears.

‘And right now, we’re going to pray for Eddie, and your father, and Tom’s family, and everyone who-’
She broke off.

I watched her make careful, even numbers on the paper and turn it over as Gram came back into the kitchen, another one of my films in her hand.

I didn’t take any chances, though. Through the rest of the dinner, I said the phone number over in my head. I wanted to be sure I’d remember it.

Films of Kristen Deniel

I never showed this picture to anyone: the golden field, me with my head back laughing, my hands at the wheel of the truck. It took four or five pencils to do this: I started with Summer Green, Iron Gray, and Beach Sand. That was something, that Saturday night.

Izzy and the Old Man were going to the movie in town.

‘It’s a romance,’ the Old Man said, wagging his eyebrows at me.

‘A waste of a good evening.’

‘You’ll love it, John,’ Izzy said. ‘There are snacks in the refrigerator and the cabinet. Snacks all over the place. You won’t starve.’ She leaned out the door. ‘And there’s a tin of that hard candy on my dresser.’

Green’s crossed his eyes. ‘They’re so sour they curl your tongue.’

‘Not mine.’ I’d been eating them all summer; I couldn’t get enough of them.

‘That’s because-’ he began. I knew he was going to joke about my being sour.

But the Old Man came out the door. ‘I just saw the mess you left in the shed,’ he told Green’s. ‘Straighten that place up.

It’s bad enough your room looks the way it does.’

‘What’s this neatness kick?’

‘Did you notice how neat Holly’s things are?’

Without thinking, I put my hand up. 'Don't...' I began, but it came out almost like a breath. Neither one of them heard, or maybe they just weren't paying attention.

Green's unfolded himself from his chair so slowly, it seemed as if he weren't moving.

'Hang in there, Kristen Copses,' Green's said as the Old Man stamped around the side of the house and started the car.

'We're going to be out of here in five minutes.'

'Where?' Already he was running around the side of the house to the shed.

I sat there listening as he threw things around for a few minutes, and then he was back. 'I'm going to teach you to drive. Good thing they took the car instead of the truck.' He dangled the keys in front of my nose. 'Anyone who can keep her things disinfected can drive a truck.'

'I don't think-' I began.

'Scared?'

'Never.'

'All right, don't waste my valuable time arguing.'

In the back of the evergreens and the row of holly bushes was a flat field. The Old Man kept it mowed against snakes, rattlers that struck blind in the summer. 'Don't worry,' Green's said, sliding into the truck. 'No one's been bitten for about a hundred years. Pop worries about everything.'

Green's drove as if he'd been doing it all his life. He grinned across at me in the suicide seat. 'Since I was about eight,' he said, knowing what I was thinking. 'I'm going to take the truck up the mountain one day.'

He showed me the gears and the pedals, and then we switched seats. And so, I drove in that field in the summer evening light, Green's shouting directions as I lurched through the ruts, bucking, stalling, starting up again with gear-grinding noises.

'Aha, Kristen Copses,' he yelled. 'There's hope for you. I knew it!'

I pressed my foot down on the gas pedal a little harder.

‘Yahoo!’ I yelled. ‘It’s me, driving a pickup truck!’

19

Films of Kristen Deniel

One raw Tuesday morning I awoke and pulled the shade aside; the trees were charcoal smudges against an iron-gray sky. Gram wouldn’t be up for another hour or two. I hadn’t done my homework the night before, hadn’t even thought of it. I’d fallen asleep watching television with Henry next to me on the couch and Gram working at the kitchen table.

I still faced rows of math problems. Three pages, maybe four. And there was a social studies composition on Henry Hudson.

I tried to decide whether I could work on it now. It was early. I popped the bread into the toaster and opened a can of Salmon Delight for Henry, who sniffed at it and walked away.

‘I can never figure you out,’ I said and buttered a square of toast for him instead. Then I pulled my books off the shelf and sat at the table with one of Gram’s knitted shawls around me.

In the back of me, I had the radio on. Two weeks until Christmas. It had snowed upstate, six inches.

Ah, snow for Green’s. Were they up yet, the three of them?

Were they having breakfast in their winter house in Hancock? What would it be like if I were there, doing my homework, eating Izzy’s apple pancakes?

The radio announcer said it was a foggy day on Long Island at three minutes before eight o’clock.

I finished the first page of math problems; I could never do the rest in a half hour. Never mind Henry Hudson sailing up the river.

Maybe I could take one more day off. Just one. I grabbed my jacket and pad and went out the back door, holding it open for Henry to come too. The canal would be wonderful this morning, with a mist rising off the water. And all the while I jogged toward the jetty, I knew it was a mistake. But still, I kept going.

When I got to the pier, I sat, hands clenched in my pocket against the cold, my legs dangling, watching the fisherman on the DanBar-J gear up to go out for blues. He knew me now and waved. Last week he'd even dropped a flounder on the bench for me. I had pan-fried it with a little butter, and Gram had put two dusty pink candles on the table, almost like a party.

Henry had loved his share. He hadn't scratched at me once when I put his plate down in front of him on the radio. 'Ah,' I had said, pleased with him. 'You'd do anything for a handout.'

Now I watched the fingers of fog drift over the water while Henry sat nearby, washing one mangy leg. It was the kind of day I loved. I couldn't see the end of the pier, and no one could see me from there. I could hear the fisherman from the DanBar-J, though.

'Want a job?' He called.

He wasn't thinking about school either.

A job? Why not? There'd be money for cat food, a couple of cans of ravioli. I hadn't had ravioli since the stucco house.

I nodded and found myself hosing down the deck of the Dan-Bar-J. As I scrubbed at the dried-on pieces of fish with a wire brush, I spent the money in my mind.

He handed me three crumpled-up bills. I smoothed them out, and then as I gave him a half wave, he reached into his pocket and gave me another dollar.

I couldn't wait to get back to Gram. She'd pat her scarf around her neck and fuss with her hat. We'd sail up and down the aisles of DeMattia's Food Store, picking and choosing: ravioli, and a pink can of shredded tuna for Henry. Maybe some marmalade, too, to have with the English muffins we had left.

I had forgotten all about homework, and school, and even the hot cocoa woman. Henry and I headed home as the fog lifted and the sun appeared behind the trees. It was going to be a beautiful day, a day for a picnic on the rock jetty.

I pulled open the back door and stopped. Above the newscaster's voice on the radio-'Nine-thirty and still snowing in upstate Philadelphia'-was the sound of voices in the living room.

Henry heard them too. He scampered back outside to sit on the bench, an irritable look on his skinny face.

I thought about scampering with him. I knew who it must be. But how could I leave Gram alone with her? Instead, I shrugged out of my jacket, put my pad on the table, and lifted my chin as I went toward the front of the house.

The hot cocoa woman sat on the lilac couch, and Gram sat in the chair opposite. They both had cups of coffee in their hands.

Good move, Gram, I thought. Her coffee was great, dark and rich, as the advertisements went.

I nodded at the hot cocoa woman and sank in the third chair, facing the window, looking out as if something wonderful were going on right there in the front yard.

They talked about old movies and the wonderful colors in the living room; they talked about coffee waking them up, and all the time my heart was pounding. Without looking at the hot cocoa woman's face, I knew she was straining at the conversation, that this wasn't what she wanted to say.

She was wearing sweats... Did she ever wear anything else? I could see around the creamy spot on her chest. She'd spilled her coffee. What was the matter with that woman, anyway?

But Gram looked fine, Gram looked wonderful, with that slash of red across her mouth, a silky green dress that looked like the sea. I knew she was groping, though. She had no idea who the woman sitting across from her was.

At last, the hot cocoa woman put down her cup. 'Kristen,' she said, 'I know I'm keeping you from school.'

I waved my hand. No problem, lady.

She looked at Gram then. 'I think, Mrs. Cahill, that we need to talk about another place for Kristen.'

Gram sat up straight. I could see her thin hands on the coffee cup trembling a little; her mouth, too. 'Kristen is leaving?'

They both looked at me.

‘I’ve found a family for her,’ the hot cocoa woman said. ‘A mother and father with a three-year-old boy and a dog.’ She kept leaning forward, trying to make me look at her. ‘I think I remember you like dogs, Kristen.’

‘Sharks,’ I said, ‘and barracudas, not dogs.’

‘A family would be nice,’ Gram said.

Too late, I thought.

‘But not today,’ the hot cocoa woman said. ‘It will be a few days. I’ll want Kristen to meet them first. They’re not so far from here. You and Mrs. Cahill will be able to visit sometimes, Kristen.’

She stood up then. ‘I’ll keep in touch,’ she said. ‘Would you like me to drive you to school now?’

I shook my head. ‘I can walk.’

She turned to go.

‘By the way,’ I said. ‘You have a sticker on the back of that shirt. X-L.’

She tried to look over her shoulder.

‘Extra-large,’ I said, feeling mean.

You can’t wear those things,’ Kristen told him after they had fed the cat and were walking along the road. ‘I’m not going to march along the beach with someone who-’

‘You said you wanted to go out on the rocks,’ Noah said.

‘Not with a baby who has beach slippers on his feet,’ she told him, grinning.

He grinned back, looking down at his feet. ‘My aunt said I would come back with cuts from the bar-nackles...’

‘Barnacles,’ she said. ‘Not bar-nackles.’

‘Same thing.’ He reached down to pull off Mr. Meyer’s slippers and tossed them into the marshes.

She nodded. 'Don't worry, they'll still be there when we get back. Nobody in the world is going to want them.'

She led him down the path, across the sand, toward the jetty, and began to hop along the rocks. 'See,' she said, looking back. 'Nothing to it.'

He followed her slowly, one foot at a time, wincing.

'Didn't you ever walk around barefoot in Hungary?' she asked.

'Certainly not,' he said. 'Do you think we were poor, that we had no shoes?'

She was laughing again, thinking about her feet, tough as leather, and Tom, his first summer going barefoot. She settled herself on the gray triangular rock, way out, with Noah next to her, the sun on her face, and the sound of the water lapping against the rocks.

'I want to tell you something,' she said after a while. 'I have stars on my bedroom ceiling. My mother passed them all up for me when I was a baby. She told my father she was making a world for me. She said she wanted to give me the whole world.'

Noah wasn't looking at her, his head was turned, but he was sitting there so still, so unmoving, she knew how hard he was listening.

'I bring one with me to Ridgway every year,' she said. 'I counted. There are dozens of them left on my ceiling. I'll be thirty or forty before they're all used up.'

He nodded a little.

'I never told anyone,' she said. 'Not even Poppy. I make them presents to me from my mother, every year on my birthday, in July.' She took a breath. It was so nice to tell someone about the stars. It was so nice to talk about her mother as if she, Kristen, were like everyone else, like everyone who had a mother.

'I know your mother is dead,' he said, looking at her now, reaching out for the tiniest second to touch her shoulder. 'My aunt told me.'

Kristen squinted a little, looking out at a curl of smoke from a freighter far out. She waited for him to say something more about them, but when he didn't, she began again. 'My mother had something wrong with her heart. It was too big. She died right in Poppy's bedroom on a sunny day.' She took a breath. 'I think that's an all right way to die, but it's not all right that I don't remember her.'

'A picture?' he asked. 'You have a picture?'

'Poppy has a book with her films, but they're blurry, and I don't know what her voice was like. You know?'

She could see his teeth chewing on his lower lip. She opened the paper bag from Gram: two sandwiches, Spam, apples, Social Tea cookies.

'I hate this,' she said, handing one of the sandwiches to him. 'Gram does too. After the war, we're never going to have one can of Spam again. And Poppy says if we have any left in the kitchen cabinet, he's going to throw them right in the ocean.'

Noah had a mouthful of it. 'I like this,' he said. 'I like everything. My grandmother, Nagymamma, loved to cook for me.'

She said I was her best...' He closed his eyes, trying to think. 'Customer,' Kristen said, watching him nod, as she tried to get her mouth around the word. 'Nahj...'

'It means a big mother, grandmother. The Nagy part just means big.'

Kristen took a tiny piece of Spam and tossed it into the water. 'For the fish,' she said. 'They probably don't like it either.'

'You know my mother is dead too, and my father,' he said.

Both, she thought. She couldn't picture what it would be like with Poppy dead. So terrible...

'They are dead because they had a newspaper. They wrote bad things about Hitler and the Nazis. And their friends would give out the papers. They were caught one day. The Nazis came to the house...'

Kristen let out her breath. She didn't want to look in his eyes, but she couldn't help it, she glanced at him quickly, but he didn't look as if he would cry. He was squinting at the water, his eyes dry. 'Nagymamma came for me, for Christy and me, just before they came to our house. And there was no time, not one minute. We did not say goodbye, my mother was running into the kitchen, trying to burn small pieces of paper at the stove, and she looked over her shoulder and told us, 'Grannie,' and then she looked back because the stove was hot and she was almost burning her fingers.'

Kristen was biting her lip, chewing on her lip, watching a small fish tear a piece of the Spam, and then another. . .

'It means 'I love you,' 'he said before she could ask. 'But if they loved us, they would not have done that, they would not have bothered with newspapers. And we do not even know what happened to them. Nagymamma just got a postcard from the police that they were dead.'

'Oh, Tom,' Kristen said, thinking how angry he looked, thinking she was angry too. Poppy should have stayed home.

'And we went to Austria, Christy and me, in the back of Mr. Kovacs's car, and then across to Switzerland. Mr. Kovacs promised he was going to sneak us across Europe. In Switzerland, Christy was sick with'-he touched his face-' marks.'

'Chickenpox?'

He shook his head.

'Measles.'

'Yes, and we had been traveling for so long, and Christy had a fever, a big fever, I knew it. I could not tell anyone.' He shook his head, and Kristen could see him making fists of his hands.

'We still had to cross the mountains into France,' he said. 'Mr. Kovacs was pretending we were his children, and the Nazis were there, right there.' He was almost breathless, telling her. 'We had to get to the ship that would take us to America.' He stopped for a moment. 'I was afraid they would not let Christy go.'

Kristen couldn't look at him. She tore off another piece of Spam for the fish and the crust of her bread.

'In France, she was so thirsty. Her face was red, and she was burning.' Noah stood up, balancing himself on the rock, watching the ship, a little closer now. He pointed to the end of the jetty, across the water. 'Christy is in France, and so are the Nazis.'

‘But how...’

Noah sighed. ‘We were waiting for the ship to take us to America, and this lady who was helping us, this lady with a long gray dress that went to the ground and across...’ He raised his hands to his head. ‘She was wearing a white...’ He stopped and frowned.

‘Something on her head?’ Kristen asked. ‘Was it a nun?’

‘Yes. And she said, ‘This girl is sick. She belongs to a hospital and not on a ship. She will give the sickness to everyone else.’”

‘Measles.’

‘Yes, but I said it was not measles. I said she could not go to a hospital, but later I fell asleep, and they took her, and I did not even say goodbye.’

Kristen swallowed.

‘Now Christy is in France until the war is over. The war may last forever, and Christy is in a convent, with the lady in the gray dress, and the Nazis are right there, and suppose they find out about our newspaper in Hungary?’

‘Wait, Tom,’ Kristen began. ‘Isn’t Hungary far away from France? How would they know?’

Noah didn’t stop. ‘Nagymamma said to stay together, no matter what. She said as long as we did, we’d have a family.’

He looked around and picked up the bag with the apples.

20

It was late on Monday night. Still, in shorts and a shirt, Kristen lay under her red quilt looking up at the sky. She could see Orion’s Belt and the W of Cassiopeia. They were sharp and clear among the other stars in the dark sky. It was a beautiful night, and finally, she and Noah were going to watch for convoys.

She thought about it a little uneasily. They hadn't talked about Kristen's going to Europe since that day at the beach. Maybe he had forgotten, she told herself, or maybe he had thought it over by now and knew she had been lying.

She turned in the bed, trying to put it out of her mind. Everything was ready for tonight, on the floor. A sweater, two towels, her sneakers tucked in one side of her beach bag, and two bottles of soda jammed into the other side.

If only Gram would go to sleep. Vaguely she heard Gram's radio, the end of Lux Radio Theatre, and then music. 'Would you like to swing on a star?' She couldn't keep her eyes open.

Then suddenly she was awake, wide awake. It seemed very late, midnight, maybe one o'clock. Gram's radio was off, and all the lights. Kristen reached for the screen and pushed it up and out.

She dropped into the rowboat and pushed herself along under the porches. In the light that spilled out from the less of Mrs. Colgan's blackout shades, she could see a mess of sand crabs hanging on to the pilings.

And at the Smiths', just silence. She sat there as wide awake as if it were the middle of the morning, so angry at herself for sleeping, so disappointed Noah was asleep, she could have cried.

'Too much crying,' she said aloud.

'Too much talking to yourself,' a voice said, so close she jumped.

Noah dropped into the boat. He was clumsy and splashed water over the side. 'Because of the cat,' he said.

She leaned over until she could see the cat's face, its eyes peering out from the front of his open jacket. 'Cats hate the water.'

'This one does not. I thought you would not come.'

She opened her mouth, ready to lie, but raised one shoulder instead. 'I fell asleep.'

Noah nodded. 'It is hard to stay awake sometimes.'

Kristen pushed the boat out from under the porches. 'Here's what we'll do. We'll cut across the bay. That way we can stay away from the surf.'

‘But it is closer the other way.’

‘Yes, but it’s harder to fight the surf than the bay. If you’re going far you want to save your arms.’

He nodded, watching her pull on the oars.

‘Will you teach me to swim?’ he asked after a while.

She blinked. She had been thinking again about Poppy... Poppy on a troopship watching her swim toward him. It was a wonderful dream. ‘Swim?’ she repeated. ‘Yes. But why can’t you swim?’

‘I did not have an ocean,’ he said. Like Lynnnatta in Detroit, she thought.

‘I had a river, the Danube.’ He leaned forward. ‘It runs between Buda and Pest, but the river is not blue like the waltz. It is gray, and sometimes silver.’

Kristen didn’t say anything. She had never heard of Budapest split up that way in two halves. She’d heard of ‘The Blue Danube,’ though. It was one of the songs in her music book for the piano.

It was hard to row now. The marshes were closing in around them, and there was the dry rustle of the reeds hitting the sides of the boat and scraping the bottom.

She could see Playland now in the back of them on Ninety-ninth Street, the roller coaster, a dark skeleton, and the Ferris wheel rising behind it. In front, the boardwalk was misty, the tall lights painted black toward the sea, so German subs couldn’t spot ships in the water nearby.

‘How long?’ Noah asked.

‘Long?’

‘To learn to swim.’ He leaned forward. ‘I want to go with you to Europe.’

She opened her mouth. Tell him right now, she told herself.

Tell him it’s just too far, the water’s too rough.

‘Kristen?’

She sighed. ‘You could never learn to swim the Atlantic in the summer. It would take months, years to be good enough, fast enough.’

‘If you can do it...’

‘I’ve been swimming since I was four,’ she said. ‘And remember that afternoon when I went into the surf after you, I was nearly swept under.’

He didn’t answer.

She took a breath, trying to think of something to convince him. ‘You even said you thought I was a better swimmer.’

In the dark, she could just see him shaking his head. ‘I know you are a good swimmer,’ he said slowly. ‘I know you were coming for me.’ He stopped for a moment. ‘I was... I don’t know the word...’

How could she tell him the Christy now? He was the first friend she had ever made. You couldn’t count Lynnnatta... Lynnnatta, who had been in Ridgway every summer from the time they could walk, from the time they could talk. Tom, a friend, a good friend, Kristen’s best friend.

“Teasing’ is the word,’ he said.

She looked at him. His face was so serious. One hand was in his jacket, petting the sleeping cat. ‘You do not want to take me,’ he said. ‘You think I will not be able to keep up.’

‘No, it isn’t that. Really,’ she said.

‘You think I am a coward because of the plane that day.’

She kept shaking her head.

He leaned forward. ‘It was just that I was thinking it was Europe.’ His lip trembled a little. ‘In Budapest, we had a yellow house with birds.’ He moved his fingers. ‘They were small birds.’

Blue ones painted on the house painted on the window shutters. I had an orange cat too, we called him Pap, after the pepper. He looks like this cat.' He tried to smile. 'And my grandmother, Nagymamma, was always telling me to do this and that, like your grandmother.'

Kristen bit her lip, trying to think of what to say.

'I have only Christy left. Christy is my family.' He stopped then and pointed. 'Look.'

She turned and saw it too. The first ship looked like a flat chunk of coal on the water, so far out she wasn't even sure it was a ship. But then a second one appeared on the horizon, moving out of the mist. It was a huge ship, its top tangle of turrets and masts.

For a moment, they didn't say anything. They sat there watching, the rowboat rocking gently until the ship disappeared into the mist again.

'That was a troopship,' she said at last.

Noah leaned back. 'Yes,' he said, 'I know. I will learn to swim, Kristen. to keep up, and we will go out there, out to a ship.

And- then I will go back to Europe to find Christy.'

She began to grow again, turning the boat toward the canal, her mouth dry.

Films of Kristen Deniel

Two of Izzy's candies filled my mouth as I went around the side of the house. I didn't mean to listen or to be sneaky. Ordinarily, I did that a lot. I'd standstill in the hall to hear what the stucco woman had to say to her telephone friend. I'd flip pages on the teacher's desk to see what disaster of a mark I'd gotten in social studies or social attitude. I'd pass by classmates in the schoolyard to find out what they had to say about that kid Kristen Copses.

But this time I was on my way to find Izzy, to give her a picture I'd drawn: Izzy flipping a pancake that would land on my plate. Izzy's pancakes were wonderful: covered with apples cut into small sweet chunks, the pancakes themselves so light I must have eaten a half dozen. In the picture Izzy is laughing, the turner in one hand, just under the cross-stitched motto on the wall:

LOVE THE COOK.

I'd changed the motto, though. I'd written: I DO LOVE THE COOK. I'd drawn the I DO in the palest pink so that you'd have to study it, study it hard, or you wouldn't notice.

One afternoon Izzy and I had walked up to the old cemetery on the hill where her parents were buried. We picked white daisies and Queen Anne's lace and put them in the jar in front of a small stone next to her parents' grave. Izzy ran her hand over the inscription on the bottom: JOSEPH REGAN, SIX DAYS. 'I always wanted more children,' she said. 'For me, for John, for Green's.' She patted the stone. 'I wanted a baby for each corner of my house. It just never happened after this.'

Down the hill, I could hear the Old Man bellow at Green's. 'Do they always fight?' I asked. 'Or...' -I hesitated, trying to sound as if I didn't care, as if it weren't important-' do you think it's because I'm here?'

Izzy grinned at me. 'It does seem worse this summer,' she said. 'But they have to find their way.'

I'd thought about that for days, 'worse this summer,' but now, as I rounded the house, I stepped back against the wall, warm from the sun, smelling faintly of paint, and closed my eyes.

'How can we let her go?' Izzy was saying.

'We can't,' the Old Man said.

My heart began to pound so hard I thought it would come through my chest.

A mother, I thought. M.

'She belongs here,' Izzy said. 'Green's feels it too.'

B, belong. G, girl. S, sister. W for want, W for the wish, W for Wouldn't it be lovely? My head was spinning.

'I've been thinking about it,' Izzy said. 'The winter house in town is too small. We'd have to put a room on for her.'

I don't need a room. A couch. Sleeping bags.

'Without the room, I don't think the agency would let us keep her. She has to have space for herself.'

For a moment they were quiet.

I leaned my head back, my hand to my mouth.

‘How about this?’ Lzzy said. ‘You could call Lenny Mitchell to work with you. There's space in the back for a great room for Kristen.’

‘A big window for her,’ the Old Man said. ‘We could do it in weeks.’

‘Sooner than weeks,’ Izzy said. ‘Early fall.’

‘Yes. Even Green’s would help.’

‘I’ll call-’ ‘You’ll call the agency.’

‘How long will it take them?’

‘She’ll have to go back first,’ Izzy said, the words tumbling over each other.

‘But just for a short time.’

I leaned my head against the wall. I’d never been so happy.

‘A daughter,’ Izzy said.

‘Yes,’ the Old Man said. ‘We’ll have a daughter.’

From where I stood, I could see the mountain towering over me. The stucco woman’s voice was in my head: ‘She’s a mountain of trouble, that Kristen Copses.’

Before the end of the summer, I decided, I was going to climb that mountain, get to the top, raise my arms, and shout to the whole world, ‘I have a family. I belong.’

In the back of me, there was a noise. ‘Yahoo!’

Green’s. I jumped afoot.

The voices stopped, but no one knew I had heard.

Early fall and I’d be a daughter.

Films of Kristen Deniel

Never mind that we didn't have much money. Never mind that I didn't even know exactly how to get to the house in Laurel Highlands; I'd find it. Never mind that the house wasn't mine.

Please don't mind, I said to Izzy and the Old Man in my head.

I ticked off what to pack, what to do, counting on my fingers: Bring all the food in the cabinet over the sink, a map, winter clothes, piles of anything warm I could find in the house, then get gas at the first exit off the highway.

Gram was in the kitchen making cocoa. 'It'll be dark soon,' she said.

'That's all right,' I told her. 'We like the dark. It's like velvet.'

'That it is,' she said. 'And we like snow, too.'

I bit my lip. Dark and snow. One problem after another.

'How about marshmallows in our cocoa?' Gram asked.

'Left-hand cabinet,' I said.

To begin with, Gram and I had to get off Long Island, I knew that; we had to get to Route Seventeen and exit at Ninety, and after that, we were home free. I had walked that last few miles dozens of times: the grocery store off the ramp, the road curving over the hill. We'd cross the bridge and the house would be there, nestled in the trees opposite the Old Man's mountain.

I could do it in my sleep.

I called back over my shoulder, reminding Gram where we were going: 'It's a house in the Copses, Gram,' I said. 'A house on the river, a safe house.'

I swept half boxes of cereal off the counter into a carton, cans of chicken noodle soup, sugar, salt, anything I could find to eat, then, wasting precious time, went up to the attic for Gram's old Christmas ornaments.

I heard a car and froze on the top step. The sound of the motor grew louder and then gradually disappeared. My heart was beating fast.

Stop, I told myself. The hot cocoa woman was far away, in her house somewhere, scarfing up her dinner, littering her sweatsuit with crumbs.

But I knew we should leave as quickly as we could. I'd learned that when I'd run before. The first hours made all the difference, the hours before anyone knew you were gone.

I scurried into the attic, found the box of ornaments, and pulled it after me to the stairs.

When I finished, the car was piled so high it was hard to see out the windows. It was completely dark now, except for the white flakes hitting the window. In the kitchen Gram was bent over the table, a cup of cocoa in one hand, her knife in the other, and the smooth chunk of wood in front of her.

'Gram?' I reached out for my cup of cocoa and sipped at it, feeling the warmth of it on my lip, the sweetness of the marshmallow in my mouth. I touched her shoulder. 'We can't wait anymore.'

Rubbing her eyes, she glanced toward her bedroom. I knew she wanted to take a nap. I did too; I was tired now, and thinking of the long trip ahead of us was almost too much.

'We'll have an adventure,' I said. 'You, and me, and Henry.' I hesitated. 'If we don't go, they might make me live somewhere else.'

She stood up. 'We'll go, then.' She looked around at the kitchen, touched the table, the back of the chair. 'Yes,' she said.

'We'll go.'

'Can you drive?' I asked.

Please let the snow stop, I thought.

She smiled. 'Of course.'

I made one last trip to the car, carrying her knives, the small drill, pieces of wood, and then I was back, hoisting Henry onto my shoulder. 'No biting, if you don't mind,' I told him.

We went outside, Gram looking up at the sky, holding out her hands to catch the flakes while I opened the garage doors, and then we were off, skidding our way down the street.

Suddenly- the snow did stop, and we saw a moon over our heads. 'It looks dusty,' Gram said. The houses stood out as clearly as if it were daytime; trees threw sharp shadows across the snowy lawns, and the dark streets curved like ribbons through that white world. I put my head back against the headrest, thinking we'd done it. The hardest part was over.

'Do you know about directions?' I asked.

She turned her head to one side. 'It depends. I know the way to the end of Long Island; I know how to get upstate...'

'Upstate, yes.'

'Across the Triborough Bridge.' She frowned, looking worried. 'Isn't that right?'

'I think so.' Henry was scratching around in the back, trying to make room for himself.

'There's a map somewhere.' Gram leaned across me, one hand off the wheel.

'I can find it,' I said quickly, reaching for the glove compartment. A tiny pinprick of light appeared as I snapped it open. The small space inside was filled with all kinds of things: one of Gram's silk gloves, a couple of dimes, a squished box of tissues, and at the very bottom, the map of Philadelphia State.

I unfolded it, spreading it out against the door of the glove compartment. It was a mass of color and lines and tiny words that were hard to see in that dim light. I bent over it, squinting. Palisades Parkway. Route 17. It was all there, one line after another, leading me home to Laurel Highlands.

I looked up as I heard the blare of a horn, and then a car swerved past us, its lights sweeping over the road. 'Are you all right?' I asked Gram.

'Right as rain,' she said.

I sat back and closed my eyes, thinking of Izzy, drawing them all in my mind, wondering if they'd think I was doing a terrible thing.

'It belongs to you,' the Old Man had said. Would he say that now? I wondered.

Why not? said Green's in my mind.

Izzy's face in front of mine. Would she say, 'Do it, Kristen'?

I thought she would.

I was doing it anyway.

Suddenly I sat up straight. How much gas did we have? It was almost a miracle to see the Mobil sign off to the right. I touched Gram's arm, pointing, and we pulled off the road, waiting for the attendant to fill the tank while I counted out my running money.

'Good idea,' Gram said, and I had to smile at her. She'd have driven until the tank was empty, and might never have remembered.

I was hungry now, really hungry. The hot chocolate hadn't lasted long. And I hadn't had lunch. Maybe I could hurry inside for a bag of potato chips and a chocolate bar. I glanced out the rearview mirror to see a car pulling up in the back of us at the pump. The man was impatient, tapping his horn for us to get out of the way. There'd be no time to buy anything, not even enough time to rummage through the back to find the bags of food.

I thought of the hot cocoa woman. She'd come up the path tomorrow afternoon to get me, trying to smile, acting as if this would be a lovely afternoon tea at that woman's house - what was her name? Eleanor. When we didn't answer the bell, maybe she'd go around the back to see if we were in Gram's garden. But soon enough she'd figure out what we weren't there. She'd stand on tiptoe to look in the window of the garage, and it would be empty. If we were lucky, she'd wait awhile. She might think we'd be back any minute. But the minutes would stretch out to an hour, and then she'd know. She'd know. And then she'd call the police.

My hands were damp.

Calm down, I made Green's tell me in my mind. You knew all this before you started.

But Gram turned onto the parkway now, and it wouldn't be that long before we crossed the bridge and left Long Island, maybe twenty minutes, and the hot cocoa woman would just be getting ready for bed.

Next to me, in the dim light, I couldn't see the lines around Gram's eyes, or the ones crisscrossing her forehead. I could pretend we were taking a moonlight ride in the Silver Bullet, pretend Gram was all right and we weren't running.

The last time I had run was two weeks after what had happened in Laurel Highlands. It was September, still hot, with the sun beating down from early morning until dark. It was hard to move, hard to think; everything hurt in my head and my chest. I'd had enough of the stucco woman and I knew she'd had enough of me. All I could think about was being somewhere cold, a place where I could scoop up a chunk of snow and crush it against my teeth, a place to take the heat and the pain go away.

I left at night after the stucco woman had fallen asleep. It gave me hours to get out on the road, to find a bus. I was gone for days before they caught me.

Maybe we'd be luckier this time.

There were two letters the next day, one from Poppy and one from Lynnnatta. Kristen managed to pick them up from the mailman before he even hit Cross Bay Boulevard. She'd been waiting on the corner for more than an hour, watching the street as far down as she could see, wondering if Lynnnatta had gotten the letter she had sent. She had told her about Noah and the cat he was calling Pap.

Kristen yawned, tired from last night. Even after she had tiptoed through the dark kitchen at two or three in the morning and slipped under the red quilt again, she hadn't been able to sleep. She had tossed from one side to the other, thinking about the troopship, and Poppy, and what she could do about the lie she had told Tom.

Now she took the letters and went straight to Lynnnatta's house, past the bedroom where Pap slept now, a small orange circle on Eddie's pillow. She climbed the attic stairs and shoved up the window as high as it could go, then took a quick look at the beach. It was still empty this hour of the morning, litter baskets clean, the sand smooth and even. She had time, plenty of time. She wanted to stretch out this moment with two letters to read. It would be like sucking on a red LifeSaver until it melted into a thin little circle.

She looked at them both, Lynnnatta's as filthy as the first letter she had sent. But this time it was in ink that was blotted and watery as if drops had been spattered on it.

Her father's letter was much neater, much cleaner, and is beautifully clear writing said 'Miss Elizabeth Mary Mollahan.'

Kristen slid her fingernail under the flap and slid out the tissue-paper letter.

'Kristen.' it began. 'My dearest daughter.'

She closed her eyes and held the letter her father had held in his own hands just a few days ago.

She read the rest of it quickly, so fast the words ran together. He never mentioned that she hadn't said goodbye. He never said that he minded, or didn't mind, only about the war is over, and everything the same again.

I have a picture of you in my head as clear as a photograph to take with me overseas. You're in the boat, and frowning, staring at a skate fish just before you set him free. By the time you read this, Kristen Billy, I'll be on my way across the ocean, the faster there, the foster home.

She thought her heart would stop. Her father out there, crossing the Atlantic, part of a convoy, maybe even on the troopship she and Noah had seen last night.

She couldn't even think about it. She looked at the end of the letter.

Hug the waves for me, and the beach on 101st Street.

And- then at the very bottom, hug Gram too. She loves you, Kristen. more than you know.

Kristen wiped her eyes. It was a good thing she had Lynnnatta's letter to think about next, and not having to hug Gram.

She looked back at Poppy's letter. At the very bottom he had written:

Don't forget to finish those books, Madeline, and A Tale of Two Cities, and especially The Three Musketeers.

Kristen frowned. Strange that Poppy had written that. He had read Madeline to her a hundred years ago when she was six. How could he have forgotten? And he didn't know she was reading The Three Musketeers. She had just taken it from the library on Thursday.

She put her father's letter down carefully near the chimney and opened Lynnnatta's. It started most strangely. No opening, the way Sister Jillien had taught Kristen in school. No - 'Dear Kristen.' Just please go to my living room and get Eddie's picture. Send it right away even if you have to ask your grandmother for the money. Tell her I'll pay her back when the war is over. I can't remember what Eddie looks like and now he's missing in action, isn't it strange, on a beach. It was on D-Day. The telegram didn't come until this morning. He never even got any of the candy.

Lynnnatta-

Kristen sat there for another minute; then she went down the stairs feeling so dizzy it seemed her feet didn't even touch the steps. She went into the Dillons' living room and reached for Eddie's picture. Her hands were shaking and she knocked it off the table, grabbing it before it hit the floor. Nice catch, Kristen.

Eddie would say.

Then she was out the door and down the street. She couldn't wait to find Gram, to tell her this awful thing that had happened to Eddie Dillon, to ask for wrapping paper and stamps for the picture.

She went down the road and in the back door, but before she could begin, Gram had started. 'Change your clothes, Kristen.

and get your hat,' she said. 'Mrs. Colgan told me that Eddie

Dillon is missing and-'

'How does she know?' Kristen asked.

They couldn't watch for ships that night after all. Mr.

Colgan had borrowed Gram's rowboat for night crabbing, and Mr.

Meyer was caulking the bottom of his.

'Want to go to the movie instead?' Kristen asked Noah when she caught up with him on the Smiths' porch.

'Well...'

‘We won’t stay for the whole thing,’ she told him. ‘We’ll just sneak in and watch until eight-thirty, a little Eyes and Ears of the World News, and...’ She tried to remember the newest movie at the Cross Bay. She had seen two minutes of it the other day before the matron had caught her and marched her outside, blinking, into the sunshine.

‘How much does it cost?’ He asked.

‘Not a cent. I told you, we’re sneaking in.’ She could see he looked worried. ‘Unless you’re afraid.’

‘I am not afraid of anything.’

‘Well, then.’ Action in the North Atlantic was the name of the movie. It was about the troop ships crossing the ocean, and German submarines following along...

She shivered a little, thinking about those ships. Mrs. Sherman had just pinned up another poster over a pile of raisin rings. SOMEONE TALKED, it said in big red letters on top, and underneath was a ship sinking so you saw only the bow, and sailors trying to swim away in waves that were high as mountains.

Kristen tried not to think about it. Instead, she walked down the street in front of Tom. They turned in at the alley on one side of the Cross-Bay Theatre. The alley was filled with itchy weeds that smelled. She could see Noah lifting his skinny legs as high as he could, but she just rushed right through the weeds and around to the back.

‘It’s hot as a poker in the balcony,’ she told him. ‘They always leave the door open up there.’

Noah stopped when he saw the fire escape stairs they’d have to climb.

‘Don’t be silly,’ she said, knowing what he was thinking.

‘Don’t look down.’

‘It must be two stories,’ he said. ‘You can fall right through those steps, and it looks as if the steps will pull off the side of the wall.’

‘Three stories,’ she said, daring him.

‘I am not afraid,’ he said. ‘I am just telling you.’

She started to climb without answering. She had done this every summer since she was six, up those stairs a thousand times. The stairs were rickety, she had to admit. And the screws holding them to the wall looked rusty as anything. Wouldn't you think the guy who owned the movie would polish things up once in a while?

She looked back over her shoulder at Tom. He was holding on to the railing for dear life, as Gram would say, stopping each second to close his eyes and take a breath.

'Race you to the top,' she said.

He opened his eyes. 'Sure.'

She grinned. He was a tough kid, that Tom.

The balcony door was opened just wide enough for them to crawl through. She sank on the top step next to the door to watch, with Noah sliding in next to her, breathless. 'That was so simple,' he said.

She leaned over. 'We made it just in time for Bugs Bunny.'

He grinned back. 'What's up, Doc?' he said.

She started to laugh.

'What?' He asked.

'It's your voice. It sounds so... so...'

'Hungarian,' he said. 'It is a Hungarian Bugs Bunny.'

She liked the way he laughed, the way he talked. She kept smiling to herself as they leaned back against the steps to watch Bugs Bunny chomping on a carrot, falling off a cliff. They had a perfect spot. They had the whole balcony to themselves.

Not one person was up there.

If they had paid, if Poppy had been with her, she would have been able to go downstairs to the candy stand and buy a cup of popcorn, or some peanut chews. If she tried it now-that is, if she'd still had her tan purse with money-the matron with her flashlight would be right there to pounce on her.

And- then it was time for the picture. Words... music... a destroyer being blown up in the water. The noise of it was deafening. Explosions were going on all over the place.

Kristen sat there for a while. She watched one of the ships sink and the sailors trying to hold on to little pieces of wood or to swim away, just like the poster in Mrs. Sherman's bakery.

And- she thought of Poppy. They had heard from him again, but only a postcard. She had missed the mailman that day, and the card had slid into the slot in the door, and it had been there all morning until Gram had spotted it. Never so tired. I never worked so hard, to be ready to go overseas. Thinking of you both in Ridgway makes me happy... makes it all worthwhile. Love, Poppy.

Kristen watched one of the sailors, arms raised, go under the water, and then she didn't watch anymore.

Noah wasn't watching either.

'Don't you like the movie?' she asked.

He shook his head.

'We could leave-' she began and broke off. She could see the balcony stairs and the beam from the matron's flashlight bouncing up toward them.

'I was on a ship like that,' Noah said.

She blinked. Of course. How else had he gotten here? She had never thought of that. The matron was halfway up the stairs now, looking at them, a frown on her face.

'Tom,' Kristen began.

'Are you here again?' the matron asked. 'I told you last time it's dangerous to climb those steps, and you can't keep coming in here when you don't pay. It was one thing when you were six years old, but...'

Kristen circled her, with Noah following, and went down the balcony steps to the first floor. They passed the candy counter and the glass stand with the popcorn piled up to the top and went out the door.

Behind them was the sound of bombs, and depth charges exploding, and in the marquee's light she could see Tom's face, his blue eyes swimming in tears.

She stood there for a moment, wanting to ask him, wanting to know about the ship, wanting to know what had made him cry.

Then she heard the church chimes.

'It's nine o'clock,' she said. 'Gram is going to have a fit'

They started to run, crossing the street diagonally, just missing an old Chevy with its headlights blackened, its horn blaring at them. They raced past Mrs. Sherman's. 'Same cookies,' Noah said, breathless, and then around the corner of the As Good as New Shoppe with the dusty hat and coat, the flute and the violin.

By the time they reached the back road, Kristen had a pain in her chest and a stitch in her side, and Noah wasn't crying anymore. They were both laughing, and he grabbed her hand and pulled her along until they reached her back door.

'Tomorrow,' Kristen called after him. 'See you tomorrow.'

'Yes,' he said, going down toward the Smiths'.

It means-' she began and broke off. How could she explain? Besides, they had to be quiet. She held one finger up to her mouth and reached for the key around her neck. She pulled him inside and shut the door quickly behind them.

'Why?' He asked, whispering.

She raised her shoulders, thinking about how to tell him.

'It's the war,' she began. 'The people are gone now.'

She saw his eyes, blue in the dim light, sad maybe, or frightened. 'Like Budapest,' he said.

Kristen shook her head a little. 'Lynnnatta... that's the girl, said I could. Gave me the key. I'm being careful.'

She looked at the winter shutters tight over the windows, and breathed in, trying not to cry over the cat, or her father, or Lynnnatta's being gone.

'Hot,' Noah said.

Kristen shook her head, and then she realized how wet she was, the ends of her hair still dripping.

Noah was frowning. 'She is too little for food,' he said slowly. 'She needs milk,' and, even more slowly, 'She needs her mother.'

Kristen nodded a quick flash in her mind of the stars on her ceiling and her mother. Then she sat back on her heels. Noah was right. The kitten needed milk. She thought about going for it.

She'd have to walk to the bayside and sneak past Gram to take a bottle out of the refrigerator.

She could see Gram's name, fourth on her problem list. It came after First: Lies; Second: Daydreaming; and Third: Friends, need. And now maybe she'd cross the whole thing out and move Gram up to number one. It would serve her right.

Gram probably wouldn't care even if she knew. She wasn't talking much to Kristen either, mumbling once, '... terrible that you didn't come back to say goodbye to your father.'

Kristen knew it was terrible, she didn't need Gram to tell her that. The last two days she had awakened with a pain in her chest, almost like a woodpecker banging away at her ribs. If only she had gone home on Saturday morning, or even to the railroad station. Just a few minutes would have made all the difference. And now she might not see Poppy for years, she might be grown up and he wouldn't even recognize her.

She had written to him, though, along 'I'm sorry' letter. She had sent it to the address that he had left on her bed. It was a strange address, full of numbers and letters, and didn't even tell where he was.

Suddenly she felt cold there in the shade. She moved her head, finding a shaft of sunlight that came through the boardwalk up above. It was warm on her face. In front of her, a woman went past, humming 'The Last Time I Saw Paris.'

And, Noah wasn't just looking at the water anymore. He was writing something on that pad. What? She could see a ship way out. Maybe he was checking out troop movements. She tried to think about what else the spies checked out when she saw them in the movies. She wondered if she could get up a little closer.

Tom's head was bent over his paper, and he was writing fast. Kristen crawled around the side of the rusty fence an inch at a time. If he heard her if he turned around...

She pictured herself as an undercover agent. If Tom, Nazi Spy Tom, turned, he'd reach into the bag, pull out his revolver with the silencer. He'd shoot her, of course. Never mind. It was for the good of the country. She'd win a medal.

She couldn't see anything in his paper. His shoulder was in the way. She moved over a bit, and another inch or two toward him, and there, she could see the writing on the lined white paper:

Dere Ont Eva and Onkl Emery, Strange. A secret code maybe. She frowned, suddenly knowing what it was, feeling the disappointment. A letter, just a letter, not a spy thing at all... just that he was the worst speller in the world, worse than even she was. She let out her breath.

No. The tan purse. She could run down to Milton at the grocery store. She slapped her pocket. The purse was gone. Of course, it was in the water. All the money she had saved for all the cookies this summer, and the movies, and it was gone. All those months of saving. But Lynnnatta's letter was still in her pocket. She could feel it, almost as wet as the cat. How could she ever read it? She took it out slowly, carefully, and spread it on the counter to dry.

'I will get milk.' Noah reached for the back door. 'Do not worry,' he said, but it sounded like worry.

He was as careful as she would have been, opening the door less than an inch, peering out, then pushing it all the way. A moment later, the door closed gently, and he was gone.

Where was he going? To Mrs. Meyer's? To Milton's? He had certainly learned to find his way around quickly.

The cat mewed. On the kitchen floor, she was a shadow, so puny she could be only a few weeks old. Poor little thing. Kristen could have cried looking at her. She scooped her up, her face a striped pansy, her ears tiny tags of orange. 'Coming,' Kristen said, 'milk is coming. Don't worry.'

He heard her and turned. Good grief. 'I lost my, um...' she began, and then she heard the noise.

It was like a mosquito at first, a thin, high sound. It wasn't a mosquito, though, of course not. The noise grew louder, so loud she could feel the boardwalk tremble with it, could feel the vibration in her chest.

A plane was coming in over the water, so low it was just above the waves, its wings tilting. She could see people standing on the beach watching, Mrs. Colgan far down on the beach, looking up, her mouth a perfect round O. And a fat lady with wobbly legs, shading her eyes to see as the plane roared over the beach. It spread a huge, dark shadow, sand flattening under it and spewing up along the sides.

Kristen backed against the boardwalk steps, her heart thumping in her chest, her head bursting with the sound of it.

The sand was in her mouth and nose, stinging her eyes.

The plane gathered speed, gathered height, was up, over them and past. And then she realized. It was a trainer plane, only a trainer plane from the navy yard.

But Noah couldn't know that. She could see his face, his blue eyes huge, the pad went out of his hand, blowing across the beach.

Without thinking, she went toward him, spitting out sand, wiping her eyes on her sleeve. The noise of the plane was fading, and she could see Tom's hands were trembling a little.

She reached out and grabbed his arm. 'It's all right,' she told him. Then everything was still, except for the waves rolling in on the shore in front of them.

'It's all right,' she said again. 'It wasn't a Nazi. I saw it.' She made a circle with one finger. 'The round insignia thing with the star.'

He didn't look at her. It almost seemed as if he hadn't seen her as he kept watching the plane, a speck now in the distance.

She stepped back. She could still feel her heart pounding.

‘It was a trainer plane.’ She pointed across the shoreline toward Coney Island. ‘From the naval base.’

He wasn’t listening. He followed his paper across the beach, and suddenly she remembered he had caught her spying on him again. Feeling her face redden, knowing she wouldn’t go near him for the rest of the summer, she went up the boardwalk steps and started for home.

She wandered down the hall with the cat in her arms, running her hand over her back, feeling the knobs of her bony spine. The first door was to Eddie’s bedroom. She pushed it open with one finger. It was a little lighter in there, the shutters not as tight against the windows.

She could see Gram’s hand, soft and plump on the pillows. Gram’s wedding ring was a sliver of silver that had made a deep ridge in her finger. ‘I was skinny until you started school,’ she had told Kristen once, laughing. ‘Then I started to eat and found out how good food was.’

Kristen couldn’t picture it, couldn’t picture Gram skinny, and swimming across Jamaica Bay. Her father had told her Gram had done that. ‘I watched her when I was small,’ he had said. ‘She had a braid to her waist, and she was a seal in the water.’

Gram was sitting on the couch in the living room when Kristen came in. She was listening to Portia Faces Life. Kristen liked to listen to Portia too.

She and Lynnnatta had sent away for Portia’s picture. They’d written a letter straight to WEAF radio station just before Lynnnatta had left. Lynnnatta said stars like Portia always had films of themselves lying around.

Right now, on the radio, Portia’s husband, Walter, was a prisoner of war in Germany, and he had just thought of an escape plan. He was going to hide in a small boat. Then when an American ship passed, he’d signal it with a flashlight and row out to freedom.

Kristen sank on one end of the couch, as far away from Gram as she could get, to listen.

Gram still had the braid, but now it was twisted around in the back of her head in a bun. At night, she’d take out the bobby pins, run her fingers through her hair, and brush it.

Gram’s hand was moving. Kristen watched out of the corner of her eye as the plump fingers walked across the pillows, and Gram’s arm came up around her.

Kristen was about to shrug her arm away, about to get up, but it felt so good to be sitting there in that circle that she moved closer. A moment later, she was crying, and she didn't even try to stop.

'I know,' Gram said.

Kristen shook her head. 'No, you don't.'

Gram touched her sleeve, making tiny pleats in the cotton with her fingers.

'We were going to go fishing,' Kristen said, 'and to the movies. We were going to do everything.'

'Your father said the same thing,' Gram said.

Kristen looked up. 'Really?'

Gram nodded. 'Your eyes will be red.'

She shook her head. 'I don't care.'

'Yes, you will,' Gram said. 'We're going out to dinner.'

'Trixie's Restaurant?'

'Of course not. There's a war on and not a penny to spare for such foolish-' Gram broke off. 'We're going to the Smiths'.' Kristen sat up straight. She could feel her mouth suddenly go dry. 'I'm not -'

'Mr. Meyer said you did a magnificent job on his headlight.'

'I don't -'

'There's a surprise for you, Mrs. Meyer said.'

Kristen bit her lip. Some surprise. As if she couldn't guess. Tom. Kristen moved back to the end of the couch. She was not going to the Smiths' house, not in a million skillion years.

'I'm not...' Kristen began again and stopped. She always loved to go to the Smiths' for dinner. Sometimes there was a flounder Mr. Meyer had caught that morning, with corn on the cob, and a cake with jelly icing on top. How could she say she didn't want to go, that she knew about Tom? And worse, that he knew about her. Gram wouldn't take no for an answer. Never.

Gram was up from the couch now. 'We'll have to see what happens to Walter tomorrow,' she said. 'They're certainly stretching this out.'

Kristen followed her into the bathroom and watched as Gram opened her compact and took out her powder puff.

Kristen leaned forward to look in the mirror. Her eyes were red, and so was her nose.

'Here.' Gram ran a washcloth under the tap. 'Nice and cool.' She held it up to Kristen's eyes. 'Better in a minute, wait and see.'

Gram was right. Kristen held her head back and felt the coolness of the cloth on her eyes and her cheeks. In the back of her, she could hear the news. An American general had told reporters he needed only three hours of good weather and the army could break out of Normandy and start across France.

Strange, Kristen thought, in France, the weather was gray and cloudy, and the Americans were caught on a beach that was wet and cold. Here in Ridgway. It was beautiful.

She checked the mirror again. No one would guess she'd been crying.

Gram took her powder puff and waved it over Kristen's nose. 'I think I hear the church bells. We're supposed to be there at six. Come on.'

Kristen walked out behind her, taking the smallest steps she possibly could. She dreaded having to meet Tom, actually meet him at last. She wouldn't say a word to him. She'd talk to Mr. and Mrs. Meyer and not even look at him.

Mrs. Meyer was waiting at the door, excited, smiling.

'Have I got a surprise for you,' she said.

And behind her was Tom. Tom, with that mop of dark hair and blue eyes. She took a quick look at him after all. He was looking at her too. His mouth opened. 'You are Kristen?'

'Of course, she's Kristen.' Mrs. Meyer said.

Kristen raised one eyebrow and put on her 'Too bad for you, Sister Jillen' face. Usually, she was good at that, but halfway into the face, her eyes slid away because for the quickest second it looked as if Noah was going to laugh.

When she looked back, he was tapping his lip, looking at her, his eyebrows raised. What was that all about? she wondered. Noah was crazy.

But then Mr. Meyer was leading them to the table, his hand on Kristen's back, smiling. 'Sit here next to me,' he told Gram. 'And Kristen. my love, across from Tom, my nephew. Tom's here from my brother Emery's in Canada to spend the summer.' 'From Hungary,' Mrs. Meyer said at the same time.

'To be safe from the war.'

Noah looked up. He spoke to Gram, though, not even glancing at Kristen. 'From Budapest, two years ago.' The words sounded different on his tongue, soft, almost musical.

Mrs. Meyer shook her head. 'It was a long trip for Tom. Through Austria and Switzerland, across the mountains to France, then a ship...' She stopped for a breath.

'With Christy,' Noah said.

Mrs. Meyer's face suddenly looked different, older, sad. 'His eight-year-old sister was sick,' she told them. 'She's caught in France.'

Noah made a sound, said something.

Kristen took a quick look, but he was smearing margarine over a slice of bread, looking down. And then Mr. Meyer began to talk quickly, and so did Gram, and Kristen bent over her plate to bone the fish and begin on the corn. She was starving.

Noah must have been starving too. He bent over his plate; his hand made a fist around his fork. He ate fast, taking huge bites, shoveling it in.

Gram would have had a fit if she had done that.

He raised his head, and immediately she looked past him, toward the lemon cake on the counter, and beyond to the window. Outside, pairs of socks were hanging on the porch railing.

The water was flat and slick with the sun slanting over it.

‘Isn’t this perfect,’ Mrs. Meyer said. ‘Just as Lynnnatta leaves, Noah comes. You’ll have someone to fish with all summer, Kristen.’

Gram was staring at her. Kristen could feel her eyes. Gram thought she knew what Kristen was thinking, thought Kristen wouldn’t go to the beach with any boy, fish with him, go to the Cross-Bay Theatre...

What Gram didn’t know was that it was probably the other way around.

‘Yes,’ said Gram. ‘It’s perfect. Isn’t it, Kristen?’

She didn’t look at Gram. She took a chunk of corn off the cob, with a bite almost as big as Tom’s. She certainly couldn’t answer them with her mouth full.

Noah had finished his fish and corn and was into the peas now. Mounds of peas were falling off the edge of his fork. And suddenly he looked up and saw her watching him. He was laughing, bringing his hand up to his mouth. And just as suddenly, she knew what he was doing. He was reminding her of the lipstick, Gertz Department Store, FREE TAKE ONE. Good grief.

It was a good thing Mrs. Meyer was talking, otherwise, Kristen might just have jumped up to race out of there and never come back. But what was Mrs. Meyer saying? ‘Noah doesn’t know the ocean. He doesn’t know how to swim.’

‘And Kristen. ‘Mr. Meyer said, ‘swims like a mermaid.’

‘She’ll teach you, Tom,’ Mrs. Meyer said. ‘No one swims the way Kristen does.’

Teach him to swim-she couldn’t believe it.

‘Except her grandmother,’ said Mr. Meyer.

Gram laughed. ‘I haven’t put my foot in the water since I taught Kristen to swim.’

Kristen remembered that, remembered paddling around in the water, listening as Gram held her feet lightly, pointing her big toes toward each other, angling her hands so the sides of her index fingers slid into the water first. ‘Everything makes a difference,’ Gram had said.

And on Friday night, they had shown her father. No life vest anymore, and by that time Kristen could dive. She went off the side of the porch, her toes digging into the railing for an instant, then pushing up, arms stretched, head down. She slid underneath smoothly with the sound of the water in her ears, the taste of it on her tongue, up then, and swimming in front of the houses easily, almost as easily as she could walk.

Moments later, she had climbed back up. Her father had wrapped her in a huge towel, hugging her and telling her how proud her mother would have been.

And now Gram was telling the Smiths about Poppy. 'I hope he's still at Fort Dix,' she said. In the back of them, the teakettle was whistling. Gram's face was sad. 'He'll go to Europe soon, any day.

Maybe he's gone already. I hope it isn't in Germany.'

Kristen stuffed her mouth with bread. She wanted to stuff her ears too. She didn't want Gram to talk about it. She didn't want to think about it.

Then Mrs. Meyer passed them slices of lemon cake, apologizing because it was made with margarine and not butter, and Noah began to eat again, two pieces, and then a third. He didn't look at Kristen again, and she sat there thinking about him laughing at her, and wondering about his sister, Christy, and trying to pretend she didn't notice he was there until they were finished and it was time to go home.

Thursday. She had been ducking away from Noah for almost a week. It was just the opposite now. Everywhere she went, she saw Tom. Ahead of her, in back of her, even coming out of Sherman's Bakery.

But right now, she had other things to think about. A letter from her father. They had received only a quick postcard: Arrived safely. Miss you terribly. We'll be fishing this time next year. Letter follows. Best love, Poppy. Maybe today there'd be a real letter. She could see it in her mind, tissue-thin with a red, white, and blue border, the same as the letters Eddie Dillon sent home.

'If you could stop dreaming and finish your breakfast,' Gram said.

Kristen picked up her spoon. She could see something else too. Gram would be leaning over her shoulder, reading the letter, her lips moving slightly, reading even faster than she could.

Kristen ate her cereal without looking once into the bowl. Bits of cream were floating around in the milk, white things looking like tiny fish. She could almost feel them on her teeth.

She shuddered. The white things were floating around inside her now. She went out to the porch and leaned on the screen. The water was swollen this morning, the tide high.

She knew exactly what she'd do. She'd hang around on Cross Bay Boulevard, maybe stop at Sherman's Bakery for a roll or a cookie. She'd grab the mailman before he even got around to her grandmother on the bayside.

If only he'd give her the letter.

She reached under her bed for her pad and pencil and the tan purse with the money she had saved all winter.

'Going to Sherman's,' she told Gram's back at the kitchen sink.

Gram made a tiny breathing sound, a 'no' sound, but before she could say she shouldn't waste her money on cookies that tasted like cardboard, Kristen began, 'My money. My

Christmas, snow-shoveling, allowance-saving money.'

Gram's voice rose. 'Then don't forget sunburn lotion.

You'll have blisters on your nose.'

Kristen didn't wait to hear the rest. She was out the door and up the road. Already it was hot, the tar shimmering in the haze, the sound of the cicadas beginning. 'Listen,' Poppy would say, 'it's the sound of summer.'

She wondered when she'd see him again. The days stretched out in front of her like long gray sheets on a washing line.

Summer would be over and fall...

Kristen passed the As Good as New Shoppe on the corner. Everything in the window was just the same, the old coat and dusty straw hat, certainly not looking as good as new, the flute and violin in back, and the stuffed dog that looked as if it would fall over any second.

Sherman's Bakery was at the near end of Cross Bay Boulevard. It was dim and dusty, and Kristen could see through the screen that Mrs. Sherman hadn't gotten around to baking yet. The trays were almost empty. A strawberry-pink birthday cake stood on one shelf and a plate of pale sugar cookies on another. The cookies had jelly in the middle, but the jelly would be hard by now, the juice drained out overnight.

Kristen stood there, hand on the screen door, squinting in the sun. The mailman was halfway up the next block. She could see him plodding along across the street.

She took a step, but Mrs. Sherman, hands floury, came out from the back and spotted her. 'Kristen. 'she said. 'My first customer today.'

Kristen pulled open the door and went inside, glancing up at the poster over the glass counter: LOOSE LIPS SINK SHIPS. 'Not much left,' Mrs. Sherman said. 'Sticky buns later, but try those jelly cookies for now.'

Kristen looked down at the cookies. Up close they looked worse, shrunken and dry. She wondered which way the mailman was going. Toward the bay? Back along the boulevard?

'Can't get much better with the war on, you know,' Mrs. Sherman began, leaning against the counter.

Kristen nodded. If the mailman went toward the bay, he'd turn before the bakery. She'd miss him.

'I'll take a cookie,' Kristen said. 'Sure.'

'The egg man went into the service,' Mrs. Sherman said.

'I don't know how I'm going to get eggs now, or cheese.'

'My grandmother said I have to be right home. I have to stop her medicine.'

'Sick? Your grandmother's sick?'

The next thing she knew, Mrs. Sherman would be on her way to Grams with her dried-up cookies. 'Uh... no. It's my aunt

Celia. In Europe.'

Mrs. Sherman shook her head, clucking a little. 'What's the matter?'

She'd never get out of there. She took a step back, trying to think. She remembered the news a while back: battles in Russia, with snow and biting cold. 'Frostbite,' she said.

Mrs. Sherman raised one eyebrow. 'In July?'

Kristen shook her head. 'I don't know. I really-'

Mrs. Sherman sighed. 'It's the war. No one knows what's going on.' She reached for a bag. 'Two cookies. Two for the price of one.'

'Thanks,' Kristen said. If she ran maybe she could cut the mailman off. She counted pennies out on the counter, reached for the bag, then banged out the screen door.

He was there, crossing the street, still on the boulevard. A miracle.

'Hey,' she called. 'Wait up.'

He didn't turn around. He stopped to stuff a paper into the slot at the restaurant, then went next door to the dry cleaner. By the time she caught up with him, she could feel perspiration streaking down her back.

'I need my mail,' she told his sack, not looking at his face.

He'd never even give her the movie advertisement. He shook his head. 'I've told you. I have to deliver it to your grandmother's house. Can't be dropping her mail all over the place. She'd carry on and-'

'My mail,' Kristen said. 'My mail.'

Inside the sack was her letter, written in her father's handwriting. It would start with 'Sweetheart,' or 'Dear Kristen Billy.'

'My father,' she said in a voice she could hardly hear herself, 'is in the service. The Secret Service.' She stopped, trying to think about how to convince him. 'He told me to be sure to get the mail first. He-'

The mailman looked up. 'Jerry went overseas?'

The letter was there, so close she could reach out and take it. She hated the mailman.

‘You know you’re not supposed to ask,’ she said. ‘You saw the poster in Mrs. Sherman’s, ‘Loose Lips Sink Ships.’ Spies could be walking up and down Cross Bay Boulevard, and my father, who’s on a ship right now...’

She could feel her lips trembling even though she didn’t know if her father was on a ship, or still in New Jersey at Fort Dix, perfectly safe.

The mailman shifted the leather strap on his shoulder.

‘Don’t cry, Kristen. Let me take a look. Let me just see...’

She stood there waiting as he went through dozens of envelopes, it seemed stacks of papers. He kept shaking his head.

Then, at last, he plucked a letter out of the sack.

She breathed in and could feel the tears now.

‘It’s not from your father,’ he said.

Then she could see it too. A small white envelope, filthy, MISS Kristen MOLLAHAN, in pencil.

Lynnnatta. Only Lynnnatta.

‘Listen, Kristen. ‘He said. ‘There’ll be a letter tomorrow.

Betcha. You’ll come right down here to Cross Bay...’

She stared at the sidewalk, at a crack running along with it, a hill of ants bustling. ‘He’s very busy,’ she said.

‘I know,’ he said. ‘He’s a great guy.’

Kristen took the letter from him, dug it into her shorts pocket. ‘I’ll see you tomorrow, then,’ she said.

‘You can count on it.’

She headed for the fishing dock, looking back once to wave to him. It was a hot walk along Cross Bay Boulevard, but worth it. The fishing boats would be long gone now on a weekday, out since early this morning. She'd have the wharf to herself, with only a fisherman or two trying for fluke.

She ran the last bit, seeing the weathered dock in front of her, the flag flapping wildly on the pole, and best of all, no one there, not a soul. She took a deep breath, smelling the sea, and kerosene from the boats, and sat on a bench halfway down to read Lynnnatta's letter. But before she even got to take it out of her pocket, she could see someone on the beach path. No, two people. Her luck.

She shaded her eyes. One was coming on a bicycle, wobbling along, a basket in front, and the other, a good way in the back of him, seemed to be... She sat up straighter. Yes, it was Noah running down the road after him. He stopped once, and darted into the reeds, as the bicycle rider looked over his shoulder. What was Noah up to, anyway?

The rider slowed as he neared the dock. It was probably a fisherman who would talk and talk, and she'd never get one minute's peace when the person she wanted to talk to was Tom.

She slid off the bench, leaning against the side. If he didn't see her, maybe he'd go all the way to the far end on that bicycle and pass her right by.

He didn't, though. She could hear him swinging off the bike, the sound of metal as he rested it against a bench farther down, a splash as he tossed something into the water, and as she peered around the side of the bench, he was on his way again, and Noah was running toward her, waving his arms, shouting.

Kristen gathered herself to her feet, looking first at Tom, whose feet were pounding along the wooden pier, and then at the back of the man on the bicycle. No, it was a boy, a teenager. His head was down, bent over the handlebars, his feet pedaling faster, picking up speed as he disappeared into one of the narrow lanes that snaked through the reeds.

Noah was in front of her now, almost babbling as he pointed down into the clear green water. She took a step toward the edge, looking down too. She saw threads of seagrass floating under the surface, and then the bulging bag, almost out of sight, as it sank to the bottom.

'It is a cot,' Noah said. 'A cot.'

She shook her head. 'It's too small for a...' She drew in her breath. A cat. He meant a cat. She was in the water in an instant, rolling over the side instead of diving, not sure of the depth. It was over her head, much deeper than she would have guessed, maybe seven or eight feet. The water bubbled above her, sunlit at first, and then darker. She turned and kicked with her feet, her arms out, reaching, reaching...

And felt the edge of it, the paper bag shredding away in her fingers. Then, a miracle, the kitten was in her hands.

She kicked up with it and broke the surface. It was still, unmoving, a sodden reddish mass, as Tom, hanging half off the pier, took it from her.

She swam around to the steps the fisherman used to clean their catch and pulled herself up.

Noah was standing in the middle of the dock now, wrapping the kitten on the edge of his shirt. She moved toward him, her clothes heavy and dripping, her sneakers filled with so much water it was hard to move. 'Don't let her lie still,' she said.

'Keep her moving.'

When she reached him, she grabbed his wrist, shaking his hands, and the cat with them. 'More,' she told him. She dug the cat out of the end of his shirt and kneaded the fur, holding her head down, until at least she coughed and sneezed.

'She is alive,' Noah said. They looked at each other, smiling. How blue his eyes are, she thought, and when he smiled, she liked his face. He looked like another person, almost like a friend.

But he smiled for only a moment. He took the cat from her, rubbing her fur with his shirt, drying it, and looking around. 'That boy,' he said. 'I saw him put the cat in the bag-' He broke off. 'I have to make her warm,' he said. 'I have to dry her.'

She nodded. Gram would probably never let her keep a cat, and Mrs. Meyer had never had a pet that she knew about. If only Mrs. Dillon were still there.

Lynnnatta's house, she thought. 'I know,' she told Tom.

'I'll show you.'

It took ten minutes to get back to Lynnnatta's house. They walked slowly, stopping every few minutes to make sure the cat was breathing. She was curled into a ball, still damp, under Tom's shirt.

Kristen led the way around the back. 'I know it looks as if no one lives here,' she said, 'but I have the key, and it isn't trespassing.'

'Trespassing?' He said it after her as if the word had a million s's. 'Funny word.'

She remembered when they were about seven, she and Lynnnatta had sneaked in to steal enough money for a sticky bun each at Mrs. Sherman's. Eddie had caught them, and Lynnnatta, fresh as paint Gram would say, told him what they were doing. He had dug into his pocket for a dime and tossed it toward Kristen in a silvery arc.

She had reached out, and somehow it had landed in her outstretched hands. She remembered Eddie smiling, his teeth over his bottom lip, his eyes crinkling. 'Nice catch.'

It was hot in the bedroom, stifling. She had to get out of there. She went back into the kitchen, feeling the flutter of the kitten's heartbeat.

Lynnnatta's letter. She went over to the counter and angled it so a shaft of light ran across the envelope from end to end. She ran her finger lightly over the mess of Lynnnatta's handwriting, the return address, DETROIT, MICHIGAN. And even though it had been in the water, Kristen could still see a smear of chocolate on the flap. One more candy bar that would never get to Eddie in Europe.

She sank on the floor with the letter, the kitten in her lap. The envelope opened easily and the letter came out, damp but still readable.

Dear Kristen.

There is no ocean here at Willow Run, no paint on the houses. They go together in a row and you can hear people talking and fighting and even going to the bathroom. The houses were just slapped up because thousands of people have come here to make the bombers. My father took me in to see. The factory is a mile long. Everyone just makes one little piece that they fit together until the B-24 is finished. My father says they build a bomber every 103 minutes. I hate the whole thing. How is the attic? Did you find the red candy?

Lynnnatta

Kristen shifted on the floor, peeling her sweaty legs off the linoleum, thinking about Lynnnatta so far away. Lynnnatta without an ocean, without Ridgway. She wondered what Lynnnatta would think about Tom.

She went into the house, thinking about tomorrow, thinking about asking him all the things she wanted to know.

Gram was in the kitchen making iced tea, and she poured some for Kristen. 'I was just getting a little worried,' she said.

'I was with Tom,' Kristen said.

Gram nodded at her. 'Good. I'm glad.'

Kristen leaned over the kitten. 'Noah likes cats,' she said.

'That's something.'

Then he was back, a milk bottle in his hands, enough milk for ten cats the size of this one.

'Now.' Kristen put the cat back on the counter and took the bottle from Tom. She ran her finger under the paper top, popping it up. She tried not to look at the yellow cream just underneath. She'd gag if she saw it. She had to dig it out, though.

It might be too thick for the kitten to swallow.

She opened a kitchen drawer, found a spoon, and skimmed off the cream, swallowing hard. She dropped it, spoon and all, into the sink.

'What are you doing?' He took the spoon and sucked the cream that was left.

She began to gag.

'What is the matter?' He turned the spoon over and ran his tongue over the back.

'Nothing.' She handed him the bottle and let him take the last of the cream. A little stayed on his lower lip, a small yellow fish.

She was going to vomit right now. 'Wipe your mouth,' she told him. She breathed in as he ran the back of his arm over his face, trying to think about chocolate, red LifeSavers, and cookies with the jelly in the middle.

'My sister, Christy, loves cream,' he said.

Kristen looked up, but the cat was standing on the countertop, one paw out, ready to sail into the air.

'Watch out,' she said, and he dived for the kitten and caught her. Then Kristen rummaged around for a small round bowl and poured in some of the milk.

For a moment the kitten didn't seem to notice the bowl in front of her. Then, at last, she turned her head and began to lap at it with her rough little tongue. They watched her until she sat back and her blue-green eyes began to close, and they could hear her begin to purr.

'What are we going to do with her?' Kristen asked. 'I don't think Gram...'

Noah was nodding, looking down at the cat. 'Could we keep her here?'

Kristen had thought of that too. Mrs. Dillon loved cats.

She'd hate it that someone had tried to drown a kitten.

'I have the key,' she said, almost to herself.

'If you will lend it to me,' he said, 'I will feed the cat myself. You don't have to bother. I will be very careful.'

'There's a place in the back,' she said, 'under the edge of the steps. The Dillons left their key there sometimes. I guess...' She felt so disappointed, she could hardly finish. He didn't want to be friends. He could have said We can feed her together, or even We can take turns.

Noah patted the cat's head gently, then took a towel that was still looped over a hook. He made it into a little bed in the corner. There were newspapers there too, and store them into strips for the cat's litter, as Kristen itched.

She wanted to say, 'It's my cat too.' She wanted to say, 'I was the one who saved her.' She didn't, though.

When Noah was finished, she opened the door and, knowing he was watching, went to the back to wedge the key behind the rock.

She started for home without saying goodbye. It was lunchtime anyway. Never mind that Noah didn't want to be friends. After lunch, she'd take her library book, The Three Musketeers, out in the boat with a pillow... the musketeers, who were in France like Tom's sister. Yes, that's what she'd do. Too bad about being friends. She'd read for the rest of the afternoon.

The church bells were ringing. Six o'clock on a Wednesday night, the end of July. Everyone was gathering up pails and wet towels, and pulling umbrellas across the beach. She couldn't wait until the last family dragged itself off the boardwalk toward the Cross-Bay buses. She couldn't wait until the beach belonged to her.

Gram had packed her a supper, Spam on a roll with a tomato from Mrs. Colgan's Victory garden, three or four celery sticks, and a bottle of orange juice.

Kristen sat as close to the water as she could get without getting soaked. The tide was high. The waves washed in, then sucked everything back out, shells, and sand, and bits of seaweed. She thought about listening to Portia Faces Life with Gram this afternoon. Walter was in a rowboat now, waiting to find an American ship to pick him up. Kristen looked out at the water, thinking about Poppy. He'd be on a ship one of these days, maybe even today, crossing the Atlantic, passing Ridgway. She shaded her eyes, watching a lone swimmer in the surf.

She sat up straight. Who was that?

Tom; he wasn't out far. He was swimming along in a line next to the beach.

He wasn't swimming, though. He pulled himself to his feet, then threw himself down to take a couple of strokes before disappearing under the water. A moment later he is up, sputtering, to start the whole thing over. If a lifeguard had been on the beach, he'd have been out after Noah in two seconds.

Kristen stood up. Noah was trying to teach himself how to swim.

He wasn't paying one bit of attention to the water. He wasn't trying to be part of it, to float along with it. He was fighting it, arms slapping, head sticking up like a tennis ball.

She wouldn't be able to eat her Spam in peace; she'd have to watch him every minute.

Noah was going to kill himself.

Yes, there it was, a giant of a wave. She could see it swelling, way out but moving toward him, picking up speed.

She looked toward Tom. Under. Tennis ball head shooting up. An arm out over his head, fingers wide apart.

She stood up, trying to see how much time he had. She cupped her hands over her mouth, shouting. He couldn't hear her, probably couldn't see her.

She took a step toward him. Then she was running, throwing herself into the icy coldness, slicing into the water, swimming diagonally.

Of course, she was too late. The wave curled up high, and she was in the wrong position, just where it arched. It smashed into her, dragging her down, scraping her along the sand. She couldn't get her breath. The water was in her mouth, her throat, her nose.

And then she was out of it, coughing up water, arms and legs scratched, lying on foamy sand.

The last time she had done that she was six years old. Poppy had caught her up in his arms and carried her back to the blanket. He had fed her tiny squares of egg salad crunchy with celery.

She looked up to see feet. Skinny Noah feet. Bony Noah legs with black-and-blue marks and grains of sand.

She had forgotten all about him.

She leaned on her hands to push herself up, then scrambled to her feet.

Noah reached out. 'I thought you were such a good swimmer,' he said.

As soon as she stopped coughing, she was going to drown him herself. She was going to take him by his skinny neck and throw him right back.

She went back to the blanket and sat on the edge, wiping her face with her hands. Her nose and throat burned. She remembered the bottle of orange juice and ached for it. She knew he had followed her to the blanket, but she didn't look up.

She wanted to say she could swim better than anyone she knew. Hadn't she saved the cat? But she wanted to say more, that the ocean belonged to her, that all winter at home in St. Paul's she thought about it moving and rolling and waiting for her to come back.

'How is the cat?' she said, knowing very well how the cat was. She had spied on Noah going in and out of the use for the last few days. She had let herself in when he was gone. The cat had fluffed up, soft orange and white. He kept her bed and litter box clean, and the kitchen too.

'The cat is good,' he said. He was sitting on the other end of the blanket now, dripping. She didn't know how he had gotten there. He pointed. 'Do you see?'

The end of the jetty, a gray triangular rock. She nodded.

'Yes.'

'If you drew a line straight out, all the way...'

'Europe,' she said.

He nodded. 'Europe.'

'Want some juice?' she asked, not looking at him.

He shook his head.

She took a deep swallow of the juice, feeling it soothe her throat, watching a curl of smoke out on the horizon.

'A ship,' Noah said, 'going to Europe.'

'No.' She shaded her eyes. 'It's a cutter. Coast Guard, patrolling.' It felt good to let him know she knew something, knew more than he did.

She took another sip from the bottle.

'My aunt said you can see the ships from here.'

‘They form a convoy way out,’ she said and pointed. ‘But some of them come from Brooklyn. The destroyers, the carriers, sometimes the tankers. You can see them at night if you watch long enough.’

‘Going to Europe,’ Noah said.

She nodded. ‘Going to win the war for us, going to blast the Nazis right out of the water.’

‘And your father is going...’

Later, when she thought about it, she couldn’t imagine saying what she had, it was just that she had been thinking of Portia Faces Life, and Poppy crossing out there almost in front of her, and Noah saying, ‘I thought you were such a good swimmer.’

‘I’m going too,’ was what she said. ‘At night. I’m going to row right out, and swim the last bit. I’ll have a rubber bag with dry clothes.’ It sounded wonderful, and she could see he was listening. He wasn’t thinking of her as a silly kid, wearing Gertz lipstick, spying around. ‘I’m going to take a ship to my father, no one will stop to take me back to Brooklyn, there’s a war on, you know...’ Talking and talking, making up lies as she went along, and Tom, leaning forward...

‘You could do that?’ He asked.

‘Of course.’ She stared at the cutter angling its way west toward Brooklyn until all she could see was a curl of smoke on the horizon. And then, just for a moment, it almost seemed possible. She could see herself reaching the troopship, climbing aboard, and sailing to Europe to find Poppy.

‘And you can see those ships at night?’ He took a breath. ‘Would you take me out to see them? Would you take me out tonight?’

She put the empty bottle back in her bag and started to roll up her towel. ‘All right,’ she said, not quite looking at him.

He stood up. ‘I am going to the house. I will feed my cat.

You will come to my porch at eleven?’

He started across the sand, not waiting for an answer.

She sat there a minute longer, her heart pounding, thinking that this was truly the worst lie she had ever told.

Kristen went into her bedroom with a glass of lukewarm iced tea and a sprig of mint from Mrs. Colgan's Victory garden.

She bent over to run her fingers across her mother's stars pasted in a neat row, still thinking about tomorrow.

Films of Kristen Deniel

The Old Man framed this picture and hung it over the bed in my French Blue room in our winter house in Hancock. The mirror on the opposite wall reflects the picture so it's the first thing I see when I open my eyes in the morning ... that and my tree figure from Gram.

The tree figure wears the crystal beads Izzy gave me.

'They're too small for you now, Kristen,' Izzy said as she looped them carefully over the sea-grass head. 'They're from my sixth birthday. But I always wanted my oldest daughter to have them.'

I tried to match the picture to the Wone in my backpack, but I couldn't do it exactly. First, there's a flag in the background of this one because it's Memorial Day, the day we open the house in Laurel Highlands for the summer each year. It's early in the morning and we're standing on the porch steps with the sun sending beams of light across the river in front of us.

But there are five of us in the picture instead of four. The Old Man, looking a little grim: He's just discovered that Green's left his bedroom window open so the snow drifted in all winter, ruining the wall and buckling parts of the wood floor.

Green tries to look serious, but you can see the laughter in his eyes. 'Holly will paint it up,' he said, needling the Old Man. 'She'll paint it green. That's her favorite color.'

They still argue, sometimes so loudly I put my hands over my ears. When they see me, they smile? 'It's all her fault,' Green's says, and the Old Man leans over to pat my shoulder.

In the picture, Izzy stands in the center, a little taller than the Old Man. She's wearing a loose shirt in that blue I love. 'Are you happy?' she asked me as I sketched us all later that day. 'Be happy, Kristen, because I am. I've never been happier.'

I didn't answer. Instead, I drew smiles on both our faces. I'm the fourth one in the picture, by the way, smiling just a bit. I know I'm thinking of Gram, thinking of running here with her a year and a half ago. If I hadn't done that, I wouldn't have this picture, I wouldn't have any of it. I'd still be running.

Every month we go to Long Island to see her in her kitchen with Henry, and the pelican, and the tree figures she still carves, while Beatrice patters around fixing tea for all of us.

Gram doesn't remember exactly who I am anymore. She loves me, though, I know that, and always reaches up to touch my cheek. Sometimes I wear her brown hat with the veil, and then I see the recognition in her eyes. 'Kristen,' she says. 'You saved my life.' Maybe she doesn't know why, but still, she says it, and I always tell her it was the other way around.

And Henry? Ancient, but still feisty. 'That cat's as tough as you are,' Green says to me.

Henry looks at me, and it's almost as if he winks before he closes both eyes above a wide yawn. We speak the same language, that cat and I.

I have a new last name now. It's Regan. I love the sound of it. I haven't forgotten Kristen Copses, who wanted and wished, fresh as paint, a mountain of trouble, so I sign my drawings using the three names. They all belong to me. Emmy and the hot cocoa woman both like the idea of that. They show up regularly to say hello, nodding and smiling as if they were the ones who changed my whole life. I don't say anything. I know they're relieved to have me off their hands and settled. And I have to say I can't blame them for that. I have to say, too, that I even smile back at them once in a while.

But the picture, and why it doesn't match the first one, the W picture: It's because I'm holding my sister, Christina, six weeks old, in my arms.

She looks quiet in the picture, contented, sucking on her thumb. But she's not always like that. And when she cries, we run to her from wherever we are. We stand over her bassinet smiling at her, cooing. And Izzy always puts her arms around me. 'You brought us luck,' she says.

So, there are five of us now: a mother, a father, a brother, and two sisters.

A family.

Kristen - bedroom was at the top of the stairs, the only one on the second floor. 'The top of the house,' Gram always told her, 'the top of the world.'

Kristen sank back on her heels to look around at the blue walls and ceiling, and the gold stars pasted on here and there. Then she stretched up again, working with Poppy's paint scraper, to peel off a star that was almost beyond her reach.

She was hot and sticky, the temperature at least ninety degrees, and Gram, who didn't have one bit of patience, was calling from the kitchen for the tenth time.

'Your father will be home in just a few minutes, and the table isn't set.'

As if Kristen didn't know it was dinnertime. Even Mrs. Harry halfway down 17th Street would be able to smell that cabbage cooking. 'I thought you wanted me to finish packing,' Kristen called back as loudly as she could, to drown out the radio in the kitchen.

She could hardly breathe in that bedroom, Kristen thought, glancing around again; she could hardly walk. Things were pulled out all over the floor, waiting to be stuffed into her suitcase: books, papers with stories she had written, bathing suits, and heaps of clothes Gram had put on the bed.

She had even found an old silver mirror of her mother's she had hidden away in the back of the closet last winter. She was going to put it carefully on top of the suitcase in a nest of pajamas. It would be a miracle if she ever got that far, though, if everything got itself sorted out, and packed, and if they made it to the house in Ridgway before her birthday on Monday.

'Ridgway.' She said it aloud, loving the sound of it on her tongue. Ridgway and the ocean were waiting for her. The summer without homework... to write stories for herself and not Sister Jillen. The summer without a piano to practice every afternoon.

Days and days to sneak into the movies with her best friend, Lynnnatta.

Gram was at the bottom of the stairs now, the six o'clock news blaring from the radio behind her. War news, about the end of the war. The invasion of France by the Allies a couple of weeks ago. That was all anybody talked about. No, not quite. Sister Jillen was much more interested in whether the class had rosaries and clean handkerchiefs in their pockets than in who was going to win the war.

Too bad about Sister Jillen. Kristen would be out of St. Paul's in four days, and Sister Jillen would still be stuck there in St.

Pascal's thinking about everyone's clean handkerchiefs.

‘Kristen? You’re not packed yet?’ Gram called. ‘I thought you’d finished an hour ago. And remember we don’t have that much room in the car.’

‘Almost finished,’ Kristen said, and ‘almost started,’ under her breath. And there, with another slide of the paint scraper, the star came off the wall in one piece, drifting into her outstretched palm. It was perfect, the points still as sharp as when they were new. The star she had scraped off last year had torn a little, and...

Kristen turned it over. A trace of glue was still on the back. She put her mouth against it, a kiss. Her mother had been the last one to touch that spot when she had pasted it up for her years ago. She had still been Baby Elizabeth then... no one had called her Kristen yet, and her mother had been alive... ‘playing the piano with you on her lap,’ Poppy had told her once, ‘dancing in the living room with you on her shoulder.’ Kristen wished she could remember it.

She could hear her father coming now, whistling along 17th Street, just off the Q3A bus, calling hello to Mrs. Bruns. Gram heard him too. ‘Dinner this minute, Kristen.’ She said, slumping back toward the kitchen.

Kristen stood up and put the star in between two pages of her book, Evangeline. By this time, Poppy was in the kitchen; she could hear him talking to Gram. Kristen raced down for a hug before Gram started to talk and talk, and no one else could get a word in edgewise.

Poppy was standing at the sink, his straw hat still on but pushed back, drinking a glass of water from the tin measuring cup. Kristen loved to drink out of that too. It always made the water taste icy, even on the hottest day.

Her father turned. ‘Kristen Billy,’ he said, smiling at her.

‘All packed? Ready for Ridgway?’

‘Ready,’ she said.

Gram rolled her eyes in the back of Poppy, but Kristen didn’t even blink. She slid some plates around the table, the forks and the knives, while Poppy tossed his hat over the hook on the door and washed his hands.

‘I have a surprise,’ he said over his shoulder. ‘You won’t believe-’

‘Mr. Egan is a Nazi spy,’ Kristen said at the same minute.

Poppy stopped to listen to what she was saying. He always did that. It was one of his nicest ways. He was biting his lip, though, almost as if he’d laugh.

Gram speared the boiled beef out of the pot and dripped it across the counter to the cutting board. ‘Mr. Egan is not a spy,’ she said. ‘I’ve told you that about fourteen times. Mr. Egan is -’

‘A spy,’ Kristen said, her eyes narrowed at Gram.

‘Well,’ said Poppy, ‘I’ll have to keep my eye on him while you and Gram are in Ridgway.’

‘You’ll be with us on some weekends,’ Kristen said. ‘He could -’

‘And what do you think poor Noah Egan is doing?’ Gram asked, slicing into the meat.

‘He’s building something in his garage,’ Kristen said.

‘Certainly, sounds suspicious,’ said Poppy, grinning.

‘It could be anything,’ Kristen said. ‘When he saw me looking in the window, he said I was into everyone’s business.’

‘True,’ said Gram.

‘You have to be alert,’ Poppy said.

Kristen slid into her seat, smiling. She knew he was teasing.

‘You said you had a surprise,’ she reminded him.

‘The piano,’ said Poppy.

Kristen took a deep breath. ‘I’ll miss it this summer.’ She crossed her fingers.

Gram turned to look at her quickly over her shoulder.

‘I love music.’ Kristen stared right back. Music, yes, she thought, but not the piano. The damn piano, she called it deep inside her head. If Gram ever thought she even knew that word, she’d be in trouble for a month.

‘Like your mother.’ Poppy pulled a chair out across from her. ‘Well, you won’t have to be without the piano this summer.’ Kristen looked down at the damp beef Gram was putting on her plate, the pale cabbage, the boiled potatoes with a sprig of parsley from the Victory garden in the back. ‘But how...’

Poppy was nodding. ‘Not only the piano but an extra suitcase full of stuff if you like. I’ve hired a truck-’

‘A truck?’ Gram said. ‘What will that cost?’

Poppy waved his hand around. ‘Kristen has a birthday coming up,’ he said. ‘I just couldn’t resist.’

Kristen looked down at her plate, three piles of stuff, cabbage, and beef, and potatoes. She knew Poppy was waiting for her to say something. He was waiting for her to throw her arms around him and tell him how wonderful it was. She could hardly talk, though. She picked up her knife and cut her beef into a bunch of little pieces. ‘Amazing,’ she said at last.

‘Yes, it is,’ said Gram.

It was Friday afternoon. The school was over; goodbye, St. Pascal’s, goodbye, Sister Jillen, goodbye, report card. Kristen had put the report card in Gram’s hand at the front door, walked right past her and up to her bedroom. Forty things were left to jam into a cardboard box.

Kristen put the first one in, a bottle of Kristen-of-the-valley perfume used up except for a little darkish stuff at the bottom. It smelled delicious, though. She waited to put the next thing in; she could hear Gram’s footsteps on the stairs. She kept her back stiff, staring down at the bottle. She knew what was coming. ‘D in music,’ Gram would say. ‘How could you possibly...’ And she would have spotted that effort mark, B-, too. She’d say the whole thing was a disgrace.

Kristen took a breath. Someone was knocking at the front door, banging on the door. She could hear Gram’s footsteps stop, could picture her turning...

Kristen rushed to the window. Downstairs was the truck, gray, rusty: MCHUGH’S-WE’LL TREAT YOUR FURNITURE LIKE OUR OWN. Their furniture must be some mess, Kristen thought. And then, worse, what would everyone in Ridgway think when they saw the Mollahans arriving for the summer in a truck that was falling apart, an upright piano lashed to the back with rope, and Kristen and Gram sitting squashed in the front seat?

Kristen closed her eyes. Horrible.

At least Gram had forgotten about the report card. Kristen went downstairs to watch the two white-haired men in the living room. They were talking to Gram, joking a little, one of them singing, “They’re either too young or too old,” while the other was telling Gram that both their sons were in the service and that they were keeping the business going for the duration of the war.

Gram was frowning, watching them hoist up the piano with a bowl of flowers still on top. Kristen could see they’d be stuck at the door; the piano wouldn’t go through in a million years. Alleluia. And better yet, her report card was on the bottom step of the stairs. Gram wasn’t paying attention to it. Kristen knew she was worried about the piano scratching the wall as the men worked on shoving it through the door.

Kristen reached down for the report card, backed up the stairs. She could see herself in the truck, Gram suddenly saying, ‘I never did look at your report card, Kristen. Do you know where...’

Perfect. Kristen wouldn’t say a word. Gram had lost the thing herself. Not Kristen’s fault, certainly not.

Up in her bedroom, she looked around. Her book, Evangeline, was still on the dresser. Kristen moved the star to the front page and put the blue report card in the back as far away from the star as possible. Her mother would never have cared for report cards.

And ten minutes later, finally, Kristen was packed. She picked up the last carton, listening to the perfume bottle clinking into her lipstick samples from Gertz Department Store in Jamaica, FREE TAKE ONE. Kristen had taken a bunch; you never knew when stuff like that would come in handy.

She started down the stairs with the carton, and Evangeline tucked carefully under her arm. At the other end of the hall was the wrenching sound of wood splitting, the molding hanging loose. Still, in the living room, Gram made an angry sound, but one of the men was telling her not to worry, molding was nothing, they could fix it up in a jiffy. ‘Tell Mr. Mollahan we’ll come back next week and...’

The piano. They had gotten it through. It stood there in the hall, huge, with round glass stains on the top and two of the keys missing the ivory. And then the men lifted it again and started the door. Kristen followed them, circling Gram still powdering her nose at the hall mirror.

The piano was in the truck now, with one of the men looping great pieces of rope around it, telling the other one, 'I'll stay back here, just to make sure the thing doesn't roll out.' He winked at Kristen. thinking it was a great joke.

Some joke. Gram came out the door wearing her blue summer hat with the cherries. She climbed up into the passenger seat, leaving a spot next to the window for Kristen. 'We're off,' she told Kristen. 'at last. I never thought we'd make it this year.'

Gram was smiling; she loved Ridgway too. Kristen closed her eyes as the truck started. She didn't want to look at the neighbors, who were waving at them and the piano and the rusty truck, probably thinking they were crazy.

But then they turned the corner, heading for the Belt Parkway, heading for Cross Bay Boulevard, and the bridge and Kristen could feel the excitement of it, the ocean waiting, the sound of it, the role of it, and it was hers for the whole summer.

She didn't open her eyes when Gram began about the report card. She could feel the vibration of the motor, and hear the man in front singing, "They're either too young or too old," and Gram humming along. And the next thing she heard was the sound of the tires hitting the planks of the bridge. They were there.

Ridgway...

Films of Kristen Deniel

I have this drawing folded carefully in my backpack. We're sitting at the table on the porch, the river in front of us, a summer rain drilling the roof above us, soaking us all that last Saturday, muddying the road, greening the grass, puckering the river.

In the picture Izzy is backing out of the screen door, balancing the cake plate in her hands. The cake was vanilla, and Izzy had gathered blue forget-me-nots to circle it.

I used the sharpest pencil (Strawberry Pink) to write the words on top of the cake: WELCOME TO THE FAMILY, HOLLY.

Izzy frowned. 'I wanted to get your whole name in, but there wasn't enough room.'

The Old Man's eyes sparkled. A moment before I framed the picture in my mind, he patted my shoulder. 'Kristen Copses, with us forever.'

Green's sat on the other side. I'd drawn pages of animal tracks for him, raccoon and deer, rabbit and possum ... and birds, even a loon that had come up out of the water to sun itself on a rock.

'I'll probably keep them forever, Sister Loon,' he said, full of himself. 'Get it?' He pointed to the loon tracks on the side of the page, nudging me under the table like a six-year-old, rattling the glasses, the cake plates.

'Green's, please.' The Old Man hadn't been happy with him all week. Nothing gigantic; little stuff. Green's had left the shed door open, so a raccoon had nested inside ... probably the one whose toes were marching all over Green's paper. Green's had left the house door open, so a bat had flown around the living room Wednesday night. He'd lost the Old Man's fishing knife, and one of the reels was probably sunk under the water somewhere downstream.

'Why don't you just try with him?' I had asked Green's the day before as we rowed around looking for it.

I could see the anger in his eyes. 'You're good enough for both of us,' he had said. 'That's what Pop would say.'

I leaned forward. 'Is it me?' I asked. 'My fault?'

He had laughed then. 'Don't be silly.'

Still, I wasn't sure. I opened my mouth to tell him about me, a mountain of trouble, but before I could, he tapped my arm. 'Hey.' His eyes were earnest behind his glasses. 'You don't have to look like that.' He broke off a piece of holly and handed it to me. 'Peace, Kristen. It's just like you. Prickly, but not bad to look at.'

I had tried to hide my smile.

Now Izzy put the cake in the center of the table. 'Should we have candles?' she asked.

'Sure.' Green's grinned at me. 'The works.'

'Why not?' I leaned back. I was full of myself too, thinking about calling the Old Man Pop, and Izzy Mom.

Izzy went inside to rummage through the table drawers for the candles, and Green's turned to me, saying we might walk up on the mountain after supper.

The Old Man looked at him sharply. 'In the rain?'

'Don't worry.' I knew I could make the Old Man smile.

'We're tougher than the rain.'

'I'm not talking about going all the way to the top,'

Green's said.

We ate the cake then, the icing melting on my tongue, and I was feeling guilty because I was the one who wanted to go up on the mountaintop.

The end of the old Kristen. Hey, world, here comes the new one.

And I wanted to go alone.

Films of Kristen Deniel

The next afternoon I went from room to room, taking my time, looking at everything. Almost everything. I didn't go into Izzy and the Old Man's bedroom. That was their private place.

Film-strips filled the guest room wall, and I spent a long time looking at each one. I waited to get to the end to see if the one of me was still there.

First, there was a young Izzy in a two-piece bathing suit, then the Old Man sawing down a dead tree, sawdust coloring his beard. There were several of Green's: one without his front teeth, in a bunny costume, one sitting on the hood of the truck, and one with the fish-net in his hand, his head thrown back, laughing.

And the one of me was still there. I was sharpening a pencil, with pale pink shavings falling in a pile on my drawing paper. I ran my finger over it: still there, in the row with the others, belonging with them.

Green's room was next, a mess of a room. Socks on the floor, a jumble of string, a couple of keys, and a photo on the dresser. A photo I couldn't even make out, blurs of greens and blues, and something in the center that might have been the boat.

Behind me, Gram called, 'I found boots. I'm going to wear them.'

'It's too cold to go out,' I called back. 'You'll freeze.' But the outside door slammed, and I went to the window. 'Gram?' I put my hand on the glass; cold air drifted in around the panes.

Gram was wearing Izzy's wading boots, which went up to her thighs. She twirled in the snow, arms out, fingers spread. It made me dizzy to watch her. After a moment she tipped over, but it was an easy fall, making me think of snow angels. Her scarf blew across the smooth whiteness, a scrap of color.

She was up again, zigzagging, and I thought about going after her as she disappeared in the back of the line of evergreens. I hurried a little, grabbing my jacket. The thermometer outside the kitchen window read five degrees, and next to the window, on the wall, the calendar was still in August.

August.

I went out the back door, calling to her. And then in that cold stillness, I could hear her singing. 'Over the river...'

I went after her, my feet heavy, twirling as I passed the circle she had made, singing back, '...and through the Deniel...'

She leaned against a small tree, staring at the thin strip of dark water that ran between the chunks of ice. 'Isn't it beautiful?' I said.

'I love to walk in the snow.' She was shivering again, looking up at me, suddenly bewildered. 'But why aren't we home? And what happened to Beatrice?'

I led her back into the house, into that warm room with the bright blue rugs and the huge couch. I found a robe of Izzy's and wrapped it around her. We sat by the fireplace watching the shadows dance over the walls until it grew dark outside and we slept.

In the morning points of light danced over my eyes. I raised my hand to my face; the sun was melting tiny swirls of ice on the window.

Somewhere outside was a faint buzzing sound. It wasn't close - nothing to worry about - but what was it? Someone using a saw deep in the Copses? A snow-mobile? The sound gradually died away, and I stood up slowly, thinking about breakfast. There were choices, thanks to Izzy: cans of pineapple juice, blackberry jam, vegetables shiny inside their glass jars, rows of Dinty Moore stew.

Izzy's treasures, not mine.

I'd pay her back someday, I told myself, pay back all of it.

Lighten up, Green's said in my head. I had to smile. That's really what he would have said.

I unclenched my hands and took another look outside. Footprints crisscrossed the snow. Our footprints. I thought about them uneasily, glancing up at the sky, wishing for more snow to hide them.

I put water on to boil and popped a piece of Gram's bread into the toaster. A mouse lived somewhere in the house. Poor mouse. He'd have to leave now that Henry was here. I wiped away the mice leaving with a brush, then sat at the table in front of the window, with Gram's wood pieces on one side and my food lined up in front of me.

After I ate, I looked at the tree figure Gram was doing of me: a long piece of wood, spaces drilled in the sides where the arms would be, a face beginning to take shape, a mouth began, a small, pointed nose, and a tiny cut on the forehead.

I put my hand up to my forehead, feeling that indentation. And then Gram was there, yawning, her hair a whoosh around her head. She pattered over to the back window. 'Sun today,' she said, holding her hands out as if to warm them against the glass. 'And a branch that's blown onto the step. Holly, I think.'

I took the last bit of toast crust and crunched it into my mouth.

'The sun on the ocean makes a path sometimes.' Gram reached for a chocolate bar. 'You think you can walk on it, walk clear across the ocean to...'

She stopped and I tried to help her. 'To England? To France?'

‘To where I belong.’ She sat at the table and began to work. As I put toast and hot tea in front of her, she glanced around.

‘What?’ I asked.

‘I’m wondering about Beatrice,’ she said and smiled.

‘And sandpaper. Your face needs smoothing.’

There might be sandpaper in the shed. I’d get it. I didn’t have to look at the truck again; I’d pretend it wasn’t there. I opened the back door to a blast of cold air- ‘So cold your teeth hurt,’ the Old Man had said- and saw the holly branch, thick with bright red berries, that had blown across the steps.

Green’s holding a sprig of holly out to me: ‘Peace, Holly.’

‘I’ll get my jacket,’ I told Gram. I shrugged into it, pulled on my gloves, and went outside for the sandpaper. The cold went through me, the smell of it sharp and clean.

The hot cocoa woman was far away, probably looking for me. She wouldn’t have a clue.

On the way back, I bent down and picked up the holly to bring into the house. I gave Gram the squares of sandpaper, then put the branch in one of Izzy’s vases in front of the big window, thinking about Christmas. Maybe ten more days.

Gram and I would have our own. I’d cut boughs of pine, and we had packs of popcorn to make. It would be like Christmas in a book by Laura Ingalls Wilder.

I was happier than I had been anywhere, except...

...I didn’t belong in that house in Laurel Highlands, not anymore. I wondered what Christmas was like in the Old Man’s winter house, what it would be like this year.

I snipped off that thought before I finished it. Wasn’t it enough that I was here in Laurel Highlands, with holly in the window?

If only I could stay forever.

Something else the Old Man had told me about: fishing in the winter. The fish went deep, but if you caught one, the eating was an experience.

An experience. The Old Man used words like that.

Fish for dinner, dotted with butter ... No butter. Ah, fish smothered in tomato sauce, and string beans jarred last summer.

A real meal, the way normal people ate. Better than normal.

'I know you like fish,' I said to Gram.

'Goldfish. I had one in a bowl; I think.' She glanced at Henry, who slept in the middle of one of the Old Man's blue rugs.

'I don't trust Henry, though.'

'To eat, I mean, for us.'

She looked across at me, shocked. 'I'd never eat a goldfish.'

I could feel the laughter bubble up. 'Pickere!, I said. 'Bass.

I'm not sure what's around this time of the year.'

'Ah, yes.' She picked up her knife to shave curly bits off the wooden feet.

The Old Man's fishing equipment was hanging on the far wall. Did I want to go out into that icy world? Of course, I did. In Green's bedroom, I gathered things to keep warm: his old green sweater for a scarf around my neck, an extra pair of socks. I found a towel in the hall closet to wrap around my head like a turban, and one of Izzy's large sweaters to put over the whole thing.

I was ready with the pole in my hand. Gram laughed at the sight of me as I passed her.

'The abominable snowman,' I said, and then I was outside, trying to decide. I could fish from the bank or the Old Man's bridge. The bank was closed, so I walked along the tree line and down to a spot almost in front of the house. I swung the pole, lure on the line, over the ice into the narrow stream of water. I didn't know how long I stood there fishing, but after a while I leaned back against a bare maple tree, watching movement on the other side of the river, just the quickest bit of color. A squirrel? A raccoon? But then I saw it was something larger, maybe a deer.

It took one more moment to realize that a person, maybe a fisherman, was standing there, back among the trees. And if I had seen him, he might be able to see me.

The pole slid out of my hands as I lurched backward toward the holly bushes. Another quick step and Green's sweater pulled away on a branch. I looked back to see the pole on the snowy bank. It had sunk into the snow so that it couldn't be seen. There was just a narrow indentation in the snow; it might have been only a branch if anyone spotted it.

My mouth was dry. I looked across the river again. There was no movement on the other side: a scoop of snow slid off one of the Laurel Highlands; a blue jay teetered on another.

I turned and ran the last few steps toward the house and up onto the porch. I reached for the door, closed and locked it in back of me, leaned against it inside, taking deep breaths.

'What is it?' Gram asked.

I shook my head. 'Maybe another fisherman. Don't worry.' Christmas was coming. Maybe it was someone cutting down a tree, or poaching in the Old Man's Copses.

All right. It was all right.

He hadn't seen me, and we were safe.

Gram put on her scarf and her coat and wandered outside, 'To breathe for a moment,' she told me.

I stayed near the window, watching. But there wasn't anyone there, no one at all.

Films of Kristen Deniel

I know what people mean when they say they feel as if they're floating. That's the way I felt as if my feet weren't attached to the ground as if they were bouncing off the floor, touching lightly, and bouncing again. And inside me, it was as if bubbles were drifting, bumping gently into each other.

I was happy. No, that doesn't even describe it. I was ... jubilant, ecstatic.

I drew it using all the pencils-yellows and oranges, pinks and blues. I drew purple shoes on my feet and wings on my shoulders. My eyes were closed, the way you see films of angels sometimes with their eyelashes down on their cheeks.

So, does it make sense that I wasn't thinking? That all that floating and all those bubbles made me think I could do anything?

And so that last week, all I thought about was going to the top of the Old Man's mountain and shouting down to the whole world. I even knew what I was going to say: Here I am, Kristen Copses, who didn't deserve to be in a family ... tough Kristen Copses, running-away Kristen Copses. Look at me. I climbed the mountain. Now I belong.

Films of Kristen Deniel

Half-awake one morning, I heard the sound of a train. I looked up at the window to see a solid square of white: a storm, with pin dots of flakes covering everything. What I had heard was the roar of the wind coming down the valley.

I padded out of bed and went downstairs to see what was happening outside the big window. The holly bushes on one side of the house were just a blur; the narrow sliver of a river and its snowy bank had disappeared in a mist of gray.

A little cold, I hugged myself, watching that world. It was like a plastic globe in one of the houses I'd been in. When I shook it, snow fell, covering a bright green Christmas tree in its center. 'Don't touch that, Kristen. Put it down.'

21

Films of Kristen Deniel

It was late when we reached the exit sign for Laurel Highlands. The gas station light was out, and there was only a tiny light in the back of the grocery store. 'We're almost there,' I told Gram, 'just the last four miles.'

'Already?' She sounded delighted. She zoomed off the ramp, stopping on the shoulder, and in a moment, she was asleep, her head against the steering wheel. Henry climbed off my lap, where he'd been for the past hour, and slid onto hers, his whiskers twitching as he closed his eyes.

I leaned over and turned the key to stop the motor. Suddenly I was wide awake and reaching for the door handle. I gave Henry a pat, then I got out of the car.

At first, it was hard to see, but little by little silhouettes appeared against the sky: the curve of a tree trunk, the dark square of the grocery store ahead, and above us, the Old Man's mountain, raising its head to the sky. It was almost a shock to see it there.

Beatrice would have said it was a drawing coming to life. I pictured her in a place with huge cacti, saguaro, I thought they were called. I remembered she'd said she would call every Sunday. What would she think when the phone rang and rang?

I shook myself. What would happen if I tried to call her again?

She'd come home, her dream over.

I wasn't going to do that. Back in the car, I nudged Gram awake. 'Just drive this last bit,' I said, 'and then you can sleep.'

We drove along the narrow road, no other lights now except for a few houses far up on the hills, and I kept talking to keep her awake. 'We'll see the river. It's not as big as your ocean...'

'Your river.' Gram's head bobbed.

'Keep watching,' I told her. 'We don't want to go off the road. The river would be cold for a swim.'

I saw her smile. 'Henry doesn't have his bathing suit.'

And there was the bridge. I had stood on that bridge watching the pickerel, the catfish, the muskrat building his nest of sticks against its base.

The Old Man's bridge.

'We'll have a fire in the fireplace,' I said, 'and turn the heat up high.' I could see the Old Man flipping the switch in the early mornings when the dew was still on the grass and the house was still cold.

We thumped across the bridge over the river, and the house was in front of us, waiting. 'Gram, this is the place.' My voice was flat. I might have been telling her it was a snowy day or the sun might come out tomorrow, but inside, my heart was thumping.

We had just this winter, I knew that, and maybe the spring.

By summer we'd have to find somewhere else.

That was months. That was forever.

I closed my eyes, remembering the last morning I had been here. I had gone out the screen door toward the car, brushing my fingers along the holly bushes, feeling the sharp edges of the leaves against my thumb.

I had walked as far as the town, a long way in the early morning heat, and sat on the bench with my things on my lap, waiting for the Shortline bus, and looking down, I realized I'd left the drawing box. I think that was the worst moment, knowing I'd never see that box again. Geranium Red, Dove Gray, French Blue. 'We're home, Gram,' I said.

'Hard to see,' she said.

'Just get used to the darkness,' I told her. 'In a minute you'll see it all.'

She took everything in then, and I with her: the house with the sloping roof, the evergreens leaning over it, the dark shadow that was the woodpile on the front porch. The rocking chairs were in the shed, I knew that, but I could picture them there, rocking gently.

Gram took a deep breath.

'I knew you'd like it,' I said, watching Henry in the rearview mirror. He stood on the back of the headrest now, his claws in my shoulder, his nose twitching, his whiskers quivering, sizing up the place. 'And you too, Henry.'

'But is it all right?' Gram asked, frowning. 'Are you sure we can do this?'

'We can.' I brushed away thoughts of being caught, of what the Old Man might think of me if he ever found out. What did he think of me anyway? Please don't mind this thing I'm doing, I begged him in my head.

A red cardinal swooped down to perch on a holly branch that bent itself into the snow, snow marked by threadlike bird prints and deep hollows from the deer. The tracks hugged the edge of the clearing, close to the evergreens, and one path, probably from a rabbit, led to the river.

I wondered if Green's had ever seen the house in the winter. He would love it.

I chewed my knuckle. A lace curtain of snow blew across the porch. It was bitter cold with the engine turned off. I had to get Gram into the house. Her shoes had heels, with open toes and diamond-shaped cutouts in the sides. Why hadn't I thought of her shoes?

Henry scratched his claws along the car window, wanting to get out. I gave his ear a tweak, opened the door, and watched his belly through the snow away from the car.

'I'm sorry, Gram,' I said, still looking down at her feet. They'd be soaked. 'You'll have to walk through this to get to the house.'

'An adventure,' Gram said, grabbing the handle.

I slipped her scarf up around her head, the orange a bright spot in the darkness, and buttoned the top button of her coat.

'All right,' I said.

Outside we skirted the trees, and she stopped to look up.

'A million stars,' she said, pointing. 'There's the Dipper and Orion. Beatrice would love it.' Then I held her by the waist as we went up the back steps.

Her face was a little disapproving as I kicked my sneaker off and, hopping, smashed in the small kitchen window. And then we were inside, Henry skittering in around us.

I leaned back against the wall, reaching for the light, hoping they hadn't turned off the electricity. Suddenly the kitchen sprang to life. The refrigerator began to hum, and beyond it, I could see the huge living room with the long table at one end and dark blue rugs scattered across the wood floor. The Old Man was proud of that floor; he always talked about putting it in with Izzy, about matching the pieces of wood exactly, holding up his hands as if Green's and I could see them clutching a hammer and saw.

Gram shivered, her lips colorless, and my hands felt numb. I flipped the switch for heat and heard the furnace startup. At the fireplace chunks of wood and paper were piled in a bin. I knelt there, crumpling the yellowed newspapers to tuck in between some logs, and read last summer's news as I struck a match against the stones of the hearth: Someone had caught a huge trout near Byron's Falls; a sidewalk sale was planned for Main Street; there were canoes for rent in Shadyside.

I had been here last summer; all of that had been happening. I kept talking to Gram, telling her that this place had been mine only for a month or two, but now it was ours. And she sank on the couch, nodding, watching the fire.

Is it still mine? I asked the Old Man. Mine for just this winter?

A thin flame curled up from somewhere underneath the logs and Gram clapped her hands. 'Fire!'

The Old Man's wooden floor shone with a rosy gleam, and my eyes began to close as my fingers warmed, but I couldn't fall asleep yet.

I settled Gram on the couch and found an old towel to dry her feet. They were mottled from the cold. 'Skinny as a bird,' I told her as I rubbed them. She put her head back, asleep again.

In the kitchen, I used the same towel to close the opening in the missing windowpane. While we were here, I'd figure out how to replace that. There was glass in the shed; I'd seen the Old Man measuring and cutting.

I climbed the stairs to the little green room that had been mine. Everything was just the same. The dresser mirror reflected my old sneakers, just visible under the edge of the bumpy white bedspread; the curtains, pink with roses, looped back; and the drawing box on the dresser.

The drawing box...

I ran my fingers over that half-opened box, the pencils spilling out: French Blue, Geranium Red. It was hard to swallow. I touched all of the pencils, the pad of paper, the sharpener.

Henry and I made four or five trips back to the car for things I had taken from Gram's house. Steam came from my mouth in small white puffs and from the chimney in larger ones. But the cold didn't bother Henry. He pranced through the snow, chasing twigs and a few crumpled leaves as if he were a kitten. He must have known what I was thinking. He sneaked a look back at me; then he sat upon a rock, perfectly still, like the old cat he was.

I'd draw that later, I thought, Henry happy in the dark, with the river just a thread curving through the snow.

It took a half-hour to bring everything inside. I wrapped a blanket around Gram, and through the window, I could see the car at the edge of the road. There'd be room for it in the shed, I thought, remembering the Old Man's car on one side, the truck on the other.

The truck. Totaled. Was it still there? I shook my head. 'I'll be back,' I said to the sleeping Gram. 'I have to put the Silver Bullet in the shed.'

You're going to drive it in? Green's asked in my head.

You taught me how I said.

But...

I can do this.

The truck hugged one side of the shed. I walked around to the front of it and ran my fingers over the cold metal, the sharp edges, the empty holes where the lights had been. I raised my hands to my ears without thinking so I wouldn't hear the sound of the truck as it hit the trees that summer evening.

Outside of a few minutes later, I turned the key in the Silver Bullet's ignition; the gas gauge was hitting Empty. Just one more bit, I begged the car, that's all I need. I sat there hesitating before I put my foot on the gas, but then I coasted along over the snow, the motor coughing, and glided into the shed- not touching the sides, not even close- braked a split second before I hit the back wall, and turned off the motor.

Ah, Green's said.

It was quiet, with only the soft whoosh of wind and the muffled sound of icy snow as it blew against the roof. I had done it. All I wanted to do now was curl up under the covers in that small green room upstairs and sleep.

22

Films of Kristen Deniel

For the next few afternoons, around five, the hot cocoa woman called to chitchat. That's what she called it. She was doing all the chatting.

‘How was school?’

‘Burned down.’

‘What did you have for lunch?’

‘Horsemeat.’

‘How's Mrs. Cahill?’

‘Who?’

‘What are you drawing?’

‘Nudies.’

‘Kristen,’ she said slowly one night. ‘Mrs. Cahill is old, and she tends to forget.’

Gram dancing in the street, giving me the hat with the veil, making popcorn at the movie.

I said more than I wanted to. ‘She doesn't forget everything, just some things.’ I stopped. The hot cocoa woman would never change her mind. I raised my hand to the window. Drops of melting sleet were running down the glass. Under the kitchen table, Henry was an orange ball, with only his pointy little chin turned up. Henry hated sleet.

‘Tomorrow is Saturday,’ the hot cocoa woman began. ‘I'll pick you up and take you to meet Eleanor.’ She paused.

I didn't answer.

‘That's her name, Eleanor. She's going to have lunch for us.’

I pulled the telephone cord as far as it would go.

‘Then Sunday, if all goes well...’ She broke off. ‘You'd be in the same school. And you could visit Mrs. Cahill often.’

I took the phone away from my ear and put it on the counter. I did it gently so there was no noise. I wondered how long she'd keep talking before she figured out, I wasn't listening.

It was gray outside. Gram's wooden figures were blurred and bent in the wind that had just come up.

Gram couldn't stay alone. She might not remember when it was super. She'd sit up all night watching movies.

Beatrice. I picked up the phone and pressed the numbers.

It rang about twenty times. The answer, Beatrice. But then I remembered. For the first weeks she'd be traveling around, she had said. I pictured her in the desert, the dry sun beating down, her sketchbook in her hand.

I couldn't leave Gram.

I couldn't stay.

It was a puzzle.

Something from years ago popped into my head. It wasn't wintering, it was summer, and so humid everything I touched was sticky. All afternoon I'd thought about the pillow on the bed, and how cool it would be against my head. I was surprised when it was as hot as the rest of the room. I reached under the pillow to find something I had hidden there, a doll with pale painted eyes. I whispered to her, asking if she was cooling off. And then someone came and pulled her away, tossing her on the night table. I waited until the woman walked out the door, and then I whispered a little more loudly so that the doll could hear me.

'Don't worry,' I'd said.

'I'll save you in the morning.'

Why had I thought of that now?

Save Gram.

That's why.

The sleet outside was turning to snow. It reminded me of Green's. 'You'd love the snow in Hancock,' he'd said.

I thought of the summer house in Laurel Highlands. 'I haven't been here in winter since I was a boy,' the Old Man had said. 'But it was wonderful, so cold it hurt your teeth, the river has frozen over, the animals coming up close to the house.'

Everything was silver with ice.' He had spread his wide hands. 'Twisted icicles this long hanging from the roof. I used to knock them off and see how far I could throw them.' He had laughed. 'My father had put in heat, so when you came inside, it was warm. I'd dry my hands on the radiator till they almost sizzled.'

Winter.

No one there in the house in Laurel Highlands. 'We stay in our house in Hancock now. Plenty of snow there, and nearer to school and the stores.'

How could I do it?

How could I not?

Gram was napping on the lilac couch. I went in and stood next to her, watching that beautiful face.

She opened her eyes.

'How would you like to go away with me?' I asked.

'To see Beatrice?' she said.

I shook my head. 'That's too far.'

'Then where?' She sat up, smoothing her hair with papery thin fingers.

It was hard to get the words out. 'We'll take the car.'

'The Silver Bullet,' she said, nodding.

'It will be an adventure,' I said.

She smiled. 'Henry, you, and I in the Silver Bullet. We'll fly to the ends of the earth.'

I smiled back, trying to think. Food, warm clothes, gas for the Silver Bullet.

It was Friday night. The hot cocoa woman would come for me at lunchtime tomorrow.

By then we had to be long gone.

Films of Kristen Deniel

We were frenzied that last week in August. That was Izzy's word: frenzied. And I drew it all:

Green's and I racing along the dirt road to buy beef jerky at the grocery store four miles away.

Sitting on a rock, pulling the jerky against our teeth as we counted the cars that went by on the highway.

Rowing up the river rapids and bouncing back in the rowboat with bruises all over our legs and arms.

Climbing partway up the Old Man's mountain after the rain, slipping and sliding in the mud on the edge of the road.

And we never stopped laughing.

Anything so we wouldn't think about my leaving.

Anything.

They told me what they'd planned, the four of us sitting on the porch. I never needed a picture of that night. It was in my head, every bit of it, is there forever. But I drew it anyway: Izzy with one of my hands in both of hers, the Old Man reaching out to hug me until I had no breath left, and Green's blinking behind his glasses, trying not to let me see how close to tears he was.

But I knew.

I drew another picture of what happened next. Before I could think, I leaned over to kiss Green's cheek, stained with grease from working on the truck, captured there in that drawing forever. Both of us laughed, embarrassed, and Izzy said, 'Lovely. I'm going to try that too.' And she leaned over to kiss his other cheek.

We were still laughing as Izzy spread out her long arms.

'It's settled, then,' she said. 'You belong to us. This house ...' 'And the river,' I said.

‘...Is yours,’ the Old Man said. ‘All of it.’ ‘And Izzy's hard candy,’ Green’s said, rocking back on his chair, looking happier than he had all summer.

Please let it be all right, I begged, looking at Greens’ face, remembering all the arguments he and the Old Man had had: a lost lure yesterday, a rake left in the rain, the truck. Was it because I was there? Was the Old Man comparing him with me? Me? Wasn't that strange? Was trying to fit me into family-like jamming in a puzzle piece that didn't match? Would it ruin all the other pieces?

Lzzy leaned over. ‘Hey, you two, don't look sad. We still have one last weekend. Remember?’

The last weekend.

Last.

I looked up at the mountain. The trees had just a hint of fall color. The mountain looked soft, almost friendly. I thought about standing on the very top.

<3

Nevaeh

Book: 65

Martrace

The beginnings-

It just someday in some year- in 1921- she was let in the back of the 1918 Buick Pick up with a wood bed- and was forgotten about even if it was her birthday...

Miss. Darling joined Martrace who had the nickname given of 'Hope-' outside the school gates and the two of them walked in silence through the village Love Street.

They passed the greengrocer with his window full of apples and oranges. and the butcher with bloody lumps of meat on display and naked chickens hanging up...

-Then and there-

Was the small bank. and the grocery store and the electrical shop...

And now that they were alone. Martrace (Hope) all of a sudden became enthusiastically energetic.

And then they came out on the other side of the village... on to the narrow country road where there were no people anymore and very few 1921-motor-cars in testudo-black.

It seemed as though a valve had burst inside her and a great gush of energy was being released.

It was from Miss. Darling this and Miss. Darling that and Miss. Darling, I do honestly feel I could move almost anything in the world. not just tipping over glasses and little things like that.

I feel...

I... feel... could topple tables and chairs. Miss. Darling.

Even when people are sitting in the chairs I think I could push them over. and bigger things too. much bigger things than chairs and tables. She trotted beside Miss.

Darling with uninhabited little hops and her fingers flew as if she would toss them to the four winds and her words went off like fireworks. with tremendous speed.

I have to stare at it very hard. Miss. Darling. very hard.

Like- then I can feel it all fashionable behind my eyes. and my eyes get hot just as though they were scorching but then again.

I do not mind that in the least. and Miss. Darling. I only must take a moment to get my eyes strong and then I can push it out. this strangeness. at anything at all so long as I am staring at it hard enough.

2

‘Calm yourself down. youngster. calm yourself down.’ Miss. Darling said. ‘Let us not get ourselves too worked up so early in the chronicles.’

‘But you do think it is interesting. don't you. Miss. Darling?’

‘Why must we tread carefully. Miss. Darling?’

‘Oh. it is interesting all right.’ Miss. Darling said. ‘It is more than interesting. But we must tread very carefully from now on. Martrace.’

‘They may even be heavenly... Nonetheless, whether they are or not. let us handle them carefully.’

‘For the reason that we are playing with mysterious forces. my child. that we know nothing about. I do not think they are evil. They may be good.’

These were wise words from a wise old bird. but Martrace was too steamed up to see it that way.

‘I don't see why we have to be so cautious?’ she said. still hopping about.

‘I am trying to explain to you.’ Miss. Darling said long suffering...

‘That we are dealing with the unidentified. It is an unexplainable thing...

The right word for it is marvel... It is a- whizz.’ ‘Am I a miracle?’ Martrace asked.

‘It is quite possible that you are.’ Miss. Darling said.

‘Nonetheless. I'd rather you didn't think about yourself as anything in particular at the moment.

What I thought we might do is to explore this genius a little further...just the two of us together; but then again making sure we take things very carefully all the time.'

'You want me to do some more of it then. Miss. Darling?'

'That is what I am tempted to suggest.' Miss. Darling said cautiously.

'Goody-good.' Martrace said.

'I myself.' Miss. Darling said. 'I am probably far more bowled over by what you did than you are. and I am trying to find some reasonable explanation.'

'Such as what?' Martrace asked.

'Such as whether or not it's got something to do with the fact that you are quite exceptionally precocious.'

'What exactly does that word mean?' Martrace said.

'A precocious child.' Miss. Darling said. 'is one that shows amazing intelligence early on. You are an unbelievably precocious child.'

'Am I really?' Martrace asked.

'Of course. you are. You must be aware of that. Look at your reading. Look at your mathematics.'

'I suppose you're right.' Martrace said.

Miss. Darling marveled at the child's lack of conceit and self-consciousness.

'I can't help wondering,' she said. 'whether this sudden ability that has come to you. Of being able to move an object without touching it. whether it might not have something to do with your brainpower.'

'You mean there might not be room in my head for all those brains so something has to push out?'

'That's not quite what I mean.' Miss. Darling said.

Smiling... 'But whatever happens... and I say it again. we must tread carefully from now on. I have not forgotten... that strange and distant glimmer on your face after you tipped over the last glass.'

'Do you think doing it could actually... hurt me? Is that what you're thinking. Miss. Darling?'

'It made you feel pretty peculiar... didn't it?'

'It made me feel lovely.' Martrace said. 'For a moment or two, I was flying past the stars on silver wings.'

Along with say- 'I told you that.'

And moments later saying- 'And intend to I tell you something else. Miss. Darling? It was easier the second time... much easier.'

'I think it's like anything else. the more you practice it. the easier it gets.'

Miss. Darling was walking slowly so that the small child could keep up with her without trotting too fast.

3

And it was very peaceful out there on the narrow road now that the village was behind them.

It was one of those golden autumn afternoons and there were blackberries and splashes of old man's beard in the hedges.

And the hawthorn berries were ripening scarlet for the birds when the chilly winter came along.

There were tall trees here and there on either side. oak and sycamore and ash and occasionally a sweet chestnut.

There was a high hedge of hazel on either side and you could see clusters of ripe brown nuts in their green jackets.

The squirrels would be collecting them all very soon.

Miss. Darling said. and storing them away carefully for the bleak months ahead. Miss. Darling.

Wishing to change the subject for the moment... gave the names of all these to Martrace and taught her how to recognize them by the shape of their leaves and the pattern of the bark on their trunks.

Martrace took all this in and stored the knowledge away carefully in her mind.

They came finally to a gap in the hedge on the left-hand side of the road where there was a five-barred gate. 'This way.' Miss. Darling said. and she opened the gate and led Martrace through and closed it again.

They were now walking along a narrow lane that was no more than a rutted cart-track.

'You mean you live down here?' Martrace asked.

'I do.' Miss. Darling replied... nonetheless, she said nothing more or further.

Martrace had never once stopped to think about where Miss. Darling might be living.

She had always regarded her purely as a teacher.

A person who turned up out of nowhere and taught at school and then went away again.

Do any of us children... she wondered...

Like- yah- ever stop to ask ourselves where our teachers go when school is over for the day?
Do we wonder if they live alone?

Or like if there is a mother at home or a sister or a husband? 'Do you live all by yourself.'

Miss. Darling?' she asked.

'It's just a farm laborer's cottage.' Miss. Darling said. 'You mustn't expect too much of it.
We're approximately there.'

They came to a small green gate half-buried in the hedge on the right and almost buried by the overhanging hazel branches. Miss. Darling paused with one hand on the gate and said. 'There it is.
That's where I live.'

'Yes.' Miss. Darling said.

‘Very much so.’

They were walking over the deep sunbaked mud-tracks of the lane and you had to watch where you put your feet if you didn't want to twist your ankle.

There were a few small birds around in the hazel branches but that was all.

Martrace saw a narrow dirt path leading to a tiny red-brick cottage.

The cottage was so small it looked more like a doll's house than a human dwelling.

The bricks it was built of were old and crumbly and very pale red. It had a grey slate roof and one small chimney. and there were two little windows at the front.

Each window was no larger than a sheet of a tabloid newspaper and there was no upstairs to the place.

On either side of the path, there was a wilderness of nettles and blackberry thorns and long brown grass.

An enormous oak tree stood overshadowing the cottage. Its massive spreading branches seemed to be enfolding and embracing the tiny building. and perhaps hiding it as well from the rest of the world.

4

Would you all say that it was cute to see home your mom and dad are with you when you come into their life that loving moment- left in time?

So- even so when they find that their youngster is the most repulsive thing to ever share the same air as they do. The grossest thing you could ever imagine or wrap your mind around. they still think that he or she is magnificent or slenderizes.

Some moms and dads go more. extra than others. They develop so-o blinded by admiration. love...consent. with wonder.

The achievement to sway and influence. themselves their youngster has the wherewithal of mastermind.

Really in all fact, there was not a thing wrong with this... at all.

Never- ever- world this not be right. The world just works this way. 'Carry us a washbowl! We're going to be sick!' U-ah- he said...

It is only when the mom and dad begin telling you and me about the wisdom of their own disgusting, suck, twisting scum-sucking butt hole licker's... children. That we shock disturbance.

'Your son is the best thing ever. You're going to say it.' ...is an over-all wash-out to say.

I have faith that you have a family.

Trade you can thrust or shove him into when he/she leaves school, and for the reason that he/she vary sure as all hell he or she won't get a job anyplace otherwise.' If yours truly were a teacher, I would prepare up some physical scorchers for the kids of loving, devoted, Kissie- Kissie goo-goo- parents.

School educators undergo a good deal from having to listen to this sort of balderdash nonrenewal crap- from gratified close relatives like mom and dad.

Nonetheless, they typically get their own back when the time comes to write the end-of-term reports. Before, like if yours truly were feeling poetic that daylight, I- myself- me- here... might pen down. 'It is an enquiring actuality, which grasshoppers.

Like- like- like- have their hearing-organs on the sides of the abdomen. Your daughter Emma.

Is arbitrating by what she's erudite this period.

Has no audible range-publications at all- to speak of?'

Yah- would say I may even investigate an unfathomable into ordinary history and say that. 'The journal cicada employs seven ages as a nourishment antiestablishment.

as well as no more than seven days as a welcome individual of sunbeams and air. Your son/or girl has paid out seven years as nourishment in this school.

And now we are still in the making for him/her to arise from the cocoon.'

A chiefly mephitic little girl might sting me into proverbial.

‘Sandy has the same glacial beauty yet so cold-heartedly like a stone. but unlike the stone. she has absolutely nothing below the surface - nothing but looks.’

I myself meditate... I for one might relish in writing end-of-term intelligence for the horrors in my class.

Like- however enough of that BS- kids suck lady-nuts. We have to get on... with the dumb... for that is all they are- on like this one here that is oh mighty.

And magnificent- in their wisdom. and wonderers' thoughts of the mind.

Frequently- like every so often. one comes across a close relative who takes the contradictory line.

Who shows no notice at all in their youngsters.

And this of-course is far worse than the doting ones.

Mr. and Ms. Dicksnoter were two such parents.

They had a son called Peter and a daughter called Martrace. and the parents watched upon Martrace in certain as zilch zil- notta crap in the bowl- that needed to be plunged and flush tree weeks ago- a stinking shipping- pill... of doo- no more than a layer over the yellowing pee.

Just crap- something you have to put up. or then get it out and grunting too- with until the time comes your done with it and zip up- and move on with the day.

Mr. and Ms. Dicksnoter beheld accelerative massively to the phase when they could dump their little daughter off- as sh*t and flush her away for their lives.’

If possible, into the next region and or next plant- or even supplementary more than that even.

It is in-immoral an adequate quantity of when blood relation treats everyday youngsters as all the same, they were crap and poopie.

On the other hand, it turns out to be one way or another a- lot inferior when the juvenile in inquiry is extraordinary. and by that. I mean complex as well as vivid.

Martrace was both of these things. on the other hand, above all she was dazzling. Her cognizance was so-o nimble, and she was so quick to learn.

5

That her capability ought to have been understandable even to the most half-witted of parents.

Nonetheless, Mr. and Ms. Dicksnoter were both so-o gorm-less and so-0 enfolded up in their own senseless meaningless. and absurd slight lives that they fail to get or see that no matter what infrequent.

Uncommon about their daughter.

To communicate the actuality.

I doubt they would have noticed had she crept into the house with a broken 2 legs one day when they did not see.

By the age of one and a half, her speech was flawless faultless. marvels. as well as she knew as many words as most grown-ups.

The parents... instead of applauding her. called her a noisy blabbermouth and told her abruptly that small girls should be understood and not overheard.

Martrace's brother Peter was a perfectly normal boy. but the sister. as I said. it was something to make your eyes pop.

By the time she was three.

Martrace had taught herself to read by studying newspapers and magazines that lay around the house.

At the age of four.

She could read fast and well, and she naturally began hankering after books.

The only book in the whole of this enlightened household was something called Easy Cooking belonging to her mother.

And when she had read this from cover to cover and had learned all the recipes by heart. she decided she wanted something more interesting. 'Daddy.' she said.

'Do you think you could buy me a book?'

'A book?' he said.

'What do you want a freaking book for dumb butt?' 'To read. Daddy.'

'What's wrong with going to see a MOVIE.

For heaven's sake- a little girl?

We've got a lovely MOVIE with a sixty-inch screen and now you come asking for a book to read in have imagination time! You're getting so-o spoiled. girl!'

Almost every ordinary midafternoon Martrace was left alone in the household. Her brother (four years older than her...)

She went to school and she was there to care for herself- yet that is the way she loved it. Ms. Dicksnoter was hooked on to being a fashionista. doing hair styling and being a drama queen- and playing the man in bars- when dad was not looking- it five afternoons a week she was seen playing the game- and making her wages in that way- good look as she said to get you far- even if with her that may not be so... Her father went to work- on the railroad... working on steamers... a murky dirty- hot job... were he would pass off crap for good engines... she this here - 1888- you like the wheels are falling off- and the boilers blow- what do I do- I sell it to you- what do you say?

1918 Cadillac is sitting running as they were talking- walking past all the big things and load-like crossing tracks with moving train- at her feet at the age of five- she arrived. she introduced herself to the librarian.

Martrace was in-love with the new light- and the cars putting along outside- in this small western county town that she was seeing in her way- a way of wonder- and massive thought behind it- looking around all old wood buildings- and dirt roads.

Ms. Smaith. She asked if she might sit awhile and read a book. Ms. Smaith. slightly in awe at the arrival, this tiny young girl-and being- solo- with no parent to behead by. all the same, she told her she was very welcome to take a look at all the books.

It's like new- maybe better... On the afternoon of the day when her father had refused to buy her a book.

Martrace set out all by herself to walk to the public library in the village. 'Where are the children's books please?' Martrace asked... softly shyly... where are the kiddie books... 'They're over there on those lower shelves- Ms. Smaith told her do you see.' -Yes- thank you... 'Would you like me to help you find a nice one with lots of drawings on it... so it not too hard for you to get...?' No. thank you.' Martrace said. 'I'm sure I can accomplish this- feet with no issues or complaints.'

It now dark- she is still sitting there as the gas lamps outside flicker... the train- blow got there hunting crays and grind on the rails. Houses pass- a man snaps a long photo on a shutter camera... a boy is calling out for newspapers- as the burn burls are light for heat man standing signing old songs- of land- in the cold wicked streets- you can see the puff of their breath... yet she forgot all about the time... lost in the lands of her books. Where there was no pain of heat... just play. Martrace would toddle down to the library like this- every day she could rain- sleet- and mud. it did not matter- there was the girl with long dark hair with the ridden in it- and a sundress reading books.

The walk took only ten minutes. and this allowed her two glorious hours sitting quietly by herself in a cozy corner devouring one book after another. When she had read every single children's book in the place. she started wandering round in search of some thing else.

Ms. Smaith. Who had been watching her with charm for the past few weeks? Now got up from her desk and went over to her yet in admiration. 'Can I help you. Martrace?' she asked.

'I'm deliberating what to read next.' Martrace said. 'I've finished all the children's books.' All 500 she said?

Yes- 'You mean you've looked at the pictures?'

NO...! um- 'Yes. but I've read the books as also.'

Ms. Smaith gazed downwards at Martrace from her great height. which was only like three feet. and Martrace looked right back up at her towering.

‘I thought some were very underprivileged.’ Martrace said. ‘but others were lovely. I liked Engen 14 was the best of one of them all- she carried out. It was full of specifics. The mystery of the room behind the closed door and the mystery of the garden behind the big wall.’ Ms. Smaith was dumbfounded by this girl's considerations and words. "Exactly how old are you, little girl. Martrace?" she asked. ‘Five years and one month.’ Martrace said timidly.

Ms. Smaith was more stunned than ever. but she had the sense not to show it. ‘What sort of a book would you like to read next?’ she asked.

Martrace said. ‘I would like a really good one that grown-ups read. A famous one. I don't know any names.’

Ms. Smaith looked along the shelves. taking her time. She didn't quite know what to bring out. How. she asked herself. does one choose a famous grown-up book for a four-year-old girl? Her first thought was to pick a young teenager's romance of the kind that is written for fifteen-year-old schoolgirls.

But for some reason, she found herself instinctively walking past that particular shelf.

‘Try this.’ she said at last. ‘It's very famous and very good. If it's too long for you. just let me know and I'll find something shorter and a bit easier.’

‘Great Expectations.’ Martrace read. ‘by Charles Dickens.

I'd love to try it.’

I must be mad. Ms. Smaith told herself. but to Martrace she said.

‘Of course, you may try it.’

Over the next few afternoons, Ms. Smaith could hardly take her eyes from the small girl sitting for hour after hour in the big armchair at the far end of the room with the book on her lap.

It was necessary to rest it on the lap because it was too heavy for her to hold up. which meant she had to sit leaning forward to read.

And a strange sight it was. this tiny dark-haired person sitting there with her feet nowhere near touching the floor.

Totally absorbed in the wonderful adventures of Pip and old Miss. Havisham and her cobwebbed house and by the spell of magic that Dickens the great story-teller had woven with his words. The only movement from the reader was the lifting of the hand now and then to turn over a page. and Ms. Smaith always felt sad when the time came for her to cross the floor and say; 'It's ten to five. Martrace.'

During the first week of Martrace's visits, Ms. Smaith had said to her. 'Does your mother walk you down here every day and then take you home?'

'My mother goes to Aylesbury every afternoon to play bingo.'

Martrace had said. 'She doesn't know I come here.'

'But that's surely not right.' Ms. Smaith said. 'I think you'd better ask her.'

'I'd rather not.' Martrace said. 'She doesn't encourage reading books. Nor does my father.'

'But what do they expect you to do every afternoon in an empty house?'

'Just mooch around and watch the telly.'

'I see.'

'She doesn't care what I do.' Martrace said a little sadly.

Ms. Smaith was concerned about the child's safety on the walk through the fairly busy village Love Street and the crossing of the road. but she decided not to interfere.

Within a week. Martrace had finished Great Expectations which in that edition contained four hundred and eleven pages. 'I loved it.' she said to Ms. Smaith. 'Has Mr. Dickens written any others?'

'A great number.' said the astounded Ms. Smaith. 'Intend to I choose you another?'

Over the next six months. under Ms. Smaith's watchful and compassionate eye. Martrace read the following books:

- Nicholas Nickleby by Charles Dickens
- Jane Eyre by Charlotte Bronte

- Oliver Twist by Charles Dickens
- Pride and Prejudice by Jane Austen
- Tess of the D'Urbervilles by Thomas Hardy
- Nevaeh by: Marcel Ray Duriez
- Gone to Earth by Mary Webb
- White Fang by Jack London
- Frankenstein by Mary Shelley
- The Old Man and the Sea by Ernest Hemingway
- Brighton Rock by Graham Greene
- The Sound and the Fury by William Faulkner
- The Grapes of Wrath by John Steinbeck the Good

Companions by J. B. Priestley

- Kim by Rudyard Kipling
- Animal Farm by George Orwell
- The Invisible Man by H. G. Wells

It was a formidable list and by now Ms. Smaith was filled with wonder and excitement. but it was probably a good thing that she did not allow herself to be completely carried away by it all.

Almost anyone else witnessing the achievements of this small child would have been tempted to make a great fuss and shout the news all over the village and beyond. but not so Ms. Smaith.

She was someone who minded her own business and had long since discovered it was seldom worth while to interfere with other people's children.

‘Mr. Hemingway says a lot of things I don't understand.’

Martrace said to her. ‘Especially about men and women.’

‘Nonetheless, I loved it all the same. The way he tells it I feel I am right there on the spot watching it all happen.’

‘A fine writer will always make you feel that.’ Ms. Smaith said. ‘And don't worry about the bits you can't understand.

Sit back and allow the words to wash around you. like music.’

‘I will. I will.’

‘Did you know.’ Ms. Smaith said. ‘that public libraries like this allow you to borrow books and take them home?’

‘I didn't know that.’ Martrace said. ‘Could I do it?’

‘Of course.’ Ms. Smaith said. ‘When you have chosen the book, you want. bring it to me so I can make a note of it and it's yours for two weeks. You can take more than one if you wish.’

From then on. Martrace would visit the library only once a week to take out new books and return the old ones.

Her small bedroom now became her reading-room and... there she would sit and read most afternoons.

Often with a mug of hot chocolate beside her. She was not tall enough to reach things around the kitchen.

But she kept a small box in the outhouse which she brought in and stood on to get whatever she wanted.

Mostly it was hot chocolate she made. warming the milk in a saucepan on the stove before mixing it. Occasionally she made Bovril or Ovaltine. It was pleasant to take a hot drink up to her room and have it beside her as she sat in her silent room reading in the empty house in the afternoons.

The books transported her into new worlds and familiarized her with amazing people who lived exciting lives.

She went on olden-day sailing ships with Joseph Conrad.

She went to Africa with Ernest Hemingway and to India with Rudyard Kipling. She traveled all over the world while sitting in her little room in an English village.

6

The First Phenomenon-

The Mcfarts seated herself over the teacher's table. Martrace sat down again at her school desk.

Still holding the pitcher by the handle but not invigorating it hitherto, she said. 'I have never been able to comprehend why small children are so revolting.

It was the first time she had to sit down- freaking sit- down throughout the class.

Then she got hold of out a hand and took hold of her water- pitcher.

They should be got free of as early as conceivable.

They are the misery of my life. They are like creatures.

We get rid of flies with fly-spray and by droopy up fly-paper.

I have often thought of discovering a spray for getting rid of small youngsters.

Otherwise better still. some huge strips of gluey paper.

How marvelous it would be to walk into this schoolroom with an enormous spray-pistols in my hands and start thrusting it.

I would hang them all around the school and you'd all get stuck to them and that would be the end of it.

Wouldn't that be a good idea?

Miss. Darling?'

'If it's meant to be a joke. Headmistress. I don't think it's a very funny one.' Miss. Darling said from the back of the classroom during the lecture.

The woman's mad. Miss. Darling was telling herself. She's rounded the twist. She's the one who ought to be got rid of.

The Mcfarts now lifted the large blue porcelain water-jug and poured some water into her glass. 'You wouldn't. would you. Miss. Darling.' the Mcfarts said. 'And it's not meant to be a joke. My idea of a picture-perfect school. Miss. Darling. is one that has no youngsters in it at all were there all in the graveyard not talking back.

Um-hum- stone-cold quit- they hear you that way... like living under a rock... she said back. One of these days I intend to start up a school like that. I think it will be very effective to freaking dumb - playing with themselves.'

I like you did- Missy... over there... as a girl. As well as unexpectedly. with the water. out came the stretched sycophantic lizard straight into the glass. plop!

The Mcfarts let out a yell and leaped off her chair as though a firecracker had gone off beneath her.

As well as now the children also saw the long thin slimy yellow-bellied lizard-like mortal meandering and revolving relaxing- spinning- like in the glass.

And they wriggled and jumped about as well. shouting.

Oh. it's disgusting! It's a serpent! It's a baby queue! It's an alligator!'

'What is it?

'Lookout. Miss. Mcfarts!' cried Dasey. 'I'll bet it bites!'

She was especially furious that someone had succeeded in making her jump and yell like that because she prided herself on her toughness.

Natural history was not her strong point.

She hadn't the faintest idea what this thing was.

The Mcfarts.

This mighty womanly giant. stood there in her green breeches. trembling like a blancmange. She stared at the creature snaking and wriggling in the glass. Inquisitive ly enough. she had never seen a newt before. It certainly looked extremely unpleasant. Gradually she sat down again in her chair.

She looked at this moment more frightening than ever before. The fires of fury and hatred were shouldering in her small black eyes.

‘Martrace!’ she barked. ‘Stand up!’

‘Who. me?’ Martrace said. ‘What have I done?’

‘Stand up. You are revolting little cock-suck!’

‘I haven't done anything. Miss. Mcfarts. honestly. I haven't. I've never seen that slimy thing before!’

‘Stand up at once. your filthy little piss-puss-squirt!’

On the other hand. she was certainly not about to own up. Unenthusiastically. Martrace got to her feet. She was in the second row. Dasey was in the row behind her. feeling a bit guilty. She hadn't intended to get her friend into trouble.

I intend to have you drummed out of this establishment in utter disgrace! I intend to have the prefects chase you down the corridor and out of the front-door with hockey-sticks! "You are vile. repulsive. repellent. malicious tiny brute!’

The Mcfarts was shouting. ‘You are not fit to be in this school- you suck at life- and should kill yourself now and get it over with! You ought to be behind bars.

That's where you ought to be! I intend to have the staff escort you home under armed guard! And then I intend to make sure you are sent to a reformatory for delinquent girls for a minimum of forty years!’

The Mcfarts was in such a rage that her face had taken on a boiled color and little flecks of froth were gathering... at the corners of her mouth.

Nonetheless, she was not the only one who was losing her cool. She could see the justice of that. It was, however, a new experience for her to be accused of a crime that she had not committed. Martrace was also beginning to see red.

She didn't in the least mind being accused of having done something she had done. She had had absolutely nothing to do with that beastly creature in the glass. 'I did not do it!' she screamed. By holly freaking farting golly, she thought.

That awful Mcfarts isn't going to iota this one on me! The Mcfarts roared back 'Oh yes, you did!' 'Nobody else could have thought up a trick like that! Your father was right to warn me about you!' The woman seemed to have lost the regulator of herself entirely. She was ranting like a fanatic- and freaking out. 'You are finished in this school, young lady!' she shouted. 'You are finished everywhere. I intend to in my opinion see to it that you are put away in a place where not even the crows can land their fertilizers on you! You will probably never see the light of day again!'

7

'I'm telling you I did not do it!' Martrace screamed. 'I've never even seen a creature like that in my life!'

'You have put a- a- a fuc- fa- frack freaking- queue in my drinking water!' (she holds her words back) the Mcfarts yelled back. 'There is no worse crime in the world against a Headmistress! Now sit down and don't say a word! Go on, sit down at once!'

'Nevertheless, I'm telling you.' Martrace shouted... refusing to sit down.

The Mcfarts was sitting behind the teacher's table starting with a mixture of horror and fascination at the newt wriggling in the glass. Martrace's eyes were also riveted on the glass. And now, quite slowly, there began to creep over Martrace a most extraordinary and peculiar feeling. The feeling was mostly in the eyes. A kind of electricity seemed to be gathering inside them. A sense of power was brewing in those eyes of hers. a feeling of great strength was settling itself deep inside her eyes. But there was also another feeling which something was else altogether.

And which she could not understand. It was like flashes of lightning. Little waves of lightning seemed to be flashing out of her eyes. Her eyeballs were beginning to get hot, as though vast energy was building up somewhere inside them. It was an amazing sensation. She kept her eyes steadily on the glass.

...And now the power was concentrating in one small part of each eye and growing stronger and stronger and it felt as though millions of tiny little invisible arms with hands-on them were shooting out of her eyes towards the glass she was staring at.

‘Tip it!’ Martrace whispered. ‘Tip it over!’

‘I am telling you to shut up!’ the Mcfarts roared. ‘If you don’t shut up at once and sit down, I intend to remove my belt and let you have it with the end that has the buckle!’

Slowly Martrace sat down. Oh, the rottenness of it all! The unfairness! How dare they expel her for something she had not done!

Martrace felt herself getting angrier, and angrier, and angrier, so-o unbearably angry that something was bound to explode inside her very soon.

The newt was still squirming in the tall glass of water. It looked horribly uncomfortable. The glass was not big enough for it. Martrace glared at the Mcfarts.

How she hated her. She glared at the glass with the newt in it.

She longed to march up and grab the glass and tip the contents, newt and all, over the Mcfarts’s head.

She trembled to think what the Mcfarts would do to her if she did that.

‘Tip it!’ she whispered again. ‘Tip it over!’

Once more the glass wobbled. She pushed harder still, willing her eyes to shoot out more power.

And then... very slowly.

So slowly she could hardly see it happening, the glass began to lean backward, farther and farther and farther back until it was balancing on just one edge of its base.

And there it teetered for a few seconds before finally toppling over and falling with a sharp tinkle on to the desktop.

The water in it and the squirming newt splashed out all over Miss. Mcfarts's enormous bosom. The headmistress let out a yell that must have rattled every window-pane in the building and for the second time in the last five minutes she shot out of her chair like a rocket.

The newt clutched desperately at the cotton smock where it covered the great chest and there it clung with its little claw-like feet. The Mcfarts looked down and saw it and she bellowed even louder and with a swipe of her hand, she sent the creature flying across the classroom. It landed on the floor beside Dasey's desk and very quickly she ducked down and picked it up and put it into her pencil-box for another time. A newt. she decided. was a useful thing to have around?

The Mcfarts. her face more like a boiled ham than ever. was standing before the class quivering with fury. She saw the glass wobble. It actually tilted backward a fraction of an inch. then righted itself again. Her massive bosom was heaving in and out and the splash of water down the front of it made a dark wet patch that had probably soaked right through to her skin. 'Who did it?' she roared. Who is guilty of this filthy profession?

Who pushed over this glass?' 'Come on- come on! Own up your hood liker! Step forward! You won't escape this time! She kept pushing at it with all those millions of invisible little arms and hands that were reaching out from her eyes. feeling the power that was alternating straight from the two little black dots in the very centers of her eyeballs. Nobody answered. The whole room remained silent as a tomb. 'Martrace!' she roared. 'It was you! I know it was you!' Martrace. in the second row. sat very still and said nothing. A strange feeling of serenity and confidence was sweeping over her and all of a sudden, she found that she was frightened by nobody in the world.

With the power of her eyes alone she had compelled a glass of water to tip and spill its contents over the horrible Headmistress. and anybody who could do that could do whatsoever.

'Speak up say it- ball groper. you clotted carbuncle!' roared the Mcfarts.

'Admit that you did it!'

Suddenly the entire class seemed to rise up against the Headmistress. 'None of the children did. Miss. Mcfarts.' Miss. Darling answered. 'I can vouch for it that nobody has moved from his or her desk all the time you've been here. except for Tom and he has not moved from his corner.' 'She didn't move!' they cried out.

'Martrace didn't move! Nobody moved! You must have knocked it over yourself!' Martrace looked right back into the flashing eyes of this infuriated female giant and said with total calmness. 'I have not moved away from my desk. Miss. Mcfarts. since the lesson began. I can say no more.' 'I most certainly did not knock it over myself!' roared the Mcfarts. 'How dare you suggest a thing like that! Speak up. Miss. Darling! You must have seen everything! Who knocked over my glass?'

Miss. Mcfarts glared at Miss. Darling. Miss. Darling met her gaze without flinching. 'I am telling you the truth. Headmistress.' she said. 'You must have knocked it over without knowing it. That sort of thing is easy to do.'

'I am fed up with your useless bunch of midgets!' roared the Mcfarts. 'I refuse to waste any more of my precious time here!' And with that, she marched out of the classroom. slamming the door behind her.

In the stunned silence that followed. Miss. Darling walked up to the front of the class and stood behind her table. 'Phew!' she said. 'I think we've had enough school for one day. don't you? The class is to dismiss. You may all go out to the playground and wait for your parents to come and take you home.'

The Second Miracle-

Martrace did not join the rush to get out of the classroom. After the other children had all disappeared. she remained at her desk. quiet and thoughtful.

She knew she had to tell somebody about what had happened with the glass. She couldn't possibly keep a gigantic secret like that bottled up inside her. What she needed was just one person. one wise and sympathetic grown-up who could help her to understand the meaning of this extraordinary happening.

Neither her mother nor her father would be of any use at all. If they believed her story. and it was doubtful they would. they certainly would fail to realize what an astounding event it was that had taken place in the classroom that afternoon.

On the spur of the moment. Martrace decided that the one person she would like to confide in was Miss. Darling.

Martrace and Miss. Darling were now the only two lefts in the classroom. Miss. Darling had seated herself at her table and was rifling through some papers. She looked up and said.

‘Well. Martrace. aren't you going outside with the others?’

8

Martrace said. ‘Please, may I talk to you for a moment?’

‘Of course, you may. What's troubling you?’

‘Something very peculiar has happened to me. Miss.

Darling.’

Miss. Darling became instantly alert. Ever since the two disastrous meetings she had had recently about Martrace. the first with the Headmistress and the second with the dreadful Mr. and Ms. Dicksnoter. Miss. Darling had been thinking a great deal about this child and wondering how she could help her. And now. here was Martrace sitting in the classroom with a curiously exalted look on her face and asking if she could have a private talk. Miss. Darling had never seen her looking so wide-eyed and peculiar before.

‘Yes. Martrace.’ she said. ‘Tell me what has happened to you that is so peculiar.’

‘Miss. Mcfarts isn't going to expel me. is she?’ Martrace asked. ‘Because it wasn't me who put that creature in her jug of water. I promise you it wasn't.’

‘I know it wasn't.’ Miss. Darling said.

‘Am I going to be expelled?’

‘I think not.’ Miss. Darling said. ‘The Headmistress simply got a little over-excited. that's all.’

‘Good.’ Martrace said. ‘But that isn't what I want to talk to you about.’

‘What do you want to talk to me about. Martrace?’

'I want to talk to you about the glass of water with the creature in it.' Martrace said. 'You saw it spilling all over Miss.

Mcfarts. didn't you?'

'I did indeed.'

'Well. Miss. Darling. I didn't touch it. I never went near it.'

'I know you didn't.' Miss. Darling said. 'You heard me telling the Headmistress that it couldn't possibly have been you.'

'Ah. but it was me. Miss. Darling.' Martrace said. 'That's exactly what I want to talk to you about.'

Miss. Darling paused and looked carefully at the child. 'I don't think I quite follow you.' she said.

'I got so angry at being accused of something I hadn't done that I made it happen.'

'You made that happen. Martrace?'

'I made the glass tip over.'

'I still don't quite understand what you mean.' Miss. Darling said gently.

'I did it with my eyes.' Martrace said. 'I was staring at it and wishing it to tip and then my eyes went all hot and funny and some sort of power came out of them and the glass just toppled over.'

Miss. Darling continued to look steadily at Martrace through her steel-rimmed spectacles and Martrace looked back at her just as steadily.

'I am still not following you.' Miss. Darling said. 'Do you mean you actually willed the glass to tip over?'

'Yes.' Martrace said. 'With my eyes.'

Miss. Darling was silent for a moment. She did not think Martrace was meaning to tell a lie. It was more likely that she was simply allowing her vivid imagination to run away with her. 'You mean you were sitting where you are now, and you told the glass to topple over and it did?'

'Something like that. Miss. Darling. yes.'

'If you did that. then it is just about the greatest miracle a person has ever performed since the time of Jesus.'

'I did it. Miss. Darling.'

It is extraordinary. thought Miss. Darling. how often small children have flights of fancy like this?

She decided to put an end to it as gently as possible. 'Could you do it again?' she asked. not unkindly.

'I don't know.' Martrace said. 'but I think I might be able to.'

Miss. Darling moved the now empty glass to the middle of the table. 'Should I put water in it?' she asked. smiling a little.

'I don't think it matters.' Martrace said.

'Very well. then. Go ahead and tip it over.'

'It may take some time.'

Take all the time you want.' Miss. Darling said. I'm in no hurry.'

Martrace. sitting in the second row about ten feet away from Miss. Darling. put her elbows on the desk and cupped her face in her hands. and this time she gave the order right at the beginning.

'Tip glass. tip!' she ordered. but her lips didn't move, and she made no sound. She simply shouted the words inside her head. And now she concentrated the whole of her mind and her brain and her will up into her eyes and once again but much more quickly than before she felt the electricity gathering and the power was beginning to surge and the hotness was coming into the eyeballs. and then the millions of tiny invisible arms with hands-on them were shooting out towards the glass. and without making any sound at all she kept on shouting inside her head for the glass to go over.

She saw it wobble. then it tilted. then it toppled right over and fell with a tinkle on to the table-top not twelve inches from Miss. Darling's folded arms.

Miss. Darling's mouth dropped open and her eyes stretched so wide you could see the whites all around. She didn't say a word. She couldn't. The shock of seeing the miracle performed had struck her dumb.

She gaped at the glass. leaning well away from it now as though it might be a dangerous thing. Then slowly she lifted the head and looked at Martrace.

She saw the child white in the face. as white as paper. trembling all over. the eyes glazed. staring straight ahead and seeing nothing. The whole face was transfigured. the eyes round and bright and she was sitting there speechless. quite beautiful in a blaze of silence.

Miss. Darling waited. trembling a little herself and watching the child as she slowly stirred herself back into consciousness.

And then suddenly. click went her face into a look of almost seraphic calm. 'I'm all right.' she said and smiled. 'I'm quite all right. Miss. Darling. so don't be alarmed.'

'You seemed so far away.' Miss. Darling whispered. awestruck.

'Oh. I was. I was flying past the stars on silver wings.'

Martrace said. 'It was wonderful.'

Miss. Darling was still gazing at the child in absolute wonderment. as though she were The Creation. The Beginning Of The World. The First Morning.

'It went much quicker this time.' Martrace said quietly.

'It's not possible!' Miss. Darling was gasping. 'I don't believe it! I simply don't believe it!' She closed her eyes and kept them closed for quite a while. and when she opened them again it seemed as though she had gathered herself together. 'Would you like to come back and have tea at my cottage?' she asked.

'Oh. I'd love to.' Martrace said.

'Good. Gather up your things and I'll meet you outside in a couple of minutes.'

‘You won't tell anyone about this. this thing that I did. will you. Miss. Darling?’

‘I wouldn't dream of it.’ Miss. Darling said.

The following morning. just before the father left for his beastly second-hand car garage. Martrace slipped into the cloakroom and got hold of the hat he wore each day to work. She had to stand on her toes and reach up as high as she could with a walking-stick in order to hook the hat off the peg. and even then, she only just made it. The hat itself was one of those flat-topped pork-pie jobs with a Duriez's feather stuck in the hat-band and Mr. Dicksnoter was very proud of it. He thought it gave him a rakish daring look. especially when he wore it at an angle with his loud checked jacket and green tie.

Martrace. holding the hat in one hand and a thin tube of Superglue in the other. proceeded to squeeze a line of glue very neatly all-round the inside rim of the hat. Then she carefully hooked the hat back on to the peg with the walking stick. She timed this operation very carefully. applying the glue just as her father was getting up from the breakfast table.

Mr. Dicksnoter didn't notice anything when he put the hat on. but when he arrived at the garage, he couldn't get it off.

Superglue is very powerful stuff. so powerful it will take your skin off if you pull too hard. Mr. Dicksnoter didn't want to be scalped so he had to keep the hat on his head the whole day long. even when putting sawdust in gear-boxes and fiddling the mileages of cars with his electric drill.

In an effort to save face. he adopted a casual attitude hoping that his staff would think that he actually meant to keep his hat on all day long just for the heck of it. like gangsters do in the films.

When he got home that evening, he still couldn't get the hat off.

‘Don't be silly.’ his wife said. ‘Come here. I'll take it off for you.’

She gave the hat a sharp yank. Mr. Dicksnoter let out a yell that rattled the window-panes. ‘Ow-w-w!’ he screamed.

‘Don't do that! Let go! You'll take half the skin off my forehead!’

Martrace nestling in her usual chair. was watching this performance over the rim of her book with some interest.

‘What's the matter. daddy?’ she said. ‘Has your head suddenly swollen or something?’

The father glared at his daughter with deep suspicion. but said nothing. How could he? Ms. Dicksnoter said to him. ‘It must be Superglue. It couldn't be anything else. That'll teach you to go playing around with nasty stuff like that. I expect you were trying to stick another feather in your hat.’

‘I haven't touched the flaming stuff!’ Mr. Dicksnoter shouted. He turned and looked again at Martrace who looked back at him with large innocent brown eyes.

Ms. Dicksnoter said to him. ‘You should read the label on the tube before you start messing with dangerous products.

Always follow the instructions on the label.’

‘What in heaven's name are you talking about. your stupid witch?’ Mr. Dicksnoter shouted. clutching the brim of his hat to stop anyone trying to pull it off again. ‘D 'you think I'm so stupid I'd glue this thing to my head on purpose?’

Martrace said. ‘There's a boy down the road who got some Superglue on his finger without knowing it and then he put his finger to his nose.’

Mr. Dicksnoter jumped. ‘What happened to him?’ he spluttered.

‘The finger got stuck inside his nose.’ Martrace said. ‘and he had to go around like that for a week. People kept saying to him. 'Stop picking your nose.' and he couldn't do anything about it. He looked an awful fool.’

‘Serve him right.’ Ms. Dicksnoter said. ‘He shouldn't have put his finger up there in the first place. It's a nasty habit. If all children had

Superglue put on their fingers they'd soon stop doing it.’

Martrace said. ‘Grown-ups do it too. mummy. I saw you doing it yesterday in the kitchen.’

‘That's quite enough from you.’ Ms. Dicksnoter said. turning pink.

Mr. Dicksnoter had to keep his hat on all through supper in front of the television. He looked ridiculous and he stayed very silent.

When he went up to the bed, he tried again to get the thing off. and so, did his wife. but it wouldn't budge. 'How am I going to have my shower?' he demanded.

'You'll just have to do without it. won't you.' his wife told him. And later on. as she watched her skinny little husband skulking around the bedroom in his purple-striped pajamas with a pork-pie hat on his head. she thought how stupid he looked. Hardly the kind of man a wife dream's about. she told herself.

Mr. Dicksnoter discovered that the worst thing about having a permanent hat on his head was having to sleep in it.

It was impossible to lie comfortably on the pillow. 'Now do stop fussing around.' his wife said to him after he had been tossing and turning for about an hour. 'I expect it will be loose by the morning and then it'll slip off easily.'

But it wasn't loose by the morning and it wouldn't slip off. So, Ms. Dicksnoter took a pair of scissors and cut the thing off his head. bit by bit. first the top and then the brim. Where the inner band had stuck to the hair all around the sides and back.

she had to chop the hair off right to the skin so that he finished up with a bald white ring round his head. like some sort of a monk.

And in the front. where the band had stuck directly to the bare skin. there remained a whole lot of small patches of brown leathery stuff that no amount of washing would get off.

At breakfast, Martrace said to him. 'You must try to get those bits off your forehead. daddy. It looks as though you've got little brown insects crawling about all over you. People will think you've got lice.'

'Be quiet!' the father snapped. 'Just keep your nasty mouth shut. will you!'

All in all, it was a most satisfactory exercise. But it was surely too much to hope that it had taught the father a permanent lesson.

Martrace's parents owned quite a nice house with three bedrooms upstairs. while on the ground floor, there was a dining-room and a living-room and a kitchen. Her father was a dealer in second-hand cars and it seemed he did pretty well at it.

'Sawdust.' he would say proudly. 'is one of the great secrets of my success. And it costs me nothing. I get it free from the sawmill.'

'What do you use it for?' Martrace asked him.

'Ha!' the father said. 'Wouldn't you like to know.'

'I don't see how sawdust can help you to sell second-hand cars. daddy.'

'That's because you're an ignorant little twit.' the father said. His speech was never very delicate but Martrace was used to it. She also knew that he liked to boast and she would egg him on shamelessly.

'You must be very clever to find a use for something that costs nothing.' she said. 'I wish I could do it.'

'You couldn't.' the father said. 'You're too stupid. But I don't mind telling young Mike here about it seeing he'll be joining me in the business one day.' Ignoring Martrace, he turned to his son and said. 'I'm always glad to buy a car when some fool has been crashing the gears so badly, they're all worn out and rattle like mad. I get it cheap. Then all I do is mix a lot of sawdust with the oil in the gearbox and it runs as sweet as a nut.'

'How long will it run like that before it starts rattling again?' Martrace asked him.

'Long enough for the buyer to get a good distance away.' the father said, grinning. 'About a hundred miles.' 'But that's dishonest. daddy.' Martrace said. 'It's cheating.'

'No one ever got rich being honest.' the father said.

9

'Customers are there to be diddled.'

Mr. Dicksnoter was a small ratty-looking man whose front teeth stuck out underneath a thin ratty mustache.

He liked to wear jackets with large brightly-colored checks and he sported ties that were usually yellow or pale green. 'Now take mileage for instance.' he went on. 'Anyone who's buying a secondhand car, the first thing he wants to know is how many miles it's done. Right?'

‘Right.’ the son said.

‘So, I buy an old dump that's got about a hundred and fifty thousand miles on the clock. I get it cheap. But no one's going to buy it with mileage like that. are they?

And these days you can't just take the speedometer out and fiddle the numbers back as you used to ten years ago. They've fixed it so it's impossible to tamper with it unless you're a ruddy watchmaker or something. So, what do I do? I use my brains. Laddie - that's what I do.’

‘How?’ young Peter asked, fascinated. He seemed to have inherited his father's love of crookery.

‘I sit down and say to myself. how can I convert a mileage reading of one hundred and fifty thousand into only ten thousand without taking the speedometer to pieces? Well. if I were to run the car backward for long enough then obviously that would do it. The numbers would click backward. wouldn't they? But who's going to drive a flaming car in reverse for thousands and thousands of miles? You couldn't do it!’

‘Of course, you couldn't.’ young Peter said.

‘So-o I scratch my head.’ the father said. ‘I use my brains. When you've been given a fine brain as I have. you've got to use it. And all of a sudden. the answer hits me. I tell you. I felt exactly like that other brilliant fellow must have felt when he discovered penicillin. ‘Eureka!’ I cried. ‘I've got it!’ ’

‘What did you do. dad?’ the son asked him.

‘The speedometer.’ Mr. Dicksnoter said. ‘is run off a cable that is coupled up to one of the front wheels. So first I disconnect the cable where it joins the front wheel. Next. I get one of those high-speed electric drills and me couple that up to the end of the cable in such a way that when the drill turns. it turns the cable backward. Did you get me so far? You following me?’

‘Yes. daddy.’ young Peter said.

‘These drills run at a tremendous speed.’ the father said. ‘so, when I switch on the drill the mileage numbers on the speedo spin backward at a fantastic rate. I can knock fifty thousand miles off the clock in a few minutes with my highspeed electric drill. And by the time I've finished. the car's only done ten thousand and it's ready for sale. 'She's almost new.' I say to the customer. 'She's hardly done ten thou. Belonged to an old lady who only used it once a week for shopping.'

'Can you really turn the mileage back with an electric drill?' young Peter asked.

'I'm telling you trade secrets.' the father said. 'So, don't you go talking about this to anyone else. You don't want me to put in a jug. do you?'

'I won't tell a soul.' the boy said. 'Do you do this to many cars. dad?'

'Every single car that comes through my hands gets the treatment.' the father said. 'They all have their mileage cut to under ten thou before they're offered for sale. And to think I invented that all by myself.' he added proudly. 'It's made me a mint.'

Martrace. who had been listening closely. said? 'But daddy. that's even more dishonest than the sawdust. It's disgusting.

You're cheating people who trust you.'

'If you don't like it then don't eat the food in this house.' the father said. 'It's bought with the profits.'

'It's dirty money.' Martrace said. 'I hate it.'

Two red spots appear on the father's cheeks. 'Who the heck do you think you are.' he shouted. 'The Archbishop of Canterbury or something. preaching to me about honesty? You're just an ignorant little squirt who hasn't the foggiest idea what you're talking about!'

'Quite right. Harry.' the mother said. And to Martrace she said. 'You've got a nerve talking to your father like that. Now keep your nasty mouth shut so we can all watch this program in peace.'

They were in the living-room eating their suppers on their knees in front of the telly. The suppers were MOVIE dinners in floppy aluminum containers with separate compartments for the stewed meat. The boiled potatoes and the peas. Ms. Dicksnoter sat munching her meal with her eyes glued to the Am-Jenniean soap opera on the screen. She was a large woman whose hair was dyed platinum blonde except where you could see the mousy brown bits growing out from the roots. She wore heavy makeup and she had one of those unfortunate bulging figures where the flesh appears to be strapped in all around the body to prevent it from falling out.

‘Mummy.’ Martrace said. ‘would you mind if I ate my supper in the dining room so I could read my book?’

The father glanced up sharply. ‘I would mind!’ he snapped. ‘Supper is a family gathering and no one leaves the table till it's over!’

‘But we're not at the table.’ Martrace said. ‘We never are.

We're always eating off our knees and watching the telly.

‘What's wrong with watching the telly. may I ask?’ the father said. His voice had suddenly become soft and dangerous.

Martrace didn't trust herself to answer him. so, she kept quiet. She could feel the anger boiling up inside her.

She knew it was wrong to hate her parents like this. but she was finding it very hard not to do so.

All the reading she had done had given her a view of life that they had never seen. If only they would read a little Dickens or Kipling, they would soon discover there was more to life than cheating people and watching television.

Another thing. She resented being told constantly that she was ignorant and stupid when she knew she wasn't.

The anger inside her went on boiling and boiling. and as she lay in bed that night, she made a decision. She decided that every time her father or her mother was beastly to her.

she would get her own back in some way or another. A small victory or two would help her to tolerate their idiocies and would stop her from going crazy. You must remember that she was still hardly five years old and it is not easy for somebody as small as that to score points against an all-powerful grown-up. Even so. she was determined to have a go. Her father. after what had happened in front of the telly that evening. was first on her list...

Later that day, the news began to spread that the Headmistress had recovered from her fainting-fit and had then marched out of the school building tight-lipped and white in the face.

The next morning, she did not turn up at school. At lunchtime, Mr. Trilby, the Deputy Head, telephoned her house to inquire if she was feeling unwell. There was no answer to the phone.

When school was over, Mr. Trilby decided to investigate further. So, he walked to the house where Miss. Mcfarts lived on the edge of the village, the lovely small red-brick Georgian building is known as The Red House, tucked away in the woods behind the hills.

He rang the bell. No answer.

He knocked loudly. No answer.

He called out. 'Is anybody at home?' No answer.

He tried the door and to his surprise found it unlocked. He went in.

The house was silent and there was no one in it, and yet all the furniture was still in place. Mr. Trilby went upstairs to the main bedroom. Here also everything seemed to be normal until he started opening drawers and looking into cupboards.

There were no clothes or underclothes or shoes anywhere.

They had all gone.

She's done a bunk. Mr. Trilby said to himself and he went away to inform the School Governors that the Headmistress had apparently vanished.

On the second morning, Miss. Darling received by registered post a letter from a firm of local solicitors informing her that the last will and testament of her late father, Dr. Darling, had suddenly and mysteriously turned up. This document revealed that ever since her father's death, Miss. Darling had in fact been the rightful owner of a property on the edge of the village known as The Red House, which until recently had been occupied by a Miss. Agatha Mcfarts.

They will also show that her father's lifetime savings, which fortunately we're still safely in the bank, had also been left to her. The solicitor's letter added that if Miss. Darling would kindly call into the office as soon as possible. then the property and the money could be transferred into her name very rapidly.

Miss. Darling did just that. and within a couple of weeks, she had moved into the Red House. the very place in which she had been brought up and where luckily all the family furniture and pictures were still around. From then on. Martrace was a welcome visitor to The Red House every single evening after school. and a very close friendship began to develop between the teacher and the small child.

Back at school. great changes were also taking place. As soon as it became clear that Miss. Mcfarts had completely disappeared from the scene. the excellent Mr. Trilby was appointed Head Teacher in her place. And very soon after that. Martrace was moved up into the top from where Miss. Plimsoll quickly discovered that this amazing child was every bit as bright as Miss. Darling had said.

One evening a few weeks later. Martrace was having tea with Miss. Darling in the kitchen of The Red House after school as they always did. when Martrace said suddenly. 'Something strange has happened to me. Miss. Darling.'

'Tell me about it.' Miss. Darling said.

'This morning.' Martrace said. 'just for fun I tried to push something over with my eyes and I couldn't do it. Nothing moved. I didn't even feel the hotness building up behind my eyeballs. The power had gone. I think I've lost it completely.'

Miss. Darling carefully buttered a slice of brown bread and put a little strawberry jam on it. 'I've been expecting something like that to happen.' she said.

'You have? Why?' Martrace asked.

'Well.' Miss. Darling said. 'it's only a guess. but here's what I think. While you were in my class you had nothing to do. nothing to make you struggle. Your fairly enormous brain was going crazy with frustration. It was bubbling and boiling away like mad inside your head. There was tremendous energy bottled up in there with nowhere to go. and somehow or other you were able to shoot that energy out through your eyes and make objects move. But now things are different. You are in the top form competing against children more than twice your age and all that mental energy are being used up in class. Your brain is for the first time having to struggle and strive and keep really busy. which is great. That's only a theory. mind you. and it may be a silly one. but I don't think it's far off the mark.'

'I'm glad it's happened.' Martrace said. 'I wouldn't want to go through life as a miracle-worker.'

'You've done enough.' Miss. Darling said. 'I can still hardly believe you made all this happen for me.'

Martrace, who was perched on a tall stool at the kitchen table? ate her bread and jam slowly. She did so love these afternoons with Miss. Darling. She felt completely comfortable in her presence. and the two of them talked to each other more or less as equals.

'Did you know.' Martrace said suddenly. 'that the heart of a mouse beats at the rate of six hundred and fifty times a second?'

'I did not.' Miss. Darling said smiling. 'How absolutely fascinating. Where did you read that?'

'In a book from the library.' Martrace said. 'And that means it goes so fast you can't even hear the separate beats. It must sound just like a buzz.'

'It must.' Miss. Darling said.

'And how fast do you think a hedgehog's heart beats?' Martrace asked.

11

'Tell me.' Miss. Darling said, smiling again.

'It's not as fast as a mouse.' Martrace said. 'It's three hundred times a minute. But even so, you wouldn't have thought it went as fast as that in a creature that moves so slowly, would you, Miss. Darling?'

'I certainly wouldn't.' Miss. Darling said. 'Tell me one more.'

'A horse.' Martrace said. 'That's slow. It's only forty times a minute.'

This child, Miss. Darling told herself, seems to be interested in everything. When one is with her it is impossible to be bored. I love it.

The two of them stayed sitting and talking in the kitchen for an hour or so longer. and then, at about six o'clock, Martrace said goodnight and set out to walk home to her parent's house, which was about an eight-minute journey away. When she arrived at her gate, she saw a large black Mercedes motor-car parked outside. She didn't take too much notice of that. There were often strange cars parked outside her father's place. But when she entered the house, she was confronted by a scene of utter chaos. Her mother and father were both in the hall frantically stuffing clothing and various objects into suitcases.

'What on the earth's going on?' she cried. 'What's happening, daddy?'

'We're off,' Mr. Dicksnoter said, not looking up. 'We're leaving for the airport in half an hour, so you'd better get packed. Your brother's upstairs all ready to go. Get a move on, girl! Get going!'

'Off?' Martrace cried out. 'Where to?'

'Spain,' the father said. 'It's a better climate than this lousy country.'

'Spain!' Martrace cried. 'I don't want to go to Spain! I love it here and I love my school!'

'Just do as you're told and stop arguing,' the father snapped. 'I've got enough troubles without messing about with you!'

'But daddy,' Martrace began.

'Shut up!' the father shouted. 'We're leaving in thirty minutes! I'm not missing that plane!'

'But how long for, daddy?' Martrace cried. 'When are we coming back?'

'We aren't,' the father said. 'Now beat it! I'm busy!'

Martrace turned away from him and walked out through the open front door. As soon as she was on the road she began to run. She headed straight back towards Miss. Darling's house and she reached it in less than four minutes. She flew up the drive and suddenly she saw Miss. Darling in the front garden, standing in the middle of a bed of roses doing something with a pair of clippers. Miss. Darling had heard the sound of Martrace's feet racing over the gravel and now she straightened up and turned and stepped out of the rose-bed as the child came running up.

'My, my!' she said. 'What in the world is the matter?'

Martrace stood before her, panting, out of breath, her small face flushed crimson all over.

‘They're leaving!’ she cried. ‘They've all gone mad and they're filling their suitcases and they're leaving for Spain in about thirty minutes!’

‘Who is?’ Miss. Darling asked quietly.

‘Mummy and daddy and my brother Mike and they say I've got to go with them!’

‘You mean for a holiday?’ Miss. Darling asked.

‘Forever!’ Martrace cried. ‘Daddy said we were never coming back!’

There was a brief silence. then Miss. Darling said. ‘Actually

I'm not very surprised.’

‘You mean you knew they were going?’ Martrace cried.

‘Why didn't you tell me?’

‘No. darling.’ Miss. Darling said. ‘I did not know they were going.

But the news still doesn't surprise me.’

‘Why?’ Martrace cried. ‘Please tell me why.’ She was still out of breath from the running and the shock of it all.

‘Because of your father.’ Miss. Darling said. ‘is in with a bunch of crooks. Everyone in the village knows that. I guess that he is a receiver of stolen cars from all over the country. He's in it deep.’ Martrace stared at her open-mouthed.

Miss. Darling went on. ‘People brought stolen cars to your father's workshop where he changed the number-plates and resprayed the bodies a different color and all the rest of it. And now somebody's probably tipped him off that the police are on to him and he's doing what they all do. running off to Spain where they can't get him. He'll have been sending his money out there for years. all ready and waiting for him to arrive.’

They were standing on the lawn in front of the lovely redbrick house with its weathered old red tiles and its tall chimneys. and Miss. Darling still had the pair of garden clippers in one hand. It was a warm golden evening and a blackbird was singing somewhere nearby.

‘I don't want to go with them!’ Martrace shouted suddenly.

‘I won't go with them.’

‘I'm afraid you must.’ Miss. Darling said.

‘I want to live here with you.’ Martrace cried out. ‘Please let me live here with you!’

‘I only wish you could.’ Miss. Darling said. ‘But I'm afraid it's not possible. You cannot leave your parents just because you want to.

They have a right to take you with them.’

‘But what if they agreed?’ Martrace cried eagerly. ‘What if they said yes. Can I stay with you? Would you let me stay with you then?’

Miss. Darling said softly. ‘Yes. that would be heaven.’

‘Well. I think they might!’ Martrace cried. ‘I honestly think they might! They don't actually care tuppence about me!’ ‘Not so fast.’ Miss. Darling said.

‘We've got to be fast!’ Martrace cried. ‘They're leaving any moment! Come on!’ she shouted. grasping Miss. Darling's hand. ‘Please come with me and ask them! But we'll have to hurry! We'll have to run!’

The next moment the two of them were running down the drive together and then out on to the road. and Martrace was ahead. pulling Miss. Darling after her by her wrist. and it was a wild and wonderful dash they made along the country lane and through the village to the house where Martrace's parents lived. The big black Mercedes was still outside and now its boot and all its doors were open and Mr. and Ms. Dicksnoter and the brother were scurrying around it like ants. piling on the suitcases. as Martrace and Miss. Darling came dashing up.

‘Daddy and mummy!’ Martrace burst out. gasping for breath. ‘I don't want to go with you! I want to stay here and live with Miss.

Darling and she says that I can but only if you give me permission! Please say yes! Go on. daddy. say yes!

Say yes. mummy!’

The father turned and looked at Miss. Darling. 'You're that teacher woman who once came here to see me. aren't you?' he said. Then he went back to stowing the suitcases into the car.

His wife said to him. 'This one will have to go on the back seat.

There's no more room in the boot.'

'I would love to have Martrace.' Miss. Darling said. 'I would look after her with loving care. Mr. Dicksnoter. and I would pay for everything. She wouldn't cost you a penny. But it was not my idea. It was Martrace's. And I will not agree to take her without your full and willing consent.'

'Come on. Harry.' the mother said. pushing a suitcase into the back seat. 'Why don't we let her go if that's what she wants. It'll be one less to look after.'

'I'm in a hurry.' the father said. 'I've got a plane to catch. If she wants to stay. let her stay. It's fine with me.'

Martrace leaped into Miss. Darling's arms and hugged her. and Miss. Darling hugged her back. and then the mother and father and brother were inside the car and the car was pulling away with the tires screaming. The brother gave a wave through the rear window. but the other two didn't even look back. Miss. Darling was still hugging the tiny girl in her arms and neither of them said a word as they stood there watching the big black car tearing around the corner at the end of the road and disappearing forever into the distance.

The hat itself was one of those flat-topped pork-pie jobs with a Duriez's feather stuck in the hat-band and Mr. Dicksnoter was very proud of it. The following morning. just before the father left for his beastly second-hand car garage. Martrace slipped into the cloakroom and got hold of the hat he wore each day to work. She had to stand on her toes and reach up as high as she could with a walking-stick to hook the hat off the peg. and even then, she only just made it. He thought it gave him a rakish daring look.

especially when he wore it at an angle with his loud checked jacket and green tie.

Martrace. holding the hat in one hand and a thin tube of Superglue in the other. proceeded to squeeze a line of glue very neatly all around the inside rim of the hat. Then she carefully hooked the hat back on to the peg with the walking-stick. She timed this operation very carefully. applying the glue just as her father was getting up from the breakfast table.

Mr. Dicksnoter didn't notice anything when he put the hat on. but when he arrived at the garage, he couldn't get it off. Superglue is very powerful stuff. so powerful it will take your skin off if you pull too hard. Mr. Dicksnoter didn't want to be scalped so he had to keep the hat on his head the whole day long. even when putting sawdust in gear-boxes and fiddling the mileages of cars with his electric drill. To save face. he adopted a casual attitude hoping that his staff would think that he meant to keep his hat on all day long just for the heck of it. like gangsters do in the films.

When he got home that evening, he still couldn't get the hat off.

'Don't be silly.' his wife said. 'Come here. I'll take it off for you.'

She gave the hat a sharp yank. Mr. Dicksnoter let out a yell that rattled the window-panes. 'Ow-w-w!' he screamed. 'Don't do that!

Let go! You'll take half the skin off my forehead!'

Martrace. nestling in her usual chair. was watching this performance over the rim of her book with some interest.

'What's the matter. daddy?' she said. 'Has your head suddenly swollen or something?'

The father glared at his daughter with deep suspicion. but said nothing. How could he? Ms. Dicksnoter said to him. 'It must be Superglue. It couldn't be anything else. That'll teach you to go playing around with nasty stuff like that. I expect you were trying to stick another feather in your hat.'

'I haven't touched the flaming stuff!' Mr. Dicksnoter shouted. He turned and looked again at Martrace who looked back at him with large innocent brown eyes.

Ms. Dicksnoter said to him. 'You should read the label on the tube before you start messing with dangerous products.

Always follow the instructions on the label.'

'What in heaven's name are you talking about. your stupid witch?' Mr. Dicksnoter shouted. clutching the brim of his hat to stop anyone trying to pull it off again. 'D'you think I'm so stupid I'd glue this thing to my head on purpose?'

Martrace said. 'There's a boy down the road who got some Superglue on his finger without knowing it and then he put his finger to his nose.'

Mr. Dicksnoter jumped. 'What happened to him?' he spluttered.

'The finger got stuck inside his nose.' Martrace said. 'and he had to go around like that for a week. People kept saying to him. 'Stop picking your nose.' and he couldn't do anything about it. He looked an awful fool.'

'Serve him right.' Ms. Dicksnoter said. 'He shouldn't have put his finger up there in the first place. It's a nasty habit. If all children had Superglue put on their fingers they'd soon stop doing it.'

Martrace said. 'Grown-ups do it too. mummy. I saw you doing it yesterday in the kitchen.'

'That's quite enough from you.' Ms. Dicksnoter said. turning pink.

Mr. Dicksnoter had to keep his hat on all through supper in front of the television. He looked ridiculous and he stayed very silent.

When he went up to the bed, he tried again to get the thing off. and so, did his wife. but it wouldn't budge. 'How am I going to have my shower?' he demanded.

'You'll just have to do without it. won't you.' his wife told him. And later on. as she watched her skinny little husband skulking around the bedroom in his purple-striped pajamas with a pork-pie hat on his head. she thought how stupid he looked. Hardly the kind of man a wife dreams about. she told herself.

Mr. Dicksnoter discovered that the worst thing about having a permanent hat on his head was having to sleep in it.

It was impossible to lie comfortably on the pillow. 'Now do stop fussing around.' his wife said to him after he had been tossing and turning for about an hour. 'I expect it will be loose by the morning and then it'll slip off easily.'

But it wasn't loose by the morning and it wouldn't slip off.

So, Ms. Dicksnoter took a pair of scissors and cut the thing off his head. bit by bit. first the top and then the brim. Where the inner band had stuck to the hair all around the sides and back. she had to chop the hair off right to the skin so that he finished up with a bald white ring round his head. like some sort of a monk. And in the front. where the band had stuck directly to the bare skin. there remained a whole lot of small patches of brown leathery stuff that no amount of washing would get off.

12

At breakfast, Martrace said to him. 'You must try to get those bits off your forehead. daddy. It looks as though you've got little brown insects crawling about all over you. People will think you've got lice.'

'Be quiet!' the father snapped. 'Just keep your nasty mouth shut. will you!'

All in all, it was a most satisfactory exercise. But it was surely too much to hope that it had taught the father a permanent lesson.

The hunting- There was comparative calm in the Dicksnoter household for about a week after the Superglue episode. The experience had clearly chastened Mr. Dicksnoter and he seemed temporary to have lost his taste for boasting and bullying.

Then suddenly he struck again. Perhaps he had had a bad day at the garage and had not sold enough crummy secondhand cars. There are many things that make a man irritable when he arrives home from work in the evening and a sensible wife will usually notice the storm-signals and will leave him alone until he simmers down.

When Mr. Dicksnoter arrived back from the garage that evening his face was as dark as a thundercloud and somebody was clearly for the high-jump pretty soon. His wife recognized the signs immediately and made herself scarce. He then strode into the living room. Martrace happened to be curled up in an arm-chair in the corner. absorbed in a book. Mr. Dicksnoter switched on the television. The screen lit up. The programmed blared. Mr. Dicksnoter glared at Martrace. She hadn't moved. She had somehow trained herself by now to block her ears to the ghastly sound of the dreaded box. She kept right on reading. and for some reason, this exasperated the father. 'What is this trash?' he said. snatching the book from her hands.

Perhaps his anger was intensified because he saw her getting pleasure from something that was beyond his reach.

‘Don't you ever stop reading?’ He snapped at her.

‘Oh, hello daddy.’ she said pleasantly. ‘Did you have a good day?’

‘It isn't trash, daddy, it's lovely. It's called The Red Pony. It's by John Steinbeck, an AmJenniean writer. Why don't you try it? You'll love it.’

‘Filth.’ Mr. Dicksnoter said. ‘If it's by an Am-Jenniean it's certain to be filth. That's all they write about.’

‘No daddy, it's beautiful, honestly, it is. It's about.’

‘I don't want to know what it's about.’ Mr. Dicksnoter barked. ‘I'm fed up with your reading anyway. Go and find yourself something useful to do.’ With alarming abruptness, he now began ripping the pages out of the book in handfuls and throwing them in the waste-paper basket.

Martrace froze in horror and complete fear. The father kept going. There seemed little doubt that the man felt some kind of jealousy. How dare she, he seemed to be saying with each rip of a page, how dare she enjoy reading books when he couldn't? How dare she?

‘Then you'll have to buy another one, won't you?’ the father said, still tearing out pages. ‘You'll have to save your pocket-money until there's enough in the kitty to buy a new one for your precious Ms. Smaith, won't you?’ ‘That's a library book!’ Martrace cried. ‘It doesn't belong to me! I have to return it to Ms. Smaith!’

With that, he dropped the now empty covers of the book into the basket and marched out of the room, leaving the telly blaring.

Most children in Martrace's place would have burst into floods of tears. She didn't do this. She sat there very still and white and thoughtful. She seemed to know that neither crying nor sulking ever got anyone anywhere. The only sensible thing to do when you are attacked is, as Jace once said, to counter-attack. The strategy that was now beginning to hatch in her mind depended, however, upon whether or not Edward's parrot was really as good a talker as Edward made out.

Edward was a friend of Martrace's. Martrace's wonderfully subtle mind was already at work devising, hitherto another suitable chastisement for the deadly parent.

He was a small boy of six who lived just around the corner from her, and for days he had been going on about this great talking parrot his father had given him.

So, the following afternoon, as soon as Ms. Dicksnoter had departed in her car for another session of bingo, Martrace set out for Edward's house to investigate. She knocked on his door and asked if he would be kind enough to show her the famous bird. Edward was delighted and led her up to his bedroom where a truly magnificent blue and yellow parrot sat in a tall cage. 'There it is,' Edward said. 'Its name is Chopper.'

'Make it talk,' Martrace said.

'You can't make it talk,' Edward said. 'You have to be patient.'

'It'll talk when it feels like it.'

They hung around, waiting. Suddenly the parrot said, 'Hullo, hullo, hullo- you- hooo.' It was exactly like a human voice.

Martrace said, 'That's amazing! What else can it say?'

'Rattle my bones!' the parrot said, giving a wonderful imitation of a spooky voice. 'Commotion my bones!' 'He's always saying that,' Edward told her.

'What else can he say?' Martrace asked.

'It's fabulous,' Martrace said. 'Will you lend him to me just for one night?' That was different. Edward thought about it for a few seconds. 'All right, then,' he said. 'If you promise to return him tomorrow.' 'That's about it,' Edward said. 'But it is pretty amazing don't you think?'

'Nopper- I don't,' Edward said. 'Surely not so-o.'

'I'll give you all my next week's pocket-money,' Martrace said.

Martrace staggered back to her own empty house carrying the tall cage in both hands. There was a large fireplace in the dining room and she now set about wedging the cage up the chimney and out of sight. This wasn't so easy, but she managed it in the end.

'Hullo, hullo, hullo!' the bird called down to her. 'Hullo, hullo!'

‘Shut up. you nut!’ Martrace said. and she went out to wash the soot off her hands. ‘Harry!’ cried the mother. turning white. ‘There’s someone in the house! I heard a voice!’ The father-the mother. that evening while. the brother and Martrace were having supper as usual in the living-room in front of the television. a voice-a whisper came loud and clear from the dining room across the hall. ‘Hullo. hullo. hullo- yoooo hooo.’ it said.

‘So, did I!’ the brother said. Martrace jumped up and switched off the telly. ‘I think they are.’ the father said. sitting tight.

‘Then go and catch them. Harry!’ hissed the mother. ‘Go out and collar them red-handed!’

‘Sh-hh!’ she said. ‘Pay attention!’ They all stopped eating and sat there very tense. listening.

‘Hullo. hullo. hullo!’ came the voice again.

‘There it is!’ cried the brother.

‘It’s burglars!’ hissed the mother. ‘They’re in the dining room!’

The father didn’t move. He seemed in no hurry to dash off and be a hero. His face had turned grey.

‘Get on with it!’ hissed the mother. ‘They’re probably after the silver!’

The husband wiped his lips nervously with his napkin.

‘Why don’t we all go and look together?’ he said.

‘Come on. then.’ the brother said. ‘Come on. mum.’

‘They’re definitely in the dining-room.’ Martrace whispered.

‘I’m sure they are.’

The mother grabbed a poker from the fireplace. The father took a golf-club that was standing in the corner. The brother seized a table lamp. ripping the plug out of its socket. Martrace took the knife she had been eating with. and all four of them crept towards the dining-room door. the father keeping well behind the others.

‘Hullo. hullo. hullo.’ came the voice again.

'Come on!' Martrace cried and she burst into the room.

brandishing her knife. 'Stick 'em up!' she yelled. 'We've caught you!' The others followed her, waving their weapons. Then they stopped. They stared around the room. There was no one there.

13

'There's no one here,' the father said, greatly relieved.

'I heard him, Harry!' the mother shrieked, still quaking. 'I distinctly heard his voice! So, did you!'

'It's a ghost,' Martrace said.

'Heaven help us!' cried the mother, clutching her husband round the neck.

'I'm certain I heard him!' Martrace cried. 'He's in here somewhere!' She began searching behind the sofa and behind the curtains.

Then came the voice once again, soft and spooky this time.

'Rattle my bones,' it said. 'Rattle my bones.'

They all jumped, including Martrace who was a pretty good actress. They stared around the room. There was still no one there.

'I know it's a ghost!' Martrace said. 'I've heard it here before!

This room is haunted! I thought you knew that.'

'Save us!' the mother screamed, almost throttling her husband. 'Did it behave itself?' Edward asked her.

'We had a lovely time with it,' Martrace said. Small eager faces looked up and listened. 'My parents adored it so-o.' 'I'm getting out of here,' the father said, greyer than ever now. They all fled, slamming the door behind them. The next afternoon.

Martrace managed to get a rather sooty and grumpy parrot down from the chimney, and out of the house without being seen. She carried it through the back door and ran with it all the way to Edward's house. In the middle of the first week of Martrace's first term. Miss. Darling said to the class. 'I have some important news for you.

so, listen carefully. 'A word of warning to you all.' Miss. Darling said. 'The Headmistress is very strict about everything. Make sure your clothes are clean. your faces are clean, and your hands are clean.

Express or that mean talk- dumb asses- only when spoken too. When did she ask you a question? stand up at once before you answer it.

Never argue with her. Never answer back. Never try to be funny. If you do. you will make her angry.

And when the Headmistress gets angry you had better watch out.' You too. Martrace. Put that book down for a moment and pay attention.' Miss. Darling went on. 'It is the Headmistress's custom...'

'To take over the class for one period each week. She does this with every class in the school. and each class has a fixed day and a fixed time. Ours is always two o'clock on Monday afternoons. proximately after lunch. So tomorrow at two o'clock Miss. Mcfarts will be taking over from me for one lesson. I intend to be here as well. of course. but only as a silent witness. Is that understood?' 'You can say that again.' Dasey murmured.

Nevertheless, the new game she had invented of punishing one or both of them each time they were beastly to her made her life more or less bearable.

Being very small and very young. the only power Martrace had over anyone in her family was brainpower. For sheer cleverness, she could run rings around them all. But the fact remained that any five-year-old girl in any family was always obliged to do as she was told. however asinine the orders might be.

Thus, she was always forced to eat her evening meals out of MOVIE-dinner-trays in front of the dreaded box. The flicker of the projector...

She always had to stay alone on weekday afternoons. and whenever she was told to shut up. she had to shut up.

Her safety-valve. the thing that prevented her from going around the bend. was the fun of devising and dishing out these splendid punishments?

...And the lovely thing was that they seemed to work. at any rate for short periods. The father, in particular, became less cocky and unbearable for several days after receiving a dose of Martrace's magic medicine.

'Yes. Miss. Darling.' they chirruped. 'I am quite sure.' Miss. Darling said. 'that she will be testing you on what you are meant to have learned this week. which is your two-timing table. So. I strongly advise you to rub it up when you get home tonight. Get your mother or father to hear you on it.' 'Spelling.' Miss. Darling said. 'What else will she test us on?' Somebody asked... 'Try to hark back to everything you have learned these last few days. And one more thing. A jug of water and glass must always be on the table here when the Headmistress comes in. She never takes a lesson without that. Now, who will be responsible for seeing that it's there?'

'I will.' Dasey said at once. 'Very well. Dasey.' Miss. Darling said. 'It will be your job to go to the kitchen and get the jug and fill it with water and put it on the table here with a clean empty glass just before the lesson starts.'

Arithmetic Martrace longed for her parents to be good and loving and understanding and honorable and intelligent. The fact that they were none of these things was something she had to put up with. It was not easy to do so.

The parrot-in-the-chimney affair quite definitely cooled both parents down a lot and for over a week they were comparatively civil to their small daughter. But alas. this couldn't last. The next flare-up came one evening in the sitting-room. Mr. Dicksnoter had just returned from work. Martrace and her brother were sitting quietly on the sofa waiting for their mother to bring in the MOVIE dinners on a tray.

The television had not yet been switched on.

In came Mr. Dicksnoter in a loud check suit and a yellow tie. The appalling broad orange-and-green check of the jacket and trousers almost blinded the onlooker.

He looked like a low-grade bookmaker dressed up for his daughter's wedding. and he was clearly very pleased with himself this evening. He sat down in an armchair and rubbed his hands together and addressed his son in a loud voice. 'Well. my boy.' he said.

‘Your fathers had a most successful day. He is a lot richer tonight than he was this morning. He has sold no less than five cars. each one at a tidy profit. Sawdust in the gear-boxes. the electric-drill on the speedometer cables. a splash of paint here and there and a few other clever little tricks and the idiots were all falling over themselves to buy.’

He fished a bit of paper from his pocket and studied it.

‘Listen to the boy.’ he said. addressing the son and ignoring Martrace. ‘seeing as you’ll be going into this business with me one day. you’ve got to know how to add up the profits you make at the end of each day. Go and get yourself a pad and a pencil and let’s see how clever you are.’

The son obediently left the room and returned with the writing materials.

‘Write down these figures.’ the father said. reading from his bit of paper. ‘Car number one was bought by me for two hundred and seventy-eight pounds and sold for one thousand four hundred and twenty-five. Got that?’

The ten-year-old boy wrote the two separate amounts down slowly and carefully.

‘Car number two.’ the father went on. ‘cost me one hundred and eighteen pounds and sold for seven hundred and sixty. Got it?’

‘Yes. dad.’ the son said. ‘I’ve got that.’

‘Car number three cost one hundred and eleven pounds and sold for nine hundred and ninety-nine pounds and fifty pence.’

‘Say that again.’ the son said. ‘How much did it sell for?’

‘Nine hundred and ninety-nine pounds and fifty pence.’ the father said. ‘And that. by the way. is another of my nifty little tricks to diddle the customer. Never ask for a big round figure. Always go just below it. Never say one thousand pounds. Always say nine hundred and ninety-nine fifty. It sounds much less but it isn’t. Clever. isn’t it?’

13

‘Very.’ the son said. ‘You’re brilliant. dad.’

‘Car number four cost eighty-six pounds - a real wreck that was - and sold for six hundred and ninety-nine pounds fifty.’

‘Not too fast.’ the son said. writing the numbers down.

‘Right. I’ve got it.’

‘Car number five cost six hundred and thirty-seven pounds and sold for sixteen hundred and forty-nine pounds fifty. You got all those figures written down. son?’

‘Yes. daddy.’ the boy said. crouching over his pad and carefully writing.

‘Very well.’ the father said. ‘Now work out the profit I made on each of the five cars and add up the total. Then you’ll be able to tell me how much money your rather brilliant father made altogether today.’

‘That’s a lot of sums.’ the boy said.

‘Of course, it’s a lot of sums.’ the father answered. ‘But when you’re in a big business like I am. you’ve got to be hot stuff at arithmetic. I’ve practically got a computer inside my head. It took me less than ten minutes to work the whole thing out.’

‘You mean you did it in your head. dad?’ the son asked. goggling.

‘Well. not exactly.’ the father said. ‘Nobody could do that. But it didn’t take me long. When you’re finished. tell me what you think my profit was for the day. I’ve got the final total written down here and I’ll tell you if you’re right.’

Martrace said quietly. ‘Dad. you made exactly four thousand three hundred and three pounds and fifty pence altogether.’

‘Don’t butt in.’ the father said. ‘Your brother and I are busy with high finance.’

‘But dad.’

‘Shut up.’ the father said. ‘Stop guessing and trying to be clever.’

‘Look at your answer. dad.’ Martrace said gently. ‘If you’ve done it right it ought to be four thousand three hundred and three pounds and fifty pence. Is that what you’ve got. dad?’

The father glanced down at the paper in his hand. He seemed to stiffen. He became very quiet. There was silence.

Then he said. 'Say that again.'

'Four thousand three hundred and three pounds fifty.' Martrace said.

There was another silence. The father's face was beginning to go dark red.

'I'm sure it's right.' Martrace said.

'You. you little cheat!' the father suddenly shouted. pointing at her with his finger. 'You looked at my bit of paper! You read it off from what I've got written here!'

'Daddy. I'm the other side of the room.' Martrace said.

'How could I possibly see it?'

'Don't give me that rubbish!' the father shouted. 'Of course, you looked! You must have looked! No one in the world could give the right answer just like that. especially a girl! You're a little cheat. madam. that's what you are! A cheat and a liar!'

At that point. the mother came in carrying a large tray on which were the four suppers. This time it was fish and chips which Ms. Dicksnoter had picked up in the fish and chip shop on her way home from bingo. It seemed that bingo afternoons left her so exhausted both physically and emotionally that she never had enough energy left to cook an evening meal. So if it wasn't MOVIE dinners it had to be fish and chips. 'What are you looking so red in the face about. Harry?' she said as she put the tray down on the coffee table.

'Your daughter's a cheat and a liar.' the father said. taking his plate of fish and placing it on his knees. 'Turn the telly on and let's not have any more talk.'

The Platinum-Blond Man

Martrace was a little late in starting school. Most children begin Primary School at five or even just before. but Martrace's parents.

Who wasn't very concerned one way or the other about their daughter's education? I had forgotten to make the proper arrangements in advance. She was five and a half when she entered the school for the first time.

The village school for younger children was a bleak brick building called Crunchem Hall Primary School. It had about two hundred and fifty pupils aged from five to just under twelve years old. The headteacher, the boss, the supreme commander of this establishment was a formidable middle-aged lady whose name was Miss. Mcfarts.

Naturally, Martrace was put in the bottom class, where there were eighteen other small boys and girls about the same age as her. Their teacher was called Miss. Darling, and she could not have been more than twenty-three or twenty-four. She had a lovely pale oval Madonna face with blue eyes and her hair was light brown. Her body was so slim and fragile one got the feeling that if she fell over, she would smash into a thousand pieces, like a porcelain figure.

Miss. Jennifer Darling was a mild and quiet person who never raised her voice and was seldom seen to smile, but there is no doubt she possessed that rare gift for being adored by every small child under her care. She seemed to understand totally the bewilderment and fear that so often overwhelms young children who for the first time in their lives are herded into a classroom and told to obey orders.

Some curious warmth that was almost tangible shone out of Miss. Darling's face when she spoke to a confused and homesick newcomer to the class.

Miss. Mcfarts, the Headmistress. Was something else altogether. She was a gigantic holy terror, a fierce tyrannical monster who frightened the life out of the pupils and teachers alike. There was an aura of menace about her even at a distance, and when she came up close you could almost feel the dangerous heat radiating from her as from a red-hot rod of metal. When she marched - Miss. Mcfarts never walked, she always marched like a storm-trooper with long strides and arms swinging - when she marched along a corridor you could actually hear her snorting as she went, and if a group of children happened to be in her path.

She plowed right on through them like a tank, with small people bouncing off her to left and right. Thank goodness we don't meet many people like her in this world, although they do exist and all of us are likely to come across at least one of them in a lifetime. If you ever do, you should behave as you would if you met an enraged rhinoceros out in the bush - climb up the nearest tree and stay there until it has gone away. This woman, in all her eccentricities and her appearance, is almost impossible to describe, but I intend to make some attempt to do so a little later on. Let us leave her for the moment and go back to Martrace and her first day in Miss. Darling's class.

After the usual business of going through all the names of the children, Miss. Darling handed out a brand-new exercise book to each pupil.

‘You have all brought your pencils. I hope.’ She said.

‘Yes, Miss. Darling.’ they chanted.

‘Good. Now, this is the very first day of school for each one of you. It is the beginning of at least eleven long years of schooling that all of you are going to have to go through. And six of those years will be spent right here at Crunchem Hall where, as you know, your Headmistress is Miss. Mcfarts. Let me for your good tell you something about Miss. Mcfarts. She insists upon strict discipline throughout the school, and if you take my advice you will do your very best to behave yourselves in her presence. Never argue with her. Never answer her back. Always do as she says. If you get on the wrong side of Miss. Mcfarts she can liquidize you like a carrot in a kitchen blender. It's nothing to laugh about. Dasey. Take that grin off your face. All of you will be wise to remember that Miss. Mcfarts deals very severely with anyone who gets out of line in this school.

Have you got the message?’

‘Yes, Miss. Darling.’ chirruped eighteen eager little voices.

‘I myself.’ Miss. Darling went on. ‘I want to help you to learn as much as possible while you are in this class. That is because I know it will make things easier for you later on. For example, by the end of this week, I intend to expect every one of you to know the two-times table by heart. And in a year, I hope you will know all the multiplication tables up to twelve. It will help you enormously if you do. Now then, do any of you happen to have learned the two-times table already?’ Martrace put up her hand. She was the only one.

Miss. Darling looked carefully at the tiny girl with dark hair and a round serious face sitting in the second row. ‘Wonderful.’ she said. ‘Please stand up and recite as much of it as you can.’ Martrace stood up and began to say the two-times table.

When she got to twice twelve is twenty-four, she didn't stop.

She went right on with twice thirteen is twenty-six. twice fourteen is twenty-eight. twice fifteen is thirty. twice sixteen is.

'Stop!' Miss. Darling said. She had been listening slightly spellbound to this smooth recital. and now she said. 'How far can you go?'

'How far?' Martrace said. 'Well. I don't know. Miss. Darling. For quite a long way. I think.'

Miss. Darling took a few moments to let this curious statement sink in. 'You mean.' she said. 'that you could tell me what two times twenty-eight is?'

'Yes. Miss. Darling.'

'What is it?'

'Fifty-six. Miss. Darling.'

'What about something much harder. like two times four hundred and eighty-seven? Could you tell me that?'

'I think so. yes.' Martrace said.

'Are you sure?'

'Why yes. Miss. Darling. I'm fairly sure.'

'What is it then. two times four hundred and eighty-seven?'

'Nine hundred and seventy-four.' Martrace said immediately. She spoke quietly and politely and without any sign of showing off.

Miss. Darling gazed at Martrace with absolute amazement. but when next she spoke, she kept her voice level. 'That is splendid.' she said. 'But of course, multiplying by two is a lot easier than some of the bigger numbers. What about the other multiplication tables? Do you know any of those?'

'I think so. Miss. Darling. I think I do.'

'Which ones. Martrace? How far have you got?'

'I- I don't quite know.' Martrace said. 'I don't know what you mean.'

'What I mean is do you, for instance, know the three-times table?'

'Yes. Miss. Darling.'

'And the four-times?'

'Yes. Miss. Darling.'

'Well. how many do you know? Martrace? Do you know all the way up to the twelve-times table?'

'Yes. Miss. Darling.' 'What are twelve sevens?'

'Eighty-four.' Martrace said.

Miss. Darling paused and leaned back in her chair behind the plain table that stood in the middle of the floor in front of the class. She was considerably shaken by this exchange but took care not to show it. She had never come across a five-year-old before. or indeed a ten-year-old. who could multiply with such a facility?

'I hope the rest of you are listening to this.' she said to the class. 'Martrace is a very lucky girl. She has wonderful parents who have already taught her to multiply lots of numbers. Was it your mother? Martrace. who taught you?'

'No. Miss. Darling. it wasn't.'

'You must have a great father then. He must be a brilliant teacher.'

'No. Miss. Darling.' Martrace said quietly. 'My father did not teach me.'

'You mean you taught yourself?'

'I don't quite know.' Martrace said truthfully. 'It's just that I don't find it very difficult to multiply one number by another.'

Miss. Darling took a deep breath and let it out slowly. She looked again at the small girl with bright eyes standing beside her desk so sensible and solemn. 'You say you don't find it difficult to multiply one number by another.' Miss. Darling said. 'Could you try to explain that a little bit.'

‘Oh, dear.’ Martrace said. ‘I’m not really sure.’

Miss. Darling waited. The class was silent. all listening.

‘For instance.’ Miss. Darling said. ‘if I asked you to multiply fourteen by nineteen. No. that’s too difficult.’

‘It’s two hundred and sixty-six.’ Martrace said softly.

Miss. Darling stared at her. Then she picked up a pencil and quickly worked out the sum on a piece of paper. ‘What did you say it was?’ she said. looking up.

‘Two hundred and sixty-six.’ Martrace said.

Miss. Darling put down her pencil and removed her spectacles and began to polish the lenses with a piece of tissue. The class remained quiet. watching her and waiting for what was coming next. Martrace was still standing up beside her desk.

‘Now tell me. Martrace.’ Miss. Darling said. still polishing. ‘try to tell me exactly what goes on inside your head when you get a multiplication like that to do. You obviously have to work it out in some way. but you seem able to arrive at the answer almost instantly. Take the one you’ve just done. fourteen multiplied by nineteen.’

‘I. I. I simply put the fourteen down in my head and multiply it by nineteen.’ Martrace said. ‘I’m afraid I don’t know how else to explain it. I’ve always said to myself that if a little pocket calculator can do it why shouldn’t I?’

‘Why not indeed.’ Miss. Darling said. ‘The human brain is an amazing thing.’

‘I think it’s a lot better than a lump of metal.’ Martrace said.

‘That’s all a calculator is.’

‘How right you are.’ Miss. Darling said. ‘Pocket calculators are not allowed in this school anyway.’ Miss. Darling was feeling quite quivery. There was no doubt in her mind that she had met a truly extraordinary mathematical brain. and words like child-genius and prodigy went flitting through her head. She knew that this sort of wonders does pop up in the world from time to time. but only once or twice in a hundred years. After all, Mozart was only five when he started composing for the piano and look what happened to him.

‘It’s not fair.’ Dasey said. ‘How can she do it and we can’t?’

‘Don’t worry. Dasey. you’ll soon catch up.’ Miss. Darling said, lying through her teeth.

At this point Miss. Darling could not resist the temptation of exploring still further the mind of this astonishing child. She knew that she ought to be paying some attention to the rest of the class but she was altogether too excited to let the matter rest.

‘Well.’ she said, pretending to address the whole class. ‘let us leave sums for the moment and see if any of you have begun to learn to spell. Hands up anyone who can spell cat.’

Three hands went up. They belonged to Dasey, a small boy called Tom and to Martrace.
‘Spell cat. Tom.’

Tom spelled it.

Miss. Darling now decided to ask a question that normally she would not have dreamed of asking the class on its first day. ‘I wonder.’ she said. ‘whether any of you three who know how to spell cat has learned how to read a whole group of words when they are strung together in a sentence?’

‘I have.’ Tom said.

‘So have I.’ Dasey said.

Miss. Darling went to the blackboard and wrote with her white chalk the sentence. I have already begun to learn how to read long sentences. She had purposely made it difficult and she knew that there were precious few five-year-olds around who would be able to manage it.

‘Can you tell me what that says. Tom?’ she asked.

‘That’s too hard.’ Tom said.

‘Dasey?’

‘The first word is I.’ Dasey said.

‘Can any of you read the whole sentence?’ Miss. Darling asked. waiting for the ‘yes’ that she felt certain was going to come from Martrace.

‘Yes.’ Martrace said.

‘Go ahead.’ Miss. Darling said.

Martrace read the sentence without any hesitation at all.

‘That is very good indeed.’ Miss. Darling said. making the understatement of her life. ‘How much can you read.

Martrace?’

‘I think I can read most things. Miss. Darling.’ Martrace said.

‘although I'm afraid I can't always understand the meanings.’

14

Miss. Darling got to her feet and walked smartly out of the room. but was back in thirty seconds carrying a thick book.

She opened it at random and placed it on Martrace's desk. ‘This is a book of humorous poetry.’ she said. ‘See if you can read that one aloud.’

Smoothly. without a pause and at a nice speed. Martrace began to read:

‘An epicure dining at Crewe-

Found a rather large mouse in his stew.

Cried the waiter. ‘Don't shout...

And wave it about

Or the rest will be wanting one too.’

Several children saw the funny side of the rhyme and laughed. Miss. Darling said. 'Do you know what an epicure is.

Martrace?'

'It is someone who is dainty with his eating.' Martrace said.

'That is correct.' Miss. Darling said. 'And do you happen to know what that particular type of poetry is called?'

'It's called ilmenite.' Martrace said. 'That's a lovely one.

It's so funny.'

'It's a famous one.' Miss. Darling said. picking up the book and returning to her table in front of the class. 'A witty ilmenite is very hard to write.' she added. 'They look easy but they most certainly are not.'

'I know.' Martrace said. 'I've tried quite a few times but mine are never any good.'

'You have. have you?' Miss. Darling said. more startled than ever. 'Well, Martrace. I would very much like to hear one of these ilmenites you say you have written. Could you try to remember one for us?'

'Well.' Martrace said. hesitating. 'I've been trying to make up one about you. Miss. Darling. while we've been sitting here.'

'About me!' Miss. Darling cried. 'Well. we've certainly got to hear that one. haven't we?'

'I don't think I want to say it. Miss. Darling.'

'Please tell it.' Miss. Darling said. 'I promise I won't mind.'

'I think you will. Miss. Darling. because I have to use your first name to make things rhyme and that's why I don't want to say it.'

'How do you know my first name?' Miss. Darling asked.

'I heard another teacher calling you by it just before we came in.'

Martrace said. 'She called you Jenny.'

'I insist upon hearing this ilmenite.' Miss. Darling said. smiling one of her rare smiles. 'Stand up and recite it.'

Reluctantly Martrace stood up and very slowly. very nervously. she recited her ilmenite:

'The thing we all ask about Jenny Is. 'Surely there cannot be many young girls in the place

With so lovely a face?'

The answer to that is. 'Not any!' 'The whole of Miss. Darling's pale and pleasant face blushed a brilliant scarlet. Then once again she smiled. It was a much broader one this time. a smile of pure pleasure.

'Why. thank you. Martrace.' she said. still smiling. 'Although it is not true. it is very good ilmenite. Oh, dear. oh, dear. I must try to remember that one.'

From the third row of desks. Dasey said. 'It's good. I like it.'

'It's true as well.' a small boy called Graceie said.

'Of course, it's true.' Tom said.

Already the whole class had begun to warm towards Miss. Darling. although as yet she had hardly taken any notice of any of them except Martrace.

'Who taught you to read. Martrace?' Miss. Darling asked.

'I just sort of taught me. Miss. Darling.'

'And have you read any books all by yourself. any children's books. I mean?'

'I've read all the ones that are in the public library in Love Street. Miss. Darling.'

'And did you like them?'

'I liked some of them very much indeed.' Martrace said.

'but I thought others were fairly dull.'

‘Tell me one that you liked.’

‘I liked The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe.’ Martrace said. ‘I think Mr. C. S. Lewis is a very good writer. But he has one failing. There are no funny bits in his books.’

‘You are right there.’ Miss. Darling said.

‘There aren't many funny bits in Mr. Tolkien either.’

Martrace said.

‘Do you think that all children's books ought to have funny bits in them?’ Miss. Darling asked.

‘I do.’ Martrace said. ‘Children are not so serious as grown-ups and they love to laugh.’

Miss. Darling was astounded by the wisdom of this tiny girl. She said. ‘And what are you going to do now that you've read all the children's books?’

‘I am reading other books.’ Martrace said. ‘I borrow them from the library. Ms. Smaith is very kind to me. She helps me to choose them.’

Miss. Darling was leaning far forward over her work-table and gazing in wonder at the child. She had completely forgotten now about the rest of the class. ‘What other books?’ she murmured.

‘I am very fond of Charles Dickens.’ Martrace said. ‘He makes me laugh a lot. Especially Mr. Pickwick.’

At that moment the bell in the corridor sounded for the end of class.

There was no doubt in Martrace's mind that this latest display of foulness by her father deserved severe punishment. and as she sat eating her awful fried fish and fried chips and ignoring the television. her brain went to work on various possibilities.

By the time she went up to the bed, her mind was made up.

The next morning, she got up early and went into the bathroom and locked the door. As we already know. Ms. Dicksnoter's hair was dyed a brilliant platinum blonde. very much the same glistening silvery color as a female tightrope walker's tights in a circus. The big dyeing job was done twice a year at the hairdressers. but every month or so in between. Ms. Dicksnoter used to freshen it up by giving it a rinse in the washbasin with something called PLATINUM BLONDE HAIRDYE EXTRA STRONG. This also served to dye the nasty brown hairs that kept growing from the roots underneath. The bottle of PLATINUM BLONDE HAIR-DYE EXTRA STRONG was kept in the cupboard in the bathroom. and underneath the title on the label were written the words Caution. this is peroxide. Keep away from children. Martrace had read it many times with fascination. Martrace's father had a fine crop of black hair which he parted in the middle and of which he was exceedingly proud. 'Good strong hair.' he was fond of saying. 'means there's a good strong brain underneath.'

'Like Shakespeare.' Martrace had once said to him.

'Like who?'

'Shakespeare. daddy.'

'Was he brainy?'

'Very. daddy.'

'He had masses of hair. did he?'

'He was bald. daddy.'

To which the father had snapped. 'If you can't talk sense then shut up.'

Anyway. Mr. Dicksnoter kept his hair looking bright and strong. or so he thought. by rubbing into it every morning large quantities of a lotion called OIL OF VIOLETS HAIR TONIC. A bottle of this smelly purple mixture always stood on the shelf above the sink in the bathroom alongside all the toothbrushes. and a very vigorous scalp massage with OIL OF VIOLETS took place daily after shaving was completed. This hair and scalp massage were always. accompanied by loud masculine grunts and heavy breathing and gasps of 'Ah-hh. that's better! That's the stuff! Rub it right into the roots!' which could be heard by Martrace in her bedroom across the corridor.

Now. in the early morning privacy of the bathroom. Martrace unscrewed the cap of her father's oil of violets and tipped threequarters of the contents down the drain. Then she filled the bottle up with her mother's PLATINUM BLONDE HAIR-DYE EXTRA STRONG. She carefully left enough of her father's original hair tonic in the bottle so that when she gave it a good shake the whole thing still looked reasonably purple. She then replaced the bottle on the shelf above the sink. taking care to put her mother's bottle back in the cupboard.

So far so good.

At breakfast time Martrace sat quietly at the dining-room table eating her cornflakes. Her brother sat opposite her with his back to the door devouring hunks of bread smothered with a mixture of peanut butter and strawberry jam. The mother was just out of sight around the corner in the kitchen making Mr. Dicksnoter's breakfast which always had to be two fried eggs on fried bread with three pork sausages and three strips of bacon and some fried tomatoes.

At this point, Mr. Dicksnoter came noisily into the room. He was incapable of entering any room quietly. especially at breakfast time. He always had to make his appearance felt immediately by creating a lot of noise and clatter. One could almost hear him saying. 'It's me! Here I come. the great man himself. the master of the house. the wage-earner. the one who makes it possible for all the rest of you to live so well!

Notice me and pay your respects!'

On this occasion, he strode in and slapped his son on the back and shouted. 'Well, my boy. your father feels he's in for another great money-making day today at the garage! I've got a few little beauties I'm going to flog to the idiots this morning. Where's my breakfast?'

'It's coming. treasure.' Ms. Dicksnoter called from the kitchen.

Martrace kept her face bent low over her cornflakes. She didn't dare look up. In the first place, she wasn't at all sure what she was going to see. And secondly. if she did see what she thought she was going to see. she wouldn't trust herself to keep a straight face. The son was looking directly ahead out of the window stuffing himself with bread and peanut butter and strawberry jam.

The father was just moving round to sit at the head of the table when the mother came sweeping out from the kitchen carrying a huge plate piled high with eggs and sausages and bacon and tomatoes. She looked up. She caught sight of her husband. She stopped dead. Then she let out a scream that seemed to lift her right up into the air and she dropped the plate with a crash and a splash on to the floor. Everyone jumped. including Mr. Dicksnoter.

‘What the heck's the matter with you. woman?’ he shouted.

‘Look at the mess you've made on the carpet!’

‘Your hair!’ the mother was shrieking. pointing a quivering finger at her husband. ‘Look at your hair! What've you done to your hair?’

‘What's wrong with my hair for heaven's sake?’ he said.

‘Oh, my Gawd dad. what've you done to your hair?’ the son shouted.

A splendid noisy scene was building up nicely in the breakfast room.

Martrace said nothing. She simply sat there admiring the wonderful effect of her own handiwork. Mr. Dicksnoter's fine crop of black hair was now a dirty silver. the color this time of a tightrope walker's tights that had not been washed for the entire circus season.

‘You've. you've. you've dyed it!’ shrieked the mother. ‘Why did you do it. you fool! It looks absolutely frightful! It looks horrendous! You look like a freak!’

‘What the blazes are you all talking about?’ the father yelled. putting both hands to his hair. ‘I most certainly have not dyed it! What d'you mean I've dyed it? What's happened to it? Or is this some sort of a stupid joke?’ His face was turning pale green. the color of sour apples.

‘You must have dyed it. dad.’ the son said. ‘It's the same color as mum's only much dirtier looking.’

‘Of course, he's dyed it!’ the mother cried. ‘It can't change color all by itself! What on earth were you trying to do? make yourself look handsome or something? You look like someone's grandmother gone wrong!’

‘Get me a mirror!’ the father yelled. ‘Don't just stand there shrieking at me! Get me a mirror!’

The mother's handbag lay on a chair at the other end of the table. She opened the bag and got out a powder compact that had a small round mirror on the inside of the lid. She opened the compact and handed it to her husband. He grabbed it and held it before his face and in doing so spilled most of the powder all over the front of his fancy tweed jacket.

‘Be careful!’ shrieked the mother. ‘Now look what you've done! That's my best Elizabeth Arden face powder!’

‘Oh, my Gawd!’ yelled the father, staring into the little mirror. ‘What's happened to me! I look terrible! I look just like you went wrong! I can't go down to the garage and sell cars like this! How did it happen?’ He stared around the room, first at the mother, then at the son, then at Martrace. ‘How could it have happened?’ he yelled.

‘I imagine, daddy,’ Martrace said quietly. ‘that you weren't looking very hard and you simply took mummy's bottle of hair stuff off the shelf instead of your own.’

‘Of course, that's what happened!’ the mother cried. ‘Well, really Harry, how stupid can you get? Why didn't you read the label before you started splashing the stuff all over you! Mine's terribly strong. I'm only meant to use one tablespoon of it in a whole basin of water and you've gone and put it all over your head neat! It'll probably take all your hair off in the end! Is your scalp beginning to burn? dear?’

‘You mean I'm going to lose all my hair?’ the husband yelled.

‘I think you will,’ the mother said. ‘Peroxide is a very powerful chemical. It's what they put down the lavatory to disinfect the pan only they give it another name.’

‘What are you saying!’ the husband cried. ‘I'm not a lavatory pan! I don't want to be disinfected!’

‘Even diluted as I use it,’ the mother told him. ‘it makes a good deal of my hair fall out, so goodness knows what's going to happen to you. I'm surprised it didn't take the whole of the top of your head off!’

‘What intend to I do?’ wailed the father. ‘Tell me quick what to do before it starts falling out!’

Martrace said. ‘I'd give it a good wash, dad, if I were you, with soap and water. But you'll have to hurry.’

‘Will that change the color back?’ the father asked anxiously.

‘Of course, it won't, you twit,’ the mother said.

‘Then what do I do? I can't go around looking like this forever?’

‘You'll have to have it dyed black.’ the mother said. ‘But wash it first or there won't be any there to die.’

‘Right!’ the father shouted. springing into action. ‘Get me an appointment with your hairdresser this instant for a hair dying job! Tell them it's an emergency! They've got to boot someone else off their list! I'm going upstairs to wash it now!’ With that, the man dashed out of the room and Ms. Dicksnoter, sighing deeply, went to the telephone to call the beauty parlor.

‘He does do some pretty silly things now and again, doesn't he, mummy?’ Martrace said.

The mother, dialing the number on the phone, said. ‘I'm afraid men are not always quite as clever as they think they are. You will learn that when you get a bit older, my girl.’

Miss. Darling

Martrace was a little late in starting school. Most children begin Primary School at five or even just before, but Martrace's parents, who wasn't very concerned one way or the other about their daughter's education? I had forgotten to make the proper arrangements in advance. She was five and a half when she entered the school for the first time.

The village school for younger children was a bleak brick building called Crunchem Hall Primary School. It had about two hundred and fifty pupils aged from five to just under twelve years old. The headteacher, the boss, the supreme commander of this establishment was a formidable middle-aged lady whose name was Miss. Mcfarts.

15

Naturally, Martrace was put in the bottom class, where there were eighteen other small boys and girls about the same age as her. Their teacher was called Miss. Darling, and she could not have been more than twenty-three or twenty-four. She had a lovely pale oval Madonna face with blue eyes and her hair was light brown. Her body was so slim and fragile one got the feeling that if she fell over, she would smash into a thousand pieces, like a porcelain figure.

Miss. Jennifer Darling was a mild and quiet person who never raised her voice and was seldom seen to smile. but there is no doubt she possessed that rare gift for being adored by every small child under her care.

She seemed to understand totally the bewilderment and fear that so often overwhelms young children who for the first time in their lives are herded into a classroom and told to obey orders.

Some curious warmth that was almost tangible shone out of Miss. Darling's face when she spoke to a confused and homesick newcomer to the class.

There was an aura of menace about her even at a distance. and when she came up close you could almost feel the dangerous heat radiating from her as from a red-hot rod of metal. Miss. Mcfarts. the Headmistress. was something else altogether. She was a gigantic holy terror.

a fierce tyrannical monster who frightened the life out of the pupils and teachers alike. When she marched - Miss. Mcfarts never walked. she always marched like a storm-trooper with long strides and arms swinging - when she marched along a corridor you could actually hear her snorting as she went. and if a group of children happened to be in her path. she plowed right on through them like a tank. with small people bouncing off her to left and right. This woman. in all her eccentricities and in her appearance.

It is almost in-possible to designate. but I intend to make some attempt to do so a little later on. Let us leave her for the moment and go back to Martrace and her first day in Miss. Darling's class.

After the usual business of going through all the names of the children. Miss. Darling handed out a brand-new exercise book to each scholar. Thank goodness- we don't meet many people like her in this world. although they do exist and all of us are likely to come across at least one of them in a lifetime. If you ever do. you should behave as you would if you met an enraged rhinoceros out in the bush - climb up the nearest tree and stay there until it has gone away.

'You have all brought your own pencils. I hope.' she said. Now, this is the very first day of school for each one of you. It is the beginning of at least eleven long years of schooling that all of you are going to have to go through.

And six of those years will be spent right here at Crunchem Hall where. as you know. your Headmistress is Miss. Mcfarts. Let me for your own good tell you something about Miss. Mcfarts.

‘Yes. Miss. Darling.’ they chanted.

‘Good. She insists upon strict discipline throughout the school. and if you take my advice you will do your very best to behave yourselves in her presence. Never argue with her.

Never answer her back. Always do as she says. If you get on the wrong side of Miss. Mcfarts she can liquidize you like a carrot in a kitchen blender. It's nothing to laugh about. Dasey. Take that grin off your face. All of you will be wise to remember that Miss. Mcfarts deals very- very- severely with anyone who gets out of line in this school. Have you got the message?’

‘Certainly. Miss. Darling.’ chirruped eighteen eager little voices.

‘I myself.’ Miss. Darling went on. ‘I want to help you to learn as much as possible while you are in this class.

That is because I know it will make things easier for you later on. For example. by the end of this week, I intend to expect every one of you to know the two-times table by heart. And in a year's time, yours truly hopes’ you will know- this all the reproduction tables up to twelve. It will help you enormously if you do. Now then. do any of you happen to have learned the two-times table already?’ Martrace put up her hand. She was the only one.

Miss. Darling looked carefully at the tiny girl with dark hair and a round serious face sitting in the second row. ‘Wonderful.’ she said. ‘Please stand up and recite as much of it as you can.’ Martrace stood up and began to say the two-times table.

When she got to twice twelve is twenty-four, she didn't stop.

She went right on with twice thirteen is twenty-six. twice fourteen is twenty-eight. twice fifteen is thirty. twice sixteen is.’

‘How far?’ Martrace said. ‘Well. I don't really know. Miss.

Darling. For quite a long way. I think.’ ‘Stop!’ Miss. Darling said. She had been listening slightly spellbound to this smooth recital. and now she said. ‘How far can you go?’

Miss. Darling took a few moments to let this curious statement sink in. ‘You mean.’ she said. ‘that you could tell me what two times twenty-eight is?’

‘Yes. Miss. Darling.’

‘What is it?’

‘Fifty-six. Miss. Darling.’

‘What about something much harder. like two times four hundred and eighty-seven? Could you tell me that?’

‘I think so. yes.’ Martrace said.

‘Are you sure?’

‘Why yes. Miss. Darling. I’m fairly sure.’

‘What is it then. two times four hundred and eighty-seven?’

‘Nine hundred and seventy-four.’ Martrace said immediately. She spoke quietly and politely and without any sign of showing off.

Miss. Darling gazed at Martrace with absolute amazement. but when next she spoke; she kept her voice level. ‘That is really splendid.’ she said. ‘But of course, multiplying by two is a lot easier than some of the bigger numbers. What about the other multiplication tables? Do you know any of those?’

‘I think so. Miss. Darling. I think I do.’

‘Which ones. Martrace? How far have you got?’

‘I. I don’t quite know.’ Martrace said. ‘I don’t know what you mean.’

‘What I mean is do you, for instance, know the three-times table?’

‘Yes. Miss. Darling.’ ‘Yes. Miss. Darling.’

‘And the four-times?’

‘Well. how many do you know? Martrace? Do you know all the way up to the twelve-times table?’

‘Yes. Miss. Darling.’ ‘What are twelve sevens?’

'Eighty-four.' Martrace said.

Miss. Darling paused and leaned back in her chair behind the plain table that stood in the middle of the floor in front of the class. She was considerably shaken by this exchange but took care not to show it. She had never come across a five-year-old before, or indeed a ten-year-old, who could multiply with such a facility?

'I hope the rest of you are listening to this,' she said to the class. 'Martrace is a very lucky girl. She has wonderful parents who have already taught her to multiple lots of numbers. Was it your mother? Martrace, who taught you?'

'No, Miss. Darling, it wasn't.'

'You must have a great father then. He must be a brilliant teacher.'

'No, Miss. Darling,' Martrace said quietly. 'My father did not teach me.'

'You mean you taught yourself?'

'I don't quite know,' Martrace said truthfully. 'It's just that I don't find it very difficult to multiply one number by another.'

Miss. Darling took a deep breath and let it out slowly. She looked again at the small girl with bright eyes standing beside her desk so sensible and solemn. 'You say you don't find it difficult to multiply one number by another,' Miss. Darling said. 'Could you try to explain that a little bit.'

'Oh, dear,' Martrace said. 'I'm not really sure.'

Miss. Darling waited. The class was silent, all listening.

'Two hundred and sixty-six,' Martrace said.

Miss. Darling put down her pencil and removed her spectacles and began to polish the lenses with a piece of tissue. The class remained quiet, watching her and waiting for what was coming next. Martrace was still standing up beside her desk.

'For instance,' Miss. Darling said. 'if I asked you to multiply fourteen by nineteen. No, that's too difficult.'

'It's two hundred and sixty-six.' Martrace said softly.

Miss. Darling stared at her. Then she picked up a pencil and quickly worked out the sum on a piece of paper. 'What did you say it was?' she said, looking up.

'I. I. I simply put the fourteen down in my head and multiply it by nineteen.' Martrace said. 'I'm afraid I don't know how else to explain it. I've always said to myself that if a little pocket calculator can do it why shouldn't I?'

'Now tell me, Martrace.' Miss. Darling said, still polishing. 'try to tell me exactly what goes on inside your head when you get a multiplication like that to do. You obviously have to work it out in some way, but you seem able to arrive at the answer almost instantly. Take the one you've just done, fourteen multiplied by nineteen.'

'Why not indeed.' Miss. Darling said. 'The human brain is an amazing thing.'

'I think it's a lot better than a lump of metal.' Martrace said.

'That's all a calculator is.'

